We are thankful to be able to report another year of steady progress in each of our fields. The missionary force has, it is true, been reduced in size through several retirements and one death, that of our dear Friend, Edith M. Clark. The additions have not filled up all the places vacated by these losses. A large door, however, is open before us. China has never been more receptive. In India many signs are noted of a new readiness to hear the Word. Conditions in Ceylon still show that the harvest is plenteous and ripe. The recent deputation to Madagascar has brought home to us in a new way the interest of the situation and the need for a forward move. Our schools in Syria are only prevented from doing a much wider work by the necessary limitations of space.

We survey the field with wonder and awe. Not many years ago the prayers of Christians were being offered for the opening of closed doors, and the removal of deep-seated prejudices which prevented multitudes from even listening to our message. The answer has come to an extent which simply overwhelms us. The doors have opened so widely that a new problem has been created. We are compelled to ask ourselves: "How can we adequately use these golden opportunities?" It seems as if our Society were being tested by the magnitude of the work which opens out before it. We are well aware that the call comes in many other directions. We recognise in the many calls the Voice of One. It is our earnest desire, however, that we may respond to that call which comes to us through the needs of great nations emerging into the full stream of the world's life. In such a response our whole Society may find strength and divine inspiration to face every task that confronts it.

Visitors to the Fields

Every one of our fields has been favoured by visitors from home, and these visits have been most cheering, besides in several cases bringing practical help in the facing of difficulties. The problems before us in each of our fields seem to become larger and more perplexing as the years go on. The missionary is brought into contact not only with individual lives, but also with great social, economic and even political movements. He is compelled to sustain a relationship to these. His counsel is sought, not infrequently by those placed in high positions. He seeks to bring the Spirit of Christ into these questions as much as into the preaching of the Gospel. Often these are not questions which he has deliberately prepared himself to meet. It is, therefore, peculiarly helpful for him to keep in touch with the best thought in the home lands. Visits such as those which have been paid during 1913 are most useful in this respect, and have been greatly appreciated in all our fields.

India

We are thankful to be able to report a steady growth in the Indian Church. This is evidenced by the extension of the Brotherhoods, a purely indigenous movement for the purification and strengthening of the Church, by the establishment of a Co-operative Bank, by the erection of the new meeting-house at Makoriya out of Church funds, and by the continued work of the Home Mission Society at Bhilsa. We recognise that only by strengthening the Indian Church can we hope to reach the goal of our work. A necessary adjunct in India is the Industrial work, which is being steadily prosecuted in its various departments. During 1913 the chief progress is recorded by the new farm colony, about 140 Christians being now settled on this estate and the older one at Lahi. Plans are now completed for the erection of a small hospital at Itarsi, and for the commencement of a High School at Hoshangabad. The students who have left the Bible School are entering very eagerly into the evangelistic work in the country districts, where there is an increasing spirit of inquiry. Parts of Central and South-Western Bhopal have been visited for the first time. There is a very urgent need for more workers in this field.

Madagascar

Special attention has been drawn to Madagascar through the visit of the Deputation. Among the outstanding features of interest we may note:—

(1) The growing spirit of unity, as seen in the united Deputation and Joint Conference, and in the new agreement as to interchange of members between the Churches connected with the London Missionary Society, the Paris Missionary Society, and the F. F. M. A.

(2) The plans for the evangelization of the whole of Madagascar, which have been matured in consultation between all the Protestant Missions. Our part is the opening up of new work among the Sakalava, and we have already two missionaries on the West Coast who are opening a new station at Maintirano.

(3) The relations with the Government, which have been somewhat easier since the publication, last spring, of the Decree on Public Worship; but they still give cause for serious thought, especially on the educational side.

(4) The growing spirit of independence in the Malagasy Church, which is taking up new and larger burdens, and moving steadily on towards full self-support and self-government.

(5) The opening of the Bible School at Arivonimamo, under the management of a joint Committee of Malagasy and missionaries, and on a basis of progressive self-support.

There are great difficulties and dangers in Madagascar, but they are being faced in quietness and confidence, and the Missions are presenting a united front. There is very much to cheer us in the whole situation.

Syria

The Boys' High School at Brumana has never had a larger number of pupils than at the present time, and, amidst all the political unrest which prevails throughout the Turkish Empire, the demand for education is very great. Outsiders have much to say of the value of the training given in the School, and a considerable number of our old pupils are now studying in the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrout, from which they pass out subsequently to take up, in many cases, positions of responsibility and influence in the public life of Syria. The value of Christian missionary education was strikingly evidenced in a recent case where some of the younger men, who had passed through the Mission schools, refused, in an acute crisis, to be diverted from their purpose of national reform by the usual appeal, on the part of the Government, to religious passions, a plan which had never hitherto failed of its purpose.

The Girls' High School is rejoicing in the possession of an unchanged Syrian staff, every member of which, except one, has grown up in the School. Some of our pupils, after a normal training, pass out to teach in other Missions. One such, a Maronite, has commenced a private school of her own in her native village; she is bravely holding her ground, in spite of the fact that a rival Jesuit teacher accuses her of having no religion in her school, because she is determined to teach the Bible as she herself was taught it. There is a strong spirit of loyalty amongst old scholars; and some, writing from such distant places as South Africa and New Zealand, speak thankfully of the far-reaching character of school influences upon them.

Successive gatherings of the Educational and Medical Unions of Syria and Palestine took place last summer at Jerusalem. In these and other branches of co-operative effort Friends are taking a considerable part. Faced by the solid strength alike of the Moslem community and of the Oriental Churches, it is supremely important that the missionary bodies should work together, both as a witness to their fundamental unity in Christ, and for the maintenance of a high standard of efficiency in every branch of their service.

The growth of the medical work, as well as the painful inadequacy of our present hospital from the viewpoint of modern standards, has rendered extension an imperative necessity. Our missionaries are now eagerly awaiting the erection of a new hospital, for which funds are being collected in this country and in America. There is every likelihood that, with more adequate accommodation, the receipts from private patients will help materially towards complete self-support, and thus enable us to give more generous assistance to the very poor.

Ministerial Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting

The Ministerial Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting met at Ludlow Falls, May 20-22. The music of the conference was led by Edith Miles Pearson and was especially good throughout. The Ludlow Falls Friends gave several numbers that were much appreciated. In the welcome address, H. O. Miles said that he welcomed the ministers to West Branch Quarterly Meeting, the mother of Indiana Yearly Meeting, as well as to the local meeting, the town and into the homes of people there. The president, Murray S. Kenworthy, of Richmond, Indiana, responded to the welcome saying he knew how genuine it was, having known the people as their pastor only a few years ago. He continued his address giving a view of the Christian Church today, showing the present tendency toward federation. That church federation is coming in the not far distant future seemed to be the thought of the conference expressed in several discussions.

Richard Haworth, of Fairmount, spoke on "The Equipment of the Pastor," and insisted on an equipment of the intellect as well as that of the heart. George Levering, of Xenia, Ohio, spoke of "The Message," saying that every sermon should have a definite purpose with material collected, organized and digested thoroughly. Tennyson Lewis, of Portland, Indiana, treated "The Scope of the Pastor's Work," saying that all pastors should have one assistant at least. He should enlist the Superintendent of the Sunday School, the president of the Christian Endeavor, the president of the Ladies' Aid and all other leaders as his assistants. The scope of the pastor is the entire community or city where he is located. The day sessions were given to conference and business while the evenings were devoted to addresses in which more people would be interested and were well attended. On Wednesday evening, Albert J. Brown, of Wilmington, Ohio, gave a splendid address on "The Present Day Trend of Quakerism." His address was announced as being a glimpse into the future, but he explained that the roots of the present trend of Quakerism lie deep in the past. He gave a vivid picture of Quakerism, showing that the Church has never had a division nor a difference on the social side; in fact, doctrine has been the only point of contention. He mentioned the questions of slavery, temperance, peace, women ministry and other social movements on which Quakers have always been a unit. Having shown the Quaker tendency, past, present and future, toward social solidarity, he took up another trend—that of reform. He said that the Quaker everywhere and at all times had improved the conditions of life about him. The third trend that he mentioned was toward the discovery of new truth.

Thursday evening was given to the convention sermon, by Prof. Elbert Russell, of Earlham College. His text was taken from II Kings 2: 12—"And Elisha saw." A nation's greatest defense is its prophets and prophetic vision can be cultivated. He showed why and how Elisha had gotten his prophetic vision, appealing to his audience to cultivate theirs.

Milo S. Hinckle treated "The Privileges and Responsibilities of Laymen." He said that privileges become responsibilities and spoke of three phases of church work that should rest especially on the laymen—the business of the church, the social side of it and the responsibility of the Sabbath service. He also brought a message of greeting and love from Ira Johnson, the Evangelistic Superintendent, who has been seriously ill, but is slowly improving. Ancil E. Ratliff presented "The Every-Member Canvass," with its benefits to the Church. The discussion showed that wherever it had been tried it had justified his statements. "Church Literature and Periodicals" was discussed by S. E. Nicholson, who spoke chiefly on THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and Richard Haworth, who told of the success of the new quarterlies put out by the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting. George W. Bird, of Pennville, said that the present-day methods of evangelism harmonize with the principles and activities of Friends in so far as their methods and messages are simple. Truman C. Kenworthy, of Richmond, said that there were now a hundred popular evangelists in our country and that they all confer and use similar methods. We need perfectly sane methods. At present the best we can do is to join the union movements and be sure to use the power of personal touch. Esther Cook treated "The Work of the Holy Spirit," emphasizing His personal guidance of the individual and of the Church.

Solomon Tice and wife were in attendance at the conference with a Mexican boy of their mission there. Mr. Tice and the Mexican sang in Spanish, which was much appreciated. He also spoke at different times during the sessions, telling the probable results to the missions of the different possible outcomes of the situation in Mexico. The conference was edified by his earnest messages.

The ministers were especially well provided for and entertained by the local Friends and were richly blessed of our Father throughout the conference.

Friends' Work in England

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

In your issue of Fourth month 23rd, our dear friend, Leanah Hobson, sends you a communication under the above heading, which is evidently written under some misapprehension of the facts. She will, I am sure, allow me, with your concurrence, to offer a correction. She accounts for the increase in the numbers of English Friends by the statement that "In many of their meetings they have what they call a Home Missionary, whom they support just as our American pastors are supported and whose duty is practically the same as that of the pastors in this country. The difference is mostly in the name."

I was for many years a member of the Home Mission Committee of London Yearly Meeting and am fairly well acquainted with the facts. May I say:

1. That Home Mission Workers under the care of the Committee are residents in only about thirty meetings in this country, a very insignificant proportion.

2. That their duties differ fundamentally from that of your pastors. They are specially desired to remember that in meetings for worship they are simply units in the congregation, and to keep themselves in the background as much as possible, seeking to develop to the utmost the spiritual gifts of the membership. Their special duties are those of organization and visiting.

3. Taking this country as a whole, the increase in our membership is but slightly affected by the existence of these scattered centres where Home Mission Workers reside. In the Monthly Meeting to which I belong many hundreds of new members have been admitted during the last thirty years, more I believe than in any other Monthly Meeting in England; and I do not think that in any single case has the application for membership been due to the presence of an official Home Mission Worker.

I am simply stating facts, and make no reflection upon either English Home Missionaries or American pastors.

Your friend sincerely,

WILLIAM LITTLEBOY.

What a Traffic!

The following letter is self-explanatory and is vouched for by Mr. William H. Anderson, Superintendent of the New York Anti-Saloon League. The heartless character of the liquor traffic is revealed in the first sentences of the letter. It will be noted that the proposition is made to the Keeley Institute, whose business it is to cure drunkards.

KENTUCKY DISTILLERS' DISTRIBUTING COMPANY

Distributors Direct From Distillery

KANSAS CITY, Mo., December 3, 1913.

Keeley Institute, Dwight, Illinois:

GENTLEMEN—Our customers are your prospective patients.

We can put on your desk a mailing list of over 50,000 individual consumers of liquor. This list is the result of thousands of dollars of advertising.

Each individual on the list is a regular user of liquor. The list of names is now live and active. We know because we have circularized it regularly. We will furnish this list in quantities at the prices listed below. Remittance to accompany order.

40,000 to 50,000.....	$400.00
20,000 .....	300.00
10,000 .....	200.00

We will not furnish the list in less than lots of 10,000.

Discontinuance of business January 1, is the occasion of selling our mailing list.

Yours truly,

KENTUCKY DISTILLERS' DIST. CO.,

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Spiceland, Indiana.—Raymond Holding has been very acceptably serving Spiceland Meeting as pastor since last October. He told Friends when he took the work here that he was subject to a call from the Foreign Missionary Board at any time. The call came in April asking him to take work in Cuba. He and his family started from here on April 19th. The prayers and best wishes of Friends here go with them to their new field of labor. Roy Woolam has taken the work for the remainder of the year. Friends feel they are greatly favored in securing so able a minister.

Selma, Ohio.—At Eastern Quarterly Meeting of Friends held at Selma, Ohio, May 23d, the following minute was made and it was requested that a copy of the minute be sent to President Wilson, Secretary Bryan, Senators Burton and Pomerene and Representative Fess. "The time of the Quarterly Meeting usually allotted to the discussion of questions of vital interest to Friends was taken up by an address on 'The Friends' Principles of Peace,' by Prof. Allen D. Hole of Earlham College, President of the Peace Association of Friends in America. The presentation of the subject was very able and was much appreciated by this meeting. In view of the present situation in Mexico, it is the sense of this Quarterly Meeting that the efforts of President Wilson and others in authority at Washington to avert war have our unqualified support and we pray that they may succeed in their efforts."

Our pastor, George C. Levering, led C. E. Sunday night, May 24th, and we were glad to have Edith Winder, Field Secretary for the Hicksite Friends, with us. Her words were helpful.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Iowa Falls, Iowa.—The work on the church property of Friends is progressing nicely. The basement is in, though not completed. The church building has been moved over and is now on its new foundation. On account of the moving there were no services for two Sabbaths, but they have now been resumed. The work of remodeling will be delayed until after the erection of the parsonage, which work is already under way. God made such beautiful things, that it surely will be pleasing to Him for His children to have neat, comfortable surroundings in which to give Him loyal service, which we are hoping, when completed, will aid in giving more and better work for Him. James Renfrew, the pastor, will give the baccalaureate sermon for the High School graduating class on the afternoon of the 31st.

NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING

Platte Valley Quarterly Meeting, held at Alda, Nebraska, May 15 to 17, will be remembered by those who were there as a time of spiritual blessing. A much larger number of delegates than usual attended, some coming in automobiles more than seventy miles. In addition to the usual business, Prof. F. W. Perisho, of Nebraska Central College, presented some helpful suggestions concerning the financial problems of the Church. A deep concern was felt by many for the coming Yearly Meeting that more time might be given for evangelical services, and that the presence and blessing of the Lord might be manifest from beginning to end of the meeting. Our Evangelistic Superintendent, F. W. Dell, was present and gave helpful messages at two sessions of the Quarterly Meeting. On First-day afternoon the service was in charge of a gospel team of ten men, some of whom are recent converts. After a season of earnest prayer each of these men gave a simple, direct and sincere testimony which appealed to the hearts of those present and they were used by the Holy Spirit in leading one young man and the daughter of one of the delegates to accept Christ as their Savior. As many of the members live some distance from the Church, the bountiful dinners were served in the meeting house and a delightful social time was enjoyed between services. We must take care of the business end of the Lord's work, but such gatherings as the one at Alda, make very clear to us that there is a large place in these meetings for the evangelistic efforts.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING

West Brookfield, N. Y.—Butternuts Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at West Brookfield, Madison County, New York, May 16 and 17. Members were present from most of the meetings in the quarter. Dr. George F. DeVol, missionary from China, gave inspiring missionary addresses Saturday evening and Sunday evening. For his work and that of Margaret Holme there was raised $23.68. Sunday morning Dr. DeVol preached a sermon on the Blood, which was Scriptural, spiritual and practical. Ministers belonging to the Quarterly Meeting also had part in the services. Monday night following Quarterly Meeting, Dr. DeVol gave a missionary address at Upperville Meeting. There was raised for his work $6.04.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

PROFESSOR William Orville Mendenhall has been released from much of his work in the Department of Mathematics that he may develop at the college and within the limits of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings Evangelistic, Missionary, Bible School, and other practical phases of church work. The definite effort of the college will be to assist in carrying out the recommendations of the Five Years Meeting as contained in the report of the Commission on the Meeting and its Pastoral Care. This is essentially constructive work and the co-operation and prayer of Friends are asked for, that it may be fruitful in extending the power and efficiency of our branch of the church. Correspondence solicited.

PERSONAL MENTION

Prof. E. E. Hadley has just closed his third year as principal of Northbranch Academy, Kansas. In all he has served fifteen years in Friends' academies. He goes to take charge of Haviland Academy next year.

E. Howard Brown and wife, who have been serving as pastors of the meeting at Earlham, Iowa, have resigned their positions, although offered the place for another year. The resignations take effect about September first.

VIRGINIA QUARTER

Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held at Sedley, Virginia, May 16th to 18th, and was more largely attended than in recent years, the attendance on Sunday being estimated by some at about six hundred.

The business of the meeting was transacted on Saturday and included the approval of the pending resolution before Congress for national constitutional prohibition and a telegram to President Wilson commending him for his efforts in behalf of peace.

Meetings for worship were held on Sunday morning and afternoon both in the house and in the grove outside, the meetings in the afternoon being largely devoted to the statewide prohibition movement in Virginia, and being addressed by Howard M. and Sara H. Hoge, the latter being president of the state W. C. T. U. On Sunday evening L. Oscar Moon gave an illustrated talk on "Rambles of a Field Secretary." A meeting for worship was held on Monday morning, and in the afternoon a conference of the Young People's Union was held. On each of the three days the people brought their lunches and remained throughout the day. The visitors from outside the Quarterly Meeting were Howard M. and Sara H. Hoge of Lincoln, Va.; Elizabeth McCully, Ruth Barnard and L. Oscar Moon of Baltimore; Joseph E. Wetherald of Bryantown, Md., and J. T. Chappell of Up River, N. C.

The commencement exercises of Boxelder High School near Somerton Meeting of Friends in Nausemond County, Virginia, are of interest to Friends of Baltimore Yearly Meeting since it is the outgrowth of a Friends school established here in the early days. This year on commencement day a commodious new school building was formally dedicated and the history of the visit of George Fox to "Sommertown" and many other incidents of early Friends history were recounted.

The Friends are still among the chief supporters of the school and three of the four teachers for the past year were members of the Society. The exercises were largely attended, a number of county and state officials being present, and a public dinner being served on the grounds. L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore, gave the class address.

AT MOUNT AYR

Mount Ayr Quarterly Meeting was held at Chalk Mound, May 15 to 17. We were favored with the presence of our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, L. C. Hinshaw of Wichita. His messages were a great uplift to those who attended. The meeting of ministry and oversight was held on Friday morning when Brother Hinshaw delivered a very inspiring message. The afternoon was a doctrinal conference, the subject being "Why Friends Do Not Use the Outward Ordinances of Water Baptism and the Lord's Supper." The subject was opened by the pastor, who was followed by Brother Hinshaw.

On Saturday the weather was rainy and the attendance was not large, but the meeting was good. At eight p. m. there was a Peace Conference. After song, prayer and declamations, L. C. Hinshaw delivered the address of the evening, which was very timely and exceptionally helpful. Sabbath was still rainy, but a goodly number were present and we had another good sermon, but the best of the wine was reserved for the last of the feast and on Sunday night we had the crowning meeting.

We also had the pleasure of having Brother Hinshaw with us at Mount Ayr Meeting on Tuesday and Wednesday nights before Quarterly Meeting. Mount Ayr camp meeting will be held in the Winslow Grove from May 28th to June 10th, Andrew Johnson being the evangelist and Professor Yates the singer.

AT NORTH LOUP, NEBRASKA

The surest evidence of the activity of a Church is whether it is showing a proper amount of growth or not. We are very glad to be able to say that we have felt the need of more room for some time. On May 10th we dedicated, free from debt, an addition to our church building in the shape of a fine basement for Sunday School work. A heating plant was also installed, and all church property was newly painted and put in good condition. The entire cost was $1,150. Frank Dell preached the dedicatory sermon. Theo. and Estella Foxworthy are pastors at this place.

We are sorry to see Mr. Dell leave Nebraska Yearly Meeting, but feel that a worthy successor has been found in Theo. Foxworthy, although we will lose him as a pastor. Brother Cosand of Grant has accepted a call to this place to begin the first of July.

Many mixtures are offered as substitutes for Royal. No other baking powder is the same in composition or effectiveness, or so wholesome and economical, nor will make such fine food.

Royal is the only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

June 14

Subject—The Friend of Sinners.

Lesson—Luke 18: 9-14; 19: 1-10.

Golden Text—"I came not to call the righteous, but sinners."—Mark 2: 17.

Here we have the contrast between the religionist and the faithful Christian disciple. As usual, Jesus digs below the surface of things and unearths the fact that religion is a heart experience and does not consist in outward manifestations.

Phariseeism is not yet dead. Anyone who today feels that by the observance of outward rites and the manifestation of deeds he can put God under obligation to bestow His divine favor is playing a counterfeiter's part for which there is no reward.

The man who sits in the pew on Sunday with sanctimonious face and with the songs of Zion on his lips, but who on Monday sells short pounds of sugar or measures silks with short yard sticks, has not the chance to be accepted into the Kingdom which the vile sinner has who repents of his misdeeds and turns away from the old life to follow obediently his Lord.

The holier-than-thou attitude has no place in the ranks of Christian discipleship. It is the holy man, who labors to get others to be equally holy with himself, that has the promise of sonship.

God looketh upon the heart, not upon the outward man. "God be merciful to me a sinner" means more than all else in God's estimate of a man. Such a petition shows contrition, repentance and a positive determination to lead a changed life.

Jesus always proclaimed against hypocrisy for He came to seek and to save the lost, those who know they are lost.

NEWS FROM HAVERFORD

Haverford Bible School closed a very successful year's work with a picnic on Darbey Creek, Saturday, May 23. During the past year or two a very encouraging advance has been made in the state of the school. Much attention has been given to strengthening the Intermediate Department. In the past three years the average attendance for the entire school has risen from thirty-seven to ninety-six. The enrollment is one hundred and sixty.

Three very interesting Sunday afternoon meetings for a discussion of Friends' principles and practices have just been held. "The Life and Ideals of John Woolman" was Amelia Mott Gummere's subject, May 10th. A week later Rufus Jones very ably presented "The Development and Purposes of the Typical Silent Meeting of Friends." May 24th, Anna R. Ladd led a discussion regarding the members' attitude toward the pastoral cares of a meeting.

Each discussion was of exceeding interest and value to the goodly number that were present.

The Y. M. C. A. at Haverford College has had another successful year. Most of the men in the college are members. Interesting classes for Bible and for Mission study were continued during most of the year. Five classes were maintained for instructing Italian laborers in English. Work at Preston Reading Room, in a neighboring village, was carried on as in former years, with regular Sunday evening services and instruction during the week for the boys in games and gymnasium exercises.

AT CALGARY, ALBERTA

Extracted from letter from Herman H. Sharples, of Calgary, Alberta, Canada, dated Fifth month 6th, 1914, to George Vaux, Jr.:

"The Society of Friends in Calgary seems to be in a flourishing condition. It is practically just a year ago since Friends first came together and every week they have held a meeting in the home of one of their number. But a month ago some of the Friends thought that the time had come for us to have a little home of our own. [One of our friends] had a garage on their property that they made no use of except as a tool-house, so we have rented that and remodeled it to some extent, and last First-day we had our first gathering in it. We are a mixed body and as yet have not associated with any Monthly Meeting. Many of the Friends are from England or Ireland and do not feel that they can wholly subscribe to the practices indorsed by Young Street Meeting. So until more meetings form in the West I think this gathering will remain unattached. We have about forty attenders here. Since we started Friends have come together both in Winnipeg and Edmonton but at each of these places they have but about ten attenders. Vancouver has an established Monthly Meeting, but the number of its members I cannot state. I have thought that the above might be of interest to thee."—Philadelphia Friend.

SECTIONAL MEN'S CONFERENCE

SALEM, OREGON, May 18, 1914.

Editor of American Friend:

Salem Quarterly Meeting, held May 16th, unanimously endorsed the proposition of Newberg Quarterly Meeting, "that a sectional conference be held instead of the general conference of men Friends, and that Portland, Oregon, be considered as the place for holding the Pacific Coast section."

CLARKSON PEMBERTON, Clerk.

ENDORSE MEN'S CONFERENCE

The Ministerial Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting, at its recent annual meeting at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, endorsed the proposition to hold a men's conference of Friends. Only one vote was cast in opposition to it.

Died

Hadley.—Simon H. Hadley, son of Simon B. and Sarah Hadley, was born near Plainfield, Indiana, November 3, 1840, and died at the home of his youngest son near Independence, Kansas, April 16, 1914, aged 73 years 5 months and 13 days. He was married to Naomi Stanley in 1859. He was a life-long member of Friends, was converted when young and lived a consistent Christian life. He was a member of Farmrig Monthly Meeting. He is survived by the widow and four children. Funeral services were conducted at Elkriver by Elizabeth Lindley.

HER MOTHER-IN-LAW

Proved a Wise, Good Friend

A young woman out in Ia. found a wise, good friend in her mother-in-law, jokes notwithstanding. She writes:

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach, complexion was blotchy and yellow. After meals I often suffered sharp pains and would have to lie down. My mother often told me it was the coffee I drank at meals. But when I'd quit coffee I'd have a severe headache.

"While visiting my mother-in-law I remarked that she always made such good coffee, and asked her to tell me how. She laughed and told me it was easy to make good 'coffee' when you use Postum.

"I began to use Postum as soon as I got home, and now we have the same good 'coffee' (Postum) every day and I have no more trouble. Indigestion is a thing of the past, and my complexion has cleared up beautifully.

"My grandmother suffered a great deal with her stomach. Her doctor told her to leave off coffee. She then took tea but that was just as bad.

"She finally was induced to try Postum which she has used for over a year. She traveled during the winter over the greater part of Iowa visiting, something she has not been able to do for years. She says she owes her present good health to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:
Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

WITH THE CHILDREN

THE STONE IN THE ROAD

A long time ago there lived a king who took great delight in teaching his people good habits. "Bad luck comes only to the lazy and the careless," said he; "but to the busy workers God gives the good things of this life."

One night he put a large stone in the middle of the road near his palace, and then watched to see what the people passed that way would do.

Early in the morning a sturdy old farmer named Peter came along, with his heavy ox-cart loaded with corn.

"Oh, these lazy people!" he cried, driving his oxen to one side of the road. "Here is this big stone right in the middle of the road, and nobody will take the trouble to move it."

And he went on his way, scolding about the laziness of other people, but never thinking of touching the stone himself.

Then came a young soldier, singing a merry song as he walked along. A gay feather was stuck in his hat, and a big sword hung at his side; and he was fond of telling great stories of what he had done in the war. He held his head so high that he did not see the stone, but stumbled over it, and fell flat into the dust.

This put an end to his merry song; and, as he rose to his feet, he began to storm at the country people.

"Silly drones!" he said, "to have no more sense than to leave a stone like that in the middle of the road!"

Then he passed on, but he did not sing any more.

An hour later there came down the road six merchants, with their goods on pack horses, going to the fair that was to be held near the village. When they reached the stone the road was so narrow that they could hardly drive their horses between it and the wall.

"Did any one ever see the like?" they said. "There is that big stone in the road; and not a man in all the country but that is too lazy to move it!"

And so the stone lay there for three weeks; it was in everybody's way, and yet everybody left it for somebody else to move.

Then the king sent word to all his people to meet together on a certain day near his palace, as he had something to tell them.

The day came, and a great crowd of men and women gathered in the road. Old Peter, the farmer, was there; and so were the merchants and the young soldier.

"I hope that the king will not find out what a lazy set of people he has around him," said Peter.

And then the sound of a horn was heard, and the king was seen coming toward them. He rode up to the stone, got down from his horse, and said:

"My friends, it was I who put this stone there, three weeks ago. It has been seen by every one of you; and yet every one has left it just where it was, and scolded his neighbor for not moving it out of the way."

Then he stooped down and rolled the stone over. Underneath the stone was a round, hollow place, in which was a small iron box. The king held up the box so that all the people might see what was written on a piece of paper fastened to it.

These were the words:

"For him who lifts the stone."

He opened the box, turned it upside down, and out of it fell a beautiful gold ring and twenty bright gold coins.

Then every one wished that he had only thought of moving the stone instead of going around it, and finding fault with his neighbor.

There are many people still who lose prizes because they think it easier to find fault than to do the work which lies before them. Such people do not usually blame themselves, but think it is all on account of bad luck and hard times.—Southern Presbyterian.

J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 68 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

To be Read by All Subscribers

Why may not a supreme effort be made in all Friends meetings in America during the remainder of June, to secure enough new subscribers for THE AMERICAN FRIEND to put it on a paying basis?

Here is the Proposition

1. That Friends make an extraordinary effort to secure new subscribers for the last six months of 1914 at the special rate of 50 cents net.

2. That the effort be made to secure at least five new subscribers for approximately every 100 of membership in the local meeting. If there are 60 members, three subscriptions would be required. For 300 members, fifteen subscribers, and so on.

3. With this addition to our list, we will run the risk of retaining the bulk of them as regular subscribers next year, which would put the paper on a paying basis for 1915.

How Can It Be Done?

A pastor sends the suggestion that each pastor be made a local agent for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, or that he be authorized to secure a local agent other than himself, who will act for the local meeting. In meetings where no pastor exists some leading Friend would have to accept the agency.

This is in accord with the practice in nearly every other denomination, and is probably the only successful method of insuring the necessary patronage.

If pastors, and others where necessary, will assume this responsibility, they can begin work at once, all trial subscriptions under the above special offer of 50 cents to new subscribers for the remainder of 1914, to begin July 2.

Announcements can be made at the service, and a canvass should follow if necessary to make up the requisite number. There are yet three remaining Sabbaths in June and three weeks in which to work out this plan.

Can It Be Done?

Yes, if Friends will take hold of the matter in earnest, and without delay. If a budget is to be raised for local meeting expenses, or if a debt is to be raised on the meeting house, there is generally little difficulty in getting Friends to feel the responsibility of raising the full amount.

In case of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, it is just as much a part of the work of the whole church as is any other department. Every Friend is a stockholder, and should pay for his stock by subscribing for the paper owned and controlled by the church. The dividends are paid weekly in a periodical which is becoming more and more invaluable in the upbuilding of the entire denomination.

If Friends do not pay for their stock in the form of subscriptions, some other Friends must pay more than their share, or else the church must be without a paper. That is the situation in a nutshell.

Shall We Do It?

We believe Friends are ready for this undertaking. The time to begin is now, and the finish of the campaign will be on July 15th. For fear that some meetings will be negligent, other meetings can perhaps send in an extra number.

It will be worth to the church all the effort it will require to work out this plan.

Five new subscribers at 50 cents each for 6 months, or $2.50 in all for each 100 of the membership is all that will be required to carry out this plan. Will not every Friends meeting make the effort?

THE TIME TO DO IT IS NOW!

Four Great Gatherings

Three great bodies of the Presbyterian family, the Presbyterians, the Southern Presbyterians and the United Presbyterians, have recently been meeting in their General Assemblies. The Presbyterians who met in their Fourth Church at Chicago continue to emphasize evangelism, and have gone further perhaps than any other denomination in getting at the roots of religious and social conditions by the survey method. The reports show a banner year in spiritual results.

The Southern Presbyterians met at Kansas City, Missouri. Social service, closer relation with other Presbyterian and Reform bodies and Christian education were the three outstanding subjects that received consideration.

The United Presbyterians convened at New Castle, Pa., and had encouraging reports about the progress of their work. Perhaps no other denomination has utilized the every-member canvass with such satisfactory results.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South held its quadrennial meeting at Oklahoma City. The reports show an increase of 168,000 members during the past four years. The total membership now reaches about 2,000,000. One of the important actions taken was the adoption of a report recommending the uniting into one body of the three great branches of Methodism in this country.

Christianity for the Masses

Does the religion which you profess satisfy the conscious need of your inner life?

By this standard Christianity meets its severest test. Professional religion has no place in this practical age. What humanity most needs is an experience that nourishes the soul, that ministers to its every-day life, that satiates the longing for nobler things, that harmonizes man's ideals with God's holy purposes, that realizes in practical living upon the investments of faith in the spiritual realm.

The masses of the people are not much concerned about theologic distinctions. They have little interest in a religion that makes it necessary to go to a dictionary for definitions or to an encyclopedia for historical affirmations. He can be a true follower of Christ who knows nothing of psychology, who is not versed in the latest deductions of philosophy, whose mind has never felt the keen edge of the dissecting knife of either scientist or theologian.

We have no purpose to discredit the analyses of either science or theology. The world will ever have a place for the discoverers of truth. They who have the time for it and the ability to do it will find deep satisfaction in delving into the mysteries of life and exploring the hidden chambers of both the mind and soul. The interrogation points of human society who are constantly asking why and how, who appear sometimes to be chasing faith from the field of knowledge, and who are never content except they be able to trace every fact to its known cause, have their place no less than the dogmatists who insist upon the stability and unchangeableness of both revealed and discovered truth, as the foundation of the faith of the world.

It is only when the dogmatism of both science and religion denies the progressive revelation of truth to the consciousness of man in any age, that it ceases to have a claim upon the consideration of thoughtful men.

The masses of humanity will concern themselves little about a religion that is only historic or a religion that savors much of the mythical. The simpler the faith the greater hold it will have upon the multitudes. Experimental religion will always win the largest ingathering of converts. A religion that can express itself in terms of human betterment and uplift will always be the religion of the masses. He is the greatest preacher who can best reveal Jesus Christ as friend and helper and savior to the consciousness of man and he it is who will win the largest harvest of souls for his hire. The heart of man will always respond to the beckonings of an overmastering, unadulterated, unselfish love, and such a love is the love of God to the world as expressed in the gift of His only Son for the redemption of the race.

One of the greatest verses of all the Scriptures is that gracious invitation recorded in Matthew, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Herein is contained the very essence of the gospel appeal. It is a composite statement of the whole message which Christianity has for every man, and when humanity can be made to feel the personal application of its mighty truth, it will become the trumpet call of a mighty movement among the masses of earth to accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Master.

The Church needs to learn the art of simplifying the gospel message. Christianity is not a subject for controversial debate, but a condition of life to be sought after and accepted as the best ideal of happiness and contentment and satisfaction that can attract the heart of any man or of any woman. There can be no aristocracy in religion. The greatest test which came to George Fox and the early Friends was that their message found instant response among so many honest minded folks. The religion of Christ must ever be democratic, and when proclaimed in its purity and in its simplicity will ever find response in the honest, sincere heart of the multitudes.

"For the love of Christ constraineth us." Not theology, not philosophy, not the subtleties of scholasticism, not the logic of reason, but the love of a living Christ who is ready to speak to every human condition. The world will not follow after a technical religion nor yet a theoretical one. The religion of the masses must center in a personality who knows how to sympathize with human need and who can bring relief in man's extremity.

It is Jesus feeding the multitudes, Jesus teaching by the sea side, Jesus weeping at the tomb of his friend, Jesus with his agony in the garden, Jesus upon the cross and Jesus present in the human heart to comfort, satisfy and guide in all the experiences of life, who will ever appeal to the multitudes. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." It is a loving, triumphant, glorified Jesus who claims the right to the allegiance of all men.

The Right Use of Christian Experience

BY WILBUR K. THOMAS

"Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; . . . And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man . . . saying, Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is a lunatick, and sore vexed."—Matt. 17: 1-15.

Peter was amazed at the wonderful transformation which had come over the Master. In the evening Jesus had called the three disciples to him, and desiring to escape from the pressing throngs, he went off upon the mountain to pray. Jesus was tired in body; he was in an agony of soul; his own disciples did not understand him. The ones whom he had healed did not appreciate his true character. Those whom he had taught had perverted his words. He felt that he must get away where he could unburden his soul to his Heavenly Father. On the mountain they had all engaged in prayer, but as was Jesus' custom, he went a little farther on away from the three. He did not return for a long time and the disciples went to sleep. They were wakened by strange voices. A short distance from where they were they saw Jesus talking with two men. Around them all was a halo of radiant light. In place of the tired and worn expression which had been on Jesus' face, they saw an expression of happiness and joy and peace. His face was radiant.

Peter loved his Master. His heart leaped for joy when he saw that radiant face. It came over him in a flash that if he could keep his Master on the mount, away from the clamoring throngs, away from the bitter persecution, away from the constant calls for assistance, Jesus would always be happy. He hurried to speak to Jesus about it; but "while he yet spoke, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them—" At the foot of the mountain the next morning was the lunatick boy.

There come mountain top experiences to every earnest Christian. There are times when the soul is lifted up above the sordid world to heights of purity and blessedness. The whole being seems flooded with a radiance from above, and one sees and hears things which cannot be expressed in words.

Sometimes such an experience takes one up on the mountain where he can see life as it is. He is taken out of his own narrow valley to where he can get his bearings for the future life. Sometimes one sees as in a dream the very battlements of heaven, and the light from the heavenly city is reflected in his face for days. Sometimes the change comes in an instant through some striking incident and, like George Fox, all creation has a new smell. They make one forget the cares and perplexities of life. They make things which have seemed so important very trivial, and most of us wish we could continue in such an experience.

In hearing people give their testimony, one frequently hears it said, "I wish I could feel the joy and rapture which was upon me when I gave my heart to the Lord." Another person tells of a wonderful meeting they attended once, and wishes that he might always live in such a meeting. Another one wishes that he might always feel the thrills of an evangelistic meeting. Like Peter, they wish to build a little tent around their experience and always live in it.

And while they yet speak, the cloud of some trial, the darkness of some sorrow, an irritating experience, or the shadow of the grave, makes them know that their mountain is still a part of this earth. At their feet they find the lunatick child, the deceived woman, the wronged man, the drunkard, the gambler, the man who will take advantage in any way he can, the utterly selfish society woman.

Should one long to continue in the mountain top experiences? Should one rebel against the fate that binds him down to earthly things? What use can be made of such experiences?

We cannot live as we should in this world unless we have such experiences. They are not experiences for the mystics alone. Anyone who has the ability to see the purity of a flower, the reflection of the soul of the child, is capable of seeing the purity of God's kingdom. We must have the experience of conversion when we know that we have turned around and are walking with the Savior. We must have the vision of the heavenly city, to keep our faith firm in the promises of God's word. But we should not stop with the experience.

In reading George Fox's Journal one is impressed with the fact that after he found one who could speak to his condition, he makes little reference to the condition of his own soul. He was no longer concerned about his own salvation, but he was concerned about the way men were cheating and lying, abusing their neighbors, gambling, drinking, ill-treating prisoners, not administering justice, etc. His mountain top experience revealed to him that every man could be saved and live at peace with one another, if the love of God was in their hearts.

Christian experience is of no practical benefit unless it makes the individual better able to deal with the sin-sick world. Jesus could not dwell with Moses and Elias until his work was accomplished. Until a man is fit to live in the world and bear his part, he is not fit to die. If experiences are desired for themselves they can have little benefit.

The time has come when the Christian world must cease to think of an individual experience as the goal of endeavor. Christians must have all the experiences possible, but only as a means to an end—better service to this old world. The experience of a Friends meeting, where there has been no prearrangement, is not worth while unless it results in better service to humanity. The great influence that the Friends have had on the world is not due to their "Friends Meetings." Their experience lead them to see that the love of God should dwell in every heart, and they set about making that possible. They went into the prisons, they visited the sick, they established a hospital for the insane, they worked for total abstinence, they opposed slavery, they opposed vice in every form, they dealt honestly in business. Thus they made all men feel the value of their experience.

Christian experience then should result in more consecrated service to this suffering and sinful world. It should make one more in the world though not of the world. It should lead one to consecrate his life for the service of his fellow men. For "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

The Place of Mother

The following paper was read in general exercises before the Friends' Bible School at Bloomingdale, Ind., on "Mothers' Day," by Sallie M. Woodard.

Madam De Shael asked Napoleon, "What is the great need of France?" He answered, "Mothers." We do not know just what was in the mind of the great Napoleon when he gave this answer, neither can we stop to discuss the many lines of thought it may suggest; but we leave France with her answer, iniquity, and ask another question: "What was God's thought of woman in the creation? In the Garden she was pure. In the Jewish nation she was honored and honorable. The Hebrew women had rare privileges. They tower like desert palms above the women in pagan lands. In the Hebrew home the children were taught a pure morality and trained according to principles of justice and righteousness, and lived in expectation and hope of the coming of the Messiah in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. And above all, Christ was the true friend of womanhood.

No teacher in any age of the world ever taught as He did. When He came that glorious morning to Jacob's well, or in the house of Simon the Pharisee; when the woman of the street, who had unobserved entered the banquet hall and had taken up her position at the feet of Jesus, and there poured out the great sorrow of heart in a paroxysm of humble, grateful love, and bathed His feet with tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head. He talked with her personally. How beautifully these women showed their gratitude and appreciation by following Him and ministering to Him of their substance. They were last at the cross, first at the tomb, and first to publish the Resurrection. From that day to this, women owe their spiritual elevation and their opportunities of usefulness to the recognition Christ gave them in His ministry. We cannot introduce you to all these Bible women this morning, but only mention a few of their highest virtues which will forever stand on the page of history for all generations to follow. We speak of Sarah the beautiful princess, and her undying love for her son; of Rachel's tomb, the first monument to human love; of Miriam's song of triumph at the Red Sea; of Naomi's motherly devotion; of Ruth gleaning in the fields of the reapers; of Hannah the mother of the great and good Samuel. Her name will stand out in history as among the purest of women. It often happens that the mother is lost sight of in the fame of her son. This is quite true in the life of Samuel. "He stands out the great reformer of his time, lifting his people out of the dark ages of the Old Testament, and leading them into the golden age of David's kingdom and Israel's pre-eminence among the nations." But let us not forget that back of this great life was a mother's great heart, a mother's prayers and tears and hope and fears.

But we lay the Bible aside for a while, for we cannot stop to talk about the Queen of Sheba, of Phillip's four daughters who prophesied, of Tabitha who glorified her needle, of Lydia and her humility, Phoebe and Priscilla and Eunice and Hulda; all these have done their work in their day and generation. But we would speak softly and reverently of the women of our own times. Yea, of your mother and mine. Theirs was a life of faith, a life of toil and of self-sacrifice, not unmingled with tears; in short, a life of devotion to her children, her home and her family interests. How forgetful of self, how thoughtful for the comfort and happiness of every member of the family, and nothing but a clear, definite call of the Master would ever induce her to leave her own fireside.

We go into the home of fifty years ago; the day's work is done, the evening is spent at home; they have a little world of their own around their fireside. Brothers and sisters are happy in each other's companionship. The father and mother are calm and serene; the household may be large and the burdens heavy, but each has learned the sweet lesson that the very finest note in the human heart can never be touched except by baby fingers, and just in proportion as they are obliterated from any nation, just in that proportion society will grow selfish, cold-hearted and cruel. So the father amuses the little one while the mother slips away and tucks the three-year-old and five-year-old away in the trundle-bed, and teaches them to say, "Now I lay me down to sleep"; then she comes again and sings the lullaby to the youngest; the elder children get their books and retire to their studies; father reads aloud, while mother knits the stockings. The morning comes early; each member of the family is happy and rested because they have had their full share of sleep.

Today we are living in a restless age. We are confronted with the great problems of how to teach the children the things that will console them in after life,—the love of books, the little domestic tastes, the things that will tie them to their own fireside, when the evil days come in which the devil may suggest to them to spend their winters away from home in the deliberate drifting we should all resist.

We come back to the question, what was God's thought of woman in the creation? We see a golden chain, the first end planted in the first home in the Garden of Eden by God Himself. It comes down through the ages. Each link is filled with a happy family, in which the mother is queen and the father is king. "The children are like olive plants round about their table."

The door posts have the marks of the Lord Jesus. Out from these homes have gone the sons and daughters to bless the world with the message of the glad tidings of salvation for man's redemption.

The great mother-heart yearns for their return; the soul is almost ready to cry out:

"Backward, turn backward, O tide of the years,
I am so weary of toil and of tears;
Weary of sowing for others to reap—
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep."

New York Yearly Meeting

New York Yearly Meeting was held May 27-31, at Union Springs. For reasons easily explained the attendance was smaller than usual, but this was more than counterbalanced by the spirit of optimism and harmonious activity which prevailed. The visiting ministers were John R. Webb, of Canada Yearly Meeting; Joseph John Mills, General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting; Tom Jones, Secretary of Young People's Activities; Frank W. Dell, of Nebraska Yearly Meeting; Augustus F. Murray and Eloise Hafford, of New England Meeting; Alice Woodard Hunt, of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and S. Edgar Nicholson, Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Besides these there were present from the missionary fields, Drs. George F. and Isabella F. DeVol of China, Solomon Tice of Mexico, and Alfred J. Griffen of the High Point Normal and Industrial School for Negroes.

The Meetings on Ministry and Oversight occupied the day preceding the opening of the Yearly Meeting proper. The reports from all the Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight evidenced a spirit of hopefulness. It was a satisfaction to note that the ministry was adapted to the needs of the various communities, the emphasis having changed from the needs of the meeting to that of the community. A recommendation was received from one of the Quarterly Meetings in regard to the use of queries to stimulate service among the members. The following were suggested: "How can I be of greater value to my meeting?" "How can I awaken and strengthen loyalty to the Society of Friends?" "What is my relation to my neighbor?" "What is there in the message and mission of Friends that I would like to share with others?"

The consideration of the state of society on the first day of the Yearly Meeting revealed a good degree of present activity and a bright outlook for the future.

The members of the Yearly Meeting are engaged in a wide range of Christian activities, many of which may be included in the term "Social Service." The statistical report showed the present membership to be 3,578.

Perhaps the tide rose highest in the session given to the work of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee. Several meetings have been noticeably strengthened through special evangelistic efforts or otherwise. Some new meetings have been opened and attention was called to the promising fields for new meetings in the cities of Newberg, Albany, Amsterdam, Rome, Auburn, Rochester and Buffalo.

The presence of the missionaries elicited a keen interest in their work. The Drs. DeVol have had much service in the Yearly Meeting during this year in the home land and this service was continued during the sessions of the Yearly Meeting. On Second-day evening, Dr. George DeVol spoke on "The Quaker Message from a Missionary Viewpoint," showing how well it is adapted to the mission field because of its simplicity and spirituality. A farewell meeting was held for the DeVols on First-day afternoon.

Solomon Tice, in speaking of the Mexican situation, said the United States is to be commended on its policy of non-interference, but the apology we demanded was unnecessary. He believes the settlement will be more permanent and the Americans will be better satisfied with it, if it is left to the Mexicans. As far as is known, no mission property belonging to Friends has been destroyed. The work at High Point received its usual emphasis. A letter from Robert Simkin, who is now on his way home from China, was read.

Interest in temperance work is increasing. A stirring temperance address was given by Clinton N. Howard of Rochester.

Royal J. Davis, who addressed the meeting on Peace, showed that it is not to be considered an end, but a means. It is necessary that Friends should have a better knowledge of political situations. Their zeal should be according to knowledge. He suggested that young Friends studying law, devote themselves to international law.

Following the report on Bible Schools, which showed them to be in a flourishing condition, William J. Sayers spoke on that subject. He emphasized the fact that the work of the Bible School is to give religious instruction and provide training in public worship and private devotion.

Education was given unusual attention from the fact that the Yearly Meeting was held in Union Springs, where the Yearly Meeting Boarding School, Oakwood Seminary, is located. The work of that institution has been successfully carried on during the past year in spite of the recent illness of the Principal, Walter H. Wood. The life of the school is characterized by a wholesome Christian atmosphere. The amount of the standing debt has been reduced. Following the report of the Trustees an address was given by William Wistar Comfort, of Cornell University, on "Present Conditions in Education." He showed the necessity of a closer personal contact between teacher and pupil. On Seventh-day evening, a meeting of the Oakwood Old Scholars Association was held which was largely attended. It was followed by a reunion and supper on the Seminary campus.

The last business session was devoted to Young Friends' Activities. The main address was given by Lester C. Haworth, of the Buffalo Y. M. C. A. Throughout the meeting this phase of the work received strong emphasis. The presence and enthusiastic messages of Tom Jones conduced greatly to that end. He gave in a clear manner, our reasons for perpetuating the Society of Friends and showed what part young Friends may have in it. There was a response in the hearts of the young Friends of New York Yearly Meeting. The Christian Endeavor Society arranged to send Margaret Parker as a delegate to the Winona Conference. On First-day morning a leaderless meeting, for worship of the type practiced by young English Friends, was held, in which were only those under thirty years of age. The meeting brought forth good results and clearly showed the significance of that kind of worship.

The presence and service of the General Secretary were much appreciated. Especially helpful was his address on "The Quaker Mission" in which he explained how there is a movement at the present time away from organic church federation and toward denominational co-operation. This being the case the Friends, as a denomination, have a great service to perform. At other times in the meeting he produced evidence of the growing solidarity of the Society.

An interesting report was given by one of the delegates to the Centennial of Ohio Yearly Meeting, which served to draw the two bodies closer together.

The devotional meetings were, without exception, times of special blessing. Many, young and old, took an earnest part in these gatherings especially set apart for worship.

English Friends and Foreign Missions

(CONCLUDED)

China

Two years have now elapsed since the revolution which overthrew the Manchus, but the establishment of a Republic has not yet ushered in the "Golden Age." In spite of the decided break with the past which has taken place, the most noteworthy evidence of the new régime is to be found in the militarism of the country, before which plans for schools, for new industries, and for railways, have had to give way. In some quarters there is already a reaction against the excessive spirit of change; efforts are being made to preserve what is best in the past, and to build more slowly for the future. Herein lies our opportunity. When reform is seen to be more difficult than was expected, men more readily appreciate the supreme worth of character; and it is our privilege to point to noble ideals of true, self-sacrificing service.

During the part of the year unsettled conditions caused some interruption to our work, particularly in the city of Chungking, which was for some weeks the scene of faction-fighting, plots and counter plots. There were, however, many tokens of confidence in the foreigner and his neutrality. Generally speaking, promising changes—due, at any rate in part, to these conditions—can be recorded. The growth of an independent spirit in the Church may be remarked. Recently a self-governing Christian Society has been formed, linking the Christians of all denominations together, with the aim of spurring on the Chinese Churches to undertake greater responsibility for the evangelization of China. Chinese Friends are amongst its leaders, and our principles are understood. A movement towards social reform is being developed, particularly through the influence of the International Friends' Institute at Chungking. In many ways we have been brought into a much closer personal relation with Chinese officials; and the whole attitude is altering from one of scarcely-veiled dislike and suspicion to that of cordial good-will and co-operation. Lastly, though by no means surrendering old and tried methods of work, there is considerable adaptation to present conditions. Through the media of Institutes in all our stations, the Y. M. C. A., and the exercise of social fellowship, we are being brought into touch with new classes of people, merchants, scholars, students and officials.

Peace propaganda is finding a most useful and necessary place at the present time. The immense increase in the army since the Revolution, and the prolonged suffering caused to many peaceable merchants, farmers and labourers during the recent rebellion, alike call us to proclaim our message clearly and to show a higher patriotism, a better way. Accordingly, Isaac Mason has continued his efforts to influence public opinion through the translation of Peace literature, which has been distributed amongst high officials and others; and the subject is kept before the pupils in our schools, some of whom are in correspondence with boys in New Zealand who are sufferers in the cause of Peace.

Women's work is, perhaps, the most difficult branch; there is a remarkable enthusiasm for girls' education, and girls and young married women are eager to learn. But our primary schools can make only a good beginning; and the girls have passed back too soon into the narrow atmosphere of a Chinese home for the seed sown to have borne its best fruit. There is urgent need for more secondary education for girls to supplement that given at our single Boarding School at Tungchwan; and this serves to remind us of our serious shortage of missionaries for this and other branches of women's work.

China, at this time of change and ferment, has intense need of spiritual religion, which shall guide her safely through the storms. The present reaction towards Confucianism voices the sense of need of some strong moral force when materialism threatens. The search for all things new, the desire to reform China, the friendly respect for the foreigner, the eagerness for Western education, all these are new avenues of approach. The opportunities are many, and we seem so few. Any missionary could find work that would ordinarily fill two or three men's time, and with it supreme possibilities for the use of life and influence in this greatest awakening nation of the East.

Ceylon

Several Bible classes for the help and teaching of both men and women have been commenced during the past year, which has seen steady, continuous efforts to reach both Sinhalese and Tamils with the message of the Gospel. These classes have made for much fresh thought and close study of the living word of the Bible, and have materially assisted in the upbuilding of the lives of many.

The Home Mission Committee is a new institution which unifies all the home missionary efforts of the Friends' community. Three schools are already in hand, and a good deal of work is being undertaken. Two of these schools are in a very remote spot, to which, during the reign of the last Sinhalese king, convicts were sent, and where they were left to live as best they could. On this pioneer ground it is hoped to undertake further efforts to win the district for Christ.

Our missionaries have been deeply exercised at the effects of the Ceylon Excise Law of 1912, and have striven earnestly to organize public opinion against it, hitherto without success. The conditions set on foot by it are of the utmost danger to young and impressionable converts, and even Christians of some years' standing have fallen beneath the curse.

Buddhist opposition to the efforts of Christian missionaries in Ceylon has been especially noteworthy of late; Buddhism is awake to the signs of the times; and we are surely called to faithfulness in the proclamation of our message, and to a worthy presentation of Him who is the Bread of Life, and the soul's true and only satisfaction.

At Home

There have been many encouraging developments of the work at the home end, which space does not permit us to dwell on in detail. Brief reference may be permitted, however, to the striking progress in the matter of missionary preparation. At our Training Home at Kingsmead, Selly Oak, we are in close touch with Woodbrooke and other allied educational institutions, including Carey Hall, the new missionary residence for students associated with three Free Church Societies. The Interdenominational Board of Study is rendering invaluable specialized help in the matter of curricula of training and courses of study. Lastly, the development of the houses on the Kingsmead Settlement will render it possible for missionaries on furlough to share in the advantages of the neighbourhood and in the united study and spiritual fellowship which so helpfully characterize it.

"The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influence of the Bible."—Robert Moffatt.

Dublin Yearly Meeting

From the London Friend we glean the following facts in brief concerning the recent sessions of Dublin Yearly Meeting:

About eighty Friends attended the opening session of the meeting on Ministry and Oversight. The reports show that there are thirty-six ministers, eighty-three elders and one hundred and thirty-seven overseers in the Yearly Meeting. Much good work has been done, particularly in pastoral care over individual members, and also in arranging visits to the meetings collectively.

The opening session of the Yearly Meeting was attended by about one hundred and sixty persons. There were several visiting Friends from London Yearly Meeting, together with David Sampson and wife from North Carolina Yearly Meeting, Robert L. Simkin and wife from New York Yearly Meeting, and Henry Coventry of Canada, while Joseph Elkinton and family, of Philadelphia, appeared later in the session. The reading of the American Epistles brought comments from several Friends, who had visited America. It was decided to send a friendly letter to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. James G. Douglas was appointed to visit America this year in behalf of the Young Friends Association.

The Home Mission Committee reported that good work was being carried on in both the north and south of Ireland. Increasing interest in Sunday School work was shown in Ulster. The report on temperance showed that things were perhaps rather better than hitherto, but drink continued to make sad ravages. It was recommended that the children in the national schools should be taught the evils of alcohol.

A deep concern was aroused over the question of promoting gambling by the public press, especially among some members of London Yearly Meeting. A proposal to make mention of the matter in the epistle to London, provoked considerable discussion, but the proposition was finally agreed to. During the discussion of the subject of Peace it developed that some members of Ulster Meeting had joined the volunteers and had been drilling for some time. A message of sympathy in the present situation in Ireland was read from the Lancashire and Cheshire Quarterly Meetings in England.

The statistical report showed a total membership of 2,326, a decrease of 23 as compared with last year.

The consideration of the state of the Society provoked an extended profitable discussion, and Friends were urged to recognize the greatness of the task which would make the membership forget the unessentials and insist only upon those essential truths upon which the Church stands. The educational reports presented encouraging facts from the Yearly Meeting school of Brookfield and the three Quarterly Meeting schools. A committee was appointed to visit these schools on behalf of the Yearly Meeting. A resolution was adopted to be forwarded to Parliament, supporting the passage of the English Sunday Closing Bill, which according to later reports was defeated in the House of Commons on second reading. The reports from the Quarterly Meetings on Foreign Mission work showed a deepening interest while the report of the Young Friends Association showed much life and activity in several of the branches. A number of "tramps" were being arranged for in different parts of the country.

Bible readings were held each day with a fair attendance. The Missionary Helpers Union had a well attended gathering of children, while a meeting of parents was addressed by David E. Sampson. The annual meeting on Foreign Missions was addressed by Daniel Oliver, Robert L. Simkin, Andrew Johnston and Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin.

Never Owned a Bible

BY J. H. DAVIES

An interesting and fruitful missionary journey was recently made in West Tennessee, by two missionaries of the American Sunday School Union.

Near Rocky Knob, they found a very poor family of husband and wife and seven children living in a small one-room log house, with a brush shelter just outside the back door, under which the family cooks and eats.

This family had never owned a Bible. They had no good books to read and it was with pleasure that these needs were supplied.

When the father came in from his work in the field, his wife and children gathered around him with faces aglow with the happiness characteristic of rural people, showing him the books which had been given them.

With emotion the wife handed her husband the Bible saying: "Sid, I have been praying for God to make us able in some way to get us a Bible so we could teach it to our children, and see! God has sent these men. I had no money, and they gave it to us."

The man took the Book of Books in his hands, and as he turned it over looking at it in silence the tears flowed freely from their eyes, telling more than words of the thankful gratitude in their hearts.

The oldest of these children is a bright girl of seventeen who has had the opportunity to attend school only a few weeks all her life. Now her great desire is to go to school. But she will not be able to do so unless help is given her.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Correspondence

The English Tramp by Thomas E. Jones, in his article in the last two numbers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, I found by perusing and re-perusing to be especially interesting reading. At first I was not attracted by the title, knowing how little esteemed the proverbial tramp is in America.

Perhaps the first that awakened my interest appeared in the second or concluding portion, where after alluding to the burning spirit of love and enthusiasm of George Fox and others of the early eminent Friends, the English Tramps (as they call themselves) in their life of trying to solve the varied problems of the meetings they visited, in this particular case were led into a discussion of the pastoral system. This meeting, as it would seem, knew but little of that system, and what little they did know they admitted was colored with prejudice, but after the excellent discussion everybody came together in a wonderful spirit of harmony.

These Friends came to have great sympathy with the pastoral meeting, saying they needed more evangelism in their work, and we agreed most heartily that we must steer our pastoral idea in a channel that will lead back to the early type of Friends meeting. Thus we see that no harm, but much good came through a little earnest discussion, which I have noticed some Friends have been very much afraid of. For other good points I would recommend American Friends to reread the entire article.

Shall the Cross or the Crescent Dominate in Africa?

The Crisis in Africa

BY JEFFERSON W. FORD

The chief problem that faces the missionary world today, and especially the missionary in Africa, is that of winning the pagan races of Central Africa for Christ before they become Mohammedan. The question is, shall Christ or Mohamet win these pagan races? Shall they come under the sway of the Gospel or of Islam's cruelty and superstition? Which shall dominate, the Cross or the crescent? Shall the present darkness be deepened by the added gloom of the religion of the false prophet, or shall it be dispelled by the light of the Gospel? These are some of the very serious questions which are staring the Church of Christ in the face and will not be put off.

The crying need of the hour is that in some way the tardy Church may be awakened to a sense of the emergency of the situation. Fully one-half of Africa today is under the dominating power of Islam, and one-fifth more is threatened.

During the past thirteen centuries the fiery propagators of this false religion have spread deception over North Africa unchecked, and now that the powers have decreed that they no longer use these pagan races as a recruiting ground for their infamous slave trade, they have developed a fanatical desire to win them to their religion. A college in Cairo sends out five thousand students each year that are pledged to the course of making Africa Moslem.

This false religion makes a profound appeal to a profoundly religious race, so much so that in one battle ten thousand of them laid down their lives for this religion that has brought them little but sorrow and woe. And while in the past few years perhaps fifty Moslems in Africa have embraced Christianity, as many as fifty thousand pagans have become Moslems. And in Cairo alone more than twenty presses are pouring out volumes of literature night and day to answer and defeat Christianity.

This is a strategic warfare. Christians must take and hold the strategic points to stem the tide of the Mohammedan advance into pagan territory. And this is one of the things that the Friends are doing in the location of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission, in the track that the Moslem must pass over before he can reach the tribes of the south. Already they are entering our own sphere of influence and unless we make it possible for our mission to strongly occupy the territory that has been assigned to us, we will soon have a strong Moslem community in our own district. But if we can locate the necessary stations in this district before the Moslems and the Roman Catholics gain a foothold, we will be in a position to accomplish the task the Lord of the harvest has given to us.

Westfield, Indiana.

An Opportunity to Help

Jefferson W. Ford and his wife, Helen Farr Ford, have been accepted by the American Friends Board to work in connection with the Friends Africa Industrial Mission, the strategic position referred to in the foregoing article. They have had missionary experience in Africa and Jamaica. They are therefore tried workers and yet in the prime of life. They have been accepted on the basis that their support be forthcoming from new channels, all the funds in sight along regular lines being needed to keep up work already begun.

Westfield Quarterly Meeting with the assistance of Carmel and West Grove Quarterly Meetings have raised most of the amount necessary for their support and the balance is practically assured. In addition to the support there is a need of $1,000 for outfit and transportation. Of this amount there is about $150 in hand. It is desired that the Friends generally may help these workers to get to the field this summer.

Arthur Chilson and family expect to return to the field the first of July and it is hoped that all funds will be arranged for so that Jefferson and Helen Ford may go with them.

Are there not many among the Friends who should feel the weight of the situation, and the urgency of staying the progress of Islam and upholding the Cross by strengthening our forces on the field, and at once enlist in the warfare by promptly and liberally contributing to the $1,000 for outfit and transportation? Individuals, Sunday Schools, Meetings and Christian Endeavor Societies are invited to contribute to this.

Contributions may be sent to Edgar Hiatt, Treasurer A. F. B. F. M., Richmond, Indiana, or to Emma Morrow, Westfield, Indiana. Do not fail to state what the contribution is for when sending.

Prayer Meeting Symposium

In answer to our request, asking for brief discussions of the prayer meeting or mid-week meeting among Friends, we have the following from a pastor who asks that his name be not given:

"I hope to adopt this plan this fall. At present we only have the mid-week meeting in the daytime, but this fall I am planning to use the following course: Bible Study, Teacher Training, Missionary Study, Friends Study and Home Missionary Study. We will circulate these courses among the members and get each one to sign up for one of the studies. All the courses will meet at the same hour and have about twenty minutes' devotional service after which the members will meet in the classes for the study period. We will make the courses as nearly equal in length as possible so that when they are completed each can change to another one.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Pleasant Plain Quarter—Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting was held at Woolson, May 16-17. The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight was held the preceding day at Richland. Harry R. Keates, General Superintendent, was with us and his messages were instructive and inspiring. In addition to revivals at Woolson and Hopewell, meetings have been held the past season at Pleasant Plain, Walnut Creek, Nugent and at one out-post. These were occasions owned and blessed of the Lord in the conversion and renewal of many. The work was done mostly by the pastors and home workers.

Des Moines—Children's day was very appropriately observed by Des Moines Meeting at the evening service on May 31st. An excellent program was rendered, consisting of special music, recitations and a drill exercise. The children had been well trained by the superintendent and his wife and by their teachers.

On the evening of May 24th, in the Des Moines Friends Church, M. Emma Newby gave an interesting account of the Missionary Union held at Muncie, Indiana, recently.

Earlham—Anna K. Kitch and Sarah Standing gave their report of the Triennial Conference of the Women's Foreign Missionary Union, held at Muncie, Ind., on Sunday morning, May 31st. They expect to give this report over the Yearly Meeting as far as possible. The delegates will all engage in this work wherever practicable.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

Winthrop Center, Maine—The meeting has been exceedingly fortunate during last month in having as its distinguished visitors four prominent Friends. On the 6th, Elam and Elda Henderson, of Vassalboro, Maine, gave a most interesting and inspiring account of the Friends Missions in Jamaica where they labored for over a year. On the 20th, Arthur Chilson, traveling in the interests of the Friends African Industrial Mission, made a telling appeal for the cause of missions in Africa. On the 24th, Thomas E. Jones, of Hartford Theological Seminary, addressed the meeting. His message was convincing and made his listeners all feel that no fair-minded person could conscientiously disregard the claims of the gospel.

Manchester, N. H.—Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, which met the 23d and 24th of May, was largely attended by Friends from the various meetings and by others from the local communities. The messages of Thomas E. Jones were particularly inspiring, because they showed why the Quaker message is especially adapted to the needs of modern life. All were made to feel that the outlook of the Friends Church is bright, and that Friends should unreservedly give themselves to the furtherance of evangelical, but not a sectarian religion.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING

Ferrisburg, Vt.—Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at Ferrisburg, Vt., May 9 and 10. There were no visitors from a distance and there were few young people present. There has been no salaried minister for more than six months, but the "Willing Workers" of Monkton Ridge have repaired the parsonage in anticipation of an occupant in the near future. The quota for the Yearly Meeting budget will be supplied, while money will be furnished for home and foreign missions and other departmental work by interested individuals. Three large parcels of clothing have been sent to New York. J. Richard Dean, a member of this meeting, has recently received a "Fellowship" from Princeton University, the third that has ever been given out.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Bloomington—Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held May 15-17, with good attendance and much interest in the different departments of work. In the missionary conference, on the morning of the 16th, reports were given from the recent Triennial Missionary meeting in Muncie, by Lenora N. Hobbs and Mary A. Cox, and from a conference with members of "The Committee of Twenty-eight," held in Indianapolis, by Flora M. Morris and Enos Harvey. In the meeting for worship, which followed, Lindley Reagan, pastor at Marshall, brought a helpful message. Jefferson Ford gave a helpful address on "Choosing Life's Work," before the Academic Association, held Saturday evening, in Overman Hall. In the Bible School conference, held Sabbath morning, there were two excellent talks, "The Bible in the Public School," by Parke Brown, of Tangier, and "The Influence of the Bible School on the Home, the Community, and the Nation," by Mary Hubbard, of Bloomington. Jefferson Ford presented the cause of Missions in the morning service, taking as his theme, "The Home Base," and in the evening discussing "The Needs of the Foreign Field." There were many in attendance at the Sabbath morning service from other communities, Ex-Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, of Danville, Ill., who spent his boyhood and young manhood in this place, being one of the visitors.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

PROFESSOR William Orville Mendenhall has been released from much of his work in the Department of Mathematics that he may develop at the college and within the limits of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings Evangelistic, Missionary, Bible School, and other practical phases of church work. The definite effort of the college will be to assist in carrying out the recommendations of the Five Years Meeting as contained in the report of the Commission on the Meeting and its Pastoral Care. This is essentially constructive work and the co-operation and prayer of Friends are asked for, that it may be fruitful in extending the power and efficiency of our branch of the church. Correspondence solicited.

ROBERT L. KELLY, Pres. EARLHAM POST OFFICE RICHMOND, IND.

PERSONAL MENTION

President Robert L. Kelly will preach the baccalaureate sermon at Earlham College for this year's graduating class on June 14th.

Lavinus K. Painter, a graduate of Earlham College, class of '13, will serve the meeting at Collins, N. Y., as pastor for the coming year.

Dr. Sylvester Newlin of Pasadena, California, gave the annual address to the Christian Associations of Whittier College on the evening of June 7th.

Alfred C. Garrett of Germantown, Pa., addressed the boys of Westtown school on the evening of May 17th, on "High Thinking and Right Living."

Professor Elbert Russell of Earlham College has been nominated by the Progressives as their candidate for Congress from the Sixth Indiana district.

Frank W. Dell, Superintendent of Nebraska Yearly Meeting Evangelistic work, is planning to attend Hartford Theological Seminary this coming year.

Joseph John Mills of Pasadena, California, General Secretary for Friends, is on a tour of the Yearly Meetings, attending New York, Nebraska, Oregon and California.

Robert L. Simkin and wife, who have been doing mission work in China, after attending Dublin and London Yearly Meetings, are now at their home at Ossining, N. Y.

Royal J. Davis, who is on the editorial staff of the New York Evening Post, gave the Peace address at New York Yearly Meeting at Union Springs, on the evening of May 28th.

Lorena R. Hoskins of Whittier, California, has a minute from her home meeting for religious work in North Carolina, where she will be engaged until the Yearly Meeting in August.

Tilman Hobson, well known to many Friends, is touring Ohio in the interests of prohibition and woman suffrage. He will return to California early in July to engage in the campaign for statewide prohibition.

Edwin McGrew, who resigned the pastorate at Whittier, California, has decided to remain as pastor on condition that he be given absolute rest for three months and that an assistant pastor be secured.

Dr. Walter R. Miles has been appointed Experimental Psychologist to the Nutrition Laboratory of the Carnegie Institute of Washington. His new address will be 5 Wabeno Street, Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

Thomas Elsa Jones, General Secretary of the Board of Young People's Activities, after attending New York Yearly Meeting, has begun an active campaign for the summer in behalf of the work among young Friends. He will attend some of the Yearly Meetings and as many local and Quarterly Meetings as possible.

Edward Grubb of Croydon, England, gave the Swarthmore lecture for 1914, on May 19th, his subject being "The Historical and Inward Christ; a Study of Quaker Thought." The lecture has been published in book form.

Ira C. Johnson is much improved in health and will resume his duties as Evangelistic Superintendent, with the assistance of the Chairman, Truman Kenworthy, of Richmond, Ind., and the Treasurer, George W. Bird, Pennville, Ind.

Amos Kenworthy has been granted a minute for religious work in Western and Kansas Yearly Meetings. A request for a minute for work in England has been endorsed by his Quarterly Meeting and forwarded to the coming Yearly Meeting.

President Thomas E. Newlin of Whittier College, addressed the school in Orange County, California, at a banquet at the Fullerton High School on May 20th and preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Holtville High School on May 24th.

Walter H. Wood, Principal of Oakwood Seminary at Union Springs, N. Y., recently suffered from what appears to be a nervous breakdown. It is a pleasure to state that he is improving in health, but has been given a year's absence by the Trustees for rest and recuperation.

NEWS ITEMS

On May 17, William C. Longstreth gave a splendid ten-minute temperance talk to the boys and girls of the Friends Bible School at Haverford, Pa.

The local Friends Meeting at High Point, N. C., recently joined in a union meeting in the school auditorium on May 31, to hear Dr. Sam Small lecture on national prohibition.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Oakwood Seminary at Union Springs, N. Y., May 30, 1914, the principal, Walter H. Wood, was given a year's leave of absence, and Eliezer Partington was appointed acting-principal for the year 1914-1915.

The W. F. M. S. of the North Denver Meeting, Colorado, has a mission study class, which met each week for six weeks in studying the "King's Business." Many have received a new vision of the great need of all doing their part in sending the gospel to others.

The N. M. C. A. of Central College, Nebraska, has arranged for a series of Sabbath evening addresses on teaching, mission work, business and the ministry as vocations. President Eli Perisho, Dr. Fouts, James Stephen and others have already given addresses.

Whittier Quarterly Meeting has adopted a resolution favoring the establishment of headquarters for Friends at San Francisco and at San Diego during the Exposition next year. The resolution has been forwarded to the Yearly Meeting for consideration.

A Church History Study class has been organized from the two Christian Endeavor Societies of the First Friends Church at Pasadena, California under the leadership of John Dorland. The class has taken up the study of the foundings and the founders of the Society of Friends.

In a recent notice of the new book of Luke Woodard, "Autumn Gleanings," which appeared in the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, it should have been stated that when the book is to be sent by mail, the price is $1.10. All orders should be sent to Luke Woodard, Fountain City, Indiana.

As a feature of "Newspaper Night" at the C. E. Society meeting of Poughkeepsie Friends Meeting, New York, a four-page, seven-column newspaper called The Friendly Times, was issued with the help of the pastor, William J. Sayers. It contains a write-up of the meeting and of the C. E. Society and much other valuable material. The plan might be followed profitably by others.

The Christian Endeavorers of California Yearly Meeting are making elaborate preparations for various meetings at Whittier during Yearly Meeting week. The program includes a banquet at the M. E. Church and a Saturday evening meeting, which will be especially helpful. Each local society is asked to appoint two delegates.

The annual meeting of Friends Educational Association of Philadelphia was held at the Germantown Friends School on May 30th. On the program was a discussion of "Home Direction of Children's Reading," by Anna Kohler Barnes, while in the evening, Hamilton Holt, of the Independent, gave an address on "Citizenship and the School."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

June 21

Subject—The Great Refusal.

Lesson—Mark 10: 17-31.

Golden Text—Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Can a man succeed in business today who follows with exactness the teachings of the Golden Rule? How many are there who must dispose of their business or their wealth in order to insure a home in heaven? Is the conduct of modern business inconsistent with the principles of the Christian religion?

These are pertinent questions in the light of today's lesson. Yet the answer does not depend upon the business, nor upon the degree or nature of the wealth. The answer depends upon the man or the woman involved. It is the manner of using wealth and not the fact of its possession that determines the status of the owner.

The question of gaining eternal life is mainly a question of allegiance. Jesus must have whole-hearted discipleship for His kingdom. He cannot share an abiding place in the human heart with something that is unspiritual. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

The young man had a clean record under the law, but there must be a severer test, a test which would reveal the object of his deepest affections. The very suggestion that he should part with his wealth revealed as in a mirror the degree to which it had a hold upon him, and had he chosen to follow Jesus he would have done it with divided affections and allegiance.

It is the sacrificial service that counts, the sacrificial life that will insure eternal life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic—Chief Seats and How to Reach Them.—Luke 14: 7-11. (A Promotion Meeting.)

There is a sense in which promotion is not only justifiable, but highly desirable. "But desire earnestly the greater gifts." "Let us press on unto perfection." Going from strength to strength is the Bible ideal. We are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear."

Promotion means growth, and growth means fruitage, and fruitage means life. Ambition to be a faithful, obedient follower of Christ, ambition to excel in good works, ambition to succeed in the Christian life is praiseworthy.

But there is a false ambition that seeks the chief place for selfish purposes, or that uses wrong means to achieve ends that in themselves may be entirely proper. Promotion at the expense of other deserving ones is never justifiable, and he who seeks promotion in this way is to be condemned.

The greatest men are the simplest, and it is not by self-seeking that real promotion comes. The meek shall inherit the earth. He who does his task best is in line of promotion. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING NOTICE

Editor American Friend:

The plan proposed in Minute 88 of the Indiana Yearly Meeting Minutes for 1913 of holding the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight on Second-day afternoon and Second-day evening, and allowing the Yearly Meeting at large to begin at ten o'clock on Third-day morning and finish its business on Seventh-day evening, has been approved by practically all of the Quarterly Meetings. I make the official announcement therefore that this plan will be followed for Yearly Meeting this year.

I should also like for the announcement to be made that the detailed program for the Yearly Meeting will be published in due time. Meantime, if heads of departments have requests to make regarding the revised program, they are asked to make them at once to the undersigned that the matter may come before the Committee on Program.

JOINT ACTION OF KANSAS YEARLY MEETING BOARDS

Editor American Friend:

A joint Conference of the Executive Committees of the Evangelistic and Church Extension and Foreign Mission Boards of Kansas Yearly Meeting was held at Wichita, Kansas, May 27, 1914. This joint Conference decided to adopt the plan for an Educational Campaign proposed by the National Interdenominational Home and Foreign Mission Boards.

The following committee was appointed to have care of getting the campaign started in advance of our next Yearly Meeting, namely: Edgar H. Stranahan, L. Clarkson Hinshaw and Wallace Kemp of Wichita, Kansas, and Martha Woodard and Eusebia Couch of Haviland, Kansas.

FRANCIS A. WRIGHT,

ROSY AND PLUMP

Good Health from Right Food

"It's not a new food to me," remarked a Va. man, in speaking of Grape-Nuts.

"About twelve months ago my wife was in very bad health, could not keep anything on her stomach. The Doctor recommended milk, half water, but it was not sufficiently nourishing.

"A friend of mine told me one day to try Grape-Nuts and cream. The result was really marvelous. My wife soon regained her usual strength and today is as rosy and plump as when a girl of sixteen.

"These are plain facts and nothing I could say in praise of Grape-Nuts would exaggerate in the least the value of this great food."

The Westtown Letter

INDOOR LIVING

It is quite impossible to maintain real home life in an institution, but there are some forms of institution life that are much more home-like than others, and the institutional life may be always in evidence or it may be pushed a little into the background. Westtown aims to be as home-like as is possible in a co-educational school, and it is steadily pressing back the institutional line.

Nothing contributes more to this desirable end than a group of teachers whose members are able to keep in close touch with the interests and feelings of the pupils. It is steadily and quite successfully our endeavor to keep this in view in building up the Faculty. The care of the children is in nearly all cases assigned to those who can secure good order by personal influence rather than to those who are simply good disciplinarians.

Next in importance to the influence of the teachers are the living arrangements. The girls have six sitting-rooms for their use, one for each of the four groups, one for the Seniors, and one general parlor. The boys have five of such rooms, three of these having been opened within the past two years. The members of the Senior class are all room-keepers in the class rooms along the main corridor on the first floor. This gives them a quiet place for living and study in and out-of-school times.

The whole school assembles three times a day in the dining room; the boys and girls occupy opposite sides of the table with a teacher at the head, and the tables are changed about once a month. The Superintendent reads a few lines from the Bible at the close of breakfast. The boys and girls collect in the different ends of the building at 8:15 in the morning, and school is opened by another Bible reading. A third reading is made in the evening collection after supper.

The time from 6:30 to 7:30 in the evening is called the social hour. During this time brothers and sisters and first cousins may meet in the Central Hall; committees of the pupils, joint and otherwise, confer together; and various societies and clubs hold their meetings. The Library is open two evenings for the boys and two for the girls. The various parlors and sitting-rooms are all in use and special reading matter is placed before the children. The girls bring out their fancy work, and sometimes read aloud in congenial groups. In the boys' collecting room are the games of crokinole and carroms which are too noisy for the parlors, and evening papers entertain those who find nothing else to do. The carpenter shop is also open at this time.

After 7:30 the younger children have a short study collection and then retire, while the older ones start in for a full evening of work. By ten o'clock everything is quiet and the lights go out.

First-day has its own program in which an effort is made to reduce the routine to a minimum. At 9:20 the children gather into the various class rooms for their Bible lessons. A memory lesson is recited every Fifth-day morning, but these First-day classes are less formal, the children reading and discussing the lesson with no previous preparation. At 10:30 everyone goes to Meeting, which is held in the usual Philadelphia manner, without program or leader. An entirely silent Meeting is quite rare. Often ministering Friends are present with their messages, and nearly always a few of the teachers or older Friends have something to say, while not infrequently some pupil has a verse or brief word. Nearly all the offerings are what is called prophetic ministry, delivered under the weight of a serious call. The teaching ministry and the prepared discourse find expression in our half-hour First-day evening collection, which will be explained more fully in a later letter.

From two to three in the afternoon is the Quiet Hour. Before this or during it are small gatherings of pupils, sometimes alone, sometimes under the leadership of a teacher, for serious conference and group worship. From three o'clock to supper-time the children scatter pretty widely. The teachers may take special groups, or small parties of boys may go on long walks under the leadership of one of the older fellows.

After supper the Library is opened for the boys for a while and then the half-hour collections are held, and the remainder of the evening is devoted to reading and the writing of the home-letters.

There are numerous societies and clubs that add interest to Westtown Life. The Rustic is an agricultural club which meets once a week, before which successful farmers are often asked to talk about their particular lines, dairy work, stock raising, orchard culture, or whatever the specialty may be. There are debating societies and natural history clubs, besides the usual variety of athletic meetings.

Many of the teachers and about fifty of the older students constitute the Westtown Literary Union, which is a literary society, meeting every Fourth-day evening. It has a pleasant program for an hour and then a short social ending for the evening.

Regular sociables for the whole school are held about once in a month, at which various games and much lively conversation are enjoyed.

About two years ago one of our good friends, who was a pupil at the school many years ago, erected for us beside our new Lake a building that is known as the Lake House. Besides an ample canoe room and dressing rooms, it has a convenient kitchen and a large reception room where meetings can be held or meals served. It has an open fire-place and comfortable shelter may be found in it during the winter skating. But it is chiefly used as a social center, and every little while groups of children are taken there to prepare and enjoy a supper in a spirit of comradeship impossible in the school itself.

The Firebox is the Critical Element

The FarQuar type scientifically correct.

Unscientific firebox designs in common use.

In the FarQuar system the air sweeps every inch of the metal in swift currents, absorbing the heat as it passes. All the heating surface is effective and the metal absorbs and imparts heat at an equalized rate.

Remember there are no seams and joints through which gas and smoke leakage occur.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

Glad o'Heart

BY WALTER ADRIANCE BREWSTER

Just to be glad o'heart each day,
Where'er I go, whate'er I do,
Blithe as the bird that seems to say:
"There's joy in life for me and you;
Lift up your voice, sing and rejoice;
And just be glad the whole day through."

Just to be glad o'heart each day;
Glad as the brook, with sweet, low laugh,
That ripples down its winding way
And blows the bubbles, light as chaff,
That dance and gleam upon the stream
And lend their charm in its behalf.

Just to be glad o'heart each day;
As full of cheer as sunbeams are
That give new life with each warm ray
And banish gloom that would debar,
That bring the day and light the way
With gladness on our paths afar.

Just to be glad o'heart each day,
With joy in life that hope imparts,
Like each fair flower, that finds its way
Out of the earth and upward starts,
Glad to be free, and smiles to see
The source of warmth that touched its heart.

Just to be glad, so glad, each day,
That I must lift my voice in song
And needs must laugh my care away
And wear a smile amid the throng;
Just wear a smile, and all the while
Be glad o'heart, my whole life long.

The Old Quaker Bonnet

BY CHARLES DENNIS

Oh, the quaint, old Quaker bonnet,
And the dear old heads that don it,
How placid and serene the face within!
What a neatness and completeness—
A calm and restful sweetness,
As set apart from all the taint of sin.

Oh, the tender Quaker voices,
How they cheer us and rejoice us
With an appealing music all their own;
With the tone of gentle sadness,
Chimes a note of subdued gladness,
Triumphant o'er the sorrows they have known.

Oh, the dear, old, saintly faces,
Mirroring the Christian graces,
In a radiance of beauty how complete!
Let us these old faces cherish,
And the memories they nourish,
Ever, ever, as a benediction sweet!

Lest We Forget

We trust that no one failed to note the special offer of THE AMERICAN FRIEND on page 2 of last week's issue. There is plenty of time to work out the plan, if Friends in every meeting will begin at once.

The proposition is to give us a new subscriber for every 20 of membership at the special rate of 50 cents each for the last six months of the year, in the hope that we can retain the bulk of them next year as regular subscribers, to put THE AMERICAN FRIEND on a paying basis.

The plan will amount to little, however, unless it is worked out in every meeting. THE AMERICAN FRIEND is the child of the church, is owned and controlled by the Five Years Meeting and needs to be put beyond the handicap of financial distress. Our appeal is to pastors or to interested Friends in every local meeting to see that the effort is made in accordance with the suggestion made last week. Now is the time for concerted action in every meeting.

MISCELLANEOUS

The U. S. Senate has restored to the Navy Appropriation Bill an amendment providing for the increase of chaplains in the American Navy from twenty-four to fifty-two. The Federal Council of Churches has been active for some months in behalf of this action.

The article by Sir John Edwin Sandys, of Cambridge, England, on the remarkable career of Roger Bacon in the June number of the Homiletic Review, is both timely and instructive. The number is up to its usual standard in important contributed articles, including contributions to the Sermonic Literature Department. Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls, 354-360 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, $3.00 a year.

Statistics show that the number of senior cadets and citizen forces training throughout Australia for military purposes, December 31, 1913, was 121,622 and the total prosecutions for refusal to train was 22,143. This was one prosecution for every six in training. In Tasmania, the figures are one prosecution for every 3.5 and in New South Wales, one for every five. A number of young Friends have chosen to go to jail rather than submit to military training.

Between 1900 and 1910 the employment of women in the United States increased by leaps and bounds. In the manufacture of boots and shoes, clothing and tobacco, the number of women doubled during the decade. 252,432 women and children make clothing; 428,267 women and girls work in textile factories; 190,000 women and children work in cotton mills; 90,619 women and children work in tobacco factories; 88,628 women and children work in canneries; 80,000 women and children work in steam laundries.

Two hundred and twenty-six great congresses and conventions have voted to make San Francisco their headquarters in 1915. These, with sessions ranging from four to sixteen days each, will make an average of four conventions daily during the life of the Panama Exposition. Fully 3,000 other conventions are in correspondence with the Exposition authorities and it is probable that many of them will arrange for conventions. Arrangements are being made to enable students of special topics to time their visits so as to attend all sessions of conventions engaged along similar lines of activities.

The Anti-Saloon League of New York has made public an offer of $2,500.00 in prizes for the best eight essays on the question, "What the Approximately Twenty Million Dollars of Revenue Received from the Liquor Traffic under the Raines Excise Law Costs the People of New York State, Morally, Mentally, Physically, Financially and Industrially." Essays are limited to 5,000 words and must be typewritten. The competition closes October 1, 1915, and is open to any person residing in New York or taking any kind of regular work in an institution of learning in New York during the year ending on that date.

The Unity of Friends

In a recent issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND we quoted in these columns from the London General Epistle of 1913 as follows:

"To meet the new burst of national, social and intellectual life, which we so gladly welcome, we need a fresh breaking out within ourselves of the irresistible life of God."

And again we quoted from the same document:

"The spirit of complete and continuous concentration on the work of the Kingdom must spread throughout the whole body."

These were messages from one body of Friends to other bodies of Friends with which there was no organic connection, but each breathing the spirit of unity in the consciousness of a call to the same service in the face of common opportunities which are recognized as being the common heritage of Friends everywhere. In the same connection we quoted approvingly from an editorial in the London Friend the following:

"May not our Society be, as it were reborn, as it faces with great seriousness the call of today, and hears afresh the call of God summoning it to fulfill its prophetic task?"

Without doubt all these sentiments will be echoed sympathetically by all Friends of whatever name. Yet one cannot escape the inevitable query that asks whether any or all of the blessings sought are to be vouchsafed in large measure to Friends as such, broken as they are into scattered if not inharmonious segments, or the other query that asks whether or not the "concentration on the work of the Kingdom" that must spread throughout the whole body of Friends will possess that virility and potentiality that is worth while if it must operate in unconnected sections of the body.

If the Society of Friends is to be reborn—and God grant that it may be in the spirit as expressed by our London editor—must it be reborn in the same divisive molds that leave us in detached sections as we face the tasks of a common mission? It is pertinent to raise the question as to how long we can maintain the pleasant fiction of calling ourselves the followers of the teachings of George Fox, when to be intelligently exact we must be classified as English Friends, and Irish Friends, and Five Years Meeting Friends, and Philadelphia Friends and Ohio Yearly Meeting Friends.

We are not unaware of the fact that we are venturing here to open up a delicate problem about which it is so easily possible to be misunderstood. We are deeply convinced, however that the present day trend of events both within and apart from Friends makes it necessary to face this question now, or certainly within a few years, if Friends are to maintain their footing in the field of Christian activities and if they are to preserve the message for future generations which has been their special contribution to the world through two hundred and fifty years of faithful ministrations.

Are we not permitting the technique of procedure to dwarf and overshadow somewhat the unity of our faith and the importance of the Quaker message? We ourselves know that in many respects the solidarity of all the above named bodies of Friends is complete, but to the world we are an aggregation of broken fragments, the potency of whose appeals is blunted by reason of the apparent isolation of our various parts.

There are perhaps a hundred objections to be raised immediately to the plea for either organic or federal unity, some of them real, some of them fanciful. They are objections which we are free to confess will probably prolong our separations. We can imagine something of the consternation that would probably come to many of our English Friends at the thought of being linked up with their American children in a Five Years Meeting or a Federal Council of the Society of Friends, and this could only be paralleled by the trepidation with which some of our Western Yearly Meetings would contemplate a union with our English Friends or with which both Philadelphia and Ohio, for different reasons, would contemplate a union with either or both of the others.

But the differences that hold us apart are, we believe, largely the differences of time and circumstance, the differences of technique as characterized above, rather than fundamental or necessarily permanent. One cannot read the proceedings of the recent Yearly Meetings at Philadelphia and London without a profound consciousness of the presence of the same spirit of progression as characterized the proceedings of our last Five Years Meeting. All of us alike are getting the same vision of the tasks to which the Church of Christ is being called in this generation, and there is coming to us the same consciousness of need to be rebaptized—to be reborn, as the London editor puts it—as we face with seriousness the prophetic task to which as Friends we have been assigned.

We have no purpose to urge overmuch a consideration of the problem of our federal unity at this time. We are deeply convinced that as Friends we must go limping to our tasks so long as we fail to face and solve the problem of our denominational solidarity. But it is a problem that must remain unsolved until in the face of a larger vision and in the light of a fuller comprehension of our mission in the world—to this generation no less than to the generations to come—we are able to rise above provincialisms and the environment of circumstances, and, in the conscious unity of the Spirit of Christ, clasp hands for a more efficient service in the Master's kingdom.

We are not concerned herein with the how or the when of this problem. We are concerned that Friends shall follow the visions that are crowding in upon us, leading us ultimately as we believe to a common highway of purpose, of consecration and of action. Possibly we are far enough along our various roads that we can at least without sensitiveness contemplate the problem. Our differences are not so much differences of faith, of doctrine, of denominational tenets, of nationality, as they are of procedure, of custom, and when the time comes to do it, we can afford to modify procedure and even custom, if thereby we may grow into a larger life and become doubly strong for the Master's work.

The Spiritual Life and the Present Social Situation

BY THOMAS E. NEWLIN

The minister of religion today ought to be the personification of Christian scholarship. His very position in the community places both Christianity and culture in full view. If either should be lacking or weak he is thereby inefficient. He must see the church in the first place and mainly as a religious force. But as a religious force in America during the last century it has been gaining adherence quite rapidly. In 1800 only seven persons in every hundred of our entire population were members of the Protestant Church. In 1850 there were fifteen in every hundred; in 1870, seventeen; in 1880, twenty; in 1900, twenty-four; in 1910, twenty-four. The question then is, shall we be satisfied with holding our own or shall we try to evangelize America?

Great things have been done in the last century in foreign lands. The missionary movement and missionary spirit have permeated the whole church. But the battleground in the world's evangelization today is America. Religion today is vitally concerned with some of the fundamental questions, of social righteousness, commercial honesty, industrial and political honor and economic justice. The great movements of our time are essentially religious, but as an ecclesiastical force the church is not meeting the religious needs of our day. Religion today is concerned with bigger and more vital questions than denominationalism and sectarianism.

Of the almost forty million breadwinners in America more than thirty-five millions work with the hand. It is sad to know how many of these are out of sympathy with the church and many of them are hostile to the church.

That there is a great social unrest no one who knows the history of the times will dare to deny. Shall the church give up and say that other organizations must work out a pacification? The church ought to mean service as true religion means service. Do we believe that man's greatest need is spiritual? The church is the organization created to satisfy this need. But if the greatest need is to save itself as some seem to think, then religion will pass into sectarianism and cease to gain the respect of the workers of the world.

We will have to admit that there is some truth in the charge that is made that on account of the failure of the church, there has arisen the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Salvation Army, Rescue Missions, Christian Science and many benevolent and relief agencies. I am glad the Christian Endeavor was organized as a part of the church, and in fact not one of these organizations named would amount to anything, but for the church. Since it is not the purpose of the church to advocate any particular social system or economic theory, then why could not the church include everyone who professes Christianity although his social and economic views were out of harmony with a majority of the church members? The church must teach the fundamental and eternal truths of the Christian religion, but must permit every one to make the application of these for himself. The taunt thrown at Jesus is coming to be our experience. "He saved others, himself he cannot save." It is our duty to reach as many men and women as possible by all the means available, and by all feasible means save the children. While the minister and the Christian worker must view the church as a religious force, fundamentally and primarily, yet not only so, for it is also a social factor of great power. While no one can be religious by himself, yet Protestantism has always insisted on the right of individual freedom. Religion cannot be taken second hand nor kept in cold storage.

We are all agreed that salvation is a personal matter, yet we must not lose sight of the social ideal, for the individual is much more easily saved when society is saved. We all know how very hard it is to live the pure Christian life in surroundings where morals are low and business standards are questionable. So true is this situation that many intelligent and upright men have come to the open conviction that the pure principles of Jesus Christ cannot be followed in the political and business world of the present day. We know that Christian business men are driven into positions which they regret and personally resent. Some of them have told me that they try not to think of the fact that their employees are compelled to do things they could not do. I am making no apology for anyone nor am I apologizing for a system that drives men into corners unwillingly.

Many Christian men feel compelled to employ little children and women, and often while they sit in church their dividends are accruing from the labor of their subordinates. The Christian man does not like to be undersold any more than his non-professing competitor. He will be brought to the point of debating whether he will adopt the questionable practices and console himself by saying that it is a business proposition and everybody is doing it.

We are all driven to the conclusion that it is easy or difficult to apply the spiritual principles of Jesus as these principles are accepted or rejected by the community in which we live. It is so hard for any of us to live happily in the face of public opinion. Our efforts should then be used to raise the standards in business and social life and make public opinion right. The Christian church and Christian education should be strong forces to bring about better conditions. Good laws also help much. The absence of saloons, gambling places and vile resorts makes it easier for all of us to live pure lives. But we must not be content with prohibitive measures for we must do much constructive work.

I know that socialists as a rule claim that the church renders no social service worth while. The church is not a social reform club, but that it should have a function here is plain to those who understand the situation. The Christian church today is supplying the leaders in nearly all social reform. Members of the Christian church practically control the great philanthropic and benevolent institutions. In the last ten years over forty million dollars have gone into the Y. M. C. A. and nearly all of it has come from the Christian church. Practically all the benevolences come from church members.

Yet we are forced to admit that the church in its organic relations is not alert to the problems of the day. The church must face all the facts. Christian work has not kept up with the business world in efficiency. The law of efficiency is affecting the spiritual life today much more than most will allow. Factory and shop have been revolutionized in the last few years by industrial efficiency. Some concerns report as much as four hundred per cent. increase in their output. But there is no use to try to improve the church by substituting social service for the Gospel. The Church is not a factory, but whether we like it or not people are applying efficiency tests to the work of the church. The church has depended too much and too exclusively on inspirational sermons and addresses and enthusiastic meetings. If telephone companies, telegraph companies, railroads and fruit growers' associations find it profitable in their business to employ experts and sociological investigators, will it not pay the church to put more of this kind of work in its program?

Charles Sumner entered the United States Senate at the very time of the departure of Henry Clay. Thomas H. Benton met this man of genius telling him in sad tones that he had come too late, and there could be no career for him since Webster, Calhoun and Clay were gone and the great issues were settled.

There are Bentons giving forth such messages to young Sumners in the church these days. I have no such message. I would wish to say to every worker in social fields, in mission fields, in educational work as well as in the church, Go forth and renew the social conscience, and this can only be done by cultivating the spiritual life in the presence of Jesus Christ. This alone will still the social unrest and bring new life to the church.

The Efficiency Committee

BY JOHN R. CARY

A brief reference to the appointment of an "Efficiency Committee" by Baltimore Monthly Meeting in a recent issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND was probably overlooked by many readers of the paper and attracted little attention even from those who read it. It is quite possible that the item received all the consideration it deserved, because Baltimore Meeting is rather small, and has not much influence in the Society, so that action taken by it is not likely to bulk very large in the thoughts of Friends generally. It is also quite possible that the action itself may not turn out to be successful in achieving the desired result, in which case it will be just as well if not much attention is paid to it.

The significance of it, so far as it has any at this time, is due to the fact that Baltimore Monthly Meeting believes that the gift of ministry is not necessarily combined with a gift of executive leadership. Some, at least, of its members believe that the varied work of the church calls for executive direction of a very high order, but are of the opinion that the chances are strongly in favor of that gift of leadership being found apart from the spiritual gifts which qualify a minister rather than combined with them. They believe that the way to secure the intelligent direction which such an organization as the modern church needs on the social and intellectual sides is to persuade the strong and capable members who are doing things in the world that it is worth their while to give the needed time and thought to the church organization; or, if the church prefers to do so and can raise the necessary money to employ a secretary who shall perform for the church some of the functions of the Christian Association secretaries.

One must understand in connection with this the theory of the Discipline, that the spiritual work of the church is to be cared for by the Pastoral Committee; and in this body the Minister, whether technically "Pastor" or "Resident Minister," would naturally have a large influence. It would seem reasonable to expect that his power in the ministry would be greater if the executive work of the church were off his shoulders.

The experiment which Baltimore Monthly Meeting is trying is an effort to work out the policy suggested above. An Efficiency Committee has been appointed, of three members, two men and one woman. It happens that one is a minister, and one an elder, but this is purely an accident, as the individuals were chosen without thought of their position. The minute of their appointment does not set forth their powers or duties, but the understanding is that they are to promote the work of the church by securing efficient service of the regularly constituted agencies. They were told that they were expected to consecrate to the Lord through the church their powers of administration and were left free to work out methods.

They have decided to keep in the background as far as possible, to avoid doing things as a committee, and to try to get results by helping others. They propose to keep a close watch for opportunities to open up fields of service for individuals, to see that none are overlooked, and that each has congenial and helpful work. They will study the work of each standing committee to see whether it is covering its field, will make suggestions as to new fields and encourage those who need help. They will study the relation of the Meeting to the community so as to see how far it is carrying its share of the obligation of the church toward the weaker member of society and how it is acting in the matter of righting social wrongs. They will be expected to study the question of the spread of Quakerism, how to find the persons who will develop their spiritual life best in Friendly fellowship, and how to give to the community an understanding of the principles of Quakerism.

Stated briefly, it may be said that it is the purpose to have three persons who are thinking about the Meeting and devising ways to add to its effectiveness. Their usefulness will depend upon their tact, ingenuity and intelligence, but if they at all approach the degree of service expected from them they should be able to materially assist in training and developing the characters of those who may be brought to the church through its more spiritual activities.

The Committee is subject to revision yearly and the experiment will be abandoned if it is not a success. If it should develop a force which is needed by the volunteer system of working to insure its efficient operation, other Meetings will be glad to know of it.

Baltimore, Maryland.

A Caught Vision

BY SAMUEL MILES

In the scene presented to us at Jacob's well, recorded in John 4, we have a life picture and not a parable. We do not know the exact distance Jesus and His disciples had traveled that day on foot, but He was weary, hungry and thirsty like other men. Presently a woman appears on the scene and a remarkable conversation takes place. Had the Pharisees known it, how they would have scorned! Even His own disciples marveled that He should talk with a low caste woman.

But she caught a vision and did not wait to be baptised with water, but went directly and with twelve simple words she persuaded many to come to Jesus. It was a simple act, but it detained the Savior two days and doubtless kept the nobleman waiting that length of time before his son could be healed, but it accomplished more than that. The savor of it has come down through the centuries, increasing in volume every year.

Quite likely Catherine Booth, the mother of the Salvation Army, together with hosts of other women have caught a vision. We admire Wm. Booth and his works, but if the adage is true, "She that rocks the cradle rules the world," then the wife has the greater honor and the perfume of her brief life has already reached millions of souls. May every mother and daughter who reads this be prompted to do her best!

Elizabeth Fry formed the good habit in her life of praying every morning, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" and she became a mighty factor in prison reform and in the salvation of convicts, and as a result she has been worthily styled the uncrowned queen of England.

London Yearly Meeting

London Yearly Meeting convened this year on Wednesday, the 20th of May, and concluded on Thursday, the 28th, being one day longer than usual, which was felt to be an advantage.

We were favored to have the company of an unusually large number of American Friends. These included David E. and Sarah M. Sampson, from North Carolina; John F. Hanson, from Portland, Oregon; Robert L. Simkin, from New York (missionary from China); Joseph Elkinton with his wife and two daughters, from Philadelphia; Charles E. and Lydia Cox and two daughters, from College Park, San Jose, California, and Anna B. Thomas and her daughter, Dr. Henrietta Thomas, from Baltimore.

The reading of the summary of the epistles from the American Yearly Meetings together with the presence of these "living epistles," stimulated our interest in, and sympathy with you, in all your manifold labors for the good of your fellowmen. We feel that strong ties of love and fellowship and community of purpose bind us together in Christ Jesus our "One Lord." Many of us look back with gratitude to the times of communion we have experienced on your side.

The interests that claimed our earnest thought were of a world-wide character. We were made increasingly to realize our responsibility towards our nearest neighbor, France, by the account which Charles D. Terrell gave us of his work in that country during the past year. He told us how France is putting off the yoke of Rome, and fast becoming a nation of infidels. Gross immorality and worldliness are on the increase, and an earnest appeal was made to our young Friends, who can speak the language, that some of them would go to the help of our Friend and his wife who have been laboring so devotedly there for many years.

The demand for more workers in all our foreign mission fields was of an urgent character. The deputations recently returned from Australia told us of the heroic stand made by many of our boys in refusing compulsory military service, resulting in their being sent to prison. The needs of our scattered members in South Africa were also brought before us, and it was decided to send out a deputation to counsel with and encourage them in their work.

Turning nearer home, we were brought into close sympathy with our Friends in Ireland, where civil strife is threatening. We were thankful to learn that, with very few exceptions, they were upholding our ancient testimony against all war, and war-like preparations. We decided to co-operate with other churches on your side of the ocean and our own in connection with the proposed "Christian Union World Conference on Faith and Order."

The position of women both in the Church and in the world, set forth in a document prepared by the "Meeting for Sufferings," showing the place given to them by our Society from its rise, aroused great interest and led to an animated discussion. The document was adopted and is to be widely circulated.

We were conscious of the presence and presidency of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ during the sessions from day to day, and whilst on some occasions there was a diversity of view expressed, we were preserved in much love and unity. We separated feeling that a call had come to us to close up our ranks for a united aggressive effort to bring into closer fellowship with us those who are already attending our meetings, and to consider our responsibility to the very large number who seem to be altogether indifferent to the claims of religion. With this end in view we decided to ask all our Quarterly Meetings to report next year what steps they are taking in these directions.

The great importance of prayer was often alluded to during the meetings, and a very helpful message on that subject was given by Dr. A. C. Dixon, the noted American preacher, who at the present time is the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, formerly the church of C. H. Spurgeon, a building with a seating capacity of about five thousand.

Another Account

Comparing London Yearly Meeting of today with former occasions, one is struck with the number of activities that engage the membership and how many younger Friends are prominent in discussions. A wide range of subjects were up for treatment. Foreign Missions received a large share of attention. The home field was not considered as prosperous on the whole as some previous years, judging from the reports. The tramps and week-end efforts were looked upon as means of great help in reviving small meetings. We do not remember on previous visits to have heard so much said about silence in meetings, nor so much about the seed or light within and similar terms used more in the early days of our church history.

The first few days, the so-called "liberal" wing seemed to have most to say, then as the meeting progressed the more pronounced evangelical sentiments prevailed, but all through there was a strong effort for unity of purpose and action. The temperance question seems to have made but little progress in the last decade as they confine their work mostly to lines of total abstinence.

In contrast, it may be said that the cause of peace has gone forward. Nowhere else in our knowledge are there so many agencies at work. The young people of New Zealand and Australia who are suffering for refusing to drill, received unstinted honor and support from the meeting. Strong protests were made to the government, and the tactics of the military authorities were handled without gloves. The reports of those who have distributed large sums to the destitute and suffering in the Balkans, form a most interesting chapter in London Yearly Meeting's activities this last year.

For quiet, persistent effort in Parliament and out to promote concord and good feeling with other nations, J. Allen Baker, Member of Parliament, is a leader. One day he is the honored guest of a crowned head and rides his hobby for peace and good-will to the nations; next day he is equally at home down in the lowest part of the city in an adult school. The generation of that sort of men is a rich heritage in London Yearly Meeting.

The rights and liberties of women, consumed much time of the Yearly Meeting while suffrage was avoided as much as possible for obvious reasons. Other live questions came up for attention, but especially did the whole subject of correspondence claim much delicate care. In addition to the general epistle and the usual Dublin and American correspondence, special letters of a fraternal character were addressed to the Philadelphia Orthodox and Hicksite bodies. Joseph Elkin-ton, wife and daughters; David Sampson and wife and John F. Hanson, with credentials from their respective meetings, entered into the varied concerns of the meeting and availed themselves of such opportunities as afforded for service in the ministry.

As a digression from the regular routine, the visitors formed a party of about one hundred in a pilgrimage to the Jordan's Meeting House and burial grounds, where the graves of the Penns and Penningtons are marked with small plain slabs. The plain meeting house and grounds are becoming more and more sacred to Friends as time passes, and these yearly pilgrimages take on the holiday aspect. Much interest is shown in the house and grounds where Milton lived and where Thomas Elwood spent so many days reading to the noted blind poet of two hundred years ago.

A Monthly Meeting Chronicle

(Wherein is told the story of a Monthly Meeting which caught a vision, and with some misgivings decided to improve an opportunity.)

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

XVI.

The records of Slow Valley Monthly Meeting for the year 1913 and for the first three months of 1914, already chronicled, reveal the marvelous possibilities of a religious body that finds the open road of opportunity, and in spite of the handicaps of custom and habit, decides to enter upon the possession of a new heritage.

The sessions of the second quarter of this year have proved to be no less marvelous in the manifestation of spiritual power working in the lives of those who are obedient to the call of a living Christ.

The April meeting partook of the nature of a jubilee service after the result of the every-member canvass in March was reported, and when announcement was made that the total number of members now exceeded the two hundred mark. Even the retired farmer came perilously near the border line of radical enthusiasm when he publicly thanked God for what his eyes had seen and his ears had heard. And well he might rejoice, for his eldest son had been one of the converts at the revival during the winter and now was the leader of the growing Bible School so recently established in the Turkey Hollow neighborhood, while his daughter was one of the liveliest of the group that had the care of the class of neglected children on Saturday afternoon, a class which has now grown to thirty-two.

The old physician, with tears of joy streaming down his face, showed that he too had been caught by the current of religious zeal that was sweeping through the neighborhood, and after expressing his thankfulness for what was going on, in a well-worded speech proposed that the meeting consider the propriety of erecting a new and more commodious place of worship. The school teacher looked as though he felt the millennium had surely come, while the young people almost held their breath as they waited to see the effect of the proposition upon the meeting.

While it was apparent that there was a disposition to look the proposition squarely in the face in a perfectly business-like way, it was evident from the start that it would be considered favorably. It was the business man, who apparently voiced the mind of all when he said:

"I have a feeling that the time has come when our faith must be put to a severe test. If our meeting has reached the high tide of its life and the maximum of its growth, then our present quarters are ample. But I have a conviction that we have just begun to expand. God's hand is upon this body, and as we are true to Him, the future has a work for us in this community that has not yet been revealed to any of us."

It was in this spirit that the matter was settled after an extended discussion by the appointment of a building committee of seven, four men and three women, to draw up plans, secure estimates of cost and report the same to the meeting in May.

One of the interesting developments of the April meeting was the reading of a letter from a Friend living in Oldtown, a little village on the electric line, fourteen miles to the northwest, reciting the fact that there was an abandoned Friends' meeting house a mile out from the village, and voicing a concern which had been much upon his mind of late that in some way the property which seemed to be in a fair state of repair should be utilized for the glory of God and the betterment of the community. He said that no religious services were being held within five miles of the place, the nearest being an M. E. Church at Silverton. As far as he knew there were four families near by which still held membership with Friends, but whether or not interest could be revived to the extent of bringing together a congregation he did not know. He felt encouraged to call the attention of Slow Valley Meeting to the situation, because in attending the services at Newtown two weeks before he had been impressed with the spirit of life that prevailed among the membership.

"That's another one of God's calls to us," said one of the women elders. "There used to be a flourishing Friends meeting in that neighborhood, but, from various causes, the interest died out and about eleven years ago the meeting was abandoned. I believe it is our duty to respond to this appeal by making an investigation in the hope that the work in that vicinity can be revived."

A number spoke on the question, and there were some who doubted the propriety of taking on too many forms of activity. By far the greater number felt that at least an investigation should be made and the matter was finally referred to the evangelistic department for action. The request which came through the class of neglected children for a Bible School in the poorer quarter of Newtown, adjacent to the foreign quarter, received serious consideration and was referred to the Bible School department for such action as might be deemed wise. It was reported that on the preceding Sabbath a Junior C. E. Society was organized with an attendance of fourteen. The committee appointed to interview the mayor and chief of police relative to social conditions in the city reported progress, but a final report could not be given at this time.

The May meeting was largely attended and was characterized by the spirit of service which had taken possession of the membership. Their faith was unbounded. The majority seemed ready for any task and through the distribution of committees, the plan of a division of labor was finding something for everyone to do. What was more important, almost everyone seemed willing to undertake the task assigned.

The evangelistic spirit was still prevalent, and the Committee on Visitation and Personal Work made an extended report which revealed the extent to which the life of the meeting was touching the life of the whole community, city and country alike. The Building Committee reported plans for an up-to-date edifice, auditorium, Bible School room with class rooms which when required could be thrown into the auditorium, basement with kitchen outfit, room for the Primary department and Juniors and prayer meeting room, at an estimated cost of $19,000. This report provoked a lengthy discussion, some contending the plans were too large and costly, and others that they were building for the future as well as the present. The sum of $12,540.00 was subscribed for the project in the face of the meeting, after which the building was agreed upon and the Building Committee continued and instructed to begin the erection of the structure as soon as possible, and solicit additional funds to make up the deficiency.

The Evangelistic Committee reported that two of their number had visited Oldtown soon after the last Monthly Meeting, and after spending three days had found sixteen persons who were still Friends and twelve others who had been Friends formerly, but who at present were not identified with any church. After visiting all the families in the neighborhood, a meeting for worship has been appointed for the abandoned meeting house on the preceding Sabbath, which had been attended by twenty-four persons. Another meeting had been set for the third Sabbath in May and the committee recommended that beginning with that date a meeting for worship be appointed for that place every Sabbath morning at 10:30 o'clock, under the care of the evangelistic department. After it was explained that two of the older Friends and three young Friends from Slow Valley Meeting had agreed to be present each Sabbath, or to secure a substitute, for the next four months, the meeting approved the report.

The committee appointed to visit the mayor and the chief of police could only report partial success. The city was in the grip of a political machine controlled largely by the liquor and gambling interests and it was felt that little could be accomplished in the way of cleaning up the city until the Christian men of all the churches stood together for the election of an administration that was free to enforce the statutes. The Committee on General Federative Work was instructed to have this matter further in charge in the hope that a civic movement might be developed that would be able to accomplish this purpose.

The June session has just been held and has proved to be a duplicate of the other recent sessions, characterized by intense religious life and the spirit of consecration and service. Work on the new meeting house is well under way, and the building fund has reached $16,875.00. The spirit of revival is in the air at Oldtown as the result of the services already held, and on last Sabbath the attendance was forty-seven.

The Bible School at the Bennett School house has an enrollment of eighty-three, and religious services are now held each Sabbath afternoon under the care of the school teacher. Several families in that neighborhood now attend the morning services at Newtown. The Bible School at Turkey Hollow is prospering with a growing attendance, and every two weeks the services conclude with a brief talk on the spiritual life by the son of the retired farmer. A request was read for the establishment of regular services for worship every Sabbath afternoon, which was referred to the Bible School department. A new school has been started in the poorer section adjoining the foreign quarter with an average attendance to date of fifty-nine children, while an adult class is to be organized next Sabbath.

The class of neglected children is prospering and has opened the way for the beginning of personal religious work in more than twenty homes which hitherto have had no form of religious instruction. The joint work among the foreigners is progressing despite numerous handicaps of the saloon and certain evil-minded men prominent in ward politics. A city missionary is in charge until the autumn, when the management has a hope of securing a converted Italian to assume control of the mission.

Space forbids further record of the wonderful activities of this wonderful meeting, whose membership the Spirit of God has touched with such effectiveness and power. "Christianity at work" was the characterization of the pastor at this last meeting, when discussing the temperance report which revealed the purpose of a joint educational campaign with a view to a local option vote in the autumn.

The membership has now reached a total of 228, and out of the 187 adults and young people, it developed that 129 of them are actively engaged in various departments of the work of the church. Space forbids an account of the newly organized Ladies' Aid and the Brotherhood, and other important activities, but through the kindness of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, we will be glad to give little glimpses now and then of the progress of this highly successful experiment of an average Friends meeting transformed by the spirit of trying to help others and to lift up humanity.

Women's Home Missionary Council

Just at the close of the last Five Years Meeting a mass meeting of women Friends was held and the need of organizing our Home Mission field was laid before this body. Our Church has been doing active Home Mission work for many years, but because we have worked individually, as it were—each Yearly Meeting working in its special field without any united organization, it is not known by other denominations and scarcely by our own people, just what our Home Mission work is and has done. Officers were elected at this mass meeting, but because of the failure of the one chosen as president to accept this office very little has been accomplished. At a meeting of the Executive members of this organization, held in Richmond last fall, Daisy Barr was made Acting-President till the Triennial Conference that has just closed. She has organized the three Yearly Meetings of Iowa, Western and Indiana with the following Presidents, respectively: Viola Smith of Salem, Iowa; Gertrude Moon Reinier of Noblesville, Ind.; and Mary Doan Hole of Richmond, Ind.

The work has been started in several of the Quarterly Meetings in these different Yearly Meetings and practically all of them have used in some way the Home Mission Study book.

At the Muncie Triennial Conference, the Executive Committee of the Home Missionary Council of Friends of America together with some delegates chosen from the different Yearly Meetings formed a Nominating Committee and the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

Charlotte E. Vickers, Oak Park, Ill., President.

Daisy Barr, Muncie, Ind., First Vice-President.

Olive R. Lindley, Richmond, Ind., Secretary.

Lenora N. Hobbs, Bloomingdale, Ind., Treasurer.

The Constitution was waived and the Home Mission President of each Yearly Meeting of Friends in America was made a Vice-President of the Executive Committee.

The following persons were chosen for the various Yearly Meeting Presidents of the Home Missionary Council:

1. A. Viola Harrisburg, for Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

2. Elizabeth L. Hazard, for New York Yearly Meeting.

3. Emma G. Randolph, for New England Yearly Meeting.

4. Mary Barrett Pim, for Ohio Yearly Meeting.

5. Anna C. Stinson, for Wilmington Yearly Meeting.

6. Mary Doan Hole, for Indiana Yearly Meeting.

7. Gertrude M. Reinier, for Western Yearly Meeting.

8. Viola Smith, for Iowa Yearly Meeting.

9. Melissa Fellows, for Kansas Yearly Meeting.

10. Phoebe Johnson, for Nebraska Yearly Meeting.

11. Anna B. Miles, for Oregon Yearly Meeting.

12. Martha E. Newlin, for California Yearly Meeting.

13. Phoebe Wright, of Pickering, Ontario, for Canada Yearly Meeting.

Opportunity was given and Daisy Barr laid before this Triennial Conference the plans of those who gave birth to this Home Missionary Council of Friends and told what they desire to see accomplished in this broad field by our Church. She suggested that the Home Missionary Council would like joint fellowship with the Foreign Missionary Union in holding these Triennial Conferences, and after some discussion, this action was accepted by the delegate body of the Conference.

Now may we indeed and in truth work in unity as one strong host for God and His Kingdom, not only at home but in all the world.

Martha D. Henley, 2137 Park Ave., Indianapolis, Indiana, was chosen as Superintendent of Literature, and will handle not only the Foreign Mission books but also the Home Mission supplies.

In order to complete the organization promptly, we desire the address of each Yearly Meeting President whose name is given above.

OLIVE R. LINDLEY, Secretary.

216 College Avenue, Richmond, Indiana.

Summer School of Missions

The tenth annual session of the Summer School of Missions will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, June 25th to July 2d. This school is held under the auspices of the "Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions," representing women's boards of missions of seventeen denominations. All women interested in the cause of missions should attend.

The Home Study Book will be taught by Mrs. D. B. Wells, so widely known and beloved. Mrs. J. F. Fisher will teach the Foreign Study Book. A special effort has been made for the young women this year. Normal classes will be held. There will be services with our missionaries, and many other features of interest. On Saturday, June 27th, Friends will have their "Rally Day." Won't you come and bring others with you?

Miss Angy Manning Taylor, who conducted the Bible Study Hour at the Triennial Conference of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union, held at Muncie, Indiana, May 5th to 12th, will be the Bible Teacher at the Summer School at Winona. Those of us who were privileged to sit under her teaching know what a blessing and inspiration she is.

CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS,

Notice for Publication

June 28th.—Pilgrimage to Manasquan. Conference topic, at 2 p. m., "The Triumph of Quakerism." Visiting Friends are invited to spend the preceding Seventh-day night with Friends in Manasquan. Those accepting this invitation leave Liberty St., C. R. R. of N. J., at 3:30 p. m., June 27th. Round trip, $2. A train leaves Pennsylvania Station, New York, at 8:30 a. m., June 28th, arriving in Manasquan at 10:46. Please respond before June 24th to W. Russell Tylor, 221 E. 15th St., New York, secretary to the committee, if purposing to spend the night in Manasquan. This invitation is also open to visiting Friends from Philadelphia.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND acknowledges receipt from the Trustees of Indiana University, of an invitation to attend the dedicatory exercises of the Robert W. Long Hospital at Indianapolis, Indiana, June 15th. Governor Ralston presided over the exercises held in the hall of the House of Representatives and the address was given by Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Subject, "The Medical School and State."

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Lynn.—On Sunday morning, May 17, President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham filled the pulpit in the Friends Church at Lynn. A splendid congregation of 230 listened intently to Dr. Kelly's excellent sermon on the theme, "Great is the mystery of Godliness." The message was a real uplift to our meeting.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

Deep River Quarter.—Deep River Quarterly Meeting was held at Deep River, North Carolina, June 6th. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight had excellent reports from the different congregations which include Deep River, Springfield, High Point, Archdale and Oak Hill. A leading member said he had been listening to the reports for 25 years and those today seemed better than ever before. At the close of the session Walter White, the efficient clerk, urged the importance of continuing to go forward and not being satisfied merely with present conditions. The meeting for worship followed. Thomas E. Anderson preached briefly on the importance of the quickening power. Lorena R. Hoskins of California discussed the preaching of John the Baptist. As he was a voice in the wilderness, so each of us should be a voice in the moral wilderness of this world to prepare the way of the Lord. George Wood urged the importance of pressing the truth that there is no other name given in heaven and among men whereby we can be saved. Nereus M. Barker closed in a brief discourse on "Ye are my disciples if ye do whatsoever I command you." At the noon hour dinner was served under the shade of the trees and an interesting social time followed. In the afternoon the credentials of Lorena R. Hoskins, of California, were read. She is a native of this state and this Quarterly Meeting. The committee on prohibition reported the text of a memorial sent to senators and congressmen from North Carolina urging them to support the pending resolution for national prohibition. The claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented and all were urged to subscribe.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Long Run.—Long Run Bible School gave their Children's Day exercises Sabbath evening, June 7th, which were a success in every way. We had the largest crowd I have ever seen at the church, many not being able to get inside. One of the most interesting parts of the program was an "Organized Class Demonstration" by Louis Murie's class of 20 young men. One Hungarian girl who has been in this country less than a year recited a short poem in very good English. There were Scotch, Irish, Hungarian, Polish and American names on the program. Our school and meeting are made up very largely of miners' families, and notwithstanding the fact that a general strike is on at present, when the pastor appealed for help to construct and furnish some class rooms in the basement, $160.00 was subscribed in a few minutes. God has blessed us richly in this valley. To Him be all the praise.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING

Newberg.—Newberg Quarterly Meeting was held May 8th to 10th with a good attendance throughout. Homer L. Cox of Portland brought a very helpful message to the meeting on Ministry and Oversight Friday afternoon. He thought the church of the present day could learn many helpful lessons from the early church (Acts 2: 42, 46 and 47). Friday evening the Peace Committee arranged an oratorical contest between three young men from Pacific College. An offering of ten dollars was taken and distributed among the orators. Emmet Gulley, Greenleaf, Idaho, won first place and a prize of five dollars. The devotional service Saturday morning was in charge of H. Elmer Pemberton, Evangelistic Superintendent. The business session was largely taken up with reports of the year's work from the various committees. Much faithful work has been done in all the departments. Nettie Riley of Lents, Oregon, conducted an evangelistic service Saturday evening, and Sunday morning Aaron Bray gave a strong message to the church.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Indianapolis.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chilson, the African missionaries, filled the pulpit at First Friends Church, Sunday, June 7th. Mr. Chilson gave the morning address, which was exceedingly interesting, telling of the work and needs of the African field. Mrs. Chilson delighted the children of the Sunday School, giving them a glimpse of the little black children in Africa, and singing in the native tongue. Mr. and Mrs. Chilson, with their children, expect to return to Africa early in July.

New London Quarter.—New London Quarterly Meeting was held June 5th to 7th. The services on Saturday were conducted by the home ministers and Lemuel and Rachel Middleton of Friendswood, Texas, who were formerly members of this Quarterly Meeting. On Sabbath morning E. M. Woodard, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, gave a helpful and inspiring message. At noon the company partook of a bountiful dinner which was spread in the grove near the church, and the social hour was much enjoyed. The Quarterly Missionary Conference was held in the afternoon. After a short program by home talent, Solomon Tice, a missionary from Mexico, gave an interesting talk on conditions in Mexico and the work there. In the evening E. M. Woodard attended service at West Middleton and Solomon Tice at Russiaville.

PERSONAL MENTION

John F. Hanson was expected to sail from England for Stavanger, Norway, early in June.

Prof. Elbert Russell of Earlham, will give the commencement address at Oakwood Seminary, Union Springs, N. Y., June 19th.

Clarence E. Pickett, pastor at Toronto, will give an address at Canada Yearly Meeting on the evening of June 25th, on "Interpreters of Christ."

Arthur Chilson and wife addressed a union meeting of Friends of Richmond, Indiana, at the East Main Street Church on Sabbath evening, June 7th.

President Thomas Newlin of Whittier, California, delivered the address at the graduating exercises of the California Electric Medical College on June 3d.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Fry, of Grinnell, Iowa, announce the engagement of their daughter, Florence Faye, to Wendell G. Farr, of the Friends Seaside Mission, Jamaica, West Indies. The wedding will take place in August.

Horace E. Coleman, who has been appointed by the Conference of Federated Missions as Sunday School Specialist for Japan, is now in this country studying the latest S. S. methods, and addressed the annual meetings of the Christian Associations at Earlham College on June 14.

CORRESPONDENCE

FOWLER, KANSAS, June 7, 1914.

Editor American Friend:

Since my last communication there have been important developments at Fowler. At the close of school we thought best to call a meeting of all our members and see what could be done toward buying the Academy for the Monthly Meeting. After an inspiring address to the graduating class, by Charles Lescault, a basket dinner was served. Then a meeting of the members was called and without any pressure being brought to bear upon the gathering, one after another arose and told what they would give, some giving as high as $200. In a very short time $1,650 was raised and the balance of the debt is practically in sight.

The money was raised entirely within our own meeting. There is the best unity and spiritual feeling in the meeting that there has ever been, and this assures the future of the Fowler Meeting. As to the Academy there are no arrangements as yet for the continuance of the school, although the Monthly Meeting can now reorganize the board and continue if they think best.

We have received many encouraging letters urging us to continue the school. Some have said they would be one of twenty-five to raise $1,000 for the running expenses next year. If this were raised within the next three or four weeks, we feel sure the school could start next fall with three good teachers, a good attendance and clear of debt. The meeting here has done all they are able to this year.

A company has secured leases on land around Fowler for oil and gas and drilling will soon commence. We have had an abundance of rain and crops of all kinds were never more promising than at present. The wheat will soon be ready to cut and promises a yield of from thirty to forty bushels per acre.

All communications can be sent to Wm. Harvey, President of the Board, or John Howard, Pastor of the meeting.

JOHN HOWARD.

GEORGE N. HARTLEY IN NORTH CAROLINA

North Carolina Yearly Meeting has been greatly helped by the devoted services of George N. Hartley in our limits for over six months. He came first to High Point last October to assist in revival work, after which he made a tour of each Quarter, and visited all the meetings except three, and some points where there were only a few Friends located. He addressed our people over 300 times, and of these 128 were lectures accompanied by views of Palestine and other Bible scenes. His labors have been arduous, but everywhere he has found an open door and appreciative hearers. He gives due credit to Guilford College for its good influence in the homes to which students have returned. Their services are noticeable also in the meetings and Bible Schools. He says he found a life in the schools taught by Guilford College students, much above the average.

Having taught here in the days of the Boarding School, George Hartley has been welcomed into the homes of many of his former pupils, and these as well as those to whom he was a stranger will long remember his faithful and varied services among us as an ambassador of our Lord, inviting all to higher and purer standards, and to whole-hearted dedication to the Master he has served so long and steadfastly. * * *

ENDORISING THE MEN'S CONFERENCE

NEWBERG, OREGON, May 9, 1914.

Dear Friend:

At Newberg Quarterly Meeting, held May 9, 1914, the sectional men's conference was unanimously endorsed, with the hope that one might be held at Portland.

A. R. MILLS, Clerk.

KEMAH, TEXAS, May 25, 1914.

Dear Editor:

Friendswood Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Friendswood, Texas, May 23. I was instructed by the meeting to inform THE AMERICAN FRIEND that Friendswood Quarterly Meeting wished to express its approval of the proposed Men's Conference, being agitated in your paper.

ADOLPHUS E. HARVEY, Clerk.

LAMAR, COLORADO.

I will say that I am well pleased with the well-chosen subjects written upon in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the help we find by reading its columns is of great benefit to all interested Friends. Although appearing silent, I have been much pleased at the thought of a conference of men Friends to consider the problems before the Church. At first, like when the W. C. T. U. and the W. F. M. were organized, I thought the most discreet of both sexes should be assembled together for the great task before us, but further consideration makes me rest in confidence that if a body of discreet men Friends come together they will do what they can for the greatest general good of all Friends, leaving the good results for the generations to follow.

ELIZABETH PEARSON.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

June 28

Subject—Review. The Seeking Savior.Reading Lesson—Heb. 4: 14; 15: 10.Golden Text—The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke 19: 10.

THE LESSONS

- I. Luke 14: 7-24.
- II. Luke 24: 13-35.
- III. Luke 14: 25-35.
- IV. Luke 15: 1-10.
- V. Luke 15: 11-32.
- VI. Luke 16: 1-13.
- VII. Luke 16: 14, 15, 19-31.
- VIII. Luke 17: 1-10.
- IX. Luke 17: 11-19.
- X. Luke 17: 20-37.
- XI. Luke 18: 9-14; 19: 1-10.
- XII. Mark 10: 17-31.

Review the lesson by discussing the characters involved, especially from the viewpoint of Christ's attitude toward them. Self-seeking guests contrasted with the outcasts compelled to come in; two disciples walking to Emmaus; those who count the cost; the owners who have lost a sheep and a coin; the prodigal and the elder brother; the shrewd steward; Lazarus and the rich man; the grateful Samaritan leper; the Pharisee and the publican; Zacchaeus; the rich young man.

Discuss the problems of the right and wrong use of wealth; the problem of modern hospitality; the relationship of the Church to lost manhood and womanhood; Phariseism in modern life; are our Churches for the ninety and nine or the one; modern obligations of stewardship.

Finally, picture Jesus as the Shepherd out upon the highways of life seeking out the lost. He is not waiting passively, but seeking actively.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

June 28

Topic—Civic Reforms That Endeavorers Should Promote.—Isa. 1: 10-20.

This will depend somewhat upon the location of the local society.

If it be in a city, the questions of temperance, gambling, vice, the slums, housing conditions, Sabbath observance, may properly claim attention.

If in a town or a village or in the country, Sunday baseball, other improper uses of the Sabbath, a neighborhood nurse, ways of spending summer vacation and kindred subjects will be valuable.

In all instances the value of citizenship and its proper use, the moral issues of the coming election, the use of the Fourth of July, the moral status of the press are good subjects for consideration and action.

The Endeavorers have a splendid opportunity to impress the value of applied Christianity.

Born

Cosand.—At Imperial, California, May 24, 1914, to E. N. and Mable Cosand, a daughter.

Jones.—At Readfield, Maine, April 3, 1914, to Arian and Marcia Jones, a son, Leo La-forest.

Taylor.—At Winthrop Center, Maine, May 10, 1914, to Frank H. and Ella M. Taylor, a daughter, Kathalena Foster.

Died

Brown.—Mary Ella Brown, wife of Sylvester Brown, died at East Readfield, Maine, May 23, 1914, aged 67 years and 7 months.

Elliott.—Martha J. Elliott, wife of Oliver C. Elliott, and daughter of Joseph and Sarah Hussey, died at her home near Carmel, Indiana, April 15, 1914, aged 69 years, 9 months and 17 days. She joined the Poplar Ridge Monthly Meeting by request in 1883. She suffered for a year from a stroke of paralysis and said many times she wanted to go and wear the crown prepared for her.

French.—Mary Randall French, widow of Charles F. French, was born in Bolton, Mass., January 21, 1846, and died at the home of her brother-in-law at Imperial, California, March 20, 1914. She was a birthright Friend and spent most of her life in Massachusetts. She was buried beside her sister in Le Centro Cemetery, California. She was the last survivor of her father's large family.

Fulghum.—Elizabeth L. Fulghum was born March 25, 1825, and died at the home of her daughter, Clear Lake, Iowa, April 21, 1914, aged 89 years, and 27 days. She was a member of Winneshiek Quarterly Meeting. She joined Friends soon after her marriage to Michael Fulghum at Arba, Indiana, in 1843. It can be truthfully said, "She hath done what she could. Her children rise up and call her blessed." She leaves five children, seventeen grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren.

Griffith.—Daniel P. Griffith, son of Amos and Edith Griffith, was born in Washington County, Pa., October 9, 1821, and died at the home of his daughter in Iowa Falls, Iowa, March 24, 1914, in his 93d year. He was married to Sarah Louise Hough in 1845. He taught school for a number of years and engaged in mercantile business. He was later cashier in a bank and was also interested in farming. After the death of his wife in 1888 he made his home with his daughter, Anna M. Hoag. For several years he had charge of beautifying the parks, a work in which he took great pleasure. He was one of the original members of Friends Meeting at Iowa Falls and was a strict adherent of the faith and principles of Friends. He lived an exceptionally great and noble life. Funeral services were conducted by Malinda B. Hunt.

Hadley.—Elizabeth Johnson Hadley, wife of William Hadley, died April 19, 1914, aged 70 years and 2 days. She was a member of Southfork Monthly Meeting, North Carolina, for a number of years. She lived a faithful Christian life and her end was peace.

Lewis.—Moses C. Lewis, son of Isaac and Judith Lewis, was born near Ridgefarm, Illinois, August 16, 1846, and died at his home at Azalia, Indiana, May 25, 1914, aged 67 years, 9 months and 9 days. He was a birthright Friend and a minister in the Church. During his last illness his mind dwelt much on the heavenly home Christ had gone to prepare. Funeral services were conducted at the Azalia Friends Church by Morton C. Pearson of Indianapolis. Burial was at Sand Creek Cemetery. The widow, two daughters and one son survive him.

Thomas.—Phoebe Randall Thomas, wife of Barclay Thomas, was born in Bolton, Mass.,

October 18, 1841, and died of heart failure at her home in Imperial, California, January 29, 1914. She began her chosen work of teaching in Massachusetts and later taught at Lawrence, Kansas. She was a birthright Friend and from her girlhood was actively identified with all of the work of the Church, especially the missionary and educational departments. She was a member of the W. C. T. U. from the time it was first organized. She is survived by her husband and four children. Burial was in Evergreen Cemetery, Le Centro, California.

Thompson.—Hettie Thompson died March 21, 1914, aged 21 years, 6 months and 10 days. She was converted a few years ago and joined Friends at Rocky River, N. C. She died in the triumphs of living faith.

FRIENDS RALLY

Arrangements are being made for a Friends Rally, to be held in the Friends Church on Indiana Avenue, Chicago, on Saturday night or some time Sunday, during the International Sunday School convention to be held in Chicago, June 23d to 30th. Definite arrangements will be made when delegates arrive.

EYE STRAIN

Relieved by Quitting Coffee

Many cases of defective vision are caused by the habitual use of coffee.

It is said that in Arabia where coffee is used in large quantities, many lose their eyesight at about fifty. Tea contains the same drug, caffeine, as coffee.

A N. J. woman writes to the point concerning eye trouble and coffee. She says:

"My son was for years troubled with his eyes. He tried several kinds of glasses without relief. The optician said there was a defect in his eyes which was hard to reach.

"He used to drink coffee, as we all did, and finally quit it and began to use Postum. That was three years ago and he has not had to wear glasses and has had no trouble with his eyes since.

"I was always fond of tea and coffee and finally became so nervous I could hardly sit still long enough to eat a meal. My heart was in such a condition I thought I might die at any time.

"Medicine did not give me relief and I was almost desperate. It was about this time we decided to quit coffee and use Postum, and have used it ever since. I am in perfect health. No trouble now with my heart and never felt better in my life.

"Postum has been a great blessing to us all, particularly to my son and myself."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS

NEWBERG, OREGON, May 30, 1914.

Editor American Friend:

In reply to your request for a report concerning the every-member canvass, I wish to say that Newberg Meeting is adopting this plan as fast as possible. We have used the duplex envelopes for two years and the Missionary Committee has made the every-member canvass each year with the result that the missionary money has been paid in better than ever before.

The chairman of the new Finance Committee just chosen is in hearty sympathy with the plan and I think most of the committee are, and we hope to get this splendid method thoroughly established this coming year.

REBECCA PENNINGTON.

BOOKS RECEIVED

"Separations: Their Causes and Effects," by Edward Grubb, M.A. Published by Headley Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C. Sold by Friends Book and Tract Committee, 144 E. 20th St., New York City. Price, 60 cents.

This book is bound in paper, of 159 pages, in which the well-known author has undertaken to consider the separations among Friends on this side the Atlantic. He believes the time has come when it seems possible to discuss the facts of the separations without incurring the danger of stirring up the embers of controversial fires. The author confesses himself to be on the side of the historic Christian faith, acknowledging the "Divine-human nature of our Lord Jesus Christ," and the reconciliation of men to God by the Incarnation and the Cross.

It is made clear that in the early years of the nineteenth century, spirituality among Friends was at low ebb, out of which had grown up a "spiritual despotism" which furnished a fit setting for the great controversy and separation which soon followed. The policy of the author's discussion may be termed liberalistic and is an attempt at a philosophic analysis of the currents of thought prevalent at that time, and borders on the critical in treating of the manner in which the separation of 1827-28 was handled.

The "Anti-Slavery Separation in Indiana, 1842-3," "The New England Separation in 1845," "The Separation in Ohio, 1854," and "The Rise and Spread of Pastoralism" are considered in separate chapters, as is also Joseph John Gurney and the Present Status of Quakerism. The book is written in an interesting narrative style, and is already having a wide circulation.

"Christ and War," by William E. Wilson, Lecturer at Woodbrooke, with a prefatory letter by Dr. Rendel Harris. Published by James Clark & Co., 13 and 14 Fleet Street, London. Sold by Friends Book and Tract Committee, 144 East 20th Street, New York City. Bound in cloth. 212 pages. 70 cents, postpaid.

The book is published for the Friends Central Study Committee, for which outline programs have been prepared for use in study circles. The purpose of the book is to state clearly the basis of the Christian objection to war; to show how the Christian position is related to the economic argument; and finally to show that "since the peace ideal is recognized as no longer entirely beyond the bounds of practical politics, it may perhaps also be possible that the application of the ethical teaching of Jesus to our whole social life is not so impracticable as the practical man imagines." The book is a timely attempt to keep Christianity to the fore as the basal principle of the movement against war, and should therefore appeal strongly to Friends. Its style is analytic and its argument is strongly constructive. It is an unusual contribution to the up-to-date literature of the world's peace movement.

Behold Your King!

Behold your King! Though the moonlight steals
Through the silvery sprays of the olive tree,
No star-gemmed scepter or crown it reveals,
In the solemn shade of Gethsemane.

Only a form of prostrate grief,
Fallen, crushed, like a broken leaf!
O, think of His sorrow, that we may know
The depth of love in the depth of woe!

Behold your King! Is it nothing to you
That the crimson tokens of agony
From the kingly brow must fall, like dew,
Through the shuddering shades of Gethsemane?

Jesus Himself, the Prince of Life,
Bows in mysterious mortal strife;
O, think of His sorrow, that we may know
The unknown love in the unknown woe!

Behold your King! With His sorrow crowned, Alone, alone in the valley is He!
The shadows are gathering round,
And the cross must follow Gethsemane.

Darker and darker the gloom must fall;
Filled is the cup, He must drink it all!
O, think of His sorrow, that we may know
His wondrous love in His wondrous woe!

Life's Song

BY MRS. JULIA BROWN

Oh, what is the song we should sing
As down life's pathway we go?
Why, these are the words that should ring
To self as we reap and we sow.

"Oh, soul with your hidden resources,
Oh, heart with your sympathy true,
Pour forth all your God-given forces,
On all those who need pulling through."

Remember, that you have been given
At least one whole talent to use,
And if you have faithfully striven
This talent to increase with dues,

Still more will be placed in your keeping
To bless all your known fellowmen,
So blessing and sowing or reaping,
You're doing whatever you can.

Then, let us go forth helping others,
With sympathy, love, patience too,
For all who need help are our brothers,
The Gentile, the Greek and the Jew.

South Portland, Maine.

A Great Campaign

We trust that no one has failed to read the articles on page two in the last two issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, setting forth a plan by which the subscription list of this paper can be materially increased. The proposition is to secure at least one new subscriber for every twenty of membership in the local meeting at a special rate of fifty cents for the last six months of this year.

We have a fear that pastors and other friends of the paper in many meetings will take it for granted that they have done all they can and will fail to make further effort. There could not be a greater mistake. This proposition involves more than simply an announcement about a special offer to new subscribers. It is intended to mean a determined, concerted effort on the part of all Friends in every meeting to secure new subscribers and get them in sufficient numbers to put the paper upon a paying basis after this year.

A Friends' pastor said to us a few days ago that she had found that a mere announcement about THE AMERICAN FRIEND had availed nothing, and the result was that when she received notice of this special offer, she set to work in a personal way and by the use of the phone to secure some subscriptions. She found that the personal effort was successful, as will be the case in most instances where this method is tried.

We would like to say something to stir Friends to action in every meeting in America, at least those which are in the Yearly Meetings which constitute the Five Years Meeting.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will never be in position to make another offer as good as this one, which we are able to make now only in the belief that Friends in every meeting can be induced to take advantage of the offer to press this matter heavily upon that large portion of the membership which hitherto has seemed indifferent to the claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

In other denominations, pastors accept fully the responsibility of maintaining the subscription list of their denominational papers. We trust that wherever there is a Friends' pastor this responsibility will be accepted in this instance. Where there are no pastors, we ask some interested minister or other Friend to accept the responsibility of looking after this matter. Where this cannot be done, we ask that some concerned Friend secure the services of someone else who can give attention to the subject.

Now is the time of all times to go out among Friends and get their subscriptions. As they become readers of the paper we have faith to believe that we can retain the bulk of them as regular subscribers next year. Announcement of this special offer should be made at the meeting services and then someone should solicit the membership in a personal way for their subscriptions.

Fifty cents to new subscribers for a trial subscription from July 1st to January 1st. The campaign will close July 15th.

The Federal Council of Churches has appointed a Commission on Relations with Japan, and has secured the release of Dr. Sidney L. Gulick from his work with the American Board of Foreign Missions in order to serve as the representative of the Commission. Plans are being formed to consider the whole question of our relations with Japan in the Christian spirit and from the Christian standpoint of view. Dr. Gulick is available for public addresses on this question before various interested organizations.

The Weekly Rest Day League of California is appealing for the signatures of 10,000 additional voters to the Sunday rest petition before the middle of July. The saloons and other similar interests are using their influence to keep names off the petition. It would seem to be a case where all church members should sign.

Voting Five States Dry

Five states will vote on the question of state prohibition at the election next November. These are Colorado, California, Oregon, Washington and Virginia. While Friends are not numerous in any of these commonwealths, yet each has Friends meetings within its borders, and the influence of Friends, when it has been exerted in behalf of a moral question, has always been effective far beyond the number of votes its members are entitled to cast.

The record that will be made on this question in November will be epochal. It is believed that there is a good chance to win all these states for the prohibition column, the most difficult task being probably California. With five new states, or even three of them, added to the white states—nine of them after July first—on the temperance map, the movement for prohibition will receive new impetus and encouragement, and the terror of the liquor interests will be well nigh complete.

Friends in these five states have an unparalleled opportunity to show their faith by their works, by getting into these campaigns in some constructive manner. Every Friends' meeting in these commonwealths ought to become the center of a well organized movement to educate the voters far and near in behalf of the abolition of the liquor traffic. It would be deplorable to contemplate the possibility of any Friend casting his vote in favor of the saloon, and every Friend ought to be so zealous in his advocacy of a dry state as to win other votes for the dry cause. In sermons, by prayer, by personal work and through association with others, Friends should set out to make a record for themselves and for the prohibition cause.

The growth of the prohibition movement is evidence of the conviction that is rapidly forming in the American mind, that the time is close at hand to throw off the yoke of the liquor traffic. Upon every hand it is being condemned. There is no longer a place for the drunkard in the mechanism of a Christian civilization, and the fact cannot be escaped that the saloon makes drunkards and fosters drunkenness. Not content with that awful fruitage, it has assumed the role of a dictator and is organized to control government in its own behalf.

For years it has demonstrated its unwillingness to be regulated, and any interest that refuses to be controlled in a civilized land is an outlaw and must be destroyed. Business, science, society and religion alike have put their ban upon the use of intoxicants, and it only remains for government to register a decree of banishment from the civilized earth.

But for the votes it can command in politics, the liquor traffic would have had an end years ago. Greedy for power—and for dollars—with brutal disregard for all else, it threatens law makers, executives and judges and does not hesitate to make good its threat. It has debauched the electorate, corrupted the fountain heads of government, and would attack even the church itself. Its destruction is overdue, and these five states will render a lasting service, not only to themselves but to civilization everywhere by setting the example of abolishing this evil which continues to thrive by preying upon the weaknesses of humanity. The liquor traffic needs to be destroyed.

The Commencement Season

Another commencement season is just over. While there is a tendency to criticize higher education, it can hardly be denied that the educational institutions of Friends are a substantial asset to the church as a whole. Without them the church would lack much of its efficiency. Our colleges should be fostered and supported with sympathetic interest, for therein lies largely the hope of the future church.

The Men's Conference

In another column, it will be seen that the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting is giving serious attention to the proposed conference of men. We are convinced that the more the proposition is studied, the more it will appeal to Friends as containing great possibilities for the church.

It is the good tree that brings forth the good fruit. Keep the heart pure and conduct will be correspondingly correct.

Prayer and works no less than faith and works go hand in hand.

One of God's Mountains

BY MEAD A. KELSEY

Truth, as it is presented in the Scriptures, may be aptly compared to a range of mountains, with here and there a lofty summit towering high above its fellows. One of these higher heights which lifts itself in sublimity before our vision, a challenge alike to faith and courage, is found in the Apostle Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians where he says, "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification." "And the God of peace sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I said that this is a challenge to faith and courage, and so it is, not only because of the height of experience which it sets before us, but because the way is beset with so many difficulties,—all mountain climbing is, and the higher the mountain the greater the difficulties. Hence the many who are troubled as they look upward. Some see a lion in the way. Others are prejudiced. They may have seen some poor climbers, or some extremists whose extravagancies induced revolt. The mind of the flesh also stands in the way with drawn sword. Nevertheless, it is "the mount of God" and He is calling us to come up to Him into the mountain. "This is the will of God." Certainly we ought not to be afraid of anything that is in the Bible. We may object to some interpretations, and to any wresting of the Scriptures, but whatever is clearly there is for us and for our good. Let us then examine the subject, briefly as we must, and may God give us understanding hearts.

In its earlier uses "sanctify" simply means, "to regard or declare holy by separating from common usage to the service of God,"—to hallow. So the Sabbath day, and the vessels of the sanctuary. Also God's name in the Lord's prayer. "To hallow God's name is neither to make it holy, nor to consecrate it, but simply to recognize and declare it such." The term also came to mean "to consecrate" or "to dedicate." In this sense Jesus sanctified Himself. The later meaning of the word, first clearly distinguished in Paul's writings "is to make inwardly whole,"—to cleanse, or purify. It signifies a life of which God has taken complete control. Paul witnesses to such a life in other terms where he says, "It is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me."

The teaching in the gospels which corresponds to this is the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and it would be interesting, had we the time, to consider the question, Why the baptism of the Spirit in the gospels and sanctification in the Pauline epistles? We might find the answer in part at least in conditions which existed in those mission churches that Paul founded and that made it necessary to bring out more distinctly the cleansing work of the Spirit. But we must leave that. We find John pleading for and demanding the same purification as Paul, although he never uses the term sanctification.

And here I want to remind our young people who have been studying Quakerism, that in its beginnings Quakerism was a revolt from the easy, loose profession of the times, and a reversion to this Apostolic type of Christianity. Thus Fox, speaking of himself, said that he had come up into the Paradise of God, into the state in which Adam was before he fell. At another time, writing of his experience, he said, "I knew Jesus and He was precious to my soul, but I found something within that would not be sweet, that would not be patient, that would not be kind. I did what I could to keep it down, but it was there. I besought Jesus to do something for me, and when I gave Him my will he came in and took out all that would not be sweet and patient and kind, and shut the door." That is, I think, the finest statement which we have of what the Holy Spirit will do for the willing heart. And this teaching and this experience was the very heart of the early Quaker movement, and had it not been for this there would have been no Society of Friends, or Quaker Church.

Some of you have heard the illustration of the miner's eye. I have seen the same thing at our noon meetings at the car shops. There the men line up before us with their faces so black from the grime of the shops that you would not know that they were white men, but ever from those begrimed faces look out a series of clean, clear eyes! The sight is curious enough. But how is it that the eyes are so wonderfully kept in the midst of dirt that is adhering to everything else? The secret of it lies in the provision that has been made for the constant washing of the eye, so that it is impossible for any soil to adhere to it. And He who has so wonderfully arranged for the protection of the eye, shall He not also provide for the cleansing and keeping of the heart? And this is exactly what He has done as the Scriptures most abundantly show. "Having therefore these promises, beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God!" or, reverting to our figure, let us go up unto Him into the mount.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.

"Four Sorts of Soil"

BY ANDREW C. ELLIS, D.D.

"A sower went out to sow his seed."—Luke 8: 5.

This first story that Jesus told is true to the facts of nature and of human nature. The Germans call it the "Parable of the Four Sorts of Soil." We are not to understand that there are four different kinds of soil. We are not foredoomed to be hard, or shallow, or thorny, or fruitful soil. The vital fact is, that there are four different conditions of the same soil. The teaching of the parable is the universal natural law that the growth of the seed depends on the quality of the soil. The seed is the Word of God, and the soil is the human heart. The condition of the heart determines the results of hearing the Word.

"Some seeds fell by the wayside." The beaten path which crosses the field, or the wagon-road along the edge, is the same kind of soil as in the middle of the field, but under different condition. It serves a useful purpose, but it will not grow wheat or corn. The hard surface does not admit the seed. The seed does not really come into any relation with the soil, and the birds of the air devour it. There were minds like that in the crowd before Jesus, and they are in every congregation today. They are not necessarily inattentive. Many of them are careful listeners, and enjoy the sermon perhaps as they would a lecture, but they never let the truth get down to where it takes hold of them. It does not germinate. It falls on a mind and heart hardened by the wheels of trade or pleasure. The attitude toward the word spoken is not frivolous, but it has not been that of deepest attention. He has enjoyed the sermon, but it has not interested him as a business proposition will interest him tomorrow. The ubiquitous Satan of business or pleasure soon picks up the seed, and before the Sabbath is ended the influence of the sanctuary is gone. Such a state of mind is impervious to the gracious influences of the gospel. The pathway hearer does not "receive the word."

"Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth." This second class of hearers is a gain upon the first. The first do not open themselves up at all to receive the seed, but these gladly yield to the power of the truth, and the seed germinates and springs up. They are enthusiastic and emotional, but they lack depth of character. Their natures are shallow. They have "no deepness" in themselves. Religion is with them too largely a matter of frames of feeling. They run well for a season, but they have never taken Christ thoroughly into their hearts and lives. Their conversion has never penetrated the will, and carried it over to Christ. There is not enough of will-power and intelligent and persistent purpose to hold them steadily to the Christian life. The plow of conviction has not gone deep enough to change them in the element of character, and when the testing time comes they fall away. "They are like trees whose roots lie along the surface of the ground—dry weather makes bad work with them, and wind blows them down."

Then comes the more obvious classification, where "some fell among thorns." "The cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things"—how true the words of Jesus are to the facts of today! This class represents the mixed and unseparated lives of men and women who have not surrendered themselves wholly to Christ, and who are attempting the difficult and impossible task of compromise. They are not hard-hearted nor shallow, but they are trying to serve both God and mammon. If they would come out clear-cut and positively on the Lord's side, what strong and vigorous Christians they would be, and how great their influence for good! But the grace that is in them is choked and smothered with cares, riches, pleasures, and the lusts of other things, and they bring forth no fruit to perfection. When men are so harnessed into life that their own ideas of what is right and true are continually overthrown by the demands of business or pleasure, the gospel of Jesus Christ does not have much chance. The trouble here is that of good soil but mixed seed. Sometimes you see a meadow ruined, so far as grass is concerned, by the daisies which have rooted themselves and choked out all other life, or a lawn filled with plantains, and no chance for anything else. So many a once earnest and fruitful Christian life has come to spiritual barrenness, choked out by the cares and lusts of the things of this world.

Then comes the last, in contrast to these three faults of impenetrability, shallowness and choking opposition—those who receive the word into what Luke calls "good and honest heart," and the seed is never again as small as when it is first sown. Good hearing makes good preaching, and honesty is a prime requisite in hearing the word of God. The growth of the seed depends on the quality of the soil.

Jesus said, "Take heed how ye hear." He knew what was in man. The fault is not in the seed, but in the soil; and because it is a fault, and not an unavoidable condition, God holds men responsible. If a man is living so that the wheels of traffic and pleasure have made his heart like a wayside; or if he has deadened his nature so that his heart is an obstruction to the truth of God; or if his life is choked with cares, riches, lusts, he must answer for it all before God. The whole teaching of the parable is concentrated into the command of the Lord Jesus: "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The Summer Bible School, held in connection with the Chautauqua program at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 6th to August 20th, will be in charge of the Extension Department of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. There will be a number of noted speakers on the program. The character of the work is instructive, inspiring, constructive, conservative, sane and scholarly. Its aim is to develop the spirit of Bible study as well as to provide instruction which will increase knowledge of and faith in the fundamentals of Christianity. A leaflet about the school can be had by addressing the Secretary of the Extension Department, 153-163 Institute Place, Chicago.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of Churches has issued a comprehensive Year Book of the Church and Social Service by Harry F. Ward, Associate Secretary of the Federal Council Commission. The book sells at thirty cents in paper and fifty cents in cloth and can be had upon application to the Book Department of the Federal Council, 105 East 22d Street, New York City.

The holy passion of friendship is of so sweet and steady and loving and enduring a nature that it will last through a whole lifetime, if not asked to lend money.—Mark Twain.

The Gospel Team Movement

BY EDGAR H. STRANAHAN

Following the Billy Sunday Evangelistic Meetings and the Men and Religion Campaign, in Wichita, Kansas, there came into existence a movement that has come to be known as the Gospel Team. A group of men, four to one hundred, under the direction of a leader, conduct meetings for the one purpose of obtaining decisions for the Christian life. The movement is simplicity itself, but the results have been so far-reaching and so definite and the work of the teams at so many points so Quakerly, that many Friends may be interested in it.

The first meeting was held January 21, 1912, and to date, May 16, 1914, there have been by the Wichita teams alone 3,813 decisions. Three hundred and forty-three men in this city have been on the teams. The men themselves have been growing by leaps and bounds as the responsibilities of the meetings have come on them. Lay leadership and a consciousness that they of themselves may at any time get into vital relationship with God have made the weak strong. Every department of the Church has felt the added impulse of these consecrated men.

A large number of the 125 places visited have caught the fire and gone forth to do a like work. About 5,000 men on 300 teams in 14 states now have fully 10,000 decisions to the credit of the work. As many as 135 have been gathered in during one day in one city, and several times one team on one day has had above 50 decisions. While, of course, the atmosphere of a mighty revival is the best for the starting of this sort of work, it is not necessarily confined to it. Hutchinson has had more than 500; Cherokee, Okla., about the same; Woodward, Okla., more than 1,000 decisions, while several places have had hundreds. Any group of men who can pray and are willing to do personal work with their friends can make a success of the team work. A large section of one of the leading denominations, that has been particularly strong in the Gospel Team work, has had a net increase of 16 per cent. during the last year.

Large cities, small cities, villages, and Churches in the open country have proved beyond doubt that any Church may have a team. One inland town, twenty miles from a railroad, has 198 decisions by its team the first year of its organization. Cherokee, Okla., with a team composed largely of Friends, had 250 decisions in a four week's meeting in that town itself. Places that had been unable, with strong evangelists, to have ingatherings during several years past, have found that the Gospel Team work was just what was needed.

There are two varieties of teams: one that holds the public gospel meeting, which we call the Gospel Team, and the other that works privately in the local congregation, which we call the "Jerusalem Team" (Acts 1: 8). The Gospel Team goes to points where invited, taking complete charge of the meetings for the day. The leader is the head of the meeting. There is no fixed program, but as he senses the needs of the meeting and the fitness of the men for that particular occasion he will lead on through the hour. The meeting is, of course, strictly evangelistic and every energy is used to lead people to an immediate decision. The meetings are remarkably free from any sensationalism, but are wonderfully charged with the power of the Spirit. After several men have given short to-the-point talks some one makes the call and all the men on the team will immediately go out into the congregation for personal work. It is truly amazing the results which these untrained laymen achieve. The sacrifice they have made to reach the meeting, often up all night Saturday to reach their destination, their zeal for souls, their prayer life, willingness to do team work, consistent daily lives, and reputation as successful business men all enter into the moment to give them power to persuade men to accept their own Savior and Lord.

The "Jerusalem Team" does not have so spectacular a job, but it is surely none the less important. A group of men, preferably a Men's Bible Class, will first of all make a careful survey of the church records. A list of non-member men whose wives belong to church, non-member men whose children attend the Sunday School, men who are members of the church but do not attend Sunday School or prayer meeting, non-member men who attend church and men who attend but who belong to a church some place else, will be made. This list will be distributed to various members of the class, usually one name being given to several different persons. These men to whom names have been entrusted are charged with the blessed privilege of visiting these men and with persuading love constrain them to unite with the Church, attend Sunday School and prayer meeting. With the right sort of work done by each of the men a very large proportion will be won and won easily. Having completed this part of the work a survey is made of the community. This will usually be done in co-operation with other churches, and the men who give preference to this particular church will be distributed to the members of the team as above. These having been solicited either to become Christians or members of the Church as the case may require, the next task is to list, distribute, and visit the men who have expressed no church preference.

Space will not permit of a detailed description of the many methods used in furthering the various phases of this scheme. Any who are interested to the point of catching a vision of the possibilities of it will readily discover even unique ways of "beginning at Jerusalem." Some splendid results have been achieved. One church of about 300 members, by this method alone added 39 to its membership on Easter. Another of 100 members, with practically the same method, received 27 on the same day.

Perhaps a word of warning should be sounded. This is a task that calls for all the available tact, energy, patience and self-sacrifice, and unless men are willing to pay the price and see the program carried to a finish, the start had best not be made. The fruit is fine, but to gather it means hard work. Lazy and indifferent men had better keep out of it. We have divided Wichita into six districts and are organizing to form a Jerusalem Team in every church. It may take several years to get even a good start, but we are in the work to bring things to pass.

Troubled Mexico

BY R. SOLOMON TICE

"Mexico and its affairs have of late taken much space in the press dispatches. For about a generation that country has been well policed and has prospered. A general shock of surprise and disappointment has therefore been felt at recent events. Many have been ready to charge the renewal of insurrection and war to racial defects in the Mexican people. A good deal of superficial writing has appeared in the papers, the remarks of observers ignorant of the country's history and failing in consequence to enter into the deeper currents of its national life.

"The Mexican people are engaged in a struggle for freedom. Political independence has been achieved; liberty of conscience is at last realized; a liberal constitution guarantees human rights. But the burden of popular ignorance and of industrial helplessness has not yet been lifted. That load must be taken off. It has grown insufferable. The paroxysms that are now shaking the country to its center are but blind struggles after this liberty. Mexico needs help, especially the help of her nearest neighbors on the north. To know her condition, to sympathize, to lend a hand in the work of education and in the spread of true religion, is far better than to criticize and to threaten her with armed intervention."—Preface in "Mexico Today."—Winton.

The general public seems to feel that the Mexicans are born fighters, blood-thirsty and cruel; that they are incapable of education, vicious, degraded; that they are restive under legal restraint, incompetent for self-government, and given to highway robbery. This is far from the truth. As a people, they are gentle, peaceable, peace loving, and will fight only when goaded to the last extremity. True, there are individual exceptions, but Mexico has no monopoly upon these. It must be admitted that the per cent of illiteracy is very high, that ignorance and superstition are often in evidence and that apparently the people have not the capacity for self-government.

The roots of the present difficulties lie hidden deep in the past and have their beginning in the system of religion which was established and still prevails in that country. This system fosters the ignorance and superstition which bring in their train all the attendant present-day evils. But once in her history has Mexico at all come into possession of even the semblance of free government. In that brief period she demonstrated her capability of self-government. Then it was that the present constitution by which liberty of conscience and human rights were guaranteed, was framed and adopted and the Reform Laws were enacted. The Catholic Church has amassed one-third of all the wealth and about one-half of the land estates of the country, all of which was exempt from taxation. Church and state were united. By the constitution Church and state were separated. The Church lands were made government property and the heads of families were made secure in the ownership of as much of this land as they could cultivate and make productive. This gave rise to millions of small, independent farmers who were prosperous and happy in the exercise of their constitutional rights. A system of free public schools, attendance upon which was compulsory, was established throughout the country.

But not thus easily does a man-eating tiger relinquish his prey. Benito Juárez, after serving as president of the new democratic government for a short time, suddenly died. Many Mexicans think he was poisoned. The vice-president, Lerdo de Tejada, was inaugurated president. He served only a few months when he, for some unaccountable reason, resigned and left the country. Gen. Porfirio Diaz had been in the United States plotting the overthrow of the democratic Juárez government. He had interested American capitalists in his behalf by promising liberal concessions in Mexico in return for financial aid in case he were successful. The rapid succession of events, the death of Juárez, the resignation of Lerdo de Tejada and the seizing of the presidency by Diaz, lends color to the belief that they all were parts of a preconceived plot. Suffice it to say that the days of the democracy were, for the time at least, superseded by a dictatorship. The new constitution, though not abolished, was made a dead letter when occasion offered. In due time the American capitalists received their concessions and the Mexican supporters of the Diaz program were rewarded. Thus began the "well policed and prosperous" Mexico of the last generation.

In the valley of Papantla in the State of Vera Cruz some twenty thousand independent small farmers cultivated their own crops of pineapples, cocoa, sugar cane, tropical products. One day a party of surveyors appeared with their transits. The inhabitants knew only too well the meaning of such a move and protested, saying they didn't want their land measured even if the government did order it done, but the surveyors persisted. Next day they reappeared with some soldiers. A struggle ensued in which some on both sides were killed. An insurrection had arisen which must be put down at all hazards. An army of several thousand soldiers was sent against them. No one will ever know the number killed, but some idea can be gained from the fact that two full train loads of dead and dying were taken under cover of night to the harbor of Vera Cruz and thrown to the sharks which abound in those waters. All that valley is now the property of a single rich family. The inhabitants that remain from the slaughter now serve this family at an average wage of twelve and one-half cents per day and receive in payment goods from the plantation store.

Is There Not a Cause?

BY CASSIE COMMONS

The Great Teacher gave some suggestive instruction to those manifesting the desire to follow him, when he said, "Come with me and I will make you fishers of men."

A "fisherman" studies hook, line, bait, float, net, place, time, weather, temperature, water, experiences of other successful fishermen and his own failures and successes. Imagine a fisherman sitting continuously in one spot, working with the same equipment day after day,—no "catch," yet neglecting or refusing proffered assistance from others more successful! We might reasonably conclude that that man was standing in his own light and was in the way of success of his own undertaking.

The followers of Jesus Christ since this Scripture was uttered are an organized body with a like injunction.—Fish for men! What success? Are churches increasing in numbers or not? Is the work satisfactory to ourselves as workers, or not? Are men of the world, or men on the outside, being landed on the shore for use in carrying forward the greatest enterprise this world has even known—soul winning and character building?

One does not need the perceptive qualities of a seer in order to notice that this work of winning, catching or saving is not moving forward at a rate in keeping with other movements of the times. Is it not the privilege of the church of God in these days to make a phenomenal record in speed progress? As I write this last sentence, I imagine I can hear the sighs of some good members as they express their fears that somebody may go too fast.

The basic principle in electricity always existed we are told, yet it took somebody to stand out from and beyond his fellows, and it waited for Franklin to harness the power that has so rapidly transformed the motive powers of the world, and now we who took no thought or action in the matter, enjoy its great service, all because somebody dared to do as well as dared to dream.

Our Society of Friends has accomplished great things, as shown by history, but this is no time to rest on the past record. Our organization as Friends, already small in comparison with many churches, will lose out, unless we not only get "a vision" for the day, but dare to follow the leading of the vision in active service.

There are questions to be solved now. There are positions to be taken today. It is the purpose of this article to hint at one of these questions which we deem is of sufficient importance and magnitude to bind us together, a united force in a common cause for effectual evangelism and the enlargement of our borders in church membership.

Only about two things are necessary in this undertaking; first, increased faith in God and His work; second, increased faith in mankind, in and out of the church.

For years past churches have lacked the presence and help of men in greater proportion than of women. This lack has continued so long that all too many have come to think that the work of establishing righteousness is a "woman's work." May we pause here and say, all honor to the faithfulness of our women who have steadily done what they could.

There are some reasons for this condition. Men are bread earners for dependent ones, and their time often is not their own. Temptations for men are pronounced and strong, and we see men enslaved by habits which appeal to appetite in a measure that women do not know. Saloons with their kindred evils, clubs and organizations call for their time, money and fellowship, until at present there is a reason for the burden that is on some consecrated leaders, for special efforts to enlist men in Christian labor for the men's sake, for the sake of the home and for the sake of the church.

Hence we have the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Men and Religion Forward Movement and Men's Adult Bible Classes and other movements that have sprung into existence in the hope of appealing to the man, and as a result men are coming to realize that world and community evangelism is a man's job as well as a woman's work.

The young man desires to be a man,—not a woman. he watches man and imitates men. Crowds of men appeal to boys and young men, crowds in the saloon, crowds of men on the street corner. Let us then who are workers of today take advantage of this principle or propensity and arrange for crowds of men in the work of the church; make plans and carry them out to win our young manhood for God and truth. Let us be wise as are the forces of sin in their untiring schemes to trap the boy. Let's be content only with becoming successful fishermen of men.

Personally I can think of no movement on the part of Friends that would command the respect and admiration (which is the forerunner of deeper considerations) of our men of all ages than this call for a men's conference, and that this call be answered by hearty response on the part of all our membership, "Here am I," and the promise to aid in its fulfillment. We cheerfully trust, as women, those upon whom the burden rests to so carry on the work, that lasting benefit may come to our beloved Society.

We quote from Flory, "Enlist the service of the man and you will have also the woman and the boy. You cannot keep them away." Then may we hope as well as pray that this plan may bring us together in a common interest as we follow Jesus, and with His equipment, bring in as never before the unconcerned, negligent and sinful.

Webster, Indiana.

It is expected that the National Prohibition Resolution will be brought to a vote in the House of Representatives early in July. The liquor men are trying to force a vote on the theory that it will not secure a two-thirds majority, although they admit that it will probably have a majority.

One Preacher's Mid-Year Resolutions

There is one thing better than making resolutions, and that is keeping them. But they must be made before they can be kept. A minister must have ideas and ideals. Ideals must be realized by a steadfast purpose and a resolute will. We must plan our work, then work our plan. There are a few things of which I am determined to remind myself in this mid-year season.

1. I am resolved not to be a church "boss," talking about "my church," "my Sabbath School," "my C. E. Societies," "my prayer meeting."

2. I must be more careful of my personal appearance. There must be no skimping in laundry bills. Shoes must be well blacked, especially the heels in the middle behind.

3. Diligence in pastoral work must not lag. Be a good example by working between meals. Visit the sick, the lonely, the bereaved. Comfort the discouraged and those in trouble. Rejoice with the fortunate, congratulate the prosperous and praise the worthy.

4. I am resolved to be the pastor in the Bible School, and in the Young People's Work of the Church—always present, always interested, but with no semblance of autocratic dictation.

5. I must do more expository preaching. I feel that a teaching ministry is one need of the times. "Preach the Word." Earnestness and spirituality must be more dominant notes in my ministry.

6. I am purposed to spend more time in prayer; closet prayer, prayer in my home, prayer in my study, prayer in the homes of the people. Still encourage cottage prayer meetings, groups for prayer, special meetings for prayer. Because prayer is our highest service; prayer brings God's blessings; prayer unites workers; prayer is the way to overcome difficulties and to gird the Church for effective work on the home field and in foreign lands.

A Thought for Mothers

BY RACHEL BAILY HILL.

A brief personal testimony received a few days since from a valued correspondent and friend is, I think, so pertinent to the needs of the day, that I offer it to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for a wider circulation, of which it seems to me worthy. It is quoted almost literally. The writer says:

"I felt impressed in the Mothers' Day meeting to bear testimony to my dear mother's faithfulness in teaching her children the Bible, beginning timely and keeping up the practice as long as we remained in the home nest.

"She taught me the books of the Bible when I was four years old. She taught us the ten commandments; holding a First-day School in her house before such schools were introduced into meeting houses.

"Sometimes the children of neighbors coming in to the school would get us to try to beg off. She would say, 'No, we will have the lesson first, and then the walk or play.' As a result we became well versed in the Old Testament, and we have found it easier to keep up our Sunday School lessons in later life. I was once asked how I so readily named the tribes of the children of Israel; and on another occasion, after we got to holding classes for prayer and Bible study at different homes, I was asked by a minister how it happened that my two sisters and myself were so familiar with Bible stories and characters. 'No question is asked,' said the inquirer, 'but one of you can answer it.' Of course, it was due to the teaching of our mother.

"I spoke of the faithfulness of those mothers of the earlier time; and exhorted the mothers of today to be faithful, as many of them are, in heeding the Bible injunction to teach these commandments as they walk by the way, as they rise up and as they sit down, to teach line upon line, precept upon precept, and there would not be so many going astray. There would not then be so many young men incarcerated behind prison bars, doomed to the pitiful monotony of hard drudgery without remuneration, and many without hope of release. If they would take into consideration the heartaches and heartbreaks, the disgrace brought on families and on mothers especially, they would bestir themselves and set an example to the women of the world, who are so engrossed with its alluring pleasures, its dress, its parties, its theaters, and all manner of things that lead away from Christ and his work. In this crisis in the world's history every Christian will be needed in the contest between right and wrong. Let mothers be doing their part."

Weisburg, Indiana.

Another Temperance Recruit

Emperor William of Germany has not drank beer for several years, and has now barred wine, according to a late Berlin dispatch to The New York Tribune. The correspondent explains that the kaiser was never more than a moderate drinker, though at one time he condoned, if he did not approve, the use of alcoholics. He is now reported to be convinced of the pernicious effects of alcohol on individuals and on the nation. Statistics are quoted to show that in Germany drink annually causes 1,600 suicides, 1,300 accidents and thousands of cases of insanity and crime, while more than 60 per cent of the insane, over half of the epileptics and nearly half of the criminals are of drunken parents.

It is told that the kaiser's favorite beverage, aside from plain water, is lemonade, and that he has no objection to toasts to his health being drunk in water. However, wine continues to be served at his table for those who desire it.—The Continent.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of Churches has designated Sunday, September 6th, as Labor Sunday. Material on the question may be obtained in the Year Book of the Church and Social Service, which is supplied by the Federal Council, 105 E. 22d Street, New York City. Price 30 cents.

Friends on the European Continent

The following report has been made to the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting about Friends on the Continent of Europe, and will be of interest to all Friends:

REPORT

We have again to report a continuance of correspondence with Friends on the Continent, in Norway, Denmark, France and Germany, also with our missionaries and others connected with them in Constantinople, Pemba, Syria, Madagascar, India and Ceylon, and China.

Norway.—The Annual Meeting was held at Stavanger, as usual, in 1913. Our friend J. J. Armistead and his wife are still engaged in their Mission work on the Northwest coast of Norway. They write cheerily of it, but feel that, as age increases, their physical ability lessens for a work involving so much exposure, and at times hardship. They long that younger Friends may feel called to take up the burden.

Denmark.—Friends held their Annual Meeting at Veile this year, and felt it a time of encouragement and blessing. They much value this opportunity of meeting together. Tom Bryan and several members of his family were a much appreciated addition to their number.

Friends at Copenhagen and the Meeting there have this year been visited by several English Friends. The grant by the Meeting for Sufferings towards the expenses of a public meeting room has been a real help, and they now have a few from outside to join with them.

Danish Friends have been cheered this year by an application for membership from Johannes Sorensen and his wife, which has been acceded to. J. Sorensen is, like his father, P. William Sorensen, a lighthouse keeper, and, though his duties will prevent his often meeting with other Friends, the moral effect will be helpful. He speaks English well. On the other hand, our Danish Friends have sustained a heavy loss in the removal by death of Chr. Bakgaard, at the age of fifty-six. He was an earnest worker in the Lord's service and strongly upheld Friends' principles, and his life was consistent with his Christian profession. His place cannot readily be filled.

France.—The few French Friends remaining in the South of France, mostly now elderly, in some of the towns and villages in the departments of the Gard and the Drome, show much appreciation of intercourse by letter or personal visits from English Friends. They have, however, had very few visits of late, though travellers to the Riviera pass through Valence and very near to Nimes and Congénies. It is sad if there should not be a continuance of those who, under our name for more than a century and previously from the days of the Camisards, have borne such a noble testimony to spiritual worship and against war. Justine Dalencourt writes cheerfully of the work in Paris. Last autumn she again visited most of the localities where Mothers' Meetings, etc., are carried on in connection with and aided by the Friends' French Mission.

The Mission in Brittany under Charles D. Terrell's care holds meetings in halls, or rooms in cottages. Special attention is given to work among the children, and to Temperance work.

Our friend Caroline Armfield is busy at Thiat, Haute Vienne, in connection with the French Protestants, with Mothers' and Children's Meetings principally.

Germany.—Here we have little to report. The unexpected and almost sudden death of our dear friend Louise Peitsmeyer, who, with her intimate knowledge of English and acquaintance with English Friends, had for so many years acted as correspondent and interpreter, has led to the closing of the last of the old Friends' Meetings in Germany. A few individuals at Minden and Obernkirchen still profess our principles. None of these speak English.

A letter received from the Monthly Meeting at Constantinople expresses "thankfulness for the loving sympathy of English Friends during past months of uncertainty and constant demand on time and thought," and goes on to say that, "the generous gifts of Friends in England have been of more value than we can tell in perseveringly relieving suffering and showing our Moslem friends that true Christianity gives power to rise above party spirit, and to think lovingly of all who need our help, of whatever race or creed." Amongst those who attend the meetings at Constantinople are Turks, Greeks, Armenians and Bulgarians, and an Assyrian from Nineveh is specially mentioned as being very regular in coming.

On behalf of the Continental Committee,

SAML. J. ALEXANDER, Clerk.

London Yearly Meeting Growing

The statistical returns presented to the Yearly Meeting this week show a total membership (including those residing abroad) of 19,942 persons, a net increase of 166 in the year. The Quarterly Meetings chiefly responsible for the increase are London (56), Yorkshire (36), Warwick (34), Beds. (29), and Norfolk (18); also the Australian General Meeting (46). The decreases in several other Meetings reduce the total gain. The number of persons received by conviction was 344 and as minors 77. Ten years ago the membership totaled 18,221. The number of Recorded Ministers continues to show a steady decline. The number, 329 (199 men and 130 women), is 9 less than last year, 19 less than two years ago, and 65 less than in 1904, when the number stood at its highest in recent years. The number of Recorded Ministers, however, represents a diminishing proportion of the vocal ministry in our meetings.—London Friend.

Forty-eight thousand dollars worth of prepared opium together with a quantity of cocaine and morphia was burned in Tientsin City, China, recently. The occasion was the fifth public opium burning under the auspices of the Official Bureau for the Completion of Opium Prohibition. Other provinces are equally active in suppressing both the growth and sale of opium.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Upland.—The Friends Church of Upland, Indiana, has been taking "higher ground" within the past few months. The pastors, Ellis and Clara Wells began a series of meetings in March in which several were converted and the believers strengthened. At the following monthly meetings fifteen members were taken into the church. Plans were made to plaster and paint the walls of the meeting house, and to paint the parsonage. The subscription to the amount of about $400 was soon raised by the pastor and Superintendent of the Sabbath School, who is a glass blower in the factory here. His consistent life in the factory has won many to Christ, and to the Friends Church here. In appreciation of his life among them, the glass blowers gave our Sunday School Superintendent $100 to assist in repairing the Friends meeting house. On May 10th the meeting house was re-dedicated by Lindley A. Wells of Portland, Oregon, who continued in revival services until the 21st of May. His clear teaching of Scriptural holiness led many to walk in the light. Grandpa Sanborn, an old soldier of 74, was especially blessed, and though now very sick continues to sing and praise God. Twenty-four were definitely blessed, and the membership in general helped.

Students and the faculty of Taylor University attended as much as school duties would permit. Robert Morris, a Quaker boy in Taylor University, ably aided the evangelist in the gospel of song.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Des Moines.—Des Moines Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Des Moines, June 6th and 7th. Members were present from all the other meetings in the quarter. There was one visiting minister present, Clark Brown, who gave two interesting chalk talks, one to the children on Sunday afternoon and one on Temperance Sunday night. He also preached Saturday morning at eleven o'clock in the meeting for worship.

Earlham.—The missionary offering, taken the first Sabbath in June, amounted to over $100. Earlham meeting is paying its entire pledge for the year before July 1st. The members hope to make new pledges soon and let the year begin July 1st instead of September 1st. The pledge this year was $400. Over $20 was taken recently for the new meeting house in Tokyo.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

Haviland Academy.—Haviland Academy has just closed one of the best school years in its history. There was a graduating class of fourteen. Charles Lescault, the pastor, preached the baccalaureate sermon and Professor William Reagan of Friends University at Wichita gave the class address.

NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING

Boulder, Colorado.—Our delegates to Yearly Meeting, viz., Kirby V. Bowen, Charles Haworth, John Fry and wife, and Phoebe Johnson, have just returned from Yearly Meeting. Our Sabbath services, June 21st, were devoted to a full report of the meeting. Boulder Christian Endeavorers have taken for their mission study book "The Life of John G. Paton," which is very interesting and helpful. The Boulder Summer School of Missions will be held here on State Chautauqua grounds July 7-14, at which time Charlotte E. Vickers will have a place daily on the program. Any Friends planning a mountain trip, will be welcomed, and it will be quite convenient to combine mission study with a pleasure trip.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING

Portland Quarter.—Portland Quarterly Meeting was held in West Piedmont Church, Portland, June 5, 6 and 7. Lewis C. and Myrtle Russell, former pastors at Quilcene, Washington, were in attendance. The presence and services of Charles E. Tebbetts were greatly appreciated. Elizabeth Sweet, Superintendent of Peace and Arbitration, presided over a very helpful meeting Saturday afternoon. Prof. Aubrey, of the Portland schools, explained the Peace work as it is being introduced into the schools of the city. Arthur Benson, a student from Pacific College, delivered an oration on the "Evils of War and the Blessings of Peace." Charles Wells, a Portland high school student, spoke on the effects of military training in the schools. On Saturday evening, E. R. Martin of the American Sunday School Union, spoke on "The Sunday School, the most important single institution for the evangelization of the World." The importance of developing the religious sense in youth was forcefully emphasized. A failure to do this results in a lack of religious capacity. The business meeting unanimously endorsed the proposed Men's Sectional Conference to be held in Portland in the near future. Such a gathering will be of great value to the church in the Northwest.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Bloomington.—The Woman's Missionary Society of Bloomington held a guest meeting in honor of Nancy Lee and Mary Pickett, Mexican missionaries, on the afternoon of June 8th, at the home of Enos Harvey. Seventy-five women were present. An interesting program was given. Light refreshments were served, and a pleasant social time spent together.

Willard O. Trueblood of Indianapolis gave an inspiring message at the baccalaureate service for the graduating class of Bloomington Academy, on the evening of June 7th, in the Friends Church. The Seniors gave their class play on the evening of the 9th, in Overman Hall. Commencement exercises were held on the evening of the 11th, an excellent address being given by Prof. W. C. Woodward of Earlham College. There were fourteen graduates.

Mooreville.—Clyde O. Watson, pastor of the Friends Church of Mooreville, has just closed a very successful year's work and by a unanimous vote of the Church has consented to stay another year. The Church has been strengthened and built up under his supervision and that of his wife. A large and flourishing Christian Endeavor Society has been organized. The picture recently published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND was a picture of a part of our society and was not of a convention as was announced.

PERSONAL MENTION

Prof. Edwin Morrison, head of the department of Physics in Earlham College, is studying at Chicago University this summer.

Ruth E. Brown of Earlham, Iowa, at a recent Sabbath evening service gave a report of the Triennial Missionary Conference held at Muncie, Indiana.

Henry T. Hodgkin of England is engaged in writing the history of the Foreign Missionary Association of English Friends for the forthcoming jubilee of the Association.

Inez E. Batchelor, pastor at Muscatine and Buffalo, Iowa, held some special meetings recently at Boulder, Colorado. There were some renewals and others were definitely blessed.

Elwood and Martha D. Hadley celebrated their golden wedding on May 26th, at their home near Richland, Iowa. About 150 of their relatives and neighbors were present. It was a pleasant occasion and a basket dinner was served.

Alice Woodard Hunt of Fountain City, Indiana, who attended New York Yearly Meeting the last of May, has been visiting a number of meetings in that state since that time.

Phoebe Johnson of Boulder, Colorado, attended the Triennial Missionary Conference at Muncie, Indiana, in May. There will be a report of the same at her home meeting in the near future.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Board of Young Friends Activities, preached twice on June 14th at Cottage Grove Meeting, Indiana. He went from there to Ridgeway, Pa., and is attending New England Yearly Meeting this week.

Richard Haworth, pastor at Fairmount, Indiana, is attending the international Sunday School Convention at Chicago this week. He is a delegate at large from the Sunday School Council of the Federated Churches of Evangelical Denominations.

J. Arthur Wollam, who has finished his fifth year as pastor at Emporia, Kansas, has given notice to the meeting that he will not remain another year. The blessing of God has been upon his work, but he feels that the time has come for someone else to take his place.

Harry R. Keates, superintendent of evangelistic work in Iowa Yearly Meeting, and Richard R. Newby, pastor of Friends Church at Des Moines, attended the sessions of the Pastors' Alliance of Kansas Yearly Meeting at Wichita, Kansas. Their services on the program were greatly appreciated.

Charles Lescault, pastor of the meeting at Haviland, Kansas, gave the class address at Fowler Academy on May 22d. He also gave the class address for Kiowa County commencement on June 12th at Greensburg, Kansas, and preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the county high school, May 17th.

John Henry Douglas was taken ill the 13th of April and has been shut in until a few days ago. He is much better, but it still very weak. He writes, "I greatly rejoice in reading of the progress of the gospel and in knowing that younger men are zealously in the work. If the evangelistic and evangelical spirit prevails, success will always follow."

In the first paragraph of the article "The Place of Mothers," published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, June 11th, the sentence "We leave France with her answer, iniquity" should read "We leave France with her own iniquity."

NEWS ITEMS

A Friends meeting is being started by some interested Friends, who are located at Whitepond, Alabama.

From the London Friend we learn of the death of Helen Balkwill Harris, wife of J. Rendel Harris, on June 2d. This is sad news to many Friends on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Friends Bible School Board distributed last week the second edition of Friends quarterlies. It is announced that the circulation is increasing and that everything is moving satisfactorily.

About 150 persons shared in the boat excursion on May 23d, conducted by Friends' Historic Society of Philadelphia. They visited Burlington, N. J., which is historic ground for Quakerism in America.

The graduating exercises of Westtown School were held on June 17, Ida Roberts was elected by the class as valedictorian and Wililam V. Dennis of Friends Select School of Philadelphia was invited to address the class.

The Winona Lake Conference, to which young Friends are invited, will be held at Winona Lake, July 22-28. The English Deputation will be present and there will be a number of excellent instructors. For full particulars address Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Indiana.

The Whittier Fellowship Guest House at Hampton Falls, N. H., will be ready to receive guests next week. The program will begin on July 1st and will continue more or less brokenly until September 14th. A group of English young Friends is expected to be at the Guest House part of the time.

We acknowledge receipt of the annual report of Friends Foreign Missionary Association of England for 1913, presented to the recent Yearly Meeting in London. It is a pamphlet of 101 pages, amply illustrated and gives full particulars of the vast amount of work being done in the foreign field by English Friends.

We acknowledge receipt of the second annual report of the Church Federation of Indianapolis, Ind., including a social service survey prepared by Morton C. Pearson, Executive Secretary. This is one of the busiest and most successful church federations in the entire country, as is indicated by the report of the vast amount of work accomplished.

PROPOSED MEN'S CONFERENCE

Following the discussion of the proposed Men's Conference in THE AMERICAN FRIEND from time to time, the matter has been taken up by the Central Committee of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, as will be shown by the following letter sent by the Chairman to members of the Executive Committee. The letter is self-explanatory.

RICHMOND, IND., June 6, 1914.

Dear Friend:

As a result of correspondence with members of the Central Committee concerning the proposed Men's Conference, the following seems to be the prevailing opinion of that committee on the various points raised, viz.:

1. If the proposed Men's Conference is to have the influence among Friends which such a meeting should command, it should be called by the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting or with the unqualified endorsement of that committee.

2. If it be finally decided that such a Conference shall be held, the call should be made only after the two following conditions shall have been met, viz.:

(a) That the attendance of "a really representative body of members of all the Yearly Meetings" be assured.

(b) That there be outlined and approved the definite, concrete objects which shall constitute the program for the Conference. It is believed that some definite tangible results must be in view toward which such a Conference may work, and for the accomplishment of which definite plans may be formulated before the Conference meets.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

• NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

3. As to the time for such a Conference to meet, it is the judgment of the Committee that to defer the meeting until next winter, or even until next year is much more to be desired than to attempt to realize the purpose of the Conference without having preparations carefully made as suggested above.

In addition to corresponding with members of the Central Committee the Chairman has also consulted the General Secretary who fully approves the condition specified above with respect to the assurance of a truly representative gathering.

In view of the above conclusions and at the suggestion of a member of the Central Committee the Chairman has begun correspondence to attempt to find out how many of the Yearly Meetings are ready to approve the proposed Men's Conference to the extent of taking the responsibility of appointing a representative delegation.

If a sufficient response to these inquiries is received to warrant the consideration of the question of calling the Conference before the time of the meeting of the Executive Committee in October, information to that effect will be sent promptly to all members of the Committee; if not, the final consideration of the question will be left until the Executive Committee meets in its annual session.

Meantime the Chairman will welcome suggestions or expressions of opinion from any member of the Committee.

Very sincerely,

ALLEN D. HOLE, Chairman.

AT HUNTINGTON PARK

There was held at Huntington Park from April 3d to 12th, a very helpful gathering of California Friends, under the auspices of the Training School association. It was found that there are ample accommodations in the Training school building for the lodging and feeding of a large number of guests. Great joy was expressed by all who were privileged to spend a few days in friendly family life within the warm and spiritual atmosphere of the school. A large tent was pitched on the greensward just across the street north of and facing the school itself.

The interest grew as the days went by. It was hard to close on that last Sunday night, just when the unsaved and hungry in soul were coming in great numbers, some of them for miles around.

Many cards and letters were received from Friends in all parts of our state who were unable to attend because of sickness or close finances. These assured us of their prayers and sympathy and surely they were praying for there was a wonderful degree of spiritual power in all the sessions.

The theme of the whole meeting was "Salvation—from Sin to Righteousness and Holiness." Each forenoon a good audience listened to Wm. P. Pinkham, president of the school on doctrinal subjects such as "God the Father," "God in Christ," "Forgiveness of Sins," "Blood Atonement," "Complete Sanctification," "Perfect Love," "Sin After Cleansing," and "The Missionary Dispensation."

The dominant note was the evangelistic one and rightly so it should be. Twice each day the old-new gospel of full and real salvation was preached in its purity and power by Homer L. Cox, pastor of the Sunnyside Church in Portland, Oregon. He is also the chairman of Evangelistic Work in Oregon Yearly Meeting.

"Effectual Prayer," "Repentance," "Faith in Christ," "The Way of Holiness," "Consecration," "The Justice of God," "The Love of God," "Perfection," "The Double Heart," and "The Coming Bridegroom," were among the subjects of his messages.

One refreshing and touching message was brought by Blanch Cox, his wife, from the text "With Joy Shall Ye Draw Water from the Wells of Salvation;" prayer wells, praise wells, preaching wells, service wells and song wells. It was noticeable that there was a large per cent of young people in attendance. Many of all ages in life were saved, boys and girls, young men and women, strong men and women and a few old people; over thirty accepted the gospel of Complete Sanctification from sin and dedication to service.—Pacific Friend.

KANSAS PASTORS' ALLIANCE

The following resolutions were adopted by the Pastors' Alliance of Kansas Yearly Meeting, held at Wichita, Kansas, June 8th to 11th:

Resolved: 1. That, having been deeply impressed by his address on "Evangelism," we hereby express our sincere thanks to Harry R. Keates, Chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, for his stirring message on the subject.

2. That we recognize evangelization as the most important work in which the Society of Friends or any other Christian denomination can engage, and as the department which most vitally and helpfully influences all other departments of church work.

3. That we deplore the general indifference of many Friends to the semi-pagan conditions in many parts of the country, including parts of our own state, and we appeal to Friends everywhere now, after long delay, thoroughly to equip the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, to put it into practical operation for the national work, as far as possible, and to keep it up to an equal standard of efficiency with that of the Foreign Board.

4. That we recommend to the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting to send their Chairman, Harry R. Keates, this year to as many Yearly Meetings as possible to awaken a deep interest in evangelization.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

The fifty-eighth wedding anniversary of John Henry and Miriam Douglas occurred on April 23, and it was planned by the Whittier Church to celebrate the occasion by a floating reception in the afternoon with a short program, but the illness of Brother Douglas prevented carrying out the program as outlined. But bouquets from the Bible School, W. F. M. Society, Intermediate and Y. P. S. C. E., as well as from many individuals, were carried to them, and the Junior Society sent one by its own committee.

A. C. Johnson carried the committee

OLD AT TWENTY

Return of Youth with Proper Food.

Many persons who eat plenty never seem to be properly nourished.

That's because the food is not digested and absorbed. Much that is eaten is never taken up by the system as real food, and so the tissues simply starve and the individual may, as in a recent case, look and feel old in what should be the bloom of life, youth.

"At twenty I was prematurely old. The health and vigor and brightness of youth had been, as it seemed, stolen from me. I went to work in the morning with slow steps and a dull head.

"My work through the day was unsatisfactory for my breakfast lay in my stomach like a hard lump. I was peevish and the gas in my stomach was very annoying. After supper I usually went to bed to toss half the night from sheer nervousness.

"This was all from indigestion—caused by wrong eating.

"Finally I tried Grape-Nuts and I cannot describe the full benefits received from the food. It gave me back my health. It has completely restored good digestion and my ailments have disappeared. I steadily improved and am now strong and in perfect health."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

of two and fragrant offerings in his auto to the Douglas home. As the flowers were being arranged Brother Douglas came from his sick room and sat up for a time. A purse was presented to the esteemed couple and a prayer offered for them.

A mother walked with her little five-year-old son, the distance of several blocks to the home that she might lay a bouquet at the door, and tell the son of the life-service of the worthy couple. Letters and offerings were also received from friends from other points.—Pacific Friend.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

July 5

Subject—The Laborers in the Vineyard.

Lesson—Matt. 20: 1-16.

Golden Text—He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust.—Matt 5: 45.

Place—Southern Perea.

Time—March 30 A. D.

Jesus is about closing his Perea ministry, and the crucifixion is almost at hand. One can imagine the anxiety in the mind of Jesus that his followers should have an insight into every detail of the kingdom, that they should understand their relation to God.

It is easy to misunderstand the application of this lesson. Certainly it is not meant to be a lesson in economics. Rather is it a lesson to show the relation of an employer with a loving, generous heart to his workmen.

We would get into endless difficulties by taking this teaching as a standard of industrial economy. In the industrial world men are paid what they are supposed to earn upon a sliding scale suited to their wealth producing capacity.

Some one has said we cannot earn the kingdom of God. Eternal life is the gift of God. Salvation is not a reward for service. No man can put God under obligations to him for service rendered. The destiny of man comes from what he is rather than what he does. The consecrated faithful life that harmonizes with God's purpose will enter into eternal rest with God whether that life on earth be long or short.

"Is there a higher law than the 'square deal'?" Can a boy afford to be a little more than square? Does God deal with us on the basis of justice only, or are we getting more than justice from Him? Does not the whole lesson teach us that we must test our motives for service by love rather than justice?—S. S. World.

The door is ever open into the vineyard of the Lord, and he who enters late will find the service no less joyous than he who has toiled for many years. The last shall be first. How often it happens that way. It takes grace to see another promoted. "It takes a noble soul to keep free from jealousy."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

July 5

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. VII. The Friendship Verse.—Prov. 27: 9. (Consecration meeting.)

All Endeavorers among Friends should be especially interested in this lesson. It has to do with the basis of our denominational name.

First of all, read John 15: 14, 15. A few of the members might be asked to comment upon the meaning of these texts.

The influence of friendship cannot be measured or computed with exactness. Many men and women have been saved because they had a friend whose influence became a dominating element in their lives.

Friendship means companionship. It means brotherhood. It means communion. We not only need friends, but we need to be friends to others.

Jesus is the best friend, and he will help us to become real friends to those who need friendship most.

AN URGENT CALL

WESTFIELD, IND., June 18, 1914.

S. E. Nicholson:

DEAR FRIEND—I wish to again call the attention of Friends to the appeal for Jefferson W. Ford and family in thy issue of Sixth month 11th. Their support is now pledged for five years and about $700 are available for transportation, leaving $300 yet needed before they can go. Arthur Chilson and family are to sail from New York, July 9th. It is very desirable that Jefferson Ford and family go at the same time.

The funds for support and transportation, thus far raised have been contributed by Friends in Hamilton County, Indiana, except the support of two of their children and a few small contributions from other sources, this, too, in addition to their regular contributions to missions. Naturally they feel that they have about reached their limit and are asking other Friends throughout America to contribute the rest of the necessary amount. Certainly they will do it. The time is short, act promptly. Up to date only $11 have come in as a result of the appeal in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Send contributions to Emma Morrow, Westfield, Indiana.

GEORGE H. MOORE.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

The Land of Beginning Again

I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never put on again.
I wish we could come on it all unaware,
Like the hunter who finds a lost trail;
And I wish that the one whom our blindness had done
The greatest injustice of all
Could be at the gates, like an old friend that waits
For the comrade he's gladdest to hail.
We would find all the things we intended to do
But forgot and remembered—too late,
Little praises unspoken, little promises broken,
And all of the thousand and one
Little duties neglected that might have perfected
The day for one less fortunate.
It wouldn't be possible not to be kind
In the Land of Beginning Again;
And the ones we misjudged and the ones whom we grudged
Their moments of victory here
Would find in the grasp of our loving handclasp
More than penitent lips could explain.
For what had been hardest we'd know had been best,
And what had seemed loss would be gain;
For there isn't a thing that will not take wing
When we've faced it and laughed it away:
And I think that the laughter is most what we're after
In the Land of Beginning Again!
So I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never be put on again.

Take joy home,

He bore you up and held you where the air was very still.
O friend, call back and tell me, for I cannot see your face;
They say it glows with triumph, and your feet bound in the race;
But there are mists between us, and my spirit-eyes are dim,
And I cannot see the glory, though I long for word of Him.

Christ's Remembrancer

Strenuous effort has been made in this age to reconstruct Christianity without Christ. We are, we are glad to believe, seeing a reaction of thought against this attempt to depersonalize Christian thought and to rob the cross of all reality. One mission of the Holy Spirit is to bring Christ himself home to the remembrance of Christians. I am sure that no vital and wholesome Christianity is possible and no extension of the faith among the unevangelized people of the world, without the Holy Spirit's work of exalting Christ and bringing him to the remembrance of his people. Without his help we shall read the Gospels coldly, as if they were memorials of any ordinary man. With his help they will become indeed good news to our souls and through us to all the peoples of the world.—I. O. Rankin in The Congregationalist.

Two Weeks More

Only two weeks remain until the end of the special campaign to increase the subscription list of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We are wondering how many meetings are giving attention to it.

We hear some say that previous attempts have been made with little results. But over against that is the testimony of others, who in the face of previous failure, have gone out after subscribers, and have gotten them with this new offer.

We hear others say that THE AMERICAN FRIEND must look out for its own canvassers, that pastors and other Friends have no responsibility in the matter. But THE AMERICAN FRIEND is not a private enterprise. There are no stockholders. No one has any money invested. No one gets any dividends.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND is a department of the Five Years Meeting, which owns and controls the paper. If at any time any dividends accrue they will go to the Five Years Meeting.

If THE AMERICAN FRIEND were a stock company operated for profit, then pastors, meetings and Friends generally would have no obligations to help boost the circulation. But this is a different situation. All members of the thirteen Yearly Meetings comprising the Five Years Meeting are stockholders of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. If they will not pay for their stock by subscribing for the paper, they must pay for it by appropriations from the Yearly Meetings, or else consent to other members paying for more than their share in the form of guarantees, or else the paper cannot be published. There are no other alternatives.

More and more concerned Friends are feeling that THE AMERICAN FRIEND is indispensable to the life of the church. We have numerous testimonies to this effect. A strong, virile paper will help every meeting and every member.

Thousands of Friends need the paper, who are not now taking it, that they may become better acquainted with the principles and work of Friends as such. They should be induced to take advantage of this low rate trial offer to new subscribers, and thousands of them can be induced to subscribe with a little personal solicitation.

What will Friends do about it? THE AMERICAN FRIEND will never be in position to make another offer as good as this one. A day's activity in every meeting, following the necessary announcements about the proposition at the Sabbath or business services will win out with the required number of subscribers.

We want one new subscriber for every twenty of membership in every meeting at the special offer of fifty cents net for the last six months of 1914.

Some subscriptions are already coming in. Is there a meeting that will consent to ignore this proposition? If so, there is a meeting that will ignore that which will be for its own best interests.

There are hundreds of young people who will be glad to give a day to this matter, if they are only asked to go out and solicit subscriptions.

Our National Anniversary

The world has a habit of making anniversary days festal occasions. They ought rather to be occasions of invoice, wherein account of stock is taken for the sake of the future. While men and women may with propriety be congratulated upon the accumulation of years, they need, none the less, to feel the weight of added responsibility which the coming of the years brings to them. The milestones of life are unimportant except as they mark the pathway of human achievement.

Our nation is passing another milestone of its history. The important thing is not that it is one hundred and thirty-eight years old, but that within this period and because of its existence and through its ministrations there has been wrought so much of human uplift and of world-wide progress. Within this brief span of the cycle of the centuries, the United States has made the world its debtor. Civilization finds its best type in this western continent. America has become the storage battery for world activity, whether it be in the realm of religion or of industry.

We may expect the customary eulogies, the customary pyrotechnics, the customary festivities, with probably the customary accidents. Orators will beat the air as they declaim about our glorious heritage. But the past is secure. The record which has been written is ineffacable. Except as our achievements become the sign posts for the coming millions, we need not dwell on them overmuch.

It is the future that contains the bow of promise. Our history is not yet complete. What the coming years shall record, more even than what has already been written, will determine the ultimate place which America shall hold when eternity has pronounced its verdict upon human events. It is to the future we should turn our thoughts with the coming of our national natal anniversary.

It is not the years that make us great but the manner of their usage. The problems of both church and state have grown to be multitudinous and complex. Rapidly we have become a cosmopolitan nation. Herein has been developed and is centered a composite life that in some manner is awaiting assimilation into the life of the world. Beyond our localized problems of state and of social and industrial development are problems of international and world-wide obligations which we dare not ignore or from which we dare not turn aside.

At a time when China and Japan and India and Africa, with their teeming millions, are waking from their sleep of the centuries, it is written in the edicts of Jehovah that America more than others must be their teacher and their good evangel as well. Their shores are washed by the same waters as our shores. The United States lies across the great highway of the world and she more than all others can help or hinder the march of trade and of the Christian faith. From naturalness of position, no less than because of the adaptability of her people, the United States must become the base of supplies for the civilization of the world. Both because of position and environment, Europe must play a secondary part in this achievement, unless America fails at her task.

But to become the ruling spirit of the world, America must be master of herself. No beacon light of civilizing power can emanate from a people that has not learned to master its own appetites and its sensual desires. America must learn to solve her local problems or she will fail in solving her world problems. Out of the spirit of greed can come no civilizing power. Out of the sensuality of pleasure that finds its gratification in the liquor traffic and in the social plague and in corrupt politics can come no fruitage of human betterment and world redemption. The vanguard of missionary enterprises must stop short of its goal if its tap root must spring from a discordant church that cares more about its denominational compass and surveys than it does about the growth of the kingdom of God.

Our natal anniversary should be a day of prayer no less than of invoice. The church is at the crossroads of history. For the first time since the Commission was given the doors are literally open to "preach the gospel to the whole creation." The measure of the coming years will not be so much the balance point of our exports and our imports, not so much the growth of our population, not so much the extension of our material wealth, as it will be the capability of our own self-government, the ability which we are able to command in bearing the torch of world civilization amid the darkness of humankind. These years are golden years for America, because they are years of great opportunity. And opportunity ever brings added responsibility.

Errata

In these columns last week we referred to the vote in the state of Virginia on the question of prohibition as coming in November. This was a mistake. The vote in that state will come at a special election, to be held on September 22.

Crown Jewels

BY DR. SYLVESTER NEWLIN

Text.—"And they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."—Mal. III: 17.

No doubt but this refers primarily to God's chosen people, Israel. But with equal force and fitness it applies to us if we are His children.

In the context we find the promised blessing to the obedient. V. 12. "All nations shall call you blessed, for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."

The Lord hears our testimony. V. 16. "They that feared the Lord spake often one to another and the Lord harkened and heard it."

The King has a list of His Jewels. "A book of remembrance was written before him." * * *

Our God has a record of every soul that comes into the Kingdom through faith in Christ.

The material wealth of the world is so great, we can have but little conception of its value, but the sum of it all can not be compared to the worth of the humblest child of God. Too many people, in these days, put too low an estimate on the value of human life. Some corporations think more of present gain than they do of eternal life. Selfishness and greed have calloused the heart against sympathy and compassion.

If you want to know God's conception of the worth of a human life go and stand at the cross where God's Son, our Savior, is giving His life, and you will know as you would in no other way that you "were not redeemed with silver and gold * * * but with the precious blood of Christ."

You are God's jewels—the text says "My jewels."

1. How carefully the owners guard their jewels. They are kept in caskets and vaults, under lock and key to save them from fire or burglar. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them."

"He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." "I am persuaded that He is able to guard that which I have committed unto Him."

2. A process is required to bring a jewel into its own highest possibility. A gem must be cut to bring out its best proportion. The surface must be polished. All roughness must be removed. God sees what we lack and He sees our possibility, and He knows the process by which the needed fashioning is to be wrought. This will account for what we call many of the hard things in life. The Master is grinding, and polishing, and sometimes chiseling that we may become like He wants us to be. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

3. The beauty of a gem depends on its relation to the light. Keep it in the dark and no one would ever know its value. Bury it, or hide it out of sight, and its worth would never be known. So, the Christian must keep in the light of Christ. You must catch His lustre and fling it out to the world!

In the incomparable description of our heavenly home those walls and gates of precious stones are all illuminated by the presence of Him who is the light of the world. "Let your light so shine * * *."

4. Jewels are worn that their owner may be admired. We are to have a part in making Jesus attractive to the world. In II Thess. 1: 12, Paul writes of a time when Christ will be admired among them that believe. In Isa. 61: 10 we have the beautiful figure of a bride adorning herself with her jewels. "Let your light shine," so that Christ may be glorified. Two men who were visiting in the city went in to hear Maltbie Babcock preach. As they went quietly out and were walking away, one of them said to the other: "What do you think about the preacher?" and the other said, "I am not thinking about the preacher, but about Christ." Shall we not try to live so that people may admire Christ because of our life! We can live so that we may adorn the doctrine. May we fulfill the prophetic words of Isaiah 62: 3, "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God."

The Call of the Hour to Our Women

BY ELIZA C. ARMSTRONG COX

[This paper was read at the triennial meeting of the W. F. M. S. at Muncie, Indiana, and is copied from the June number of Friends' Missionary Advocate. It deserves to be widely read. The final installment next week will deal more particularly with the work of the Union.—EDITOR.]

Paul gave utterance to a great truth when he said, "There are so many voices in the world, and no kind is without signification."

Many different voices have called to women in all ages of the world with a special significance to each age. We will be helped to an appreciation of the call to women today by considering some of these voices to them in the past.

There seemed to be but one voice the women of the antediluvian period could hear, and this was: "Thy desire shall be unto thy husband and he shall rule over thee." That period ended in the flood! Later on the voice to Sarah and to Rebekah was to patiently bide God's time in which to fulfill His promise and purpose. They did not rightly interpret the call and so wrought mischief that lives in the world today.

Up the slope of time she climbs and other voices catch her ear, and the wonderful mother of Moses bides God's time, and gives to the world a great leader and law giver; a high priest, and also the musical director who led that mighty chorus of Israel's women on the safe side of the Red Sea, as they sang, "Sing ye to Jehovah, for He hath triumphed gloriously."

Up she climbs, and other voices call. The five heroic daughters of Zelophehad understood the call of the hour to them was to withstand the unrighteous customs of their people in not regarding the property rights of women. It was to them not only a civil matter, but one of religious import also. And they plead their cause before Moses and the priests, as well as the princes and all the congregation; a remarkable proceeding at that time for women. Moses referred the matter to the Supreme Bench Jehovah, and he found in favor of these women and established the principle for all time. On she climbs and other voices are heard, and we meet Deborah serving in the capacity of Judge for her people; she was also the spiritual prophetess, a mother in Israel, an aggressive woman who rallied the courage of her people and delivered them from their enemy. She was also the cultured poetess and gave to us that beautiful historic song found in the fifth chapter of Judges. Still on, and Ruth discerns a voice of deep significance to show to the world what blessedness follows obedience to the call to separate one's self from kindred and native land to be one of God's people. On, and the call to Hannah was to give to the world a pattern of consecrated motherhood and the result of it in the great Samuel. Abigail, the unusually wise woman realized the significance of the voice to her was to perform the office of a peace-maker between an insulted king and a contemptible husband, and so saved many lives and proved to all time the blessedness of the peace-maker.

But time would fail me to tell of all the voices sounding out from the throne which called to the front such women as King Lemuel's mother; of Queen Esther; of the mothers of kings; the mothers of prophets; of Mary; of Elizabeth; of Priscilla; and on down to our own time. This dispensation introduced a wholly new era for woman, and intends to bring her to her own, intellectually, civilly, spiritually. It will do it, because it is the dispensation of the Holy Spirit who taught through Paul that "there is neither male nor female in Christ Jesus." That neither sin nor righteousness is determined by sex. With the advance of time the voices have accumulated, and they call to her from every source and each has a special significance. The call of the hour to women is to rise to the heights of God's will. This call has produced an undefined restlessness everywhere. She strives to ascend and finds so much to hinder. She resists and resents. This voice is not only to American women, but it is to the women of the world, and the restlessness is everywhere. This unrest is the expression of a consciousness of power she may not exert; of a freedom not possessed; of a height not reached. This disturbing call is not a political one; it is a spiritual one. In order to get to where she can realize she has met God's will for her, to get to use herself fully, she finds political bands must be sundered; intellectual straps removed; ecclesiastical hindrances taken out of the way. No wonder there is confusion. Imagine what it would be to be confined by walls. A voice outside is calling your name. It calls loudly, insistently, clamorously, piteously. You want to go, but the walls render you helpless. This is possibly something of an explanation of the situation of women today the wide world over. It may throw some light on their restlessness and fractiousness in some instances. It all means they hear a voice calling, and they are unable to respond. This tossing sea will never calm till women occupy their place of evenness according to the policy of God's kingdom.

The first voice one hears is a spiritual one. This is clearly proven in the cases referred to above. We may bring the list on down and mention Elizabeth Fry, the minister and reformer; Florence Nightingale, who had to overcome so much to get to answer her call; Mary Lyon, who met resistance at every step to secure for women a higher education; Harriet Beecher Stowe, who helped free the slaves with the pen; Elizabeth Blackwell, who had to remove mountains to get to study medicine; Frances E. Willard, who wrought righteousness; Pundita Ramabai, who opened the gates of life to the little helpless widows of India; Mrs. Donemus, the mother of women's missionary societies. In order to get to people spiritually, all sorts of rubbish had to be removed, political, churchly, social and equal to the worst, sentimental. As to this last the case of Elizabeth Blackwell is a fine illustration. She was a contemporary with my mother and from her I learned the following story. When grown to womanhood she heard a voice calling her to the study of medicine. One medical college after another resolutely refused her admittance because she was a woman, until finally the thirteenth one granted her permission to listen to the lectures from behind a screen. She used her opportunity, took the full course, received her diploma and became a successful practitioner, all the way in the face of stern opposition. But at this exorbitant price she cleared the way for our splendid women physicians who are today such an indispensable factor in world-evangelization.

Fifty-three years ago the women of the churches heard a voice calling in clear, sweet tones to carry the gospel to the great world of women who were shut out from it by ignorance and the customs of superstition. Dear Mrs. Doremus, whom we learned about in our study of "Western Women in Eastern Lands," responded and led the vast number of waiting women into this field of service so rich in possibilities, and one that has already yielded a large fruitage. The call carried with it the assurance that in breaking their bondage greater power and enlargement would come to women here. They were to realize in this way, "that she that watereth, shall also be watered." It is interesting to note that from the time the women of the churches heeded that call they have constantly become an increasing force for good in all lines of Christian activity. We could continue indefinitely on these general lines and find many intensely interesting things in the significance of voices that have called to women in all periods of time, but our topic asks us to consider the call now to us, to the women of the Friends Church.

With the wonderful and simply glorious background of an illustrious host of women that have published good tidings down the centuries, and that too amidst many difficulties; and who now constitute a great cloud of witnesses of our superior opportunity; and surrounding us with the victories of their lives, and filling us with the inspiration of their achievements, we find ourselves under a most serious obligation and holy responsibility to heed the call of the times and discern its true significance.

Thirty-three years ago this spring, Quaker women heard this voice calling them to something new to them. We had lived our quiet, secluded lives, attaching great virtue to keeping far from exciting or contaminating influences, hoping by this species of hermitism to make our way through time and the pearly gates with a great sigh of relief at what we had escaped by contact with the great unredeemed world.

With the denomination to which we belonged we had stood for principles; and had stood so long we had almost lost power to move, or to understand that it was essential to move in order to make our principles living and effective for the uplift of society and the removal of sin. The call that startled us then was an arrest of thought by the Holy Spirit who directed our attention to the most unhappy, unfortunate condition of the great mass of humanity that did not know there was a Christ. With this view there was the great unmovable fact that Christ offered himself for them as much as for us. Added to this were the tremendous words of the Great Commission. Piled up on all these the stunning example of our Savior who girded himself with a towel and washed his disciple's feet, saying, "I have given you example." Henceforth we saw our place was not to withdraw from the miserable, repulsive condition of the world, but to gird ourselves for the hard, menial work of its salvation. The query, "Why stand ye here idle?" aroused us—we accepted it as a rebuke, and as an invitation, and responded with genuine Quaker modesty and sincerity, "What will thou have me do?"

The Friend in Need

BY L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD

The Voice of Pain, raised in our hearing, is one of the strains to which the crowded hours of the life of today subjects us.

It is not necessary to visit a prison, or a hospital, or inspect the squalor of the over-crowded tenement to hear this cry. It is hardly possible to walk to the corner, take the street car, or open a newspaper, without hearing or seeing something which corresponds to the cry or demand of misery. Everywhere we see some result of ignorance, or wrong, or injustice, some soul burdened unduly, some spirit making the appeal for help to live in a fullness of life which has in some means been denied. Surely there is a great fellowship of suffering if we could but turn to the best use all this struggle and lament.

Where shall we look for the ear of sympathy? Fortunately it needs no extended search to find ears which hear. The sight of a big policeman carrying a little lost child, or an earnest man or woman with a fresh air party of pale faced city children bound for the country, or a passerby dropping pennies in the tin cup of the street beggar, are too frequent sights of our cities to challenge our notice, and the countless men and women who work on the boards of our public, or private, charities are witnesses to the presence of this ear of sympathy.

There is, however, about a rare few in every community something which, for want of a better term, we describe as the ear of sympathy. By some method they have attained to an attitude of attention. The sort of person one picks out of a crowded car to sit beside; in whose face the tired struggler reads a welcome and a fresh supply of courage, a willingness to aid coupled to an ability to understand.

Does anyone hear the words repeated, "All these things have I kept, what lack I yet?"

Is there some fuller measure of service than this quickness of hearing and attitude of attention, and willingness to aid the cry of misery?

Of all the devastating waste in the work of today, the misapplied energy of unintelligent charity is the most disheartening.

We owe to our age a duty to be intelligent. We must not only have the sympathetic ear and the willingness to aid, but also the self-control and determination which are required to hold one to the task of investigation of facts and analysis of causes which will make our aid effective.

Study in itself may make us cold, and we must take care not to lose in our study and analysis the human touch, but investigation and constructive imagination we must have, and discipline of body and spirit must be endured, if we are to pay effectively what we owe to our desire to be of service, which we have received from the Master.

Perhaps Friends have a special responsibility along these lines, for our central doctrine of the "Inner Light" brought to us the clear vision of the entire brotherhood of man, and has given us what others have recognized as a genius in dealing with other and dependent races, and with insane and abnormal persons.

On this conception of the divine witness in man, which the early Friends spoke of as the "seed" or the Life, has been based our sensitiveness to the cry of misery, and from it we have drawn whatever measure of success has been attained in our various social service works which have so often been referred to. Over against the formality of class distinction we have placed the reality of democracy in Church and state.

In a period and country where custom was strong Friends dared to say and to live in the strength of their theory, that there was good in all men, and that there was one even Jesus Christ, who could speak to the condition of everyone. Their lives proved abundantly the Potency of Belief in people.

Today our task is not more simple. To the call which we hear put up on all sides from over-burdened lives, we of this generation must have sensitive ears and willing hands, but trained hands also, and trained minds which will not squander our resources in the less helpful way.

Friends of truth we were of old, and our name must still be made good by lives today. The challenge of the person who says to the wrong-doer, "I believe in you," has lost none of its force. We must live as if we felt that God was repeating that wonderful thought to us and we cannot fail to pass it on. However we stumble and grope along God does still believe in us, and in His great love draws us to some measure of Christ's belief when he told us to be perfect.

To a prisoner convicted of crime, who feels himself disgraced, must be brought the thought of forgetting the things which are behind in pressing on to those which are before. The cause of failure must be forgotten in the confidence of achievement. Doubt must be replaced by faith.

In the many avenues of approach to the real life of people which the development of the social service idea gives, and the attraction which that sort of activity offers to those who do not feel able as yet to express themselves spiritually in other ways, we find an increased necessity for training for efficiency in this field of giving ourselves to our brothers.

Who can judge whether these avenues of the service of the community, the training of the ear of sympathy and the hand of effectiveness, are not the most direct roads to enable the worker to grow in spiritual life and effectiveness, and at the same time answer the demand of misery?

Do we stop to realize the blighting influence of such a statement as "The trouble is he is not a Christian," concerning a person who will give himself to social service work, yet is not willing, or, able perhaps, to express himself spiritually otherwise. The Society of Friends has made progress by making people believe that we believed in them, and they have learned to believe in themselves and in the reality of religious experience.

Surely our aim is to have what Joseph John Mills described in a recent address before New York Yearly Meeting as "congregations trained to manifest in their communities the spirit of Christ."

In all the life around us Friends have an opportunity to embark on a wonderful undertaking for liberty. We have in our hearts a great impulse to help humanity, not only physically, but intellectually and spiritually, out of what VanDyke calls

"The prison of anxious thought which greed has builded From the fetters which envy has wrought and pride has gilded."

and Friends are bound by both their past and their present to be leaders in every agency for betterment in the community, keeping always the "high calling" in clear outline, so that none may think we regard the activity as any more than a means of proving our great postulate that God is speaking direct to the individual, and in consequence every person capable of a partaking of the divine nature. Not Social Service because it is the fashion, but Social Service because it is an opportunity for everyone however tongue-tied, to express the out-reach of the measure of Divine Love which has been his or her experience, whether conscious of it in these terms or in others.

The Bible in the Public Schools

BY PARKE BROWN

(Read before a Bible School Conference at Bloomington, Indiana.)

There was a time in the history of European civilization when all society was dominated by the Catholic Church. The Pope at Rome wielded a mighty influence in all political and international affairs. No king attempted a great war without first obtaining the papal sanction, and for the support of the church all nations paid taxes.

In ecclesiastic affairs also the church was supreme. Her various doctrines, forms, and ceremonies were taught the people in a very formal, dogmatic manner. No room was given for personal belief, and any one refusing to believe the church doctrine was promptly branded as a heretic and excommunicated. This dark period in history may be characterized as a time of religious tyranny and despotism.

But this extreme condition was followed by a revolt against the church. This movement, known as the Reformation, started in Germany as a result of the work of Martin Luther. From Germany the Reformation passed into England, causing her to declare herself independent of the Pope, and to set up a religion of her own. This great forward step put England in the front rank on the question of religious and personal liberty. It was during this period that our forefathers sailed for America, to plant a new nation which should have for the cornerstone of its foundation, their cherished idea of religious freedom.

But although America was founded upon religious liberty, and although our people have been loyal and zealous in supporting their various denominational beliefs, they have always considered it a point of honor not to impose their beliefs upon others. This particular tenet has been taken advantage of, within the last few years by some few people of extreme views, who advocate the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools. As matters exist today, the laws of only nine states (Indiana being one), and of the District of Columbia, are favorable to the use of the Bible in the schools. On the other hand, in eight states opinions have been rendered against its use.

Those who advocate the exclusion of the Bible from the schools, do so on these grounds: (1) That it tends toward a union of church and state; (2) That it would produce sectarianism; (3) That the great work of the Sunday School and of the home renders the use of the Bible in the schools unnecessary.

The union of the church and state is a condition in which a nation establishes one particular denomination (as the Church of England) as the state church. All people are taxed for the support of this church regardless of their religious belief. To escape this very condition, was one of the important causes of the early settlers leaving England. The first amendment to our constitution prevents the establishment of a state church in our country. The claim that the use of the Bible in the schools would tend towards a union of church and state, is without rational foundation. Is the state forming a union with the church just because it teaches truth that the church teaches? Rather might we say that the state and church are united when the former leaves to the care of the latter some of its own obvious duties.

Another objection urged against the use of the Bible in the schools is, that it will produce sectarianism, a condition which we are beginning to consider unnecessary. But sectarianism is a type of narrow mindedness as a result of prejudice. The Bible is the leaven which, if used, will permeate the whole, moulding all Christian believers into a homogeneous body. I dare say, that if Biblical knowledge were more generally diffused theological bickerings would be diminished in direct proportion. The influence of the Bible is against sectarianism, secularism, and sensationalism.

The Sunday School is doing a great work in Biblical instruction, and mighty efforts are being made to increase its efficiency, and to extend its influence. But all people do not go to Sunday School, so that every community has a class of people that is untouched. Invariably this class stands most in need of Bible instruction.

The home has a most important part in establishing the morals of the child. However, industrial conditions have made a great change in the home. In many instances the mother and father work away from home and the children, too, early in life, become small wage earners. So home does not exert the influence that it once did.

Society functions through the five social institutions of home, church, school, state and industry. Of the five, the state is the one set apart for the regulation and controlling of the activities of the others. But it is a familiar political maxim that the welfare of a republic like ours depends upon the virtue and intelligence of its citizenship.

Hence it becomes the first duty of any government to educate its people. But what is the purpose of an education? It should fit one for life and develop one's latent powers, one's possibilities. Man has long been cognizant of the fact that his nature is threefold, consisting of the physical, intellectual, and the moral or religious. To unduly develop any department of man's being, or to neglect the development of any, produces an unbalanced character. In the past, education has developed mainly the intellectual. Within recent years much attention has been turned to educating the physical. We have yet to learn the true place moral training should occupy in education. It is highly important that we train more than the intellectual.

If then moral or religious training has a rightful place in education, and if education of the young is a state's first duty, evidently the state should give moral instruction, as a mere fulfillment of duty. If a man needs religion as a man, he also needs it as a citizen, and the state should instruct in all that pertains to citizenship.

Furthermore, the state should teach morals and religion as a foundation for her own prosperity. The Bible teaches obedience to magistrates and respect for rulers. It is the enemy of all vice and crime, and the promoter of all good. But is the state to be content with repressing crime by force? Is government a mere method of executing law by coercion? No, let us consider government as a process of elevating the people to that high plane where they instinctively shun crime, and turn to righteousness, and where force becomes unnecessary.

Much is being done today in the schools to fit the child for life. Everywhere we see new courses in vocational and industrial work being introduced. Emphasis upon the practical is a prominent educational tendency. We have our common schools, which, as the name signifies, are for the purpose of furnishing the child with that fund of knowledge which is known to be a common requirement of all trades and professions. And who can conceive of a knowledge more universally needed than that of the Bible?

From every walk in life, the Bible draws readers, and many more there are who might be attracted if they had had its truths and beauties implanted in the heart in youth.

Then, by all means, let us see that the Bible is kept in the schools. Let us see that it is put back where it has already been removed from them. Let us see that every school building floats the stars and stripes, and that every teacher's desk has on it, for daily use, the Book of Books.

"We search the world for truth; we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful,
From graven stone and written scroll,
From all old flower fields of the soul;
And weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read."

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

Nebraska Yearly Meeting convened in its seventh annual assembly, on Wednesday, June 3, in the Friends Church at Central City, Nebraska. To Friends and others who are accustomed to the larger assemblages in the East and extreme West, the number who gathered for the session might have appeared small, and if numbers are any index of condition, the Yearly Meeting might have appeared weak. But as meeting succeeded meeting, as important business came up from time to time and was handled in an effective and thoroughly spiritual way; as the interest deepened and reached its culmination only at the close, one could not help feeling that though the Friends of Nebraska Yearly Meeting are widely scattered and not so numerous as Friends are in other parts of the country, they are working energetically for the Master and are accomplishing results. The Yearly Meeting session was a blessing to each and every one who attended, and forecasts larger and better things for the future.

There was a feeling, often manifested in the business as well as the devotional meetings, that the Society of Friends is on the verge, not of the religious graveyard, but of larger and more general usefulness than it has ever had in its history; a feeling that the organization which has wielded such an enormous influence on the world during the past two hundred and fifty years, is slowly but surely coming into its own and assuming its proper place. It surely is more than an omen of future blessings, that the epistles from the other Yearly Meetings, which were read, expressed the same sentiments in differing language.

But perhaps the most significant and hopeful sign of all, is that the Quaker world is not sitting down and quietly waiting for her sphere of larger usefulness to come to her, but she is bestirring herself to find out what has been wrong in the past and to determine upon definite methods of solving the problems before her at the present time.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting caught a vision of what is really going on in a larger way, in the presence and services of Joseph John Mills, General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting, and Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Board of Young People's Activities of the Five Year's Meeting. These men, who came directly from New York Yearly Meeting, rendered an extremely valuable service by freely giving forth the knowledge which they possess of conditions among Friends generally, and by the many practical suggestions which they made. Nebraska Yearly Meeting probably realized as never before, that they are a part of a great onward movement for the bringing of Christ's kingdom to earth, and that they have a specific part to play in this great and glorious task. Be it said in her praise, that she is rising nobly to the work before her.

Geo. D. Weeks, Clerk of the Yearly Meeting, and Mrs. Weeks, were not able to be present at all and were greatly missed. However, John Fry, who was selected to fulfill the duties of Clerk, presided very ably and satisfactorily. The Quarterly Meetings were well represented, considering the distance many of the visitors had to travel and the expense necessarily incurred. From the opening meeting, it was evident that everyone was there for business and not for an outing or a visit. Arrangements were made by which meals were served in a building at the rear of the church at absolute cost.

Next year, all the meetings of the session will be held at Nebraska Central College, two miles from town, instead of in the city. This change was made on account of the superior facilities for taking care of visitors from over the Yearly Meeting.

Reports of the progress of the work in the various departments were inspiring and encouraging. Positive, aggressive work is being accomplished. Telegrams of commendation of their peace policy, were sent to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee and the General Superintendent reported several very successful evangelistic efforts, which in some cases had worked miracles in their communities. Superintendent Bell said that most of the meetings were in better condition than at any time in the last four years. Plans for Community Churches were adopted which will make it possible for churches to be organized in places where ordinarily it would be impossible.

It was recommended by the Yearly Meeting that the members adopt the tithing system, and that Monthly Meetings use the Budget Plan for obtaining church funds. Nebraska Central College shows a substantial growth and the Yearly Meeting is enthusiastic over a united effort to put the institution on a better basis.

Besides J. J. Mills and Thomas E. Jones, Chas C. Haworth of Cuba, R. Esther Smith of Central America, and Mary Sibbit of Kansas Yearly Meeting were present. Their addresses and general usefulness in the meetings were constant sources of helpfulness to all.

The Yearly Meeting was united in indorsing the proposal to hold a Men's Conference at Des Moines, Iowa, in the near future; in recommending that each meeting consider the advisability of organizing a Gospel Team; in favoring an action of the Executive Board of the Five Years Meeting inaugurating a systematic campaign for raising $3,000,000 to be divided among the Yearly Meetings for the use of the various departments of the church work, and other items fully as important as these.

A strong emphasis was placed on evangelism, and at the close, on the last day, a paper was read in which the pastors of the Yearly Meeting, whose names were signed, pledged themselves to an effort to save at least 1,000 souls the coming year. KIRBY V. BOWEN.

New York Bible Society

Just before the steamship Aquitania sailed recently from New York, messengers from the New York Bible Society delivered on board of the big ship four large, heavy packages of Bibles. They contained nearly 900 volumes of the Scriptures. In the number were 20 gilt-edge, cloth-bound Bibles for the captains and other officers of the ship. There were nearly 200 New Testaments, some large size and some pocket size, and over 600 pocket volumes containing single books of the Bible. All of these books were to be presented to members of the crew, firemen, stokers, and among others employed on the steamship. The Bibles were consigned by the New York Bible Society to the care of Dr. William Wilkinson, "The Bishop of Wall Street." Dr. Wilkinson will conduct services every day among the different employees on board of the ship and he will present the books to the men in the name of the New York Bible Society.

The New York Bible Society has just obtained permission from the Commissioner of Correction, Dr. Davis, to furnish the prison cells of the city with Bibles and the distribution has been made through the Protestant Chaplains. The prisons in Manhattan and the Bronx have been supplied as follows: 400 Bibles to the Tombs Prison, 120 Bibles to Jefferson Market Prison, 20 Bibles each to Yorkville, Harlem and West Side Prisons, 10 each to the Sixth and Eighth Prisons in the Bronx. The Bibles sent to the Tombs Prison were lettered on the outside, "City Prison, Manhattan." All of the others were lettered, "District Prison." In addition to these Bibles that are intended for the prison cells, the New York Bible Society has recently furnished a very large number of New Testaments and Gospel portions to the Chaplains and missionary workers to be presented personally to the prisoners themselves. Several thousand volumes have thus been given to the prisoners in the City Prisons, including the Penitentiary and Workhouse on Blackwell's Island.

Social Service in Right Living

During the recent sessions of New York Yearly Meeting, the Advertiser-Journal of Auburn, New York, had the following editorial on the above subject, called forth from some remarks by Dr. Joseph John Mills:

"Take up in a sensible manner social service,' is the oburgation of Joseph John Mills to the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends. The sect called Quaker has always been sensible in its social service, which has always been a leaven wherever it was put forth. The social service of the Friends has never been blatant, never self-seeking; it has always been considerate, always self-sacrificing. The Friends themselves would be the last to make these claims. They are far too modest with a modesty equivalent to meekness, to lay claim to special credit. Their reward has always been within, in that tranquility of spirit which according to The Book surpasses understanding.

"What the Friends shrink from ascribing to themselves, others appreciative of their most signal virtues and cognizant of their exceptional service to society have not failed to ascribe. In the words of one writer they are 'the salt of the earth,'—exemplars in moderate living; temperate in all things, in speech as in deed; charitable to a fault; kind and helpful to the unfortunate; doing as they would be done by. If this is not social service in the highest and most practical sense, what is?

"Most people find all these restraints and this wholesome example wholly impractical, being unable to deny themselves, and in indulging themselves setting bad examples. They cheat their fellow men, slander their neighbors, are full of bad habits, of lying, deceit and profanity, and rarely strive to curb unbridled tongues.

"Into such a world, in 1648, came the 'Quakers'—a term applied at first in derision by those who knew no better. Of George Fox, the founder, it is written that he was 'a man of pure life and zealous devotion.' From the first they were 'persecuted on all sides, and some of them were punished by the authorities with transportation.' In such narrow times were the Quakers born, and to such stress were they put for the sake of their beliefs. Such is the heritage of Quakerism, with its repressive and contemplative propaganda and its rule of meekness and submission. Its rule is admirably stated by William Penn, in his version of 'The Eternal Law':

'There is a great God and Power, that hath made the world and all things therein, to whom you and I and all people owe their being and well-being; and to whom you and I must one day give an account for all that we do in this world. This Great God hath written His law in our hearts, by which we are taught and commanded to love and help, and to do good to one another, and not to do harm and mischief unto one another.'

"The world would be far better if this particular form of social service were universal."

New York Quakerism Class

To New York Yearly Meeting:

We of the New York Quakerism Class feel that out of the work we have given to our Winter's program on "Friends and Human Needs," there has come an awakening to the responsibility of Friends in meeting those needs. It has not been the object of the class to make exhaustive studies of the needs of the world about us, but rather to gain sufficient familiarity with the facts to enable us to determine our relation to them.

To us has appeared a vision of Christ as He went about with gifts of health and strength, and we have desired that our Yearly Meeting should be so sensitive to His Message that all of us as Friends should dispense the gifts of cleansing and strength which have been entrusted to us.

Unrest and hostility between labor and capital, competition without love, clog the channels by which the Kingdom of God approaches. We Friends do not seem to have caught the full vision of service, in the conquest of unnecessary disease and sin which is laid upon this century of ours, nor do we seem to be reaching out, as we might, to grasp the opportunity which is presented to reach human hearts through human needs.

As we have examined conditions in the life of today, difficult questions have pressed upon us which we cannot refuse to answer.

What is our duty, and the duty of all professed followers of Jesus Christ, if there are any children living in our neighborhood neglected in either body or soul? Do the old people in almshouses feel themselves forgotten of men and of God? Are the prisoners in our jails disheartened as well as disgraced? Is a foreigner in our land, or a stranger near our home homesick for a friendly greeting and a kindly welcoming hand? Is there any place of cheerful fellowship to compete with the saloon for the interest of the boy in our villages? These questions all are signboards over doors to service. Perhaps at all these doors, if we listen, we can hear the gentle knocking of Jesus Christ as He waits to enter our lives. We long that our Yearly Meeting may pour into the channels of social service, which is the giving of ourselves unreservedly for our fellows, the healing, cleansing stream of the Divine love which we experience.

We, a group of young Friends, ask our Yearly Meeting that it organize for efficient Social Service by appointing a committee to co-operate with the committee of the Five Years Meeting on this subject. We also ask something greater and more solemn, as it is more noble than merely appointing a committee; we ask our Yearly Meeting that it rouse itself, and we ask that from every member may come that influence of interest and love which shall make this service real.

For the New York Quakerism Class,
ROYAL J. DAVIS, Chairman.
BERTHA H. T. UFFORD, Secretary.

Correspondence

AMBOY, INDIANA, May 25, 1914.

Editor The American Friend:

I am very much pleased with the attitude of THE AMERICAN FRIEND toward a practical Christianity.

Friends have borne testimony against war and for peace, as a Society and as individuals for centuries. "Our ancestors' virtues are not ours." Are we now doing what we should to make our power as messengers of peace felt? As citizens of our nation, every means, political and social, should be used; the doings of Congress should be watched, and if bills are under consideration that are evil, we should send remonstrances to the proper committees, to our Senators and Representatives. If we approve, we should show our approval by words of appreciation.

The Advocate of Peace, the organ of the "American Peace Society," now published in Washington has introduced what it hopes will be a permanent department, "Peace and War Measures before Congress," in which it gives the titles of bills, etc., sometimes with comments. If every congregation of Friends and every other Christian congregation also, would take a copy of the Advocate of Peace and have someone who is deeply interested set apart to collect important items to bring before the congregation for discussion, protest or approval, it would have a splendid effect.

If all the Christian congregations of the United States were to act on this suggestion, Congress would come to feel a Christian dynamic force it has never yet met with.

SARAH EDGERTON.

Miscellaneous

The Supreme Court of Illinois has affirmed the constitutionality of the Woman Suffrage Act in that state. Nearly 200,000 women participated in the spring elections, and thus the validity of these elections is sustained.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, which met in Chicago recently, made the gathering historic by declaring for woman suffrage and the elimination of the evils of the liquor traffic. The subjects discussed covered a wide range.

A class of fifty-six young women received diplomas from the Northfield Seminary at its thirty-fifth anniversary and commencement on June 2d. These exercises followed three days of class reunion, alumnae gatherings and celebrations attended by former students from all parts of the country and from China, Persia, Brazil and Turkey.

The latest suggestion of a church merger is between the Congregationalists and Presbyterians. It is pointed out that this is already effective in mission work in China and in South India, and the Congregationalists think that a similar union ought to exist in many communities where they are now competitors, especially in great cities where their work among foreigners might well be identical.

A fund of $100,000.00 has been provided by Amherst College to maintain a professorship "which will have for its aim the development of practical academic common sense." The president is impressed with the fact that many Freshmen come to college who have little idea what they are there for, who do not know how to study, whose aim in life is vague and more or less distorted. A professor is to give a course to these students in common sense as applied to life.

The American Sunday School Union for the year which closed February 28, 1914, reported the fruitage of the labors of 231 missionaries as follows:

2,089 Sunday Schools started, containing 78,170 teachers and scholars.

12,523 Schools were visited and revisited, and 179,388 homes were visited.

22,706 Sermons and addresses were delivered.

38,807 Bibles and testaments were distributed.

7,743 Conversions were reported.

82 Churches were organized.

27 Churches built and 494 Young People's Societies and Prayer Meetings formed.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Fairmount.—Fairmount Quarterly Meeting held June 19-21 was largely attended, there being persons present from all of our local meetings. Peter W. Raidabaugh, Lloyd East and Albert J. Furstenberger, besides several other visitors, were in attendance. The ministry of our friends was a spiritual uplift and brought strength and comfort to many. At the noon hour an abundant dinner was served in the large dining room. The afternoon session was taken up with annual reports which were satisfactory, especially the report of the home missionary committee and that of the Academy. Ervin D. Stegall was recorded as a minister. A request was received for a Monthly Meeting for Anderson, and a committee was appointed to investigate the condition of the local meeting. Up to within the past few months there has been a small meeting supported by the Methodist Protestant Church, but they dropped off giving sufficient support to the minister as there were only forty members. Friends furnished them with ministers and they requested to be received into Fairmount Monthly Meeting in a body. Their request has been granted. The meeting will be known by the name of East Bethel. They have a Sabbath School which is well attended. The Sabbath School of Fairmount has had some changes in the last few months. Dorothy Luther, the General Superintendent, is now caring for her aged mother, and is not doing active work, though assisting in a general way. Dora Bogue, Superintendent of the Junior Department, and Mary E. Pearson, Superintendent of the Primary Department, are now taking a long needed rest in Cristabol, Canal Zone. They left New York on the steamer Cristabol. Mary E. Pearson will visit her brother, Herbert Pearson, who is Chief Auditor of the Commissary Department. As both ladies are teachers of our public schools they will return September 1st. The average enrollment of our Sabbath School is good, it being about 335.

Marion.—The congregation at the Second Friends' Church in Marion, Indiana, is in such a prosperous condition and feeling so good that they want to tell other Friends. Two years ago we were looking for a pastor and DeWitt Foster, then of Pennville, Indiana, was recommended to us. We sent for him and he became our pastor and has loyally and successfully led us for about two years. He has agreed to remain with us for at least one more year. During these two years we have increased our membership from 287 to 424, bought a lot next to the church and last September our pastor moved into a nice eight-room house with two big rooms in the basement. The building cost more than was first estimated and we had to go in debt some, but last week the last remaining bill was settled and we are surely proud of our pastor's home. The same week that the debt was cancelled, a committee from the Monthly Meeting was appointed to arrange for the excavation under the church to make more Sunday School room. Our Sunday School has increased to nearly three hundred and we haven't room enough, so we believe that this September will find us occupying a basement under the entire church. While we have been enjoying these temporal blessings we have been living closer to God and feasting on His spiritual manna, and we as a church expect to go forward and take more ground in His name.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

Wichita.—Wichita Quarterly Meeting was held at Greencastle, June 5-7. We had the acceptable company of several ministers within our own Quarterly Meeting, also Jonathan Ballard, of Tonganoxie Meeting. He formerly was a member for many years of Rose Hill Monthly Meeting. The latter part of April the Rose Hill Friends had the company and ministry of Lindley A. Wells. He visited his many relatives and friends of this place and was with us at our midweek meeting on the 28th, and on Sabbath the 31st, both morning and evening. A large assembly greeted him on these occasions for we claim him as one of our boys, as it was here that he was married, converted, sanctified and recorded as a minister of the Gospel, and his preaching of the Gospel has the true ring to it to this day.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Tecumseh, Michigan.—The Friends at Tecumseh, Michigan, held an all-day meeting June 14th. Howard Moore, our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, preached an excellent sermon in the morning and the Bible School followed. At 2:30 were the Children's Day exercises and they acquitted themselves well. The house was beautifully decorated. In the evening were union services, and Howard Moore preached again to an appreciative audience.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

West Grove.—West Grove Quarterly Meeting joined in a tent meeting held at Hinkle Creek Church grounds three weeks in June. Martilia and Mary Cox were the leaders, assisted by Miss Leora Bogue, of Fairmount, leader in singing. The contest was vigorous, but the "Lamb and His followers had the victory." Fifteen or twenty were definitely blessed and the church greatly strengthened. To the Lord belongs the praise.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

Wilmington.—Wilmington Friends' Bible School took up the matter of subscriptions for THE AMERICAN FRIEND in the adult classes June 21st. Forty six-month subscriptions were secured and others will follow. Wilmington's proportion on the one to twenty basis is fifty-two.

NEWS ITEMS

Dr. William L. Pearson and wife have gone to attend California Yearly Meeting.

Thomas Newlin of Whittier, California, preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Orange High School on Sabbath, June 21st.

Edward E. and Susie E. Hartley, pastors of Stillwell and Bethel Meetings in Vandalia, Michigan, have notified the same that their services in these meetings will cease with the coming Yearly Meeting.

Lewis W. McFarland has accepted the call of High Point Monthly Meeting, North Carolina, to act as their pastor for another year. His work has been signalized by increased attendance and interest. An excellent spirit of co-operation prevails in the meeting.

Several members of the Pacific College faculty have departed on their vacation journeys. Miss Mary Kenworthy and Professor M. D. Hawkins have returned to their homes in Indiana; Professor Mendenhall and wife have gone to Iowa; Miss Mary Sutton to her home in Seattle. President Pennington will devote his vacation to the endowment campaign.

J. Arthur Wollam, of Emporia, Kansas, has been invited to serve as pastor of University Friends' Church, Wichita, and will doubtless accept the invitation. Lewis E. Stout, pastor of the church for five years, whose work has been unusually successful and satisfactory, will return to Indiana to engage in pastoral work again. At present Lewis and Anna Stout are on the Pacific coast, where they went to attend Oregon and California Yearly Meetings.

PERSONAL MENTION

Wilbur K. Thomas, pastor of Friends' meeting at Boston, has recently received a Ph.D. degree from Boston University.

Alfred C. Garrett, of Germantown, Pennsylvania, conducted a "Bible half hour" from 11:45 to 12:15 each day during the sessions of New England Yearly Meeting last week. His services were greatly appreciated.

Elam Henderson, who has served the meetings at Vassalboro and East Vassalboro, Maine, for the past three years as pastor, and who has been at the head of the Biblical department in Oak Grove Seminary, will go to West Falmouth, Massachusetts, as pastor.

Arthur Chilson and family, together with Jefferson W. Ford and family, are expecting to sail for Africa for missionary work on July 9th. There are a few days left in which Friends can make remittance for Jefferson Ford's transportation, as indicated in last week's AMERICAN FRIEND.

HAVERFORD SUMMER SCHOOL

The sessions of Haverford Summer School opened successfully on June 20, with a reception followed by a conference on the lawn and a lecture at night by President McKenzie, of Hartford Seminary.

The attendance was good and the lectures have proved of a high order. Not the least profitable part of the program has been the splendid fellowship enjoyed.

WITH REFERENCE TO NATHAN AND ESTHER FRAME

Earlham, Indiana,
June 23, 1914.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND,

Dear Friend—Some time ago while in Washington City the writer called at the temporary home of Nathan and Esther Frame, and was greatly impressed with the fact that these faithful servants of the Church are rapidly declining in health. Nathan Frame is suffering from an incurable disease and Esther Frame is very much weakened in body, although both of them are strong of mind and in their spiritual experience. A short time before that Professor D. W. Dennis had been in the same home and had been impressed in the same way, although the two of us had not compared notes regarding the matter until quite recently. Soon after my visit I addressed a letter to the clerks of the different quarterly meetings in Indiana Yearly Meeting asking that contributions be taken for the maintenance of these dear Friends during the remaining days that they are to spend here. The clerk of Kansas Yearly Meeting and also the clerk of Iowa Yearly Meeting has written the same kind of a letter to the quarterly meeting clerks of the respective yearly meetings. I am not able to report what has been contributed from Kansas, but since some of the quarterly meeting clerks of Iowa have sent contributions directly to me, I am able to say that a total of $13.45 has been received by me from that yearly meeting and has been sent on. Friends in the city of Richmond have paid a total of $62.75, largely through the solicitation of Professor D. W. Dennis, and Friends in Indiana Yearly Meeting outside of Richmond, have paid a total of $64.44 up to date.

At the last session of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting held at Richmond, Professor Dennis expressed a concern that some more systematic steps be taken to relieve these faithful Friends of their necessities and a committee, of which the writer was made chairman and Professor D. W. Dennis and William A. Macy were made the other members, was appointed to propose a plan. It is the judgment of this committee that Friends in America should send in contributions liberally so that these ministers of the Gospel who have given their lives for the cause of Christ within our own denomination may not be in actual need. They have worked, I think, in every yearly meeting in America and in very many of the quarterly meetings of America, and a constant stream of contributions should come in so that their actual needs in the way of living expenses may be met by them. The plan of the committee is to make payments by the month through a trusted Friend in Washington City to Nathan and Esther Frame. These payments should come in the nature of a pension and should be handed over with regularity. It is unfortunate that we have no means of providing for our ministers in their old age, and in the absence of any official plan this method of payment is proposed for the present emergency. The committee unites in making an urgent appeal to Friends throughout the entire United States to take up subscriptions either privately or in public meetings for the purpose indicated and it is asked that the money subscribed be sent to the writer who will issue receipts as the money comes in. When our work is finally completed the committee will publish a full statement of receipts in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Hoping that there will be a liberal and widely extended response to this appeal which is issued in the name of our common humanity and for Friends who have given their lives for the upbuilding of our Church, I am

Very sincerely,
ROBERT L. KELLY,

NOTICE

Probably many Friends will attend the convention of the National Educational Association to be held in St. Paul, Minnesota, July 4-11, and Minneapolis Friends are desirous of seeing all of them and having them attend one or more of their meetings. There is no Friends' meeting at St. Paul, but it is only ten miles between the business centers of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and four electric car lines and several railroads connect the two cities. The meeting house in Minneapolis is at Fourteenth Street and First Avenue, South, and Minneapolis Friends heartily invite all visiting Friends to their meetings. Sunday morning meeting is at 10:30, Bible School 12 m, Christian Endeavor 6:15 p.m., Thursday evening meeting at 8:00. Any Friends expecting to attend this association will please write immediately to Howard M. Stout, 2512 Pleasant Avenue, Minneapolis, Minnesota, giving home address and also St. Paul address if possible.

COMMENCEMENT AT HAVILAND ACADEMY

The twenty-first annual commencement of Haviland Academy was held at the Friends' Church, Friday, May 29, 1914. Seventeen classes have come up for graduation at the Academy since 1892. The class of 1914 is the largest in its history, fourteen in number, making a total of ninety-five graduates.

The address to the class was given by Professor Reagan of the department of philosophy and psychology at the Friends' University at Wichita. The theme of his address was "Loyalty."

Diplomas were then presented. In the award of honor, Edna Moore was granted the scholarship to Southwest Kansas College at Winfield, and Ray Williams the scholarship to Friends' University at Wichita. The prize for perfect attendance for the four years' academic course was also awarded to Ray Williams. The alumni prizes of books for the best scholarship during the year was awarded to Wilbur Hadley.

For the year 1914-15 the academy work will be under the care of Professor Emmett Hadley, a principal of several years' experience in academic work, Miss Pearl Horine, who taught in the Academy this year, and Miss Winifred Riggs, who has been teaching music and English for two years in Oklahoma.

PACIFIC COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT

Commencement exercises at Pacific College began Saturday evening, June 6th, when the school of music gave one of the finest concerts of the year.

Sunday morning the baccalaureate sermon was preached by President Levi T. Pennington, who gave some helpful lessons to the classes from the text, Isa. 32: 2. Sunday evening Reverend George C. Ritchey, pastor of the Christian Church, spoke to the Christian Associations.

Monday afternoon occurred the annual ball game between the members of the alumni and the college and in the evening class day exercises were held.

Tuesday afternoon the Academy graduating exercises were given. The program consisted of an oration, "Service the Secret of the Ages," by Esther Miles; an essay, "Educational Work of Friends," by Marjorie Gregory; vocal solo, by Corrine Bartholemew, of Everett, Washington; violin solo, by Roy Lyle.

Thirteen students graduated from the Academy this year.

The Pacific College scholarship was awarded to Miss Mildred Benson. At the Alumni Public on Tuesday evening, the "Pageant of Flowers" was presented to a large audience.

On Wednesday morning at ten o'clock the college graduating exercises were held, nine students receiving degrees. The Penn College scholarship was awarded to Rae S. Langworthy, and the Junior class prize of $25.00 was won by Miss Eva Campbell.

Dr. Joseph John Mills' splendid address, "The Launching of a Life," cannot fail to make a lasting impression for good upon the lives of all who heard him, especially the members of the class which he came to address. In part he said the launching of the life of a young man or woman is of more importance to the world than is the launching of a great battleship. In launching one of the great dreadnaughts the last thing to be done before the engine of death is ready to sail, is for the captain to steer the ship into some quiet inlet, free from all disturbing elements, and properly adjust the compass. This commencement time should be an occasion for the members of the class getting their bearings and making adjustments for life work.

The idea that money to start with is the best requisite for success is a mistake. On a tablet erected in memory of Mark Twain there is inscribed this statement, "Life teaches that poverty is an incentive, rather than a hindrance to success in life."

Three essential elements in starting out in life are a clear brain, energy and trustworthiness. Let anyone of these go by default and the result will be fatal.

Keep the blood red and the brain clear. Make trustworthiness a matter of the heart.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

The exercises of commencement week at Earlham College closed successfully on June 17. President Robert L. Kelly preached a strong baccalaureate sermon on the 14th, while in the evening H. L. Coleman, missionary to Tokyo, Japan, gave the annual address to the Young Men's and Young Women's Associations of the college.

President Ira Remsen, of Johns Hopkins University, gave the class address before a large company under the trees of the campus. It was a masterly address and dealt with the laboratory method of study and investigation as applied to all the work of life.

The graduating class was the largest in the history of Earlham, numbering fifty-eight. Several scholarships were announced.

The college has had a successful year in many ways. The endowment has been enlarged by approximately $150,000. Several faculty changes have been announced. The outlook for the coming year is bright.

PENN COLLEGE

Penn College has just closed another successful year. The enrollment this year was the largest in the history of the school. Five hundred and thirteen different students have enrolled for work. The work of the college in every particular has been maintained at a high standard. Student activities have been more than ordinarily successful. The spirit and enthusiasm of the students and patrons is of the most wholesome type. The prospects for next year are very bright. The management knows of more new students who have decided to enter next year than is usually known by the middle of July or the first of August. It is expected that the enrollment next year will be far in excess of this year. The commencement exercises were very satisfactory. Harry R. Keates, Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work of Iowa Yearly Meeting, preached the baccalaureate sermon, using as the text Paul's question on the Damascus Road, "What wilt thou have me to do?" It was an excellent sermon and highly appreciated by the large audience which listened.

The commencement address given by Dr. Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford College, on the subject, "The Making of a Life," was enthusiastically received. Dr. Jones held the interest of his audience from beginning to end. Perhaps no man in the Friends' Church is so well fitted to speak to young people as is Dr. Jones.

All the exercises of commencement week were held in the large auditorium which afforded ample seating room for all who attended.

VERMILION GROVE ACADEMY

Vermilion Academy, founded in 1874, by Vermilion Quarterly Meeting of the Friends' Church at Vermilion Grove, Illinois, recently received an addition to its endowment fund of lands, mortgages and notes, valued at $200,000.00. The donor, Golden Patterson, a life-long resident of Vermilion County, Illinois, unmarried, and anxious to dispose of his worldly possessions during his lifetime, had for some time looked about for a suitable place to make his gift. Born of Quaker parentage and wishing to help a home institution, his inclinations naturally led him to make the offer to the Trustees of Vermilion Academy. After due legal formalities were observed the contract was closed June 2, 1914, providing for the payment to Mr. Patterson of six per cent. interest on his holdings during his life time; he turning over to the Trustees deeds and mortgages as mentioned above. This gift, together with endowments and previous gifts, places the Academy on a safe financial basis and insures the future of the school. It is hoped that Vermilion Quarterly Meeting will now rally to the assistance of the Trustees and help to make the school even a stronger factor in the education of our young people than it has ever been. The outlook for the coming school year is very good. To meet the competition of the surrounding high schools, tuition has been made free. The faculty elected for the year 1914-15 is S. Roscoe Lamb, B.S., Earlham College 1914, Principal; Mamie Marshall, A.B., Penn 1913, honor student Bryn Mawr 1914, and Mary L. Kissick, A.B. 1914, Penn College.

Work in the Biblical department will be under the care of Carl F. and Minnie G. Miller, pastors of the local meeting. The course will include three years' work and is so planned as to be specially helpful to students of high school age and to make a good foundation for those wishing to pursue an extended course of Bible study.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

July '12.

Subject.—Greatness Through Service.
Lesson.—Mark 10: 32-45.

Golden Text.—The Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. Mark 10: 45.

How difficult it was for the disciples to understand the nature of Christ's kingdom. Even now, almost under the shadow of the cross, they are concerned, two of them at least, about place and position.

Yet after nineteen hundred years men are still imagining that by great deeds they may find favor with God and be rewarded according to their works, as though by some peculiar kind of service they will be able to merit that favoritism that will give them position in the Church and ultimately eternal life.

Are ye able to drink the cup? That was the test. "No external influence could obtain the coveted experience."

The S. S. World relates a story given by Louis Albert Banks to the effect that "Someone asked St. Francis of Assisi why he was so influential and had so much power with the people. 'Well,' replied St. Francis, 'I've been thinking about that myself lately, and believe this is the reason why: the Lord looked down from heaven and said, 'Where can I find the weakest, the littlest, the meanest man on the face of the earth?' Then he saw me and said, 'Now, I've found him, and I will work through him. He won't be proud of it. He'll see that I am using him because of his littleness and insignificance.'"

It has been said that "The greatest truths are the simplest; so are the greatest men." It is by obedience and faith, suffering if need be for righteousness' sake, that we are fitted to dwell with Christ.

Christ's kingdom is a spiritual kingdom and the world must even yet shift its ideals of His rule among men, if they comprehend rightly His relationships with men. Shall be your minister. It is the highest type of service. Giving a cup of cold water in the name of discipleship will receive a disciple's reward.

The motive of service determines its character and worth. They who serve without thought of reward, but to the glory of God and out of love for Jesus Christ, are in the sight of God the great men and women of earth.

Jesus foresees the end, the cruelty, the scourging, the final crucifixion. It seemed almost brutal that his disciples should still be talking about their own status. Yet it was only a natural anxiety. They had forsaken all to follow Jesus, and in the tenseness of a perplexing situation, it was to be expected that their minds would turn to the effect upon themselves. The other disciples were indignant only because they believed that James and John were trying to profit at the expense of the others.

But to minister. Jesus set the pattern. Through service for others were they to find their place when Jesus had left them. It is the law of the highest life.

She was an earnest and active member of North Sandwich Monthly Meeting and will be greatly missed by the home congregation. The husband, two sons and one sister survive her.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

35 BUSHELS PER ACRE
was the yield of WHEAT

160 ACRES IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

On many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 50 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, 50 bushels for barley and from 10 to 20 bushels for flax.

J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 68 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

Sunshine of the Heart

(Copied from "The Young Man," in Northwestern Christian Advocate.)

It's the sunlight of the heart that makes sweet the way;
It's the sunlight of the heart, not the sunlight of the day;
It's the sunlight of the heart
Keeps us toiling, cold or heat,
With the blossoms in our dreams,
And the robins singing sweet.

It's the sunlight of the heart that keeps the world from turning gray,
It's the sunshine of the heart that keeps the spirits fresh with play.
It's the sunshine of the heart,
Stored with beauty of the years,
Keeps the shadows from the soul,
Heals the heartaches and the tears.

It's the sunlight of the heart makes us young along the line,
With a touch of morning song in a world love makes divine,
It's the sunlight of the heart
Makes us laugh when troubles loom,
And leads us with its laughter
On the way life walks to bloom.

It's the sunshine of the heart makes the sunshine of the day,
Just to help us chase the care and the dark and doubt away.
It's the sunshine of the heart
That leads us, worn and pale,
To the beauty of the lilies,
In that last eternal vale.

One Week More

One week remains in which to conclude the campaign for new subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND under the special low rate trial offer of fifty cents for new subscriptions until January 1, 1914.

As a help to meetings which have just started the canvass, we will continue the campaign over two more Sabbaths and bring it to an end on July 20. All subscriptions should be sent in by that time.

We are deeply moved by the earnestness with which quite a number of meetings have devoted themselves to the task of doing their full share to increase our subscription list. These have done splendidly.

Their success shows what can be done by some one going out after the subscriptions. There are a few meetings where every Friends family is getting THE AMERICAN FRIEND. But these will hardly exceed a score. In every other meeting, we are confident, it is possible to get new subscriptions, if only the pastor or some other interested Friend will make the effort.

Ten days yet remain in which to make an extraordinary effort to put THE AMERICAN FRIEND on the high road to success. Not only will the management be seriously disappointed, but the whole church will be effected if there is a failure or neglect to take advantage of this extraordinary offer.

We make an earnest appeal that some interested Friend in every meeting that has not yet made a canvass, will see to it that one is made immediately.

In almost every meeting some young man or young woman will be glad to render this service if the suggestion is made to them.

One meeting reports that on a recent Sabbath, at the opening of the Bible School, the Adult classes were asked to consider the matter and report at the closing exercises, with the result that 40 new subscriptions were secured. Go and do likewise.

If the names are mailed to us by July 20, we will send THE AMERICAN FRIEND to new subscribers for six months for fifty cents as a trial subscription.

No offer equal to this will probably ever be made again by this paper. Every Friends family needs to know about the offer and should be made to feel, not only that it needs the paper but is under obligation to support it.

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT.

Equipment For Service

BY ORMAN C. EMERY

In THE AMERICAN FRIEND of June 18th appeared an excellent article on "The Spiritual Life and the Present Social Situation," by President Thomas E. Newlin, of Whittier, California. It is an article that every reader of THE AMERICAN FRIEND would do well to read and ponder well. It contains suggestions that must be heeded if the Friends' Church is to take its place with other churches in the step forward that is to give the Gospel to the world in this generation.

I want particularly to express approval of the statement in the article that the minister of religion of the present ought to be the personification of Christian scholarship, and of another statement to the effect that religion today is concerned with bigger and more vital questions than denominationalism and sectarianism.

It is the business of the Church to educate consecrated men and women for the important office of the ministry. It is time for the Church to cease paying a premium on ignorance, provincialism or eccentricity in the name of religion, no matter how well meant. The best service with the use of every means at hand is the demand of the present. It is a reasonable demand. The same God who calls men and women to preach the Gospel or perform any other service in His name, has made it possible for men and women to fit themselves thoroughly for His service. It is their fault alone if they are not the personification of Christian scholarship.

When to such a ministry is added the intelligent, consecrated service of laymen, many of whom are beginning to see that God has something for them to do, the Church may hope for things that it has never more than dared to pray for. This laymen's movement is significant and Friends would do well to encourage it. It is entirely in harmony with the teachings and traditions of the Church. It has been too long neglected. Encouragement should be given to the plan for a conference of laymen of the Friends' Church in America at no distant day. It is the beginning of an era in the history of the Church when laymen and ministry shall work together as God expects them to do to bring men to Him.

Wichita, Kansas.

A smile, a word, a touch—

And each is easily given;

Yet either may win a soul from sin,

Or smooth the way to heaven.

A smile may lighten the failing heart,

A word may soften pain's keenest smart,

A touch may lead us from sin apart—

How easily either is given!

Getting an Enlarged Vision

In the report of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, which appeared in THE AMERICAN FRIEND last week, we find the following interesting statement, which no doubt has already attracted the attention of many Friends:

"The Yearly Meeting was united * * * in favoring an action of the Executive Board of the Five Years Meeting inaugurating a systematic campaign for raising $3,000,000.00 to be divided among the Yearly Meetings for the use of the various departments of the church work."

We have understood through private sources that this action was preceded by a general discussion of the subject through parts of two sessions, and may be considered therefore as the mature judgment of Nebraska Friends. It is too early to judge the effects of this proposal upon Friends generally. Whether or not other Yearly Meetings will reach a like conclusion or whether they will even consider the proposition remains to be seen. We find no mention of the subject in the Oregon report presented this week.

Whatever may be the final action and whether or not this wonderful vision is ever realized, the action taken by our Nebraska Friends is evidence not only of a masterly faith, but of an undying devotion that is worthy of emulation by others. The newest of the constituent bodies of the Five Years Meeting has set a pace which is at once a challenge to the best in the Society of Friends in America.

The danger is that the bigness of the proposition will make it easy to ignore it altogether. But can our denominational responsibilities be satisfied in any such manner? Shall the proposed effort be attributed to the ill-timed enthusiasm of an overzealous desire to accomplish something great, or shall we hear in it the voice of God calling us as a body to a higher destiny and a larger service? We are impressed with the feeling that Nebraska Yearly Meeting has projected an issue into our denominational life that must be met prayerfully and heroically, and from which we cannot lightly turn aside without permanent injury to the church as a whole.

In this connection one cannot fail to remember a similar vision which came to a company of California Friends in the early spring, who, after considering the educational needs of the church, suggested an effort to raise a fund of $2,000,000.00 to be divided between our educational institutions and the work of our Foreign Mission Board.

We do not underestimate the stupendous character of the task which these suggested efforts would impose. It may be that in the light of the fullest consideration they may be found to be impracticable at this time. It might be that a smaller sum would suffice for present needs. But our conviction is profound that the needs of the Five Years Meeting and the Yearly Meetings composing it can only be met adequately by devising some financial plan upon a scale more generous than has ever yet been attempted by Friends in this country.

The greater the task, the greater must be the supply. The conviction is growing that Friends in America must speedily enter into a larger life and attempt what have been regarded hitherto as impossible tasks, or else they must inevitably retire to a lesser position in the moving ranks of the church of God. The call that is coming to our Quaker men to rally en masse to every department of the church, the task of raising the standards of our Bible School work, the effort to equip our educational institutions in harmony with the growing demands of the age for standardized education, the need of strengthening the church as an agency in community betterment, the work of incorporating the Christian life into the every-day life of the people in all Friends' neighborhoods, the growing demands of the peace propaganda in harmony with the historic teachings of Friends, the opening doors into the fields both of home and foreign missions and the responsibilities which these opportunities are bringing for larger service in the work of world evangelism, the burden of making the church more effective in regenerating the social order and the world of politics and government, all these are tasks in which Friends cannot afford to fail.

It was this same Nebraska Yearly Meeting, in which the pastors pledged themselves in a signed statement to an effort to win at least 1,000 souls for the Kingdom during this coming year. Their's is a faith that is to be justified by their works. May we not all pray that the same spirit may possess all our Yearly Meetings both at home and abroad?

Friends have rarely ever undertaken really great tasks together. Seldom have they as a body, working unitedly, done their best in any field of important service. Is not the time at hand when Friends, acting together, shall set out to do their best? And in making the effort, is there anything more worth while than the proposal to put all our departments upon a solid, working, winning basis, by the gathering of a fund adequate to their needs?

Other States to Vote

It is with difficulty that one is able to keep up now-a-days with the march of the prohibition movement. Recently in these columns we have called attention to the fact that California, Colorado, Oregon, Virginia and Washington are to vote this autumn on the question of state-wide prohibition.

It appears that we omitted the new state of Arizona from the list. It was only last week that the temperance forces of Ohio decided to bring on an election this year for state prohibition, under the initiative and referendum law. This decision was reached after it was made clear that the liquor interests, by the use of the same referendum law, would endeavor to secure a repeal of the Rose County Option Law and at the same time endeavor to secure an amendment to the constitution forbidding the enactment of a prohibitory or local option law that would apply to territory larger than a township or municipality.

There will be plenty of work for Friends in these states to do this summer and autumn, and they should have the prayers and help of all Friends in other states.

Broken Circles

BY LEWIS E. STOUT

(Digest of a sermon delivered at Friends' University Church, Wichita, Kansas.)

Text—Acts 13: 2, 3. "And as they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. Then, when they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

It is the supreme privilege of any church to be where Antioch was at this time; that is, where it can hear and understand the voice of the Holy Spirit. Such a church is having the promise verified, "When He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He shall guide you."

Four Prerequisites for the Spirit-Led Church

First, she must know how to "minister to the Lord," not by rigid authority, but by humble service.

Second, the church must know the fast of the Holy Spirit's dispensation. It is not the fast of the Pharisees or John's disciples, but that which is occasioned by low spiritual life and soul travail for the unevangelized world and is accompanied by life and power.

Third, the church must know the power of prayer—"My house shall be called the house of prayer."

Fourth, the spirit-led church must be willing to "lay hands on" and let the circle break, as the Holy Spirit dictates.

The Humanity and Divinity Within Us

When it comes to the Spirit's call to separate church or home circles, the human element cries out against it, but being "partakers of the Holy Spirit" or "partakers of the Divine nature," this element within us sees the white fields and willingly says, "Let the circles break." When a lad of thirteen, my brother left the old native home. My heart rebelled and I clung to him and said he must not go, but mother said the farm was too small to support us all and brother must go and prepare a business and home of his own. I had the human vision, she the Divine. I see clearly now it was right for the circle to break.

Church circles must break in every generation if we carry out God's program. The Friends of Jesus, as a religious Denomination, have seen their circles break until at present we have 250 of our choice workers in foreign fields. We are supporting these with an annual offering of $2.12 per member. We have missionaries in thirteen foreign countries and have backed them with $286,000.00 the past year. Our own church circle has broken and we have two of our strongest workers with their two children in the dark continent. Our college here has at present twelve young people in mission lands and twenty in the student volunteer circle.

Harmony in the Home Circle

Home circles must break in harmony with God's will for the family. When Jesus left the Nazareth home, his mother and brothers followed him and besought him to return. This gave Jesus the occasion to say, "He that doeth the will of God, is my mother, brother and sister." He meant by this to say, "It is all right to serve me in person, but it is better to obey my teaching and help me establish my kingdom." Many must in the will of God break the circle, even in the face of misunderstanding, criticism and censure.

It is well for denominational circles to break. Such blending of God's soldiery will earlier bring the whole truth into the possession of all. Many of you have come to us from other churches and you have brought us a ministry we need. You have made us less clannish and more progressive. When we lose a member to a sister church we are tempted to regard it as a total loss, but if we have life principles of abiding character, this member will carry these into new fields and spread them there. All denominational losses which become a gain to Christ's kingdom are in the will of God.

National circles break in the will of God and the different races of men commingle. There seems to be a growing tide in our country opposed to foreign immigration. I believe God appointed this continent for the development and perfection of freedom's program. There is much room here yet. Let men of honesty and industry continue to come. Welcome every man who believes in our Christian Sabbath, our free schools and our democratic principles of government. Throw open our college doors for the education of foreign youths. Our friends, Rengo Kumatsn and Charles Vincent, from Japan and Jamaica, who worship with us today, will be a great blessing to us and tie our sympathies more closely to those countries. The mingling of the nations will do a great service for the cause of international peace.

The reservoirs of truth must break also. If Calvin, Wesley, Fox and other great leaders had limited their sowing to their own countries or denominations, how poor the spiritual harvest would be. But the doctrines of the Sovereignty of God, the Lordship of Jesus, Christian Perfection, the Baptism of the Holy Spirit and universal peace leaped over denominational boundaries and enriched the whole Christian world.

The Supreme Ambition of the Church

If it is the supreme privilege of the church to know the voice of the Holy Spirit, it should be her supreme ambition to separate her men and her money for the work whereunto the Holy Spirit calls, while she ministers to the Lord, fasts and prays. One day, when we have served our enlistment, the militant circle will break and we'll join the circle triumphant. The Master will come and call us to a place where the circles of love and fellowship never break.

"And may there be no moaning of the bar
When we put out to sea."

The Call of the Hour to Our Women

BY ELIZA ARMSTRONG COX

(This paper was read at the triennial meeting of the W. F. M. S. at Muncie, Indiana, and is copied from the June number of Friends' Missionary Advocate. It deserves to be widely read.—EDITOR.)

(CONCLUDED)

Our W. F. M. Union

The first instruction was to rally our forces. This was undertaken. One little group of women got together and called themselves a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; then as the fire caught another was formed, and another, the spirit of enthusiasm rising higher all the time. These gathered themselves into a Yearly Meeting society. Soon the women of all our Yearly Meetings were sharing the same spirit and they rapidly became an earnest, zealous band to do our share in the evangelization of the world.

One by one each Yearly Meeting group found a place for service in some far land and in less than two decades our representatives were found in India, China, Japan, Palestine, Africa, Mexico, Cuba, Jamaica, Alaska, and later Guatemala.

During the years of our earlier experiences our denomination was feeling the need of a better church organization, a more compact union in order to make itself stronger and more efficient in service. The Yearly Meetings were cautiously approaching each other for thirteen years before they could clasp hands and say we are a unit in the Five Years Meeting. The women's organizations of these Yearly Meetings completed their get-together in two years after their first preliminary conference. This, however, is easy to explain, because we were not legislating for the church and, second, because "we were just women" and went straight after the thing we wanted. This gave us the W. F. M. Union of Friends in America that, since 1890, the year of its formation, has been doing faithful service for Christ and the church at home and in the "regions beyond." Just here it may be well to observe, that more than once in our history we have come up against the obstacle of sentiment. This lovely, sweet, tender thing was, that it was contrary to Quaker principles for women and men to work in separate organizations. It is remarkable how appealing sentiment is. But is it ever progressive? Is it ever aggressive? Has it ever pioneered any great work? Does it ever heed a voice calling to the front? On the other hand, is not its chief function to live in the past, and maintain a species of ancestral worship? Has it not repeatedly built its house for worship away from the community center only because our fathers worshiped there in primitive times, and lived to find itself without strength or efficiency as the result. We will see as we proceed how setting aside sentiment has brought to us Quaker women a larger opportunity.

Beginning of the Federated Council of Missions

Time went on. The work abroad was becoming immense. The opportunities were simply staggering. The women's share of the responsibility was entirely too great for any one of the women's denominational boards to grapple with alone. The circumstances developed within a desire to unite forces and by throwing our strength together be helpful to each other in counsel and sympathy. So the women's boards held joint conferences in New York for several years. But the voice as it became more distinct was for a union of our forces as women. This has now been accomplished in skeleton form by the organization of the Federated Council of Missions. Here the strength of each will be multiplied, as it were, by the number of women's boards in the Federation. With this comes the enlarging view, the deepening appreciation, the rising above denominational technicalities and customs, into the larger love of God; a power to see in every women's board that is working for the coming kingdom, a sister.

Call to Home Missions

Then another voice arrested our attention. We gave ear, for Christian women have ears to hear. This call was to rally us also for the neglected and unevangelized within our own gates, the foreigner, the Indian, the negro, the lumberman, the miner, and the mountaineer. Following this lead we now have the Woman's Home Missionary Society and are a constituent part of the Home Missions Council of North America. It is only in its beginnings with us at present, and through it we expect to gather in all who heretofore did not feel free to join our Foreign Missionary Society because of so much to do at home. These have suddenly come to their full-orbed day. Now we have the foundations laid, and the framework up for a most magnificent structure. It will not be complete until every Christian woman has been woven into it.

Now we see what we would have lost had we followed sentiment. How deeply thankful we should be that our Union was not compelled to answer the invitation to join the Federation as our Episcopalian sisters had to, "That the form of our organization forbids us to accept." As it is, see what a splendid fellowship we are a part of! The Federated Council of Missions and through this to the Edinburgh Continuation Committee, the very top of missionary organization in the world! Linked with all the leading Christian women of America and of the Christian world, in a holy sisterhood for the bearing of good tidings to all people! As we contemplate it we exclaim, "The Lord gave the world; the women that publish good tidings are a great host!" Thank God, we are a part of the host, because we yielded sentiment for efficiency, and custom for the larger service.

Some Specific Calls

Having noticed now in some measure these general features, there are voices still calling to some specific things that we may be more efficient.

We have a department of Interest and Organization which is fundamental to our success. The functions of this department will not be properly performed until we keep organizers a-field. This is imperative. All organizations make large use of this means. The W. C. T. U. would hardly have been in existence today but for these visiting workers. See how very essential they are to the work of the Sunday School Association and every other organization that is accomplishing things. This requires a fund for expenses. Our Constitution provides a little for this purpose, and it is a little sure enough. A little broader idea in the use of money in developing our work would be very wholesome. One woman thinks that if her whole dollar does not go right into the hand of the missionary it is misused. If every cent of my dollar is used to buy lumber and nails for a box and to pay a workman for making it in which the missionaries' goods will be shipped over seas, it has served the cause of missions. Or if every penny of it is used to pay the traveling expenses of a field worker and she organizes an auxiliary of half a dozen members, it has served a beautiful purpose and has gained other dollars for the treasury, and other hearts to pray for the missionary. Let's heed this call of the hour.

Another call rings out. We have from the first laid emphasis on proportionate and systematic giving. Now when our denomination with so many others is emphasizing regular systematic giving to all lines of church work it is time for us to regird ourselves and fare forth in the conquest for Scriptural giving.

Another call is filling our ears with deafening sound. It is the call for more and a better systematized literature. What cause can be fat and flourishing with such a meager show of literature as we present. The Missionary Advocate, circumscribed as it is with other sectional missionary papers, should be lifted off this snag. It should be made to stand for all of Friends' work and so remove the sectional feeling in missionary work that is by no means the best for a small denomination. It will not be done till we get at it and do it. We can do it if we will. Shall we say, "We can do it and we will."

The Unit in Our Organization

Still another call. This is to emphasize the auxiliary. This is the unit in the whole fabric of our missionary organization. With a president of it who will feel a genuine responsibility in every line of work belonging to the auxiliary; who will know that reports are made accurately and forwarded promptly; that the treasurer is being able for her duties; that programs for the meetings will meet the need of its members; that public meetings will be held when they should be; that the solicitation for the Advocate is made timely and in a business-like way; in short, one who is alert and conscientious, such an auxiliary will be a fruitful one and a source of great good and secure a powerful organization all the way up. The use of the text-book has not been well understood by all. These books were not intended for easy reading, but for study that we may show ourselves approved workers. Our present one has been pronounced by some uninteresting, but we have had nothing like it to acquaint women's organizations with each other; not that we are all to be alike, but that we may understand better the whole fabric of W. F. M. Societies and so be better able to fit up together and find the best ways of serving.

Special Work for Women

Another urgent call to our women is to enlarge the field of our activities and assume a definite responsibility of our own, as women. We must be loyal to, and helpful in the work, that the Five Years Meeting has assumed and is responsible for through the American Friends Board and its constituting Yearly Meetings. There are ways in which we can do this and at the same time assume definite responsibilities that may be a source of inspiration to us and enhance our usefulness. Helen Barrett Montgomery, who is at this time visiting mission fields on purpose to ascertain ways in which women may be more helpful, and whose observations will be given to us on her return in a book, already sends back to us this word: "Among the King's Messengers we have found automobiles and victrolas. The gift of a Ford Automobile has enabled a medical missionary to visit three times as many villages with not half the fatigue. A phonograph or a stereopticon will gather and hold a crowd for an evangelistic service as nothing else will." She further says: "I would like to have a missionary automobile league in every denomination that would equip and endow every station with a motor vehicle according to its need. It would mean saving of life, prevention of break-down, increase of efficiency that would often enable one missionary to do the work of two;" and further adds, "If only people who have automobiles knew, it could be done so easily!"

Another line of work our Union could assume would be the salary of a missionary, and as we can, of two or more. We could assist in raising funds for needed buildings; provide the furnishings of a school room, or scholarships for students who are ready for advanced work, and on down a long list of special lines of service. Another call: Something of the nature of a Continuation Committee to carry the message of this conference to every local meeting in the Quaker Kingdom and promote the work of the same by a sympathetic touch and the spirit of helpfulness.

The All-Inclusive Call

We have now been referring to some calls to us as women at this time. But what is the call of the hour to us? The one that will include all of these and many more in the line of Christian activity? As illustrious women in the past accomplished great deeds of valor in the name of Christ and for his Kingdom, because they listened to, and heeded, the "still small voice," that called them to their special lines of service, so we in this later day must recognize that our all-inclusive call is to "dwell deep," to dwell where the voice of infinite power can be heard. This may require a little less of social life; I am sure it would of the extravagant, empty kind; possibly a little less time given to fancy work, and more time to observing providential indications; to the study of great movements in church or state to get at the spiritual meaning or explanation of them; to discern the mind of Christ for us at this present time; to be up-to-date women, that is, women who keep step with Him who came to emancipate her and put her in her rightful place as a co-worker in bringing in His kingdom. The call of the hour? To give ourselves for service. The spiritual attainment, the intellectual equipment, the vision, the will to do God's will will separate us from the worthless, and place us where He can say to us as He beholds our purpose and our devotion, "Oh, woman! great is thy faith! be it unto thee even as thou wilt!" The call of the hour? To fit ourselves spiritually and intellectually to take a strong, efficient place in the great solidarity of Christian women now forming and to be completed with the Federation of the Protestant churches in the near future.

The Prohibition Amendment

Word received from Washington is to the effect that the vote upon the Hobson-Sheppard prohibition resolution is likely to be postponed until the short session next winter. The liquor men have been trying to force a vote now upon the theory that it would not command a two-thirds vote. Chairman Henry of the Rules Committee, announces that there will be no meeting of that Committee to consider the matter before the first of August, and there is no assurance that a meeting will be held then.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Oregon Yearly Meeting closed June 16th, after a session that was marked by perhaps the largest attendance in its history. A spirit of great unity prevailed throughout the entire gathering and plans were developed for a large aggressive movement for the coming year. Excellent messages were given by those who came from outside the limits of the Yearly Meeting, as well as those who are members.

Lindley A. Wells was chosen as Yearly Meeting Superintendent of pastoral work and church extension, and as field evangelist. He is to spend most of his time in the active work of evangelism, much of the routine work to be conducted by the committee. It is hoped that the year just opening will be rich in fruitage as this advance movement is carried on. Over $1,200.00 was raised for church extension by subscriptions in the face of the Yearly Meeting.

Great interest was shown in the work of Pacific College, the annual reports showing a very successful year in every way, the spiritual work of the college being especially rich in blessing. The Yearly Meeting, without a dissenting voice, appropriated $2,129.00 as agreed last year, to cover the interest on the second $50,000.00 of the proposed $100,000.00 endowment while the rest of it is being raised. This campaign is to be pushed during the remainder of 1914.

Among the visiting ministers present were Joseph John Mills, General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting, from Pasadena, California; Charles E. Tebbetts, of Richmond, Indiana, General Secretary of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, accompanied by his wife; Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the Friends' Church at Seattle, accompanied by his wife; Harry Parry, pastor of the meeting at Tacoma, Washington; "Aunt" Jane Votaw, now of Tacoma, but for years a leader in the work of Oregon Yearly Meeting; Dorothy Lee, of Seattle, and Lewis E. Stout and wife, of Wichita, Kansas. The messages of all these were greatly appreciated, especially the work of Joseph John Mills, Charles E. Tebbetts and Lewis E. Stout.

The different departments of the work of the church have prospered during the past year. There has been a substantial net gain in membership, the total number now being 2,560.

A preliminary organization of the ministers of the Yearly Meeting into an association was formed, with Homer L. Cox, of Portland, temporary president, and Myrtle Russell, of Quilcene, Washington, temporary secretary. Committees were appointed to prepare a plan of organization and to arrange for the first conference of the association.

The devotional and evangelistic meetings of the Yearly Meeting season were times of much blessing and help to many. The preaching was plain and pointed, but loving in spirit and helping many to a definite decision. There will be few changes in the personnel of the corps of pastors for the coming year.

"Church of the Precious Fragments"

This was the title some workers in the slums gave their little mission service where Edward A. Steiner worked. The region had gone through the pathetic transition from stately homes to boarding houses, and now was in the last stages, beginning to be illuminated by red lights, and darkened by the lowest vice. Young Steiner was a theological student. He marked out a score and more of blocks, and entered upon his work with great faith and enthusiasm. He tramped the wretched tenements; he came in contact with poverty, ignorance and vice; but there he discovered illustrations of faith, virtue and cleanliness in the most untoward environment, which were of more value than his classroom. "I explored a hell, more real than any theology can paint it. I saw five-story tenements, the basements dingy and damp, never safe from a coming flood and never free from the moisture of the last one. I visited garrets, hot and stuffy, rooms crowded like stables and not as wholesome, where brutal husbands were abusing their wives and often both of them beat each other in drunken fury."

Close to the church where he worked, assisting the minister, was a stretch of eight blocks, the hovels of which, he says, he would not now have the courage to enter, nor would he send a young man there, no matter how fixed his character or how holy his errand. He said:

"To preach to the dead in Sheol would be safe and easier, yet I am quite sure that there I did true disciple's service, in comparison with which all other work I have done fades into insignificance.

"How was I received?

"In most places gladly, in some derisively and in a few ejected forcibly.

"What, Bibles in a brothel?" This with a mocking laugh, but the painted face could not hide a touch of sadness, as if the sight of a Bible had brought back memories of a yet untainted life. She was in the mood for talking, and that night she was at my meeting.

"A few years after, walking across the streets of that city, I suddenly felt a hand upon my arm. Turning I saw a woman carrying a market basket. Her face was not beautiful, but maternal, sweet and honest. I did not recognize her. She proved to be the woman of the brothel, the Magdalene, restored to herself and to her people. I have received many great rewards in one form or another, but none so great as the gratitude of this woman.

"During that period I not only explored the real hell, I found also the real heaven. I recall a tenement house worse than anything I hope ever to see again. Fortunately, its type is no longer tolerated. Whole floors were merely stalls in which poverty and vice had chained men and women to their troughs. It was a bedlam of curses and vicious odors—hell outdone, yet in that house I came upon a door opening into a room white and clean. A few pictures hung upon the walls and on a dresser lay some books. A small organ stood in a corner and from a sweet, saintly looking woman came a cordial greeting. The room seemed to me like an altar erected in the midst of hell; like a bit of heaven dropped into that sulphurous abyss to sweeten it. This woman also came to my meetings, and her room became a place of intercession for the sins of many.

"A Jewish girl with the fighting spirit of a Deborah drifted in and stayed. She now lives the gospel among the colored people in the South.

"A drunken tramp printer snatched my Bible hungrily and begged me to pull him out of the thralldom of his sin. I never catalogued nor counted the men and women who came to those meetings, but they rise before me now unbidden, and I wish their number was larger and my share in their redemption greater.

"The meetings were unique enough to attract some of my fellow-students from the seminary, and we called it among ourselves "The Church of the Precious Fragments." I am sure that those of us who did the work received more than we gave. My talks, as I remember them, were too emotional, and they probably neither helped nor hindered; but the blessed fellowship, the sympathy, the desire to help and the presence of the Spirit did the work.

"Not only were the people we gathered in benefited; the dear old minister sounded a fresh note in his sermons, the young people of the congregation had a broader vision and the tomb-like church was illumined by a new light."

But the success of this kind of work was also the very cause of its failure. Because it succeeded, because the social outcasts came to Christ, high-brows, the unco guid, the superior persons, those who could not have their persons contaminated by persons with so savory a past, take umbrage at the very success of the work and a quietus was put on it. One night, after a most wonderful service demonstrating the power of Jesus to save, the pastor took Steiner to the manse, had a season of prayer, looked as if the beads of sweat were akin to those of Gethsemane, and then disclosed the fact that that kind of services must stop. They never held such services again. The "Church of the Precious Fragments" ceased to exist.

Thus runs the world. The "Precious Fragments" float down the sewer. The superior person don't care. Thus runs the world.—Central Christian Advocate.

So many Gods, so many creeds,
So many ways that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind,
Is all this sad world needs.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The hindrances and oppositions with which brave men and women have wrestled in the lonely dark have often, if not always, hid a God-like blessing in their hard and smiting hands.—John W. Chadwick.

So long as we love, we serve; so long as we are loved by others I would almost say that we are indispensable and no man is useless while he has a friend.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Christian Workers' Assembly

The Christian Workers' Assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting was held at Oskaloosa, Iowa, June 22 to 26 inclusive. From the newspaper accounts we learn that the sessions were both interesting and profitable. The Oskaloosa Daily Herald gives a list of more than fifty Friends who were present from other communities. From the editions of that paper we glean the following facts concerning the assembly:

At the opening session E. Howard Brown, of Earlham, Iowa, president of the assembly, preached an able sermon from Matthew 16: 18. On the following day the general theme was "The Church and the Community," and under this head a paper was presented by Richard R. Newby, of Des Moines, on "The Church and the Rural Community." This was followed by a round table discussion led by Alvin Hoskins, of Richland.

George E. Guille, of the Moody Bible Institute, was present each day and gave Bible talks which were full of profit to all who heard him. The subject of his first talk was "The Exaltation of Christ." In the afternoon, "The Church and City Community" was presented by George Deshler, of Pleasant Plain, followed by round table discussion led by Meade A. Kelsey, of Oskaloosa. In the evening, Frank W. Dell, of New Providence, gave an able and forceful address on "Social Service."

On Wednesday, the general topic for consideration was "The Church and the Congregation." The first paper was presented by John C. Bowles, of Stockport, followed by a discussion led by Joseph Sopher, of Grinnell. During the Bible hour at eleven o'clock, Mr. Guille spoke on the subject, "The Priesthood of Christ."

In the afternoon, Zeno H. Doan, of Lynnville, considered "The Foreigner at Our Door," followed by a profitable discussion led by Edward Hartsuck, of Scranton. Mr. Guille, of Chicago, gave the evening address on the subject, "Present Day Evangelism." He said that the Church is now renewing her strength. There is a distinction between evangelism and a period of revival. The evangel proclaims the glad tidings which draws men to a knowledge of Christ. The source of all evangelistic work is the leading of the Holy Spirit. Personal evangelism was particularly emphasized as appealing strongly to the laymen of the present day.

On Thursday, Clark Brown considered the subject, "The Church and Her Congregation," which was followed by a round table discussion led by Anna Smith, of Honey Creek. During the Bible hour at eleven o'clock, Mr. Guille spoke on "The Advocacy of Christ." This, as well as his previous talks, were remarkable for their spiritual fervor and the lasting impression made on the audience. The afternoon session was given over to the interests of the young people. Miss Edith Smith, of Ackworth, read a paper which was followed by a discussion led by A. J. Hanson, of LeGrand. In the evening, Samuel Haworth, pastor at Minneapolis, gave an address on "The Claims of the Ministry." To minister successfully is to serve and this naturally develops two classes, the ministry to the needs of the body and the ministry to the spiritual needs of the soul. The speaker decried the use of "Reverend" as a ministerial title and said that God's ennobling work makes the man effective and not the title. He made a strong plea for an educational and trained ministry.

In many respects the closing day on Friday was the choicest of the whole session. The morning session opened with a helpful and instructive paper on "The Church and Civil Life," by President David M. Edwards, of Penn College. This was followed by a general discussion led by A. J. Hanson, of LeGrand. The Bible hour by Mr. Guille was on the subject, "The Advent of Christ."

In the afternoon, Harry R. Keates, of Des Moines, considered the subject, "The Vitalized Church," and depicted Ezekiel's Vision of the Valley of Dry Bones. It was a remarkable sermon and it means a renewed consecration in the work of the Church in the months to follow. Minnie Bassett, of Hubbard, then led a most fitting devotional service. Mr. Guille delivered the closing address in the evening on "The Evangelism of the World."

The following is a digest of the sermon of E. Howard Brown on Monday evening.

"And I also say unto thee, thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

When Jesus made this statement he was talking to His disciples. Peter had answered Christ's question as spokesman for the group. His disciples all understood Him to mean that the church was built upon the great truth just uttered. Peter, neither at this time nor at any other claimed to be the foundation of the church, nor to possess alone the keys of the Kingdom. The first claim of Christ for the church was its Divine origin. The church has always had her foes. False religions have confronted her; human institutions, social, reform, charitable and philanthropic in their nature, have imitated her but none have approached her. And the church has triumphed when facing such mighty minds as Voltaire, Rousseau, Gibbon, Shelly, Hume and Ingersoll. The foes of today are ministers within the church who are seeking to change the fundamental doctrines, and even the very mission of the church.

The second claim Jesus made for His church was that it was to be His representative on earth. The business of the church has not been changed. Her enemies would wreck her on the sidetracks of Sociology, Philanthropy, Culture, or some heathenish cult.

The third claim for the church lies in her message. Christ sent men out to preach His gospel. The church has power to do what Jesus did, the authority to say what He said, and to continue what He began till the whole wide world is evangelized. The message has not been changed—men have not changed. There is no brotherhood-of-man, nor fatherhood-of-God outside the new birth. We cannot substitute a new message or a new way to be saved. God's message to the church may be a social message, but His message to lost men is not a social message. It is Christ, a savior from sin; sanctification, social service, missions, giving, Christian charity—these are messages for believers, not for lost men.

The Quaker Church holds the key to all church federation or church union. No union meeting is ever held whether two or twenty churches unite, but what they unite upon our platform. Christ only! Essentials only! The C. E., the Y. M. C. A., the W. C. T. U. and all ministerial associations come to our platform. We have led the world to put away slavery, to give woman her proper place both in church and state. We hold the position tonight upon which Christ's prayer may be answered and the churches all become one.

The church was never more successful and prosperous than today. The future church will be what we make it. The work is the Lord's and the power is His, but it is ours to consecrate and apply ourselves to the great task before us.

The following synopsis is given of the address of Frank W. Dell on "Social Service:

(1) The church must adopt as a positive policy "the setting up of the order of heaven upon earth." This will involve an unceasing and earnest political campaign against all existing evils. She will have to proclaim herself the uncompromising foe of the drink traffic, social vice, hoarded wealth, commercial rapacity, etc. She must insist upon remedial as well as palliative legislation.

(2) She must use every effort to see that existing legislation is enforced.

(3) She must insist upon more spiritual and moral instruction in the public schools. She should urge that every teacher of our young people should be of unblemished character and untainted morals. She should stand upon the platform of the "open Bible" for the public school. She must proclaim her own message of light fearlessly and intelligently.

(4) The spiritually and physically needy in every community should be the special objects of her compassion and care. She must see to supply their needs with a view of winning them to Christ.

(5) She must look to it that her campaigns are replete with fact as well as sentiment. This is a scientific age when an appeal to the feelings is not as effective as an appeal to the reason. She must avoid the zeal that is not according to knowledge.

(6) She must learn to regard suitable recreation as part of the daily bread of the young people of any community. If there is none, she must provide it. If the amusements are of a wrong kind, she must substitute those of a right kind.

(7) If there is no bond of fellowship in the community the church must seek to unite people in the accomplishment of some laudable enterprise.

Whilst in no case should the church neglect cases of individual need, her chief effort must be concentrated upon the removal of the causes from which suffering and want proceed.

The greatest social service ever rendered to society was when Christ took upon Himself the seed of Abraham. And the church can now render no greater service to men than by bringing them into touch with Him who is still able to save. But before she can do this, she herself must be in touch with those who need saving. And there is no better way of obtaining this touch than by rendering physical aid to men in their hour of need.

Letter From Cuba

PUERTO PADRE, OTE, CUBA,

To The American Friend: June 23, 1914.

From time to time we in Cuba read of your State and National Sunday School conventions; of the enthusiasm aroused in them and of the progress made in Sabbath School work. We are always glad to know of these things, and think that some of our readers would like to know of the Sabbath School work here in Cuba. Of course this work is very young yet, for it has only been in very recent years that Cuba has had freedom of religion, thus making it possible for Protestant churches to do work here. There are now between 170 and 180 Sunday Schools with something like 600 officials and 8,000 pupils. This is only a very small percent. of the population of Cuba, so there is a vast field for work.

Cuba now has her annual Sabbath School conventions, the first having been held in 1906. Since that time there has been a convention every year with the exception of 1907. It is the intention to hold these conventions in a different part of the island each year in order that more may receive the benefit that comes from such gatherings. The young people's societies also have their convention in connection with the Sabbath School convention, the latter having the first two days and the former the last day. The eighth annual convention was celebrated this year in Santiago, June 9th to 11th inclusive. Since Santiago is in the eastern end of the island, most of the delegates were from this part of Cuba. Next year the convention will be held in Havana.

This year, Friends felt a greater interest than usual in the national convention because it was so near that more of the missionaries and native workers could attend. We feel that we had a very good delegation, there being eighteen of us, nine of whom were native workers. This delegation represented only three of our four stations in this part of the island. From one of the stations all but one of the Sabbath School teachers were in attendance.

The convention opened with a fine spirit of enthusiasm which was maintained throughout all of the sessions. The program was well arranged and the different parts were interestingly presented by those who were responsible for their development. The most of the discourses bearing upon Sabbath School work were given by the missionaries, although there were five natives who had places on the program. Some of the subjects treated were, "The Spiritual Life of the Sunday School," "Possibilities of the Bible as a Story Book," "The Art of Questioning," "Escapes From the Sunday School and How to Prevent Them," and "The Organized Class—Its Opportunity." The adult, home, intermediate and normal departments also came in for their part of consideration. It can be seen from the foregoing that our problems in this work are the same as those in the States and in the other countries.

One of the most helpful things was a series of Bible studies on the Psalms and the Book of Acts. These were presented by two of the missionaries. All of the discussions showed that there is a very live interest in all of the departments of work.

As has been mentioned, the last one of the three days of the convention was devoted to the young people's societies. The program for this day was given by the native workers. Some of the subjects presented were, "What the Young People's Societies Have Done and Can Do for Cuba," "How to Secure a Real Enlivening in Our Societies," "How to Secure the Interest, Organization and Discipline in Our Societies." A most encouraging thing for us is that the young people themselves are beginning to realize that they must help to work out the solution of some of these problems that confront us and them in our work.

It was an inspiration to listen to these young workers and witness their enthusiasm in the parts of the program assigned to them and their lively interest in the work in general. Of course they have to be guided and counseled with because they are still very young and inexperienced, and the majority are willing to learn and to take advice. It is our great privilege to help these young people and we are proud of them. When we realize that the earnest workers we do have are the product of only a few years' work, we have greater hope for the future of Cuba.

Such conventions as the one this year help us to realize more fully the greatness of our work and the need of doing it in an efficient manner. Both our Sabbath Schools and the young people's societies are only in the bud, but we are earnestly praying that this tender bud will some day be a beautiful flower. Pray for the work of the Sunday Schools and of the young people's societies in Cuba.

Yours in Christ,

LENA A. HADLEY.

A Live Group of Young People at Oakwood Seminary

BY THOMAS ELSA JONES

One of the most encouraging things about "The Young Friends Movement" is that there are already so many young Friends who are moving. One who travels among Friends is struck in every meeting by a manifestation of new life. In every section there are many people who are tired of impractical, inefficient methods. These Friends are beginning to think big thoughts and formulate large plans for more telling work in their meetings.

Young pastors, College Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. students, Christian Endeavorers, members of Fellowship groups and gospel bands are beginning to study the religious problems that lie nearest them and are trying to put the results of their study into practice. The experiences of these groups are varied and, of course, helpful, and it is hoped that they may become useful to the whole Society.

We believe that there are workers all over the denomination who are seeking methods and would do much more in particular meetings if they knew what to do. We are also certain that much more efficient work can be done in many meetings if Friends would "study to show themselves workmen that need not be ashamed." It is our purpose in this issue and in following ones to publish stories of what certain groups of young Friends are doing to build up interest in their meetings, and to make suggestions for work that have been found helpful in different meetings.

The following is an account of what the young Friends in Oakwood Seminary, at Union Springs, N. Y., are doing, furnished by Margaret Parker:

"The spirit in which the young Friends of Oakwood Seminary are doing definite Christian work is shown by the fact that they have a Christian Endeavor Society of sixty-three members which has raised $25.00 this year, a large part of which has been used in missionary work; by their four organized Sunday School classes containing about sixty-five members; and by their weekly and daily prayer meetings on both sides of the dormitory.

"In the Christian Endeavor Society they had the privilege of having Dr. George DeVol with them at one of their meetings. The three other Young People's Societies of the village met with them. A Young People's Meeting was held on Sunday morning of Yearly Meeting week. It was a meeting with neither leader nor topic. They all felt the power of God directing the messages given.

"A Sunday School is being held by members of our classes in a country school house every Sabbath afternoon. Last Christmas an entertainment was given to those children, the expenses of which were met by the Sunday School. Also a box of toys were sent to the children in a colored mission in New York City. The girls' classes have contributed to a box which is being sent to China this spring by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. The Baraca and Philathea Classes are recognized by the New York State Sunday School Union.

"There is an average attendance of fifteen in both the girls' and boys' weekly prayer meetings. Within the last few weeks prayer meetings have been held at the beginning of each day. The boys hold theirs just before breakfast and the girls immediately after breakfast. All who have attended them regularly have received much spiritual help."

There are some men and women in whose company we are always at our best. All the best stops in our nature are drawn out by their intercourse, and we find a music in our souls never there before.—Professor Henry Drummond.

"Look only at the bright side of life. Talk only of good qualities in others, and think of those things that are lofty and true."

What know we greater than the soul? On God and godlike men we build our trust.—Alfred Tennyson.

PERSONAL MENTION

Dr. Sylvester Newlin has accepted the invitation of the meeting at Pasadena, California, to remain as pastor for another year.

R. Lee Cosand has moved from Grant, Nebraska, to North Loup, Nebraska, to take pastoral charge of the North Loup and Pleasant Hill Meetings.

Edgar A. Wollam, of Cleveland, Ohio, has returned from a religious visit to Portsmouth, Virginia, taking in New England Yearly Meeting on his way home.

Bunji Kida and family have removed from Pasadena, California, to take up work among the Japanese at Santa Ana, under the care of Friends of El Modeno Monthly Meeting.

Robert C. Root, representative on the Pacific Coast of the American Peace Society, gave a very interesting address on May 17th to Friends at Pasadena, California. His subject was "The Ground of Our Hope."

Frank Cornell, pastor of the meeting at Winchester, Indiana, has been visiting recently in Canada, and attended Canada Yearly Meeting. On June 21st, he preached to a large congregation at Newmarket on the text, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven." On Thursday evening, the 18th, a reception was given him and his family in the Friends' school room at Newmarket, attended by about seventy-five persons. There were several short speeches and fitting remarks were made by Mr. and Mrs. Cornell.

AT FAIRMOUNT, INDIANA

The regular time for holding the quarterly business meeting of the Berean Class of the Fairmount Friends' Bible school, was Sabbath, June 28th. Well-filled lunch baskets were taken to the church in the morning, and at the close of the regular services the class members with a number of visitors gathered at the Academy gymnasium and enjoyed an indoor picnic. After thoroughly enjoying the eats, the time was spent in social intercourse until 2:30 when all gathered in the assembly room and listened to the quarterly reports of the different departments of work. Among other things these reports showed an enrollment of 140, an average attendance of 92, and class collections amounting to $75.50.

E. Gurney Hill, of Richmond, Indiana, then gave a splendid and inspiring address on the subject, "The Progress of Democracy in Great Britain." He told of the many reform movements that have been inaugurated there to better the condition of the middle and lower classes, and of the tremendous uplift it has wrought. This work has largely been brought about through the work and influence of the Christian men of the nation.

The address was followed by a general discussion of the subject, and it was the feeling that while our problems are somewhat different from those of our friends across the water, we have a number of very grave problems which can only be solved by the application of Christian principles in their solution. At present we have no adequate way for our Christian men to bring their influence and power to bear on these questions, and it was felt that some plans and methods should be devised for making this possible.

The most feasible thing in sight for taking up this line of work was the proposed men's conference which is now being considered by the executive committee of the Five Years Meeting, and it was decided by a unanimous vote to urge the calling of such a conference.

The program of the afternoon was interspersed with several selections of instrumental music rendered by young men whose parents are members of the class. By means of these social occasions and the other activities of the class, we have found that the organized Adult Bible Class is one of the very effective means of reaching persons of mature years who have never yet identified themselves with the church.

AT VAN WERT, OHIO

Van Wert Meeting recently held a service for the old people which was a real success. Old songs were sung without instrument by the old people over sixty years of age. All persons over three score years, of whom there were about sixty, were seated together in one section. Abraham Springer, one of the oldest members, gave a reading entitled "Noah's Ark," which he had committed to memory more than fifty years ago. Those who were unable to walk were brought to the meeting in automobiles. The day was a great blessing, not only to the Church, but to the entire part of the city in which Friends' Meeting is located.

The Bible School at Van Wert observed Children's Day on June 14th. An excellent program was given in the morning which took the place of the regular service. The young men's class taught by Mrs. Tormohlen, had charge of the decorations. The Bible School is in a very prosperous condition.

June 21st was set apart by the Building Committee of Van Wert Meeting to raise an indebtedness of $1,000.00. About two weeks prior to this time the pastor together with two of the members, started a canvass which brought enough subscriptions by the 19th to liquidate the debt. At the services on the morning of the 21st, after scripture reading and a short talk by Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, Indiana, and a short talk by the pastor, Fred Tormohlen, the audience was given the privilege of contributing. In a very short time more than $1,200.00 had been pledged. Dinner was served at the noon hour in the basement of the church. In spite of the severe heat the afternoon and evening services were well attended, Ira C. Johnson bringing the message of the afternoon. It was a day not to be forgotten soon by Van Wert Friends.

MISSIONS AT MARION, INDIANA

Members of the First Friends' Church of Marion, Indiana, have recently had the privileges of attending a number of meetings calculated to deepen their interest in the cause of missions. On Tuesday night, May 19, the Home Mission Committee of the church, whose chairman is Mrs. Florence Wiltsie, gave a very interesting and instructive entertainment, consisting of missionary songs, recitations and exercises.

On May 27, R. Esther Smith, of California, gave a stirring address on foreign missions, giving special attention to the work in which she is engaged in Central America. On the evening of June 3, members of both Friends' Churches in Marion had the great privilege of hearing Arthur Chilson in one of his thrilling messages, dealing largely with the work in Africa. Edna Chilson also gave in song a touching reminder of God's presence with His children everywhere. We were glad also to greet their little daughters, Esther and Rachel.

At the June Quarterly Meeting held at the Second Friends' Church, we had the attendance of Jefferson and Helen Ford and Solomon Tice from Mexico. Brother Ford preached a very impressive sermon on "The Vine and the Branches." Solomon Tice was present at the Monthly Meeting of the W. F. M. S. held at the home of Mrs. Elias Bundy, June 17th. He gave a very interesting and profitable address, explaining the political situation in Mexico; and the condition and prospects of our missions there. On Sunday morning, June 21st, Charles E. Hiatt, pastor of the First Friends' Church, preached a strong, convincing missionary sermon based on the Great Commission.

GOING TO WINONA?

Are you desirous of obtaining a broader, clearer vision of the Christian message as it relates to present-day needs, and a more efficient knowledge of the best methods of church work? Do you feel a longing to be lifted up once more to the mountain tops of spiritual consciousness where the soul is refreshed and faith is renewed? Does a week of delightful fellowship with two hundred young Friends from all sections of this country and England appeal to your social instincts? Are you still young enough to tingle with eagerness at the thought of six afternoons of tennis, swimming, boating and walks through scenic woodland? In short, if you desire a week of good things for body, mind and soul, you should arrange to be at the fifth annual Winona Conference for Young Friends held at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 22 to 28.

This Conference has grown naturally and spontaneously with but little machinery of its own, and no official connection with any organization or department of church work. It has by this time embraced in its curriculum nearly all lines of religious interest and has been represented in its attendance by nearly every Yearly Meeting in the world.

Winona is a popular summer resort, a chautauqua center of much prominence, and the greatest rallying ground for Christian workers in the West. The Friends' Conference is held at the second largest hotel, located on the lake shore a half mile from the center of the grounds. The mornings are occupied in small groups of study classes and open conferences, the afternoons are given over to recreation, and the evenings are the occasion of strong inspirational addresses. The delegates have rooms, take their meals, and hold meetings in the one building, furnishing opportunity for a rare fellowship. Missions, Bible study, methods of church work, and our own denominational problems form the basis for the class work which is conducted by some of the ablest Friends from both sides of the Atlantic. Three periods of four class groups offer a wide range of both subjects and leaders. The morning opens with a devotional period and closes with an open forum on topics of interest to all. The evening addresses will be given this year by Ellison R. Purdy, of Wilmington, Ohio, and Charles Woodman, of Portland, Maine.

Study clasps hands with frolic, meetings of great profit alternate with wholesome sport, and all is hallowed by a spirit of warm fellowship with God and with one another. This year's program includes among its leaders Raymond Whitwell, Robert Davis, Sylvia Marriage and Ethel Crawshaw, of England; and Charles Woodman, Herman Newman, William O. Mendenhall, Willard O. Trueblood, William J. Sayers, Ellison Purdy, Thomas E. Jones, Vincent Nicholson, Edith Hunt and Esther Balderstone, representing seven Yearly Meetings of this country.

For information as to rates and details of the Conference, address Lillian E. Hayes, Secretary, Dunreith, Indiana. Those who wish rooms in Kosciusko Lodge should send in their applications immediately together with the $2.00 fee for ticket admitting to the Winona grounds and all phases of the Friends' Conference. * * *

COMMENCEMENT SEASON AT WHITTIER COLLEGE

One often hears the remark, "Why do they call it commencement when it is really the end?" This year, in a peculiar manner the spirit of commencement and activity was abroad. It has been a new year to us in more ways than one, for this is the first one that we have been a purely collegiate school, with no preparatory department. That this has proved successful from a numerical standpoint, the following statement will prove. There never have been in the history of the school and College but three years when the total attendance was larger than last year. In our College classes we have made a gain of twenty per cent.

A second feature of our commencement spirit was the careful re-organization of our student body, which during the past year has been acting under a new and more centralized constitution. It was an impressive sight on the morning of the last chapel exercise to see the officers and heads of departments all duly installed, with plans formulated for the summer and autumn campaign. The same spirit pervaded our Christian Associations which have been very active during the past year.

On Friday evening, June 5th, we listened to an interesting program by the Athenaeum Society. On Saturday evening, President and Mrs. Newlin opened their house to the students, alumni, faculty and board of directors in honor of the graduating class. The house was beautifully decorated in purple and gold, the college colors, and scarlet and white, the colors of the class.

Our baccalaureate services were held at 4:00 p. m. on Sabbath and were largely attended by the friends of the college from all the churches of Whittier. Dr. E. P. Ryland, pastor of the M. E. Church of Hollywood, near Los Angeles, preached a most impressive sermon on the importance of spirituality in education. The evening services were conducted by the Christian Associations of the college. After an account of the work by Walter Cammack and Erma Sams, the respective presidents, the message of the evening was given by Dr. Sylvester Newlin, of Pasadena.

A new feature of the class day exercises on Monday, June 8th, was a lawn fete on the lower campus. After the presentation of the class gift, a much needed bulletin board, we were invited to a cafeteria supper over which the class presided. This afforded a very pleasant social hour and was enjoyed by many who could not leave business earlier in the day. In the evening the class presented Miss Elizabeth Lum and Mrs. C. F. Baldwin in the reading of "Enoch Arden."

On commencement morning the class was entertained at breakfast by the faculty, a custom which, having been adopted during the last four years, has proven a very pleasant one. At ten twenty the academic procession marched from the girls' cottage across the campus and entered the auditorium, which was already full almost to overflowing. The address of the day, by Dr. John Balcom Shaw, of Los Angeles, on "Literature and Life," was full of wit and humor but chiefly characterized by its practical commonsense and direct bearing on the problems and life of today. After an impressive address by President Thomas Newlin, Dr. W. V. Coffin, President of the Board, conferred the degree of B. A. upon a class of ten, consisting of seven young women and three young men. The company then repaired to the gymnasium, where a bounteous repast was served by the Ladies' Auxiliary. After luncheon with Professor L. J. Muchmore as toast master, toasts were responded to by Marian Plummer, class of 1914; Glen Lewis, class of 1915, Dr. Shaw, Lydia Jackson, and others. With the alumni banquet in the evening, the commencement week closed and we separated in the best of spirits and with the best of prospects for meeting again in the Fall, as most of our students are hard at work on ranches, in restaurants and print shops, in sugar factories and orange groves, earning the money to carry them through another year.

WILMINGTON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT WEEK

Commencement week exercises were held at Wilmington College June 7-11.

The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Morton C. Pearson, Secretary of Church Federation of Indianapolis, on "The Challenge of the Hour." It was an excellent sermon, full of inspiration and enthusiasm for meeting present day needs.

The class day exercises occurred Monday morning on the campus and the class play in the evening in the auditorium.

The reception given in honor of the seniors Tuesday afternoon by President and Mrs. Hodgkin, added a most delightful event to commencement week.

Alumni day, Wednesday, was one of the best and most enthusiastic which the graduates have enjoyed. The business meeting was held in College Hall at 5:00 p.m. At 6:30 the class of 1909 entertained the alumni association at a banquet in the gymnasium, a number of toasts were given and it was a delightful evening for every one.

Dr. Elbert Russell delivered the commencement address to the graduating class of thirteen members, Thursday morning. He gave a masterly address and it is being given credit as one of the best ever heard on such an occasion in Wilmington.

At the close of the commencement exercises the Old Student Union enjoyed a basket dinner on the campus and a program of speeches and songs in the afternoon. The organization of the Wilmington College Union was perfected at this meeting. This Union purposes to keep alive an enthusiasm in the old students and extend the interest of Wilmington College.

The College has closed a successful year, and the President, faculty and the managers are to be congratulated on the spirit that prevails and the good prospects for the future. It is generally believed that the new plan of management and control will greatly benefit the institution and the outlook is considered the very best for the success and continued influence of Wilmington College.

THE MOHAWK TRAIL

By Marjorie Hill Allee

A very interesting pageant commemorating the historical happenings of the Mohawk trail and celebrating the almost completed state highway over that road, was given in a North Adams, Massachusetts, park last week. The events portrayed ranged from Indian treaties and colonial battles to the visit of Hawthorne in 1838.

It was noteworthy that, although there is no longer a Friends' meeting in the country toured, Quakers were given a very prominent part of the Mohawk trail history. One entire episode represented the settling of Friends from Rhode Island, and another romantic episode set forth the conversion of a young British officer to Quakerism through his love for a Quaker girl, that was founded on a traditional story to that effect. This episode was given by descendants of Friends. The ancestral names given in the program show several Hathaways, Powers, Anthonys, Potters, Braytons, Laphams and Uphams.

The procession of the nations ended the pageant. Each nation's representatives carried a symbol of what they believed to be their most important contribution to the commonwealth. The Jews, for instance, carried tables of stone engraved with the ten commandments. The English-speaking nations bore testimony to the moving power of a Quaker principle by marching under a banner lettered "Peace" carried by Quaker women in plain dress.

The old Friends' meeting house in Adams was kept open and on exhibition throughout the week. I could but think during the performance what a very interesting and instructive National Road Pageant, Richmond, Indiana, could give, using the same plan.

Williamstown, Mass., June 22, 1914.

ENGLISH YOUNG FRIENDS

As previously announced, a small party of English young Friends are now in America. They are receiving a warm welcome from both the young and old in the various places that are being visited. They were scheduled to be at the Haverford School June 26-29. From July 1-20 they visited the middle west including Pittsburgh, Blue River, Pendleton, Richmond, Cincinnati and Iowa. They are expected to attend the Winona Conference July 26-29 and will be at Pocono and Buckhill Falls, Pennsylvania, July 31 to August 5. They are booked for Whittier Guest House at Hampton Falls, New Hampshire, August 5-12 and have Tramps August 21-31. September 2-9 they will be at Saratoga, New York, and at Toronto, Canada, September 9-12.

This party consists of Raymond Whitwell, Robert Davis, Sylvia Marriage, M. Ethel Crawshaw, Margaret S. Thorp, Harriet M. Newman and James G. Douglas. They arrived at Richmond, Indiana, on July 2, and had a busy three days with Friends in the various meetings of the city. The program included a picnic for all Richmond Friends on the Earlham campus on Saturday afternoon.

SALVATION ARMY FRIEND

From the London Friend of June 19th, we learn that among the members of the Salvation Army who were drowned recently with the sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River, was Major Nettie Simco, aged fifty-one years, who was a Friend, and for thirty-three years had been an officer of the Salvation Army, going out from London years ago. She has done work for the Salvation Army in Paris and helped to establish the work in a number of European cities. Her last seventeen years were spent in Canada. She is described as a powerful exponent of the Bible and had great success as a holiness teacher.

HIT THE SPOT

Postum Knocked Out Coffee Ails

There's a good deal of satisfaction and comfort in hitting upon the right thing to rid one of the varied and constant ailments caused by coffee drinking.

"Ever since I can remember," writes an Ind. woman, "my father has been a lover of his coffee, but the continued use of it so affected his stomach that he could scarcely eat at times.

"Mother had coffee-headache and dizziness, and if I drank coffee for breakfast I would taste it all day and usually go to bed with a headache.

"One day father brought home a pkg. of Postum recommended by our grocer. Mother made it according to directions on the box and it just "hit the spot." It has a dark, seal-brown color, changing to golden brown when cream is added, and a snappy taste similar to mild, high-grade coffee, and we found that its continued use speedily put an end to all our coffee ills.

"That was at least ten years ago and Postum has, from that day to this, been a standing order of father's grocery bill.

"When I married, my husband was a great coffee drinker, altho he admitted that it hurt him. When I mentioned Postum he said he did not like the taste of it. I told him I could make it taste all right. He smiled and said, try it. The result was a success, he wont have anything but Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms: Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. Made in the cup with hot water—no boiling. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

July 19

Subject.—Blind Bartimaeus.

Lesson.—Mark 10: 46-52.

Golden Text.—Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing.—Isa. 35: 5, 6.

Time.—Last of March A.D. 30.

Place.—Jericho.

The value of the lesson is not alone in the miracle performed. It is a fine lesson in social service, descriptive of the attitude which the Christian world should sustain to the millions who are blinded by sin and know not God, and to those who need help that they may be rescued from the degradation of the slums and the captivity of disease.

Note the persistence of this son of Timaeus. His appeal, amounting perhaps almost to a shriek, evidencing the agony of his desire for sight no less than his faith in Christ's ability to heal, was probably greatly annoying to the multitudes who were hanging on the footsteps of Jesus. It was unconventional, and undoubtedly a disturbance of the peace, and as a result many chided him for his annoyance.

But here was a man in trouble and that is always Jesus' opportunity. Amid the buzzing conversation all about him Jesus catches this new note, the cry of a man in distress, and beggar though he was, he becomes as always, the recipient of Divine help.

Bartimaeus is typical of the needy world that is without Christ and therefore needing mercy and salvation. He was but echoing the cry of the millions who are calling out of the darkness of the ages for help.

Luke records this event as occurring when Jesus was approaching Jericho, while Mark locates it at the time of his leaving the city. We are sure at least that it was just outside the city. Matthew mentions two blind men. Mark evidently has remembered only the particular case or has deemed it the only one worthy of record.

Note the effect upon the blind man. He immediately became a follower of Jesus. It is the law of salvation. The first desire of the redeemed soul is to tell some friend or associate, or perhaps some relative about it.

Want Ads in THE AMERICAN FRIEND are proving their worth by bringing answers. Terms given upon application.

Friends wishing board in Boston during the month of July may be accommodated in a private family near the Park, near Friends' Meeting, and convenient to car lines. MARY A. GÖVE, 259 Harold Street, Grove Hall, Mass.

ROOMS FOR RENT.

Visitors to Washington, D. C., preferring lodgings in a Friend's home near Friends' Church (Orthodox), accommodated. Every convenience; excellent board near. Cars direct from Union Station. C. H. HALL, 1117 Lamont St., N. W.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic.—Faithful in Little Things.—Luke. 16: 10-13.

The lesson text should be studied with great care, for therein are the embodiment of great truths.

Faithfulness in the small things establishes confidence, and confidence prepares the way for a larger stewardship.

It is the common every-day things of life that reveal character more than the great and occasional exploits.

Living every hour and every moment in harmony with the will of the Father counts for more by far than the spasmodic service which some men are ready to render upon state occasions.

No man can follow two opposite ideals in life. It is impossible to serve both God and mammon. Faithful obedience to a fixed purpose determines one's real worth and establishes character.

Constancy in life is the ideal. "If you undertake to do a thing do it." Faithfulness in details will produce results.

As applied to business and secular life, faithfulness in the small things are essential. As applied to the Christian life, they are indispensable as being vital to the establishment of Christian character. He that is faithful in the small things will be made ruler over greater things.

SUPPLYING NEEDY FIELDS

The evangelistic and church extension department of New England Yearly Meeting is making an effort to supply needy fields within its territory. A most interesting survey of the situation in most of the small meetings was reported to the recent Yearly Meeting, and the burden of their condition laid upon the hearts of the membership.

The Committee with Thomas Wood as Chairman has arranged with eight young men from Guilford and Wilmington Colleges to spend the summer in New England in Christian and pastoral work. These were all in attendance at the recent Yearly Meeting at Vassalboro, and each responded to an introduction with brief remarks. They will be located for the summer as follows:

Silas J. Lindley at Amesbury, Massachusetts; David E. Henley at East Vassalboro, Maine; Paul S. Kennett at Unity, Maine; Yuo Waln at Manchester, New Hampshire; Louis C. Moone, Allens Neck, Massachusetts; Edwin Duffey at Central Village, Massachusetts; Luther E. Warren at Henniker, New Hampshire; Willard H. Stowe at North Weare, New Hampshire.

Of the above the first three named are from Guilford College, and the other five from Wilmington College.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

ONE SECTION, well improved with quarter section adjoining. All under cultivation. Good house and stables, good water. Seven miles from Friends' Church, two and one-fourth miles from railroad station. All level, no waste land; heavy chocolate loam; clay subsoil. This tract can be bought very reasonably on easy terms.

ONE-HALF SECTION, 165 acres under cultivation. School house on land. Five miles from Friends' Church, three miles from railroad station. All good heavy sod, no waste land. This can be bought very reasonably, only $500.00 per quarter cash if desired, balance on very easy terms.

The above land is all owned by one man and is the very best of land. These farms were bought when land was very cheap. As the owner does not need the money, he will sell on very easy terms. They are excellent properties. For further information, address

"In the Breaking of Bread"

BY JENNIE E. HUSSEY

He had gone away from his loved ones,
The Teacher and Friend divine,
And they sorely were disappointed
Through failure to find a sign
Of the glorious earthly kingdom
They had thought he would usher in,
To rule over Jew and Gentile,
And Israel's redemption win.

In the hush of the purple twilight,
Along a familiar road
Came two of the Lord's disciples,
And, nearing their night's abode,
A Stranger was walking with them
And talking of what was done
To him whom their hearts had trusted
To crown as the coming One.

Constraining the Stranger's favor
To share in their late repast,
There brooded a holy silence
As oft in the days now past;
While he who had fed five thousand,
In blessing the meal now spread,
Revealed to their holden vision,
"Was known in the breaking of bread."

I think we may find a lesson
For the life of the present day,
As daily we come in contact
With strangers along our way.
In homes, or in public places,
If grace before meals be said,
We, too, as our Lord's disciples,
May be "known in the breaking of bread."

To New Subscribers

We are already out of copies of The American Friend, issue of July 2. New subscribers under the special low rate offer, will be credited to receive the paper for a full six months from the first issue they receive. This rule will apply to all new ones sent, up to the first of August.

An Extension of Time—Something to be Read by All

Apparently a number of meetings are just beginning to respond to our appeal on a low rate special offer for new subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

For this reason and because many meetings have not yet reported, we are constrained to continue this campaign until August 1.

All new subscriptions mailed to us at the special trial rate of 50 cents for six months, on or before August first, will be credited on our books for a full six months.

In holding this offer open a little longer, we want to appeal to Friends in every meeting that has not yet responded to this appeal, to take the matter up at once, and make the effort to get at least one new subscriber for every 20 members.

This means more to THE AMERICAN FRIEND than we can put into words. If Friends in every meeting will take up this matter at once, we can increase our list by a few thousand by August first, instead of by a few hundred.

One meeting of 36 members took up a little offering one Sabbath, and secured enough to send the paper to three new families. Another had the matter presented in the Adult Bible Classes on a given Sabbath, with the result that forty new subscriptions were taken.

We do not believe there are fifty meetings in America where some new subscriptions could not be taken under this special offer, by having it announced on Sabbath, and by having some one to make the canvass during the next two or three days.

The success of this enterprise to publish a paper under the auspices of the Five Years Meeting will depend in large measure upon the activity of all our meetings in this particular campaign, for if meetings and interested Friends will not respond to an offer like this, they can hardly be depended upon for continuous backing.

About one out of every twelve meetings have responded to this appeal thus far, and fully half of these are meetings that have responded liberally to former appeals. It shows what can be done when some one takes the trouble to work at it a little.

Let this be an appeal to every interested Friend in every meeting to see that a canvass is made, if it has not already been attended to.

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT.

Membership in 1914

So far as reported this year, there is a healthy net gain in the membership of Friends. What showing other Yearly Meetings will make we cannot forecast at this time. We have not yet received the report from Canada. The following comparisons of statistics in Yearly Meetings reported thus far in 1914 will be interesting.

Saving the Community

In every community, within easy reach of the Church, are numbers of men, women and children living irreligious lives. Do we ever realize that the eternal welfare of these persons is dependent upon what we may say or do? Do we ever face the fact that these may lose their immortal souls unless we bring the Gospel in some way to them? Among the great majority of Christians there would seem to be little real passion for the salvation of souls.—United Presbyterian.

The Turks and Greeks

It will not be at all surprising if war should break out again between Greece and Turkey. Greece is reported to be greatly disturbed and even incensed over the recurring news of Turkish outrages upon Greek subjects at various points, and the news comes that the Greeks are already retaliating.

The Salvation Army

The magnitude of the Salvation Army movement is almost startling. At their international congress held in London last month, delegates to the number of two thousand assembled from fifty-eight countries.

The Presence of the Living Christ

The most important fact that can be revealed to the consciousness of man is the fact of a living Christ. It was the certainty of this that gave boldness to the Apostles, that sent Paul out as the untiring missionary evangel to the Gentile world, that filled the early Church with holy zeal. It was the rediscovery of this fact that rescued Christianity from the maze of formalism with which it had been enveloped, that brought great peace of soul and satisfying contentment to George Fox as he groped blindly after truth, and that today is marking the rebirth of the Christian Church and giving new emphasis to its tasks of world evangelization.

He who knows only the Christ of history and who has failed to find Him as a living personality, revealing Himself in vital power to the life of this generation has missed connection with the most important fact of the ages. To John on Patmos there appeared "one like unto a son of man," who proclaimed, "I am the first and the last, and the living one; and I was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore."

That wonderful fourteenth chapter of John is not the message of a dead Christ. "I will not leave you desolate; I come unto you. Yet a little while, and the world beholdeth me no more; but ye behold me; because I live, ye shall live also." By the agency of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, who is to abide with His people forever, Christ is to be revealed as a living Presence to every heart that is open to receive the truth. With what joy there comes to us the consciousness that He is "Closer to us than breathing, Nearer than hands or feet."

The Richmond declaration of faith bears testimony to the living presence of Jesus, in the following words: "We would, with humble thanksgiving, bear an especial testimony to our Lord's perpetual dominion and power in His Church. Through Him the redeemed in all generations have derived their light, their forgiveness and their joy. * * * He dwells in their hearts by faith, and gives them (true members of the church) of His peace." "Wherefore also he is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

The indwelling of the living Christ and His revelation to human consciousness through the operations of the Holy Spirit is not a problem to be solved by the psychologist, but a vital experience to be tested and realized by every one who by faith and through prayer seeks the Savior with an open mind to receive the truth. Call, if you will, the roll of the religious heroes of the Christian era. Every one has first caught a vision of the living Christ and in the power of that relationship has gone out as an evangel of truth to win other men and women to the same satisfying knowledge of the Son of God. It is the unveiling of Christ in his transfiguration glory that furnishes the heart equipment for any and every task of the Christian life. It is the consciousness of the living Christ within that is not only the anchor of hope for personal salvation, but is the incentive for any service that may be undertaken in the name of discipleship for the uplift and regeneration of others.

No one is fitted to serve in the up-building of the Master's kingdom until Jesus Christ has been welcomed to his rightful seat in the throne chamber of the heart. Some one has said that "Christ has in his girdle the key of all the problems of time and eternity." It is the living Christ who is the solution of every problem wherein the Church has a vital relationship with the world. In the light of present day opportunities, the Christian Church is facing its severest test. Upon every hand it is being commanded to make good its claim of being God's agency in the regeneration of the world. Sin has wrought deadly havoc in every avenue of human life, and in the readjustment of the social order, no less than in the renovation of individual lives, men and women of the Christian faith must necessarily play a leading part.

In the midst of perplexing problems that tax human ingenuity to the utmost, it is the inspiration and power of the living Christ that will bring victory where defeat seemed inevitable. The Edinburgh Conference, the revival of the Church in all Christian lands, the awakening world itself can be accounted for only by the fact of a living Christ operating in human life.

"For I doubt not through the ages
One increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened
With the process of the suns," is a bit of optimistic philosophy which is true in no sense except that the living presence of Christ is in the world and by the agency of the Holy Spirit is operating upon human life in all generations as the mainspring of happiness and power and blessing, impelling men and women to righteous living and Christian service. "No scheme that leaves the Divine Master out of consideration will ever solve our vexatious social problems," or any other important problem for that matter.

Millions of men and women are toiling life's weary road with sad faces and discouraged hearts. They should be bidden to look up and behold the risen Christ, who is "alive forevermore." Let us seek Him with open, longing hearts, and having found Him it will be our delight to reveal Him to others. It is the presence of the living Christ enthroned in human life that is the hope of the world.

The Unity of Friends—II

In a recent issue of this paper we suggested the possibility and even desirability of a closer union of American, English and Irish Friends. We have no doubt that to many, perhaps to the majority, the suggestion at first thought seems visionary and wholly impracticable. For two centuries and a half we have pursued our separate ways, bound together for the most part only by the ties of an annual correspondence and the consciousness of a common origin. In the case of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting we have been denied even the relationship of epistolary greetings.

Why, many will ask no doubt, should there be even the suggestion of the disturbance of fixed relationships? Friends have wrought nobly in the past, and we of this generation possess a goodly heritage. Why risk the possibility of differing judgments in the effort to find a somewhat common basis of procedure?

These are pertinent questions, but they ignore the present day trend of Christian responsibilities and activities. For centuries the progress of Christianity was characterized by the provincial spirit. For the most part it operated along community lines or at most along national lines. The Church for ages has borne the local stamp, and denominational characteristics have been determined largely by national characteristics.

But the old order changeth. The evolution of missions has brought a new era to the world. The Christian Church is facing a new epoch. The whole world is waking under the inspiration of the preaching of a gospel that is for all men without distinction of race or nationality. Men are thinking today in world terms and are speaking in world terminology. Religion knows no confines of national boundary lines. Within a generation the whole earth has become a mighty brotherhood, and the parable of the good Samaritan has taken on a world-wide meaning.

It was inevitable that the missionary movement begun a century ago should culminate in the changed relationships of this new epoch. The Church has been slow to recognize fully the meaning of the command "to preach the gospel to the whole creation," while the opportunity to obey the command has developed even more slowly. But at last the task of the Church has become a world task. Local problems have grown to the magnitude of international problems. Home missions and foreign missions are being merged into a mighty plan for world evangelization.

Quakerism may be propagated for a while in sections, perhaps indefinitely, but in an age like this, with world-wide opportunities and tasks waiting for the touch of constructive Christian service, it is deplorable that any body of believers should be satisfied with a mere existence.

"We have hard work to do,
And loads to lift,"

and the equipment for service must be adequate to the magnitude of the service. Can the Society of Friends best serve this age and can it best prepare its heirs for the tasks that await them in succeeding generations by operating in detached sections? That is the problem which we must face and solve, within the next few years. That it is a difficult problem is the greater reason why Friends should at least begin to face it.

It is significant that within the past eighteen months there has been so much of friendly visitation on the part of young Friends both of America and of England and Ireland. It marks an epoch in our denominational history, that forecasts a closer and more friendly relationship within the immediate future. It is unthinkable that these visitations, which give promise of being continued, shall result only in emphasizing our points of difference. Shall we not hope that they will result rather in helping the whole Church to see with clearer vision the common tasks to which Friends all over the world are being called?

We welcome the deputation of young Friends from England and Ireland, now in this country, not only for their own sakes, but as evidence of a gratifying tendency toward a closer fellowship and therefore a more efficient service in the life of the Society of Friends. Is it impossible of belief that some day there shall exist a composite Quaker life which will have incorporated into one body the best of all its constituent parts? If not, then why shall we pass on to succeeding generations a problem like this, when the spirit of this age is calling loudly for a consolidation of our activities as a prerequisite to a larger life and a more efficient service in the cause of our Christ?

"In Spirit and Truth"

BY L. OSCAR MOON

The Samaritan woman had renewed the ancient dispute between the Jews and her own race—"Where shall men worship, at Zion or Gerizim? Here within sight of the mount that lays rival claim to Jehovah worship what sayst thou, prophet of the dispute of centuries?"

Back from this well known conversation history links us with Jacob and the herdsman, when Joseph was a lad in his coat of many colors. It was here under the tutelage of a large family that Jacob doubtless learned the evil consequences of selfishness and duplicity as he once practiced it upon his father and others and acquired the traits of heroism and spiritual aspiration that marked his later life. And here the ancestors of the Samaritan woman, under the instruction of Manasseh, the apostate Jewish priest and exile, had learned to worship the Jehovah of the Jews with a form that was copied from Mount Zion and with a common sacred literature.

What strange diversities of belief and spirit emanate from a common source! The Samaritans were a mixed race and may not for this reason have formed a Jehovah worship as incorrupt nor adhered to it as faithfully as did the Jews, but the fact remains that they counted themselves children of the patriarchs and their religion the religion of the patriarchs, and for six centuries the controversy had passed on unsettled from parents to children awaiting the answer of one who could "speak with authority."

With superb patriotism Christ defends the claims of Mount Zion and his own people and with equal discrimination casts aside the superficial question of place and form for the fundamental question of the content of worship. What advantage in its environment or the history of its substance remains unattained? To worship a place, a tradition, a national prejudice, is to rob Him who is seeking the worship of loyal hearts both in Judea and Samaria, and alas! too often finding them not, because their tradition and prejudice hide them from Him.

The woman, like the "helpless pampered parasites of the pew" of whom Drummond wrote, failed to understand that worship is an exercise instead of a form and cannot be allowed to crystallize into a rite nor be delegated to a proxy, because it is the fundamental act of heart religion.

What is worship? Is it reverence? Yes, and more. Adoration? Yes, and more. Prayer, praise, affectionate thanksgiving? Yes, all these and still more. Worship is no less than an intelligent recognition of the supreme goodness that compels us to give ourselves to its pursuit until we become one with our Father "in spirit and truth." Hence it is an inward process and is not subject to the trappings of Zion or Gerizim, temple or cathedral.

To practice this interpretation of worship is to turn any place where the hungry soul finds food into an holy place. It is to make the sanctuary of one's heart his Zion, and, upon his approach to set "every common bush aflame with God."

One of the strongest reasons for public worship is not that men cannot worship alone nor yet that they must needs be the slaves of tradition, but that the presence of others of similar purpose lifts one to greater heights of spiritual vision. No one should deny himself such aid nor fail to profit by it. Each occasion upon which men assemble together for united worship is a possible Zion, where they may expand their knowledge of God through His self-revelation.

Such practice should hold a large place in our modern life that we may be able to discriminate the issues of right and wrong that we face. The enlargement of our sympathies for men, the intelligent apprehension of the eternal goodness, self-surrender, self-poise, self-control—these are some of the needs of our life that are met by the worship which Christ commends. Without these we cannot serve our day in righteousness as examples of integrity, honesty and truth.

A Friends' Meeting where the people unitedly discern that God is spirit and is spiritually apprehended provides the opportunity for these spiritual qualities to be born within us. No amount of expository preaching, however intelligent, no hymn singing however melodious, no processional nor ritualistic observance, nor priestly orders, nor sacred altar, nor dedicated cathedral avails if our spirits become not supremely conscious of God's spiritual qualities of goodness, wisdom, love, truth, mercy and forgiveness, and, given this consciousness, the forms that do not aid its maintenance and expansion may safely be allowed to slough away. The openness of mind and heart that frees us to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior" is more important than them all. The strengthening of our faith by face to face contact with God is one emphatic need and this must be met by vitalizing our worship through the confident expectation that God who is spirit will cause to rise afresh within us in our meetings the springs of love and truth.

"The willing abasement of creaturely pride, the concentration of the whole energies of mind and heart upon the highest ends of life, upon purity of thought and motive, upon self-forgetting love, upon Him who in Himself personified for us the Holiest instincts of Humanity—this is worship—the mingling of prayer and praise, of strife and victory, the hunger and thirst of those who wander in the wilderness, in a desert way, who have found no city of habitation, the praise of men who can thank God for His loving kindness, who have passed in His strength from victory to victory from the regions of doubt into the sunshine of knowledge, from the loneliness of spiritual isolation into the joy of conscious union with the unseen Spirit of the universe.

"In all the clamour of our modern life with its feverish pleasures and hasty judgments, its fierce scramble of the markets, its dull ennui of endowed selfishness, its social aloofness and insincerities, nay! its lust and its cruelties, is there to be no place for the quiet and peace of God?"

"Stand apart at times from outward observance and the spoken word and in the spirit of inward worship weight your life, observe its trend, realize its purpose, give your soul room to grow. * * *

"Character will be deepened and enriched, and all work, faith and life will be the stronger for such inward consciousness of God."*

Baltimore, Maryland.

Power of the Holy Spirit

(Selections from a sermon of Dr. John Timothy Stone, late Moderator Presbyterian General Assembly.)

Joseph, Moses, Joshua, Daniel, David, Elijah, John the Baptist, Stephen, Paul, were men singled out in their day as embodiments of God's Holy Spirit, men in whom the spirit of God dwelt, they were men of matchless power. Others were brilliant, individualistic, scholarly, efficient, attractive, magnanimous; but these great leaders, whom God selected were men who had more than gifts or culture; they were men of holy life, men whose secret strength came from personal contract with the Almighty, men of whom kings and peasantry cried out: "Can we find such a man as this, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?"

Moses was forced to flee to the pinnacled heights of the Sinai wilderness; Joseph was sold to the Ishmaelites by his angered brothers; David fled from cave to cave, pursued by an envying Saul; Stephen sank beneath the stones hurled by an infuriated religious sect; but the world knew and knows that these men were men of God's choice, who in life and death led in the reconstruction and reorganization of society—men who turned from human philosophy to divine truth. They were men of power.

Men have felt that the outpouring of God's Spirit upon a community has implied a great and extraordinary movement—one which is out of the ordinary, unnatural, extensive, exceptional, commanding; when the presence of God's Spirit should be the natural expression of His indwelling power, that we may accomplish the ordinary tasks of life with faithful regularity and simplicity. God does not require exceptional gifts to do His work well. Not many wise or mighty have been chosen. Many a man who has been unconscious of gifts has been used of God in the hastening of His kingdom. Ten thousand men had brighter prospects and more brilliant training than Bunyan in his Bedford jail. Spurgeon and Moody were not youths of such remarkable promise. It is not so much what a man is without the Spirit of God that counts, but what a man becomes when the Spirit of God abides within him, and God, with His power, uses man as His medium.

The world has comparatively few extraordinary tasks to perform, but it has countless ordinary tasks.

*J. W. Rowntree in "Essays and Addresses."

There are few extraordinary men, but the world is filled with ordinary men whom God can use. We have our tasks and problems, our perplexities and trials, our dangers and distresses, not only as ministers and elders, not only within our own parishes, but everywhere. But the people are willing in the day of God's power, where the Holy Spirit leads and guides the individual or church life, that His will be done and His plan accomplished. We need the vision of the Most High. We need a fuller realization of the presence of our God, to solve the problems, local and general, individual and collective, the problems within the local church and the problems within the church at large.

"What do you do," asked one of our citizens, "when you are tired and worried and overcome with fatigue—when the problems of your work mount up before you and seem to cloud the day and rob you of the hours of sleep?" He spoke to one of our great princely teachers, who replied: "I take a train and go out to the Rockies. When I see those great mountain peaks, with their snow-capped summits, their precipitous rock sides, and their noble ridges and peaks, I feel the very majesty of God crying out to me, and literally 'lift up my eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help.'"

Well, few of us can do this. The mountains are far away. But the great ranges of Divine Truth are near at hand, and the Divine Guide and Friend is ever present and near, and the power of the Holy One is with us in the person of the Holy Spirit, to comfort and direct, to poise and plan, to rest and strengthen, for in Him is the source of all strength and power, filling our lives with hope and joy and peace, and giving to us in our own humble sphere the actual power of the Almighty God, who is infinite, eternal and unchanging.

The power of God's Holy Spirit means a hopeful ministry and a joyful, peaceful life. Paul knew what perplexities and problems were, and when he closed that letter to the Roman church he wrote: "Now the God of Hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Spirit." We need a hopeful ministry, a joy-filled life, a peace which means poise, an abundant and abounding life which expresses the power of the indwelling Spirit of God. There is triumph in such character; there is permanent victory in such faith.

Discouraged men fill spiritual life with fever and ague, with anaemia and melancholia. Men and churches run from such persons as from contagious disease. All kinds of envy and jealousy, all forms of gossip and littleness, find expression in such lives. They become friendless and companionless. Frequently in their loneliness they become embittered and actually forlorn. They even abhor self-companionship. Contrary to such sad existence, we find the Spirit-filled life, with the fruit thereof evident—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, self-control. The God of Hope is filling the life "with all joy and peace in believing."

Positive convictions control lives; doubts are scattered to the four winds; men see and feel, and think and act, with the needs of others in view, and find the joyful meaning of life in service for others. The power of the Holy Spirit is manifesting itself in all kinds of personal victory; things which would annoy and trouble are quickly forgotten and overlooked and unmentioned. The power of God's Holy Spirit is personal victory every day. Men believe in their fellowmen, irrespective of weaknesses and blemishes in character. We do not lose our faith in men because men fall, because men are scoffers, or unconcerned, or inefficient.

The power of the Holy Spirit gives grace as well as faith. We read of Stephen: "He was a man filled with grace." He could pray for those who stoned him to death, and pray with a smile; thank God for the power of prayer, as he prayed for their forgiveness.—Methodist Protestant.

Troubled Mexico

About fifty miles south of Mexico City is the center of the State of Morelos. It has about three thousand square miles of area and a population of about 180,000. Here were many thousand independent land owners whose holdings were secured to them by the constitution. A state law was passed requiring every land holder to have his deed registered within a stated time. Failure to do so made his land public property, upon which anyone might file a claim and take possession.

The owners, feeling secure in their constitutional rights, let the registration go by default. Claims were filed and the former owners were duly evicted. All the agricultural land in that state is now in the hands of four men, one of whom is the son-in-law of Porfirio Diaz. Zapata, of whom so much has appeared in the papers, has espoused the cause of the evicted proprietors. But as he can have no recourse through law he has resorted to violence—hence he is an outlaw. Sometimes he has taken forcible possession of property; he is therefore, a bandit. In such a struggle to get possession men are killed by him and his party; therefore they are cutthroats.

While we as Friends, do not approve of regaining constitutional rights by insurrection and war, we can not fail to see with what ease such epithets may be applied, and seeing, cannot fail to understand with deeper sympathy the struggle going on among the Mexican people. Americans, generally, sympathize with the down-trodden and oppressed who are struggling for the same liberty for which they themselves struggled so long.

Villa, "the bandit chief," comes in for considerable public attention. While not much is known as to the ground for calling him "cutthroat," "bandit" and "outlaw chief," it may not be amiss to bear in mind some things that are known of him as a man and general. He is a total abstainer. This in itself is a remarkable thing in a country where one can scarcely find a corner in any town where intoxicating drinks are not sold. When he captures a town or city, among the first orders given is the one to close up all saloons and pour into the streets all intoxicating liquors. He tells his men that neither he nor they can afford to "muddle their brains when they have on hands such an important task." He belongs to the State of Chihuahua whose territory is almost twice that of the State of Pennsylvania. This entire state is in the hands of three men. When Villa began in the present revolution he was an ordinary peon. One day he met a man with horse and saddle, rifle and ammunition, in the public highway and robbed him of his entire outfit. He with several other spirits like himself, attacked a plantation, robbed it of all the horses and saddles, arms and ammunition and money and took along as many of the peons as cared to join him. The first use he made of his money was to send the price of the horse and saddle and the gun and ammunition to the man he had robbed in the highway. As a highway robber, he was under no obligations to the man whom he had robbed. Nevertheless, he paid him a good price for what he had taken. We may be inclined to question his manner of obtaining the money with which to do so, but his argument was that the plantation owner had not only robbed the people of their land but that he was daily robbing them of their just wages. The landlord had gotten his wealth by unfair means; Villa would use his ill-gotten gains in freeing the people from whom they had been taken originally.

The Mexican people are struggling for their constitutional rights, hence whatever of right there is in the present struggle is of necessity with the Constitutionalists. All lovers of constitutional liberty naturally sympathize with them. But we must not judge the opposite party too harshly for, whatever may be said of some of their leaders, many, who have identified themselves with that party are sincere in their belief that to support the dictatorship is the only solution of the present difficulty. It is possible that they are right. Many missionaries think they are, but whether they be right or wrong in their opinion as to the proper solution of the unfortunate political chaos in which Mexico finds herself, that chaos is the logical outcome of the religious system that fastened itself upon her generations ago, and the Mexican people are now struggling heroically to free themselves from it. This question cannot be settled by compromises nor by mediation or intervention. The disease is organic and must have constitutional treatment. The best help that any foreign nation can render is to keep hands off until the present paroxysm subsides when the innate vitality of the Mexican people will manifest itself.

"Be ready. Your business is to be ready. Have your tools well sharpened, and know how to handle them. The place will come to you, the best place for you, if you are not so much looking after that which meets your taste, as after that which proves you to be a vessel fit for the Master's use."—C. H. Spurgeon.

New England Yearly Meeting

For the second time in its rather long life, New England Yearly Meeting this year held its sessions at Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Maine. The splendid view of the Kennebec valley contrasts favorably with all the cultivated magnificence devised by park commissions, and a journey "down into Maine" at this season of the year could only be regarded as a hardship by persons physically or otherwise infirm. The fact that the dining-room of the school accommodated about three hundred persons the latter part of the week would indicate that this view prevailed among the members scattered throughout the four eastern coast states. And the "hill-top experience" of the days of fellowship does not appear to suffer by comparison with other similar occasions in ancient and modern times.

Among visiting ministers and others were, Edgar Wollam, of Ohio; Thomas E. Jones, representing the Five Years Meeting's Young People's activities; S. Edgar Nicholson, editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND; Jefferson Ford, of Western Yearly Meeting and the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission; Robert L. Simkin, on furlough from English Friends' West China Mission; George Jones, of the Westtown School faculty; Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia; Yuo. Waln, Lewis C. Moon, Luther E. Warren, Willard H. Stowe, and Edward Duffy, Wilmington College student workers, together with Silas J. Lindley, David E. Henley and Paul S. Kennett, students from Guilford College.

Many of these were present without special credentials, and joined in the meetings in the way of simple fellowship without the thought of special service. In some cases the credentials consisted of recognized positions in Friends' co-operative work, in others, former association with the work of the yearly meeting, and still others the special arrangement for special work under a committee of the yearly meeting.

The routine business of the meeting was dispatched with much greater facility than in previous years, owing to the better system adopted at the close of last year's sessions, and owing also to the loyal co-operation of Friends in carrying it out. A large part of the reports of committees were printed and distributed, rendering tiresome reading unnecessary in the meetings. The program also provided a set time for the consideration of each subject or group of subjects. The practical result was not a restraint upon the expression of special concerns, for the meeting was always ready to give time according to need, but it was rather an elimination of the unprofitable prolonging of minor discussions, and the consequent lengthening of time and saving of strength to be expended upon the great issues relating to the vital welfare of the Church.

The reports on the state of society still show room for improvement, but on the whole convey information—which is their prescribed but generally unfulfilled purpose. The new system for eliciting this information by furnishing pastoral committees with lists of questions covering the subjects named in the discipline has been thus far successful. The Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, however, which has found in this problem some excuse for its continued existence, believed that further improvement could be made the coming year, and continued its committee with further instructions and suggestions. It seems not impossible that the study bestowed here may be helpful elsewhere in solving this knotty question.

Measuring the state of society by the membership statistics, the gradually diminishing annual loss has been turned this year into an infinitesimal gain. Last year the total number was 4,039; this year it is 4,041—a net gain of two! The usual amount of Quaker statistical uncertainty is introduced "by error of last year," but as this works both ways it seems quite fair to abide by totals and rejoice or sorrow accordingly.

The year showed an unusual loss in the number of prominent members, and the passing of these was noted by suitable memorials from their quarterly meetings. Probably the most widely known among them were Timothy B. Hussey, of North Berwick, Maine, and Charles H. Jones, of Amesbury, Massachusetts. The varied activities of these men in legislative, educational, missionary, evangelistic and institutional work, the one as a minister and the other as an elder in his riper years, gave them an especially wide acquaintance. William Wood, of Lawrence, upon whom rested a very large and well sustained responsibility in his meeting and community; H. Elizabeth Jones, whose death was only eight days removed from that of her husband; Sarah Newlin, once well-known, but for many years incapacitated by age and infirmity, and others whose lives meant everything that is good in human life in their smaller sphere, were held in grateful and honored remembrance.

The reports of educational work showed satisfactory results in Moses Brown School of Providence and Oak Grove Seminary, the latter having been for the first time in recent years, operated without a current deficit. The effort for an adequate endowment has been allowed to rest for the time being, but is to be taken up again as soon as conditions are favorable to a completion of the task.

Wilbur K. Thomas, of Boston, after long and effective service as superintendent of Bible School work, was allowed to resign that work in order to do justice to the larger activities of the American Friends' Bible School Board, and Perry Macy, a graduate of Pacific College and Hartford Theological Seminary, and pastor of the meeting at South China, Maine, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

The committee on Suppression of the Liquor Traffic, by authority of the Yearly Meeting, prepared a resolution commending the governor of Maine for his earnest and able efforts to enforce the prohibitory law, and another requesting senators and representatives from the states and districts in which the Yearly Meeting is represented, to favor the movement for national constitutional prohibition. Both of these were adopted unanimously by a rising vote.

The work of the committee on "Moral Education, a pioneer movement among departments of Friends' work, has been carried on earnestly for several years past, through the distribution of literature and personal effort, both for individuals and groups needing instruction in avoided subjects and encouragement in maintaining a high standard of thought and life.

The report of the Foreign Mission Board was received with an interest especially marked. At no session was there a more decided blending of interests than in the prolonged but harmonious discussion which followed it. The great attention given in this connection to the thought of stewardship and the financial end of foreign missionary work demonstrated the spiritual character and quality inherent in the right administration of earthly treasure. So great was the insistence upon the annual pledge and weekly contribution for the entire expense of the work, that it was with considerable hesitancy that the meeting decided to accept subscriptions made in open meeting for the wiping out of a deficit. A very short time with no urging brought the needed amount, given in the genuine spirit of gospel gladness.

A corresponding advance was made in the manner in which the meeting considered the claims of Evangelistic and Church Extension work. Thomas Wood, of Boston, was reappointed to his ninth year of capable executive oversight, and will take up his duties again with a stronger sense of the backing of the membership, and the expectation of greater activity on the part of his committee.

The most far-reaching action of the Yearly Meeting, carried without a dissenting voice, was the appointment of a Committee of Direction, authorized to secure a competent Field Secretary for the Yearly Meeting, whose duty it shall be to co-operate with all committees in their field work, and make a detailed study of conditions in every locality, and of the best means of meeting them.

On the Sabbath, a liberal sum was contributed at various meetings, for the benefit of the congregation at Salem, Massachusetts, whose house of worship was destroyed two or three days previously in the disastrous fire that swept over a large portion of that historic city.

The devotional spirit, the cultivation of which is sometimes too much crowded out by business even in our religious assemblies, was everywhere in evidence. The deepening of spiritual life and interest in local meetings doubtless contributed its part to this result. The young people's movement as it has been represented at yearly meeting time for several years past has been reinforced by the development of student and other workers of growing strength. The number of visiting recorded ministers with minutes for service was small, and so was the number of sermons delivered during the week-days; but the morning devotional meetings were largely attended and participated in, as times of general prayer and praise, greatly to the help of all. The frequent young people's meetings for social and spiritual fellowship on the lawn at dusk, about the camp-fire before retiring, and by the road or riverside in the half-day's outing which has become a regular feature of the week, brought many heart-searching and mellowing thoughts to bear upon plastic lives. The committee in charge of gospel services performed its work in a most prayerful spirit, seeking to know the mind of the Lord rather than to make perfunctory assignments, and to impress upon all who assumed leadership in meetings for worship the definiteness of the purpose to be aimed at in each such meeting.

By no means the least force ministering to the fostering of this spirit in the meeting, was the service of Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, in the half-hour Bible address given just before the close of each morning business session. These addresses set forth with extraordinary clearness and force the inner life as taught and exemplified by patriarch, prophets and the Savior, and as applied to the needs of us all.

California Yearly Meeting

The twentieth annual session of California Yearly Meeting convened at Whittier, June 23, 1914, at 2:00 p.m. The attendance at the opening was large. Among the visiting Friends, with and without minutes, were Lewis E. and Anna Stout, William L. Pearson, Florence E. Smith, and A. Walter and Estella Leonard, of Kansas Yearly Meeting; George D. and Sarah E. Weeks, and Margaret Sharpless, of Nebraska Yearly Meeting; and Charles E. and Imelda A. Tebbetts and Jennie Ridgway, of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Lewis E. Stout and Charles E. Tebbetts rendered conspicuous service in the various general and special sessions.

John Chawner, Mabel H. Douglas, and Susan H. Johnson were continued as Clerks and the business was dispatched with the usual promptness.

The statistical report showed a net gain of 222 members. A new Monthly Meeting of fifteen members has been organized in Arizona, not far from Maricopa. There will be a slight rearrangement of the location of pastors, but all will remain in the Yearly Meeting. John T. Hadley was retained as Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work. As last year, the Bible School work is to be superintended by John T. Hadley, the two departments being temporarily combined. The Friends' Quarterlies were commended. Bible School reports show 3,303 pupils enrolled; 192 in Cradle Roll Department.

Two new Mission stations have been opened the past year, one at Oksik, Alaska, under the care of Wilson H. and Lucy Cox, and one at Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras, to which point I. H. and Dorothy Cammack have been transferred from Chiquimula, Guatemala. Altogether, more than forty missionaries, American and native (including those laboring among the Mexicans and Japanese in California), are working under the direction of California Friends. Missionary offerings last year totaled $15,053, a per capita offering of $4.25, or $5.33 for the members above fifteen years of age. An inspiring Missionary meeting was held on Sabbath afternoon, when the needs of the fields in the north and the south were set forth, and the Volunteers told of their call to Foreign Missions. Benjamin S. Coppock was reappointed Superintendent of Missions. The Women's Foreign Missionary Union elected Rhoda M. Hare, President, and devoted much of the time of its meetings to consideration of the work among Spanish speaking people, and especially the school and home for Mexican girls in Whittier. The usual meeting for the Japanese was held on Sabbath afternoon, when they were addressed in their own language. Reports show thirteen Japanese converted to Christianity during the year.

The Yearly Meeting adopted resolutions commending President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan for their peace policies, with a request that in the future all international questions be referred to The Hague tribunal. The Superintendent of Peace, Robert C. Root, is engaged in a six weeks' series of Peace lectures in the summer school of the University of Southern California (M. E.).

A chorus of fifty young Friends from Long Beach added enthusiasm to the temperance session. Resolutions were adopted endorsing the state and national prohibitory amendments. Friends have entered vigorously into the campaign for "California Dry in 1914." The department of the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic was voted ten times the usual appropriation and the superintendent, Andrew F. Mitchell, encouraged to push the work as much as possible. Every afternoon the children were gathered into a meeting of their own, where they were entertained and instructed by means of chalk talks, one of the topics being "California Dry."

In the public session of the Christian Endeavor Union fifty-five young people pledged themselves to read the entire Bible before next Yearly Meeting. Edwin M. Stanton will be Superintendent of Young People's Work the coming year.

Whittier College reported an increase in the number of students since the complete elimination of the preparatory department. Intellectual and spiritual progress was noted. Deputations of students have very acceptably visited some of the meetings. Notable improvements to the college grounds have been made by the Woman's Auxiliary. Thomas Newlin has begun his eighth year as President of the College.

Two meetings were held one evening under the auspices of the Department of Social Service. The men enjoyed a banquet in the M. E. Church, and heard a discussion of the possibilities of Christian Social Service; the women had a social meeting and lap supper in the bungalow, and took up a number of subjects of special interest to mothers and home-makers. Dr. William V. Coffin was continued as superintendent of this department, with Martha C. King as assistant. A strong sentiment was expressed in the Yearly Meeting favoring the proposed Men's Conference.

Friends were urged to subscribe for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and rally in every way to its support. Amos M. Kenworthy was liberated for gospel service in England and Ireland, in 1915, if way opens. An epistle was addressed to Friends in Japan, assuring them of the sympathy and friendship of California Friends. Memorials were read for three ministers deceased during the year, Amanda Way, Margaret Mendenhall and Richard Gregory. After being confined at home by illness for more than two months, John Henry Douglas was able to attend most of the Yearly Meeting sessions.

An interesting event of Yearly Meeting week at Whittier was the Penn College reunion, which is hereafter to be an annual affair. Of the seventy-five in attendance, one was a member of the first Freshman class, four were former members of the Board of Trustees, and nine were former members of the faculty. These latter were Charles E. Tebbetts, John Chawner, Absalom Rosenberger, Florabel Patterson Rosenberger, Elmer H. Gifford, Susan H. Johnson, H. Edwin McGrew, William L. Pearson and Olnie C. Albertson. Of the dozen or more alumni, George D. Weeks was the only one from outside the state. All three clerks of the Yearly Meeting were present, Mabel H. Douglas having been a Penn student for a time. The missionaries of the company were A. and F. Rosenberger, of Palestine; Anna Hunnicutt Foster, of Alaska, and Margaretta M. Sein, for twenty-five years a missionary in Mexico, now temporarily residing with her family at 139 South Soto Street, Los Angeles, awaiting the settlement of present Mexican disturbances. Parents of thirty-six graduates took part in the interchange of reminiscences.

California Yearly Meeting decided to open headquarters for Friends in connection with the Panama Expositions, at San Francisco and San Diego. It is hoped that all Friends visiting the expositions will take advantage of this opportunity to become acquainted. There are plans for conferences at San Francisco on Friendly topics.

The Yearly Meeting took steps toward the formulation of a new general plan for financing the work of the Church. A standing Finance Commission was authorized to devise and set in operation a uniform method for raising the funds needed for the Yearly Meeting, and the local meetings.

MARY H. LEWIS.

The power of God's Holy Spirit means a hopeful ministry and a joyful, peaceful life. Paul knew what perplexities and problems were, and when he closed that letter to the Roman Church he wrote: "Now the God of Hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Spirit." We need a hopeful ministry, a joy-filled life, a peace which means poise, an abundant and abounding life which expresses the power of the indwelling Spirit of God. There is triumph in such character; there is permanent victory in such faith.—United Presbyterian.

PERSONAL MENTION

Kirby V. Bowen was elected editor of the Nebraska Friend by the recent Nebraska Yearly Meeting.

Theodore and Estella Foxworthy are to serve the meeting as pastors, at Plainview, Nebraska, the coming year.

Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, attended Canada Yearly Meeting and also visited the meeting at Toronto on June 28th.

The report comes that the ministry of Charles E. Tebbetts is proving a great blessing to Friends in California where he is spending the summer.

Mary Sibbett, of Wichita, Kansas, gave the prohibition address at Nebraska Yearly Meeting. It was delivered in her forceful, characteristic manner and made a deep impression.

Charlotte E. Vickers, of Oak Park, Illinois, President of the Women's Foreign Mission Union, assisted in the program of the summer school of missions at Boulder, Colorado, July 7-14.

Lewis E. Stout, of Wichita, Kansas, has been visiting on the Pacific coast for the past few weeks. On one Sabbath he preached to the edification of the congregation at Pasadena, California.

J. Arthur Wollam, who has been serving the meeting as pastor at Emporia, Kansas, has accepted a call to the University Friends' Church at Wichita. The transfer will be made about October 1st.

Professor and Mrs. S. B. Laughlin, of Laurence Academy, Oklahoma, were at Beaver, Oklahoma, during the month of June; he as instructor in the Normal school, while she taught painting in water colors and oil.

Theodore Foxworthy has been chosen as General Superintendent of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of Nebraska Yearly Meeting to succeed Frank W. Dell, who expects to enter Hartford Theological Seminary in the autumn.

Charles Haworth has been serving the meeting at North Denver, Colorado, as pastor during the absence of George D. Weeks and wife, who are making a six weeks' trip on the Pacific coast, including attendance at California Yearly Meeting.

Milo S. Hinckle, pastor of Friends' Meeting at Lynn, Indiana, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the East Main Street Friends' Church, Richmond, Indiana. The transfer will be made about the first of October. Truman C. Kenworthy, who has been pastor at East Main Street, expects to give his attention to the Evangelistic and Church Extension work of Indiana Yearly Meeting the coming year.

Inez E. Batchelor, pastor of Friends' Meeting at Muscatine, Iowa, recently spent a few days at Boulder, Colorado. She preached some able sermons, on Sabbath and held a few special meetings which resulted in renewals and definite blessings.

Murray S. Kenworthy has accepted a call to remain as pastor of West Richmond Friends' Meeting for another year. His services have been greatly appreciated and he is doing a splendid work, especially among the young people and children of the meeting.

William P. and Abigail C. Haworth will retire from the supervision of Friends' Indian Missions in Oklahoma the first of November next. They will take a few months' needed rest, following which they hope to engage in some religious work which they have in mind.

Lewis T. Jones, Ph.D., who has spent a number of years studying and teaching among Friends in the central states, has been elected principal of Oak Grove Seminary at Vassalboro, Maine. He succeeds Professor LeRoy Jones, who resigned after a successful administration to accept a teaching position at Westtown School, Pennsylvania.

NEWS NOTES

At the last Monthly Meeting at Alda, Nebraska, five new members were received into the Church.

The Sabbath School at Boulder, Colorado, is increasing in attendance, and has organized a mothers' department with a membership of thirty-one.

A letter from Oklahoma says that, "Gate Quarterly Meeting will be blessed in responding to the call for subscribers to our Church paper. Pass it to your neighbors."

The news comes to us from Beaver, Oklahoma, that the Friends in the Gospel Team work are active forces in evangelistic work in the country places of that state.

An all-day meeting was held at Stuart, Iowa, on July 4th. W. S. Kitch gave a very helpful address on "Our Privileges and Duties as American Christian Citizens." The Monthly Meeting was held in the afternoon.

Friends' Meeting at Colorado Springs, together with most of the other churches, cancelled all services recently except the Bible School and united in a six weeks' "Billy Sunday Campaign," which has been doing wonders for Christianity in the Pike's Peak region.

The Young Friends interested in the coming Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 22-28, are expecting a large attendance. The delegation of young Friends from England and Ireland will be present and a strong program has been prepared.

The distressing news comes that the only Protestant Church destroyed at Salem, Massachusetts, in the recent fire, was the old Friends' meeting house. Nearly all the Friends connected with the meeting were in the burned area and lost their homes. The Sabbath School library was burned.

The annual reports made to Wilmington Monthly Meeting on July 8, showed a net gain of forty-five for the year in the membership of Wilmington local meeting. The present number is 1,045, the membership of the Monthly Meeting being 1,132; $1,050.29 was raised for missions during the past year in Wilmington local meeting. Ellison R. Purdy is the pastor.

"Birmingham Monthly Meeting held at West Chester, Pennsylvania, at its recent session directed its clerks to prepare for submission to the next meeting a short letter of introduction to Friends in Japan, to be given to their member, Esther A. Balderston, who expects to sail for Tokyo early next Ninth Month in company with William C. Allen and William B. Harvey. She expects to teach in the Friends' School at Tokyo."—Philadelphia Friend.

An important conference of Friends will be held at Llandudno, England, September 21-30. The conference has been called together in the hope of seeing fresh light on the ways in which the challenge to the whole Church of Christ may be met and that as a Society they may face with all seriousness the calls being made upon them. It is hoped that among others, Dr. John R. Mott, Richard Roberts, D. S. Cairns, H. G. Wood and W. C. Braithwaite will be present.

From the Philadelphia Friend we learn that at the close of one of the sessions of the recent Haverford Summer School, "Eleanor D. Wood told of the Friends' meetings which have been held in the Boston Cathedral, beginning by a felt concern in the congregation that there should be more of silent spiritual communion. Some Friends were asked to come and join them in a meeting held 'on a basis of silence,' and so satisfying was the result that since then one such has been held each month. 'We do not go to preach to them,' she said, 'they do not want words, however good the words are. What they are seeking is real silent worship.'"

ENGLISH YOUNG FRIENDS

The Friends of Richmond, Indiana, are now feeling a deep sense of gratitude for the fact that their city was included on the route of the seven young English Friends now touring this country. The English party, accompanied by Margaret Jenkins of Philadelphia, arrived on Thursday, July 2d, and spent a very full four days, leaving for southern Indiana on the following Monday.

The purpose of the tour is to weld more firmly the bonds of fellowship between Friends on both sides of the Atlantic, and by the interchange of ideas and ideals to promote a greater community of interest between Friends the world over. Although all have a common heritage in early history and in a few fundamental religious conceptions, the differences of environment through the lapse of centuries has caused many divergencies. In the light of the increasing vision of the world tasks which the Church of Christ is now facing, it is desirable that Friends of all sections have closer bonds of sympathy and of purpose than their common historic heritage affords them. Each section has been able to preserve and purify certain phases of truth and to develop certain methods of work which can be contributed to other sections, resulting in a clearer conception of the Quaker message and mission, and in a more efficient equipment for service.

In the party are five Friends from England — Robert Davis, Raymond Whitwell, Sylvia Marriage, Ethel Crawshaw and Harriett Newnham — James Douglas of Ireland, and Margaret Thorpe, who has been residing in Australia for a few years. All have been very prominent in the activities of Young Friends in their respective countries and they have come that they "may impart unto (us) some spiritual gift, to the end that (we) may be established; —that (they) may be comforted in (us), each by the other's faith."

In Richmond their mission was excellently accomplished by means of public meetings of various kinds and numerous social occasions, public and private. At the services Thursday evening and Sunday morning, the group divided into pairs, two attending each meeting. On Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings joint meetings of all congregations were held. On Friday evening Friends from all the meetings in the city gathered at the North A Street meeting house for a social time, followed by a meeting in which a few of the party told of various phases of Young Friends' work in England. On Saturday evening, the fourth of July, the scene shifted to the Earlham campus, where West Richmond Friends entertained all others at a picnic supper. Following the supper was a brief entertainment in which our English Friends helped us to celebrate the anniversary of the day when England became independent of her American Colonies.

The evening concluded with a most inspiring meeting which gave us another broad glimpse of Friends activities in England, Ireland and Australia.

On Sunday evening a union meeting for worship was held at East Main Street Church, in the manner common among English and Philadelphia Friends. It demonstrated more vividly than any argument for such a method could possibly do, the tremendous value of such worship. The strong messages from Robert Davis, James Douglas, Raymond Whitwell and Thomas E. Jones, the fervent prayers and the living silences helped to promote a time of rare fellowship with God and of renewed consecration under the power of His Spirit.

Many social occasions of various kinds—tennis, automobile rides, a camp lunch and numerous suppers and teas—made possible some very pleasant acquaintanceships between the party and Richmond people. This private fellowship was in many respects the most enjoyable and profitable feature of the week-end, since through it the bonds of sympathy and of common purpose were most strongly formed.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON.

AT WEST RICHMOND MEETING

Friends of West Richmond Meeting, Indiana, celebrated the fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Monthly Meeting on the evening of July 9th. A bountiful supper was served on the Earlham campus at 6:00 o'clock. This was followed by a session of the Monthly Meeting during which the roll of members now numbering 256, was called. A large number answered "Present," including Mahala Jay, who on the account of illness and the infirmities of age, is not privileged often to meet with the congregation.

A program suited to the anniversary occasion included a history of the growth of the meeting and its present-day activities. Quite a number of the members participated in this recital and it was felt by all that the meeting is in a prosperous condition. The recent every-member canvass has resulted in a material increase in the weekly receipts. It was announced by the Chairman of the Building Committee that arrangements would be made in the near future to begin the building of a meeting house, on ground donated by two Friends, adjacent to the Earlham campus.

A satisfactory report was made of conditions in the Bible School, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Ladies' Aid Society and in the cause of missions. The Christian Endeavor Society, under the direct care of Murray S. Kenworthy, the pastor, includes the younger members of the meeting and has grown recently to large proportions. A special effort is now being made by the pastor to teach these young members the fundamental principles of the Christian faith, and along with this an effort will be made to bring a number of them into active membership with the Church, transferring them from the associate list.

Following the program, it was agreed to postpone the business of the Monthly Meeting to an adjourned session on July 16th.

THE MINNESOTA SUMMER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

The Minnesota Summer School held this year, June 17-23, the most successful session in its history with an increase of 350 in attendance. The foreign study was presented by Mrs. D. B. Wells with her perennial strength and clearness. Her lectures, which were introductory to the study of the book, "The Child in the Midst," were not only rich from a missionary standpoint, but were personally stimulating. Two new voices were heard this year. Mrs. John Ferguson, of Monmouth, Illinois, gave with sweetness and clearness six inspirational Bible addresses on "Teaching Them to Observe." Mrs. H. L. Hill, of New York, taught "Red Man's Land" most thoroughly, driving pegs on which to hang facts and incidents and making a clear analysis of each lesson with good bibliography. Junior mission study books, "Our World Family" and "Good Bird, the Indian," were given very profitably by Miss Mary C. Smith, of Minneapolis. The Council Hours were helpful in considering such practical subjects as: The Place and Power of the Devotional in Missionary Meetings, Story Telling, Education in Giving, The Use of the Dramatic in Missionary Programs. Most stirring talks were heard from fortunately available missionaries from Syria, Mexico, Burmah, and the leper work, Mississippi and New Mexico. The deep devotion of the periods of intercession pervaded all the sessions.

A Christian is like a man riding a bicycle—when he stops he must get off.

AT DES MOINES

The last Sabbath in June, the evening service was taken up in reports by the delegate, Walter Homan, who attended the Christian Endeavor Convention at Ottumwa, which was very interesting and helpful, bringing something of the spirit of the convention to Friends. Margaret Burt gave a synopsis of the Christian Workers Assembly at Oskaloosa, and reported in a forceful way many of the things taught and discussed at the Assembly.

On the evening of July 1st, occurred the Monthly Meeting of the First Friends Church. The membership gathered at 6:30, bringing their baskets and having their suppers and a social hour together in the dining room of the Church. The Monthly Meeting assembled at 8 o'clock, at which time a report was given of the work done by the committees, during the year just closed, showing a year of splendid work. The report of the organization of the new committees was read, bringing to a close one of the best Monthly Meetings we have held.

WILMINGTON MINISTERIAL UNION

The Ministerial Union of Wilmington Yearly Meeting convened at Wilmington, Ohio, on June 25th. The exercises included a morning and afternoon session. Following a devotional service conducted by Josephine Hoskins, the program called for the following papers under the general topic of "The Pastor"—"His Place in Politics," by Robert Luttrell; "His Attitude Toward the Evils of the Community," by Albert J. Brown; "His Authority in Church Affairs," by Waldo Woody; "His Attitude Towards Church Differences," by John McMillan; "His Methods of Getting the Congregation to Work," by Ellison R. Purdy; "His Attitude Towards Inconsistent Church Members," by Maud Hoskins. These were followed by a general discussion.

Following a devotional service by Abijah Wooton in the afternoon session, addresses were given by George C. Levering and Ellison R. Purdy. Each was followed by a general discussion.

AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Children's Day was observed by the Pasadena Bible School on June 14th, the exercises occupying the entire Bible School hour. The singing of the Beginners' Department and the introduction of the Cradle Roll members were interesting features. A piano of excellent tone has recently been added to the equipment of the school.

NOTICE

The Summer School for Bible Study at Raisin Valley Seminary, Michigan, will hold its third annual session at the Seminary, August 2-16.

This school was started two years ago by Howard and Mary Moore. Through their untiring efforts and self-sacrificing devotion to the cause so dear to their hearts, it has been made a rare feast of good things to those who have attended.

Many have been greatly helped both in their heart experience and in their equipment for future service.

Let as many as possible plan to attend.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Ohio Yearly Meeting will be held at Damascus, Ohio, beginning August 25, 1914. The committee on arrangements makes the following announcement:

Meals will be served in the basement of the church. Meal tickets can be had at the rate of five tickets for $1.00; single meals, 25 cents; board and lodging in private homes at $5.00 for the week or $1.00 for a single day; lodging and breakfast, 40 cents per day; lodging per night, 20 cents; for less than four nights lodging and breakfast, 50 cents per day or lodging 25 cents.

Those expecting to attend the Yearly Meeting will please notify Aden Pim, Damascus, Ohio, as early as possible, stating preference as to kind of entertainment and arrangements will be made according to request as nearly as possible.

RALPH S. COPPOCK,
Chairman of Committee on Arrangements.

BOUND FOR AFRICA

The Chilsons and Fords sailed on the steamship Carpathia from New York on July 9th for their mission fields in Africa. A personal letter from Jefferson W. Ford, written on the steamer before sailing, says:

"We are all on board and the steamer is about to cut loose from America. With our faces turned toward Africa, we look forward with real pleasure to the service we have so long anticipated."

The prayers of all American Friends will follow these faithful and earnest missionaries as they enter upon their work in this difficult and somewhat perplexing field.

The Denver Friends' Meeting extends a cordial welcome to all Friends, who may visit Denver, to attend meeting whenever possible. Meeting house is at 4100 Shoshone Street. Sabbath School is at 10:00; meeting at 11:00 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. Pastor, George D. Weeks. Address Walter W. Weesner, Clerk, 4023 Umatilla Street, Denver, Colorado.

WANTED.—Strong, able-bodied man to take charge of janitor work in connection with Penn College, commencing about September 1, 1914. Address W. E. Hadley, Business Manager, Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

July 26

SUBJECT—The Pounds and the Talents.

LESSON—Luke 19: 11-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.—Matt. 25: 21.

Jesus has left Jericho and is on His way to Jerusalem, with the consciousness probably of the crucifixion that awaits Him. His disciples are expecting something vastly different. They are looking for an earthly kingdom, despite all the teaching they have had to the contrary.

The International Committee is to be commended upon the selection of these lessons. Not only are they given chronologically, but each sets forth some great truth, and all of them together establish the ground work of the Christian faith and set forth the ideal relationships between God and man.

Herein is set forth an ideal of responsibility in stewardship by means of a parable, which is so clearly outlined that the disciples could hardly fail to understand.

A certain nobleman went into a far country. Jesus was going away for a long time. To receive for himself a kingdom. Jesus was laying the foundations for the kingdom of God, which he was to rule. And to return. Jesus would ask for a reckoning, and then the kingship of Jesus would be recognized.

And gave them ten pounds. Each servant received a pound. All were put on the same basis. The pound was the mina, equivalent to a hundred drachmas, worth about $17.00. Trade ye herewith till I come. Each one was to invest in some profitable way, and the accounting would be according to the manner of the investment and the earnings therefrom. The reckoning may refer to the final judgment, but not necessarily so. There are many times of reckoning all through this life.

Thy pound hath made ten pounds. With what satisfaction the servant could make this report! Hence the pronouncement, Well done, thou good servant.

Thy pound, Lord, hath made five pounds. His was a good record also. Perhaps he had done his best. And his reward was to rule over five cities.

Here is thy pound. No profit; no gain; no investment in fact. Evidently he had not even tried to invest. He had simply kept the money, which had been a burden to him, no doubt. This servant's counterpart is found in almost every congregation.

Perhaps he was to be commended that he had not lost his pound. But the result was the same, for his pound was taken away and given to another who could use it profitably.

When Jesus should go away, the disciples were to have added responsibility. They must perpetuate and develop the new kingdom. They must not only be faithful stewards, but profitable stewards as well.

God expects that Christian service shall bear fruit. We are not to be content with merely holding our own. There must be a growth in grace. No church can stand still, and live. It must go forward. There is no alternative—but death.

"To fail to use a power is to lose it, and to use it to the full is the way to strengthen it for greater usefulness."—S. S. World.

We need to learn that God punishes sin. "The wages of sin is death."

This parable is not to be confounded with the Parable of the Talents found in Matt. 25: 14-30. There are differences, though possessing some identical truths.

God has given to every one some talent. It is the manner of using it that determines the value of the reward.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

TOPIC—Good News from the Mission Fields. Ps. 66: 1-8 (Missionary Meeting).

The cause of missions has been moving rapidly within recent years. Today almost the whole world is an open door to receive the gospel, about the only exceptions being certain points in Central Asia and others in Central Africa.

Christian students in Samoa are offering to pay the salary of a Chinese teacher to work among the Chinese coolies on the plantations in that island.

Out of a native population of 90,000 in the Fiji Islands, over 83,000 are returned this year as claiming attachment to the Methodist Church, and more than 33,000 are in full membership.

Thousands of Zulus in South Africa are eagerly awaiting the revised Bible in their language, now being printed at the Bible House, New York. Within a generation they have been transformed from savages, and now are anxious readers of the Scriptures.

A strong appeal has been made recently by a Mohammedan in Mecca for a Christian missionary to be sent to that district. A Turkish village recently sent a letter to a Protestant minister, asking for a Christian teacher and indicating that "they desired, as a village, to accept Christianity."

A recent census of India indicated 3,876,203 Christians in that country. The increase during the past decade is 32.6 per cent. and the number has more than doubled since 1881. The greatest increase is in the Panjab.

The New Testament, Genesis, Exodus and the Psalms have been translated into the Tibetan language, and these together with tracts, books and hymn books have been distributed and sold at various points in Tibet.

A band of students in Ceylon, found by John R. Mott, were so poor that sixteen of them occupied one room. By cultivating a neighboring banana plantation, however, they earned enough to send a graduate over to a neighboring island to start a Christian school. Since then a Church has grown up.

There are 46 American missionaries at work in Siam and 73 native workers.

There are 13 churches, 662 communicants, and 667 in the Bible Schools.

A new missionary enterprise is to be opened in the province of Shensi, China, a very rich portion of that country.

In Japan, respect for the missionaries increases and the natives are coming to see that Christianity supplies a moral need.

In New York City there are now 25 Italian Protestant Churches, while the Catholics have only 19.

The C. E. World has the following: "Requests for Christian teaching came to a mission in west central Africa within the space of nine months from sixty-four parties of natives representing places within two hundred and fifty miles. Among one of the Congo peoples a missionary with fifteen helpers spent nine days at one place examining carefully persons wishing to confess Christ, and eighty-one were judged fitted for church membership in a little group of villages. In that region one native worker has trained eleven teachers and 230 other Christians."

Let the leader ask a member to prepare a brief statement about mission work in Mexico; another a statement about Friends' African work; another the work in Cuba; another in Jamaica, another at Ram Allah, and so on.

WRONG BREAKFAST

Change Gave Rugged Health

Many persons think that for strength, they must begin the day with a breakfast of meat and other heavy foods. This is a mistake as anyone can easily discover for himself.

A W. Va. carpenter's experience may benefit others. He writes:

"I used to be a very heavy breakfast eater but finally indigestion caused me such distress, I became afraid to eat anything.

"My wife suggested a trial of Grape-Nuts and as I had to eat something or starve, I concluded to take her advice. She fixed me up a dish and I remarked at the time that the quality was all right, but the quantity was too small—I wanted a saucerful.

But she said a small amount of Grape-Nuts went a long way and that I must eat it according to directions. So I started in with Grape-Nuts and cream, 2 soft boiled eggs and some crisp toast for breakfast.

"I cut out meats and a lot of other stuff I had been used to eating all my life and was gratified to see that I was getting better right along. I concluded I had struck the right thing and stuck to it. I had not only been eating improper food, but too much.

"I was working at the carpenter's trade at that time and thought that unless I had a hearty breakfast with plenty of meat, I would play out before dinner. But after a few days of my 'new breakfast' I found I could do more work, felt better in every way, and now I am not bothered with indigestion."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

REMEMBER! YOUNG FRIENDS' WINONA CONFERENCE

Those who wish to make one of the best investments of a week's time that they have ever made, by attending the fifth annual Winona Lake Conference, should enroll immediately as delegates, since it is necessary that rooms be reserved as early as possible. Send to Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Indiana, $2.00 for ticket, admitting to the Winona Grounds and the Friends' Conference, stating also whether it is desired that a room be reserved. Arrange to arrive at the Conference in time for the first meeting, Wednesday evening, July 22. Remember the time, July 22 to 28.

HERE AND THERE

The Outlook of June 27th had an interesting article entitled, "An Indiana Landscape Poet and Historian,"—John Elwood Bundy.

Under the heading, "An Uncanonized Quaker," the April number of the Dial said, "If the Quakers thus magnified their purest spirits, John Woolman would be a saint. But the Quakers have a way, unfortunately, of keeping many of their best things to themselves. Had it not been for Charles Lamb and President Eliot, Woolman's name would hardly be known outside the Society of Friends."

After a rounded life of more than four score years, Dr. Alexander McLaren said of his work, "It would have been better if I had been better." True humility is one evidence of greatness.

The things we are least up on, we are apt to be most down on.

HELPING FAMINE SUFFERERS

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania,
Sixth Month 24th, 1914.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

In response to the notice published in various Friends' papers some weeks ago of the great distress from famine in Japan, there have been received and forwarded to Gilbert Bowles, at Friends School, Tokyo, contributions amounting to $574.12. In addition to this sum a considerable amount is known to have been sent direct to Japan. Responses have come to the appeal from Iowa, North Carolina, Illinois, Arizona, Ohio, Maine, New York, Indiana, Ontario, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Most grateful appreciation to all who have helped in the alleviation of the famine sufferers is expressed in recent correspondence from the missionaries in Japan.

Thy friend truly,

JOHN WAY.

Married

Carter-Mills.—At the home of the bride in Lynn, Indiana, July 2, 1914, John W. Carter to Nora Mills. Mr. Carter is Superintendent of Friends' Bible School and Mrs. Carter is teacher of the Berean Class of young people, numbering about seventy. Both are valued members of the Pastoral Committee of Lynn Meeting.

Elliott-Hoffman.—At Des Moines, Iowa, June 29, 1914, Oliver W. Elliott to Ina Lillian Hoffman, Richard R. Newby officiating.

Reagan-Hutton.—At the home of the bride's parents at Logansport, Indiana, June 18, 1914, Chester Reagan to Sabina Hutton, Jehu Reagan, of Carmel, Indiana, father of the groom officiating.

Born

Brown.—At Gate, Oklahoma, May 8, 1914, to Dillon H. and Alice Brown, a son, Nile Wilmer.

Holton.—At Gate, Oklahoma, May 10, 1914, to Myron and Celia Holton, a son, Clayton Virgil.

Jones.—At New Briton, New York, June 21, 1914, to C. Hubert and Marion E. Jones, a son, Edmund Arthur.

Kersey.—At Grand Rapids, Michigan, April 9, to Lawrence T. and Irene Kersey, of Gate, Oklahoma, a daughter.

Died

Benedict.—Rachel Johnson Benedict was born June 16, 1835, in Columbiana County, Ohio, and passed away at the home of her daughter, Fidelia C. Parker, in Richmond, Indiana, June 17, 1914, at the age of seventy-nine years and one day.

She was married to Elwood Parker, May 2, 1866. They lived near Carthage, Indiana, for seven years, when he was taken Home, leaving one daughter for her to care for, which she did faithfully till she was grown and educated.

On April 12, 1894, she was united in marriage to Livius A. Benedict, her home then being near Ashley, Ohio. She lived there for fourteen years, when a great sorrow came to her again in the death of her husband. Since that time she has had her home with her daughter.

Her parents were Friends and she had a birthright membership. She was converted when young and lived a faithful, Christian life. In her last days she was so calm and peaceful showing such complete trust in her Heavenly Father, and she often expressed the desire to go Home.

Davis.—Penelope F. Davis, daughter of John and Lydia B. Hill, was born in Randolph County, North Carolina, June 22, 1843, and died at the home of her sister in Pasadena, California, May 22, 1914. She was married to David L. Davis in 1873. She was a birthright Friend and for many years an elder in the meeting at Hesper, Kansas. Her consistent Christian life was a living epistle for Christ. Her later years were spent in much pain as an invalid, but were a constant lesson of patience and gentleness. Funeral services were held at Pasadena. Interment at Wichita, Kansas, where services were held by Lewis E. Stout and Edmund Stanley.

Harkness.—Deborah R. Harkness, widow of Richard Harkness and daughter of Elijah and Mary Crane, died at her home in Tecumseh, Michigan, June 14, 1914, aged ninety-one years and seventeen days. She had been an elder in the Church for fifty years and wielded a Christian influence in her family and among those she visited when accompanying her husband in his labors as a minister of the gospel. She was able to attend meeting on her ninety-first birthday and gave a good testimony. She leaves seven children.

Jones.—Leroy M. Jones, son of Arthur W. and Lenora H. Jones, was born at Washington, Kansas, May 26, 1899, and died May 20, 1914, aged 14 years, 11 months and 24 days. He was an upright boy and a conscientious Christian from childhood and grew into an active, helpful Christian Endeavorer. He was a student of rare ability, who would have been graduated in twelve more days from the Preparatory School of Friends University. For one so young his afflictions had been frequent and his sufferings great during the past four years, which he bore with genuine Christian patience and unwavering hope in Christ his Savior and Lord.

Richardson.—Mary Elmer Farr Richardson, a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, died at the home of her daughter in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, May 31, 1914. Her ministry was in a quiet, unassuming manner, yet was of a nature that stimulated others to follow the things that are worth while. William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie, New York, conducted the funeral services. She leaves a daughter and one grandson.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

For catalogue and general information kindly address

THOMAS K. BROWN, Principal,
WESTTOWN, PENNA.

WESTERN CANADA NOW

The opportunity of securing free homesteads of 160 acres each, and the low priced lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, will soon have passed.

Canada offers a hearty welcome to the Settler, to the man with a family looking for a home; to the farmer's son, to the renter, to all who wish to live under better conditions.

Canada's grain yield in 1913 is the talk of the world. Luxuriant Grasses give cheap fodder for large herds; cost of raising and fattening for market is a trifle.

The sum realized for Beef, Butter, Milk and Cheese will pay fifty per cent on the investment.

One Hour With Christ

BY MARGARET ROY RADCLIFFE

"The hour of thine own great agony
Is the hour to be made whole."
One little hour with Christ to wait—
Kneel beside Him, it groweth late.
Canst thou not watch one little hour,
One hour from the world afford
Away from the things of time whose power
Holdeth thee back from thy Lord?
One little hour from life's long day
The Master asks of the soul;
"Canst thou not watch one hour with Me?"
To kneel with the Christ and kneeling pray!

Just one hour! Aye, the garden's gloom
Tempts the weak soul to despair;
Fearful terrors far above thee loom,
But, soul, the Christ-kneeleth there;
Come, thou, one hour kneel beside Him,
Light will break through the darkness dim.

One little hour, though weary, worn
Through suffering, fear and strain,
Kneel close to the heart divine, yet torn,
And rest thee in Christ again;
One short hour with the wounded Christ—
Pain forgotten—ah, holy tryst!

One little hour; the stars above
Shed down but a pale, dim light;
But rest this hour on the heart of Love,
Forget the darkness and night;
Forget one hour the silence, the cold;
The seamless robe about thee fold.

—The United Presbyterian.

To New Subscribers

We are already out of copies of The American Friend, issues of July 2 and 9. New subscribers under the special low rate offer, will be credited to receive the paper for a full six months from the first issue they receive. This rule will apply to all new ones sent, up to the first of August.

Another Week Remains

Another week remains of the campaign to secure new subscriptions for THE AMERICAN FRIEND at the special offer of fifty cents for six months. Many meetings have apparently made no effort. Why, we are unable to understand, when it means so much to the paper.

We are grateful for the activity of many others. A number of meetings have sent in lists from which we have had no previous reports.

Will not Friends in other meetings utilize these remaining eight days before August first in an active canvass for new subscriptions? The plan of a few meetings to take up a collection in order to send the paper to families not now taking it in order to get them interested in the paper, might be followed by other meetings.

Let all reports and remittances be made on or before August 1st.

High Point Normal and Industrial Institute

HIGH POINT, N. C., June 9, 1914.

The Southern Committee of the Board of Home and Foreign Missions of the New York Yearly Meeting of Friends:

My Dear Friends—We are all very grateful to our many friends who have stood so faithfully by us during this present school year. Their assistance has made it possible for us to carry on the work in a very satisfactory way. We have had more to care for than at any time in the history of the school. There have been 724 pupils under our charge; 118 were boarders.

The commencement exercises were quite satisfactory. There were seven graduates from the regular course; five girls graduated from the dress-making, three from cooking, and fifteen received certificates from the grammar school. The most pleasing feature of the occasion was an address by Dr. Augustus T. Murray, Leland Stanford Jr. University.

Students left the school well pleased and full of glee. Many parents were present and gave expressions of high commendation of the school. Congdon Hall was in good condition, having been repaired from the basement to attic by the masonry department.

There are now at the school three girls to help Mrs. Griffin care for the bedding, canning and to do the cooking and laundry work. There are two boys with one of my own sons to care for the farm. Two other boys are still at the school to help catch up with the farm work and to do any other work that may be urgent. Their time is now out.

The farm is in very good condition save the extremely dry weather. The wheat crop is splendid. We have at least twelve acres in corn which is also in good condition and growing rapidly. We have set out tomatoes, sweet potatoes and cabbage. The early potatoes are doing very well. We have sufficient clover hay to do the stock about all winter. The farm is also providing us cabbage for the table use.

The graduating class presented a beautiful wall clock for chapel use. The clock was placed in the chapel by the class. The students would do much but for the meagerness of their pocket books. We heartily commend their efforts to do whatever they can to mark their appreciation of what the school has been doing for them. I believe they are grateful for the love and interest our many friends have shown towards them.

Isabella Richardson is cooking for Mrs. Henry A. White here in High Point. Mattie Banks is cooking for a family in her neighborhood at Graham, North Carolina. The boys of the class are also at work. We know of other girls who are not members of this class, who have taken places as cooks in various homes, at wages which our Southern white people are not accustomed to pay.

Personally, I want in some way to express my deep appreciation to our friends for the strong support they have given the school the past year and for many years past. Without their assistance the school can not exist.

Very truly yours,

A. J. GRIFFIN.

We talk about the telescope of faith, but I think we want even more the microscope of watchful and grateful love. Apply this to the little bits of our daily lives, in the light of the spirit, and how wonderfully they come out!—Frances Ridley Havergal.

Small service is true service while it lasts. Of humblest friends, bright creature, scorn not one. The daisy by the shadow that it casts protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.—Wordsworth.

The Cry of the Prisoners

Within recent weeks there has come a cry from the depths of our American social life, which ought to stir the sympathetic interests of every Christian patriot in the land. On July 4th, 1,008 prisoners out of 1,478 confined in the Eastern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, near Philadelphia, signed a remarkable document addressed to the legislature of that state, which will be presented to that body at its next session in January.

This document was in the nature of a petition asking the legislature to enact a prohibition law for the state, and attributing the downfall of the signers to the existence of the liquor traffic. The movement was inaugurated and carried into effect without the knowledge of the warden and solely upon their own initiative. It was the culmination of a crusade against the saloon made by The Umpire, the paper published within the prison walls, which called forth numerous personal testimonies from a large number of the convicts, to the effect that their lives had been wrecked through drink.

When the warden learned of the action taken, he said: "It is the most unique and manly document ever sent from a penal institution. It is an appeal to decent men serving in the legislature to come to the aid of unfortunates confined in this institution. Seventy per cent. of the prisoners claim that their downfall is due to rum. It is certainly a wonderful argument against the liquor traffic."

What a commentary this is upon our boasted twentieth century civilization! The pathos of it ought to touch even the hardest or most indifferent heart. Here is a state that licenses the open saloon, and when men have fallen within its clutch and have broken the law while their brains were muddled by drink, and have been shut away from society for the protection of others, these same men are moved to appeal to the law-makers to repeal the license law, so that when they are free again, they and other men like them will be no longer subject to the old temptations which robbed them of their manhood and their liberty.

No appeal like this has ever been presented to a law-making body. Students of social conditions and reformers have long proclaimed the saloon as the hot-bed of criminality. Here is first hand testimony to the truthfulness of the charge, and presented in a form that must command attention both within and without our legislative halls. What effect this action will have upon the legislature of the Keystone State remains to be seen, but that it presents a situation which cannot be ignored is not open to question. Can the state turn a deaf ear to the cry of a regiment of unfortunates who owe their unfortunate delinquency to the existence of an institution which the state has legalized and which it is now fostering?

It is a problem for every state to face which licenses the liquor traffic, no less than for the state of Pennsylvania, and this appeal is just as truly an appeal to California and Oregon and Washington and Arizona and Colorado and Ohio and Virginia to vote the saloon out this autumn, as it is an appeal for action by the Pennsylvania legislature.

For what purpose does government exist except to safeguard the interests of all its citizens, to guarantee to them the blessings of liberty and the pursuit of happiness? And how can government justify its course in the light of the Christian civilization of this twentieth century, when it deliberately authorizes and fosters a system that promotes debauchery and criminality? Government possesses an element of paternalism from which it cannot easily divest itself, and it should remember the words of One who spoke with authority: "Or what man is there of you, if his son shall ask him for a loaf, will give him a stone?"

The basis of ultimate authority in government is the people, and the appeal of these convicts is an appeal directly to the people. And this raises the question of responsibility for the act which caused their incarceration. When these men and women stood in a court of justice and heard the unanimous pronouncement of a jury in affirmation of their guilt, was full justice meted out with exactness? It is their plea that the saloon caused their downfall, but the saloon exists only because the people have said it may exist. It is high time that this partnership with a crime producing institution were dissolved, and every Friend should be doing a citizen's full part in seeing that this is done in the seven states that are to take action this autumn.

The Victory of Optimism

BY WILLIAM J. SAYERS

Text—Numbers 13: 21-33.

On all questions between good and evil we always get a divided report. The forces of evil stand as a unit. There was a time when the forces of good were greatly divided, but today they are organizing against the common foes of righteousness. However, in our text the report of the majority was an evil one. "We are not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we." The minority made their report and it was a good one. "The Lord is with us; fear them not."

These spies were twelve selective men; twelve princes, one from each tribe. This forty day trip was taken at the command of their leader, Moses. These men were to be eyes for the hosts of Israel. Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leah were all buried in this land; buried with the sure hope that their descendants would own this country according to the promise of Jehovah. Therefore none should have feared. Back they came from their investigations bearing between two on a staff a cluster of grapes (Eshcol means cluster). Thus when they came back to the camp of Israel the grapes were unspoiled.

Caleb and Joshua were the great optimists of the party. Listen to Caleb as he gives his report. "We can take the land. We are able to overcome it." Faith ever laughs at what seems impossible to man: for it knows that God can do all things.

To spy means to see. Optimism is only a matter of seeing. Good eyes see the doughnut and not only the hole. Recall Elisha how he prayed that the young man's eyes might be opened. God opened them and he saw the chariots of the Lord and the hosts of heaven. He forgot his fears. He forgot the enemy and became optimistic concerning the outcome of God's servant against the Syrians.

Optimism is born of faith in God. Not merely general faith; but a faith that grips the promise and makes us to say with Caleb, "We can, for God is with us." This faith is all-embracing, faith in God, faith in man, and faith in self. It is necessary to have faith in our own faith and confidence in our own confidence.

This grasshopper and giant question is a modern one. Caleb though dead speaketh. Am I a grasshopper or a giant of faith? For what do we wait? Why do we hesitate? More signs? Haven't we had enough signs to cause us to go forward and possess the land? How old must one be before one believes? The best time to do the thing is now. The best time to overcome the enemy is now. The best time to become a Christian is now, in spite of what the spineless moral cowards, who bring in false reports, say.

Are you pessimistic about possessing the land? God can change your whole nature and make you anew; make you optimistic. When I use the word optimistic I do not mean Bilkenism, which has some such philosophy as "Don't expect much and you won't be disappointed." Optimists want the world—want it better and purer than it is now, and they ever work to make it so.

Be optimistic about yourself and the final outcome. There is no reason why you should not be. There is no joy in self-pity for you or for those who dwell in the home with you. In Christ you can be an overcomer. That means you are optimistic about the future of yourself, of your country and your church. There is no little and big with God. Take it to the Lord in prayer. Even the littlest things; that Grasshopper or Giant thing.

The "Victory of Optimism" says we are able. It can be done; not perfectly maybe, but it can be done. Things are getting better. Nothing is good enough if we can improve upon it. No way is good enough if we can find a better. The pessimists say, "It's no use, it can't be done." The optimists say, "Oh, yes; we can remove the saloons and stop the white slave traffic. We can clean politics and have world's peace. Yes, we can build new meeting-houses, or build additions. Yes, we can raise more money for our work at home and abroad. WE CAN HAVE A SUCCESSFUL EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS." We can increase, says the optimist numerically, financially and spiritually. Yes, yes, the pessimists are getting scarcer daily and will soon be as scarce as the mastodons. And in modern civilization they are just about as welcome as the mastodon would be. We know that the grapes of Eshcol hang high, but they are gettable. In the Promised Land we know there are difficulties, but they can be overcome; and all the attractive things there will be ours. Say it with Paul, "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me."

The Land of Promise is right before you. It is open; who will go in and possess it? God has great surprises and great joy for all ahead. The pessimist says you cannot. The optimist says you can. The pessimist says you are not able. The optimist says you are. Satan is the great pessimist. Christ is the great Optimist. Satan says you are not able. Christ says you are. Satan says the Promised Land is not for such as you. Christ says son, daughter, it is, for I purchased it for you. Satan says wait. Christ says do not wait. Satan says it is too late. Christ says it is not too late, now is the best time. Who will you believe, Satan or Christ? The grossest pessimist or the Greatest Optimist?

Poughkeepsie, New York.

The Challenge of a Country Ministry

BY THOMAS ELSA JONES

More progress has been made in effectively ministering to the needs of rural districts, during the past decade, than for the previous fifty years. This is due to the fact that people have begun to realize that the country does actually count in this new age. The farmer is no longer considered a back number, who can put up with any sort of religious crudity, but is a wide-awake business man, who wants better things and is beginning to demand them. This fact has been brought to the attention of religious leaders, because country people are failing to go to church as they once did. Old methods have been used so long that a condition of indifference and spiritual stagnation prevails in scores of communities, once proverbial for their religious life. Through the farmers' institute, the grange, magazine articles, and well written books the attention of the public has been called to this situation and many solutions for the problem have been presented.

In our own Society we find conditions are much as they have been depicted in the church at large. Like the Nazarites of old, some ministers and many members have clung to old methods because they are tried and true, regardless of their efficiency. All have noticed the gradual dropping off in attendance at monthly and quarterly meetings, and many theories have been advanced as to why people do not attend. Some critics have said the fault is with the preaching, and have asked for better sermons, with the result that there has grown up a strong movement in favor of educating our ministers. Others have said that the trouble is not with the lack of education our ministers receive, but with the absence of spirit put into their sermons. There is a lack of power. The "old time fire," as some call it, seems to be missing. The religious longing of men is unsatisfied.

Friends feel this especially because they have always emphasized this phase of the work so strongly. In every section people are, therefore, asking for a more spirit-filled ministry, and many think if this be accomplished all problems of the rural meeting will be solved. Still other men tell us that the trouble is neither with the minister's education nor his spiritual life, but with his method. They say he is following methods that are out of date; his style of ministry was in vogue fifty years ago, but since then it has been out of place. He spends some time getting up a sermon that he preaches, just between the four walls of his meeting house, to empty benches, for the most part; makes a few ineffective pastoral calls; puts on a sad face to denote that he is a minister, and considers his work done. Again others tell us that the whole trouble is because we have ministers. Our Society was never meant to have a pastoral system and it can never work well with one. They say if we will abolish the whole thing, all our difficulties will be remedied.

Whether we agree with any one of these and oppose all other theories need not matter; the important thing is that out of this maze of opinion, some people have quit quarreling and have begun to put their ideas into practice, many of which are netting gratifying results. Communities that were practically dead, religiously, have taken on new life and are making the forsaken meeting house of fifty years ago, the center of community life, with the result that the morning meetings are large in attendance and are aglow with spiritual power.

I want briefly to relate how one minister, not a Friend, was able to bring about a condition as described above. About three years ago, he went into a country community in New England, five miles from the nearest post office. There was a good meeting house but few people attended services. For a hundred and fifty years people had been accustomed to listen to the minister's discourse on some ethical or theological problem, but continued to render little or no service for their community. Many of the one-time aggressive and spiritual leaders in the meeting had either moved away or died. There was little in the meeting to interest young people. According to the puritanical ideas of the place all games and play were frowned upon. Few of the young people went to high school and still fewer went to college. Only a small number of people had heard of the farmers' institute, and those who had for the most part condemned it as a foolish fad that was bound in time to ruin the farmer as well as his farm.

Some Catholics and Jews had moved into the community fifteen or twenty years previously but had taken little interest in the church because their neighbors considered them wicked sons of darkness who were just waiting to be punished in everlasting torment. Such in brief were some of the problems that the young minister of whom I write, had to face. Not to be daunted by a hard task or a small salary he went to work. One of the first things he did was to find something that would interest the young people of the neighborhood. This proved to be baseball. Being a varsity player himself, he was quite at home in organizing and coaching a team. The mere fact that the new minister had taken to baseball caused an unheard of sensation in the community. The older people said it would never do. They labored with their pastor but were unable to turn him out because the Methodist Conference decided to let him stay. The ball team grew in skill and reputation until the whole country knew of the minister and his invincible nine. Young men and women now came to church who had laughed at church going people but a year or two before.

The country dance had been the chief kind of social life in this locality, but our energetic minister began to work on that problem also, and not without result. Starting what he called a game night, in which he tried to interest every young man and woman, the minister fixed up the Sunday School room with various kinds of interesting but harmless games. He tried to have some new feature together with the old game each time they met. This added variety and maintained interest in the movement. The game night and church socials now became so popular that young people no longer cared to go to the dance.

Next a library was started by collecting such books from the community, as would be both interesting and uplifting. Soon some philanthropic people of New York, hearing of the minister's work, sent him fifty dollars worth of books for the library. Other contributions were made until quite a reading room was fitted up. Within one year fifteen Jews and several Catholics had read the life of Livingstone, and were attending the little meeting. The Sunday School now began to grow and the evening meetings were filled with young people.

The minister had now become popular enough to advocate a farmers' institute. He secured the best lecturers on agriculture and dairying that he could find for an institute, and farmers attended the meetings. Finally one man tried fertilizing his land and spraying his orchard. The results of his effort were such an argument for the value of scientific farming that a permanent organization was effected for the study of better methods. The neighborhood now bought an automobile truck for the purpose of carting their produce to the nearest market, which was five miles away. They found much time and money was saved by this method.

It is needless to say that interest continued to grow in the little meeting. People began to see for the first time that religion is a practical thing, and that it makes a whole community better, financially, intellectually and socially.

But this is not all the little meeting did. If it had stopped there we should all feel that it had come short of the great purpose for which God had created it. The minister, though a man slow of speech, had a face and a life that was aglow with the love of God. He spent hours in prayer for his little meeting and various members in it. With all his other duties he found time to call on the sick and help those in distress. He won the hearts of the people and when he spoke they listened to his words as though they came from a prophet. During the third winter he held a revival in his meeting through which twenty-five men and as many women were converted and brought into the church. The class of the people reached, rather than the number, is the gratifying part of this result.

They were young or middle-aged men and women who had taken but little or no interest in religious matters until this minister had come in their midst. These people for the most part are now the strongest workers for God in the community.

I have related as best I can remember the story a young minister of New England told me regarding the work God has been able to accomplish through him. I think it is full of suggestions that may be of help to many of our struggling meetings. Conditions, of course, are different in various sections of the country, but the principles of service are the same, and things that have succeeded in one place may not be out of place in another. At all events, let us study the needs of our COMMUNITY, not our meeting alone, and adapt our message and service through God's help to those particular wants. God needs workmen, inventors and spiritual heralds in His service.

Better be the man who knows life in all its aspects, its dreadfulness as well as its beauty, its evil as well as its good, its anguish and heartbreak as well as its love and joy, and neither belittles nor denies any of them, but at the same time is sustained by invincible faith in God.—R. J. Campbell.

A Hoosier in North Carolina

BY GEORGE N. HARTLEY

North Carolina Yearly Meeting is composed of eight Quarterly Meetings, two of which, Yadkin and Surry, are located in the western part of the state in the counties from which they take their names. The country there is generally hilly or mountainous. Their leading money making crop is tobacco.

New Garden and Deep River Quarterly Meetings are located principally in Guilford County within the near limits of Greensboro and High Point, which are two flourishing cities. Guilford College is within the limits of New Garden Quarterly Meeting. South of these, within Randolph and adjacent counties, are Southern and Western Quarterly Meetings. These meetings with two exceptions are rural, being made up almost entirely of farmers, a good and generally well-to-do people.

Contentnea Quarterly Meeting is located in Wayne County within the limits of Goldsboro. The land here is low and level and there is much sand. Farming is the leading business. Eastern Quarterly Meeting is located in the northeastern part of the state, occupying two small sections about fifty miles apart, near Rich Square and Belvidere, respectively. The land is low and level, sandy, with many swamps. Gardening for northern markets is the most lucrative occupation.

All but seven of the sixty-two meetings composing the Yearly Meeting are located in the country or in very small towns. Mt. Airy, High Point, Greensboro and Goldsboro have good, strong and well cared for meetings. Winston-Salem and Graham have good houses and are starting up well. Ashboro is making an attempt to build up a meeting. They already have a goodly number of substantial members, but no meeting house. Many of the country meeting houses are good, substantial, up-to-date and well furnished.

I was very agreeably surprised to find so many good, modern school houses in the country as well as in the villages, with two, three and even in a very few cases, four and five teachers. Some of these houses have large, commodious rooms, well furnished, also an auditorium with a seating capacity of from four hundred to six or eight hundred people. Many districts have very poor houses and practically no equipment fit for a school room.

While the state as a whole is much behind educationally it is nevertheless coming up very rapidly. The writer was in North Carolina in educational work during the years 1871 to '78, inclusive, and he now finds it so far ahead of what it was then that one can scarcely make a comparison. The work of the Baltimore Associations, with Joseph Moore and Allen Jay as superintendents, had telling effects, and their tracks are plainly visible yet. An inspiration was then given that is still spreading. This work began soon after the war when there were practically no schools at all.

They are much behind the times in their manner of farming, though in this they have advanced much in the past forty years. Since they began using fertilizers they raise much better crops; indeed, they come well up to our western farms, but the great cost of the fertilizers cuts off a large per cent of the profits, nor can they cultivate so much land per man as is done in the north or west. They work almost altogether with one-horse machinery. Plowing, planting and cultivating are done with one horse in most parts of the state. I saw as many as a dozen men in one field plowing with a six or eight-inch plow, preparing the ground, planting, etc., and each with his one horse, or mule or ox. In some sections the women take to the plow and other farm work as well as the men; especially is this true in the tobacco, cotton and gardening sections.

The tobacco keeps them busy practically the full year. Many children have but little school privileges in the cotton and tobacco belts. These crops bring in the money, but those who depend upon them do not advance better than those who raise varied crops and their children are cut short educationally besides.

Within the past thirty years many industries have sprung up throughout the state in which a large number of Friends are engaged, either as proprietors or as workmen. These take the raw material produced in the state and manufacture it into useful articles that are sent practically world wide. High Point alone has seventy such establishments, cotton goods of various kinds, thread, cord, cotton seed oil, cotaline, etc., furniture of most all kinds, pine native timber, shuttle blocks for the looms of the world, iron work, terra cotta works, etc. These give employment to a vast number of men and women. They are fairly well paid as a rule. The tobacco industry brings in large sums of money, but it piles up too much of it in the tills of the great manufacturers. These are multiplying their millions while tens of thousands of young lives are being wrecked by their cigarettes and vast numbers of others are wasting their hard earned money chewing and smoking.

There is at this time a good influence being exerted that is very much diminishing the use of tobacco among women. In some sections chewing and dipping snuff are not uncommon yet. My stomach objected and sometimes rebelled when the meals were prepared by chewers and snuff dippers. Chair frames are sent into the country to be bottomed by the women. Many of the country women become very skillful in handling the rattan, and can make a little spending money. They work much cheaper than those of the city can afford to do, as they simply occupy their spare time in this work.

Another occupation for country women is stringing the little tobacco sacks. They are sent into homes by the million. They are made by machinery in long strips and the women cut them apart, then turn them right side out, then run a cord around through the hem at the top, tie two knots in the strings, bunch them in lots of twenty-five each, bind them together and send them back to the city office. All this is done for twenty-eight cents per 1,000 or thirty-six for one cent. Each sack must be handled six times, making 216 handlings for one cent. The spare time of the country women is occupied, but for whose benefit? Some old women who cannot do much else can and do make as much as sixty or seventy-five dollars a year or $1.50 a week and board themselves.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The forty-eighth annual gathering of Friends in Canada assembled at Wellington, Ontario, from June 25-28. The attendance this year was larger than at some other times, although held away from the center of activities, necessitating considerable travel for some. Sixteen years had elapsed since the Yearly Meeting was held within the limits of West Lake Quarterly Meeting and many Friends, usually unable to attend, again enjoyed the privilege this year. A new place of meeting is often suggestive of special effort to be present, and a pleasure resort beautifully situated on Lake Ontario was emphatic in its attraction for all. The local Friends spared no pains when considering the comfort and convenience of visitors, and the Temperance hotel afforded ample accommodation for lodging, meals and committee work. Many Friends came early and remained throughout the sessions.

Those in attendance from other Yearly Meetings were Rufus P. King, of North Carolina; Anna E. Warner, an elder of London; Seneca H. and Alice E. Stevens, of New York; Frank and Mary E. Cornell, of Indiana, and Francis Guindon and wife, of the conservative body, Vermont. These Friends were acceptably present and had opportunity for service at various times, adding much to the spiritual interests of the gathering.

The opening session was devoted almost wholly to worship in which many participated, and to reading credentials from visiting Friends, with many expressions of greeting and welcome. In this day of pressure in business, when things are done with dispatch, it seemed that Friends had reverted to old-time methods in permitting so much time for preliminary exercises, but it was thought and felt by many to be most opportune and helpful.

Correspondence claimed attention for most of the second sitting. The reading of the London General Epistle called forth many expressions of appreciation, and the desire was general that it be printed for circulation and more careful perusal. Special epistles from London and Dublin Yearly Meetings were read and a summary of eleven of the Yearly Meetings in the United States. These messages brought a fresh vision of the larger body of which we are the smallest member, and helped anew to appreciate our glorious heritage, and to press toward the goal of our common purpose.

Reports on the various activities of the Yearly Meeting were, on the whole, encouraging. Bible School work, peace, temperance, education and missions received due consideration, and new committees were appointed for the new year. British Columbia Quarterly Meeting was not represented this year on account of the great distance and expense, but the report of their work was much appreciated. The patient, persistent efforts of Friends in this Province are bearing fruit and they are heartily commended.

A short letter was sent them and one to a little group forming in Calgary, from whom a nice letter was received signed by several residents, who have their membership in other Yearly Meetings. A special letter to scattered Friends throughout the northwest was also prepared. The presence of Henry A. Sutton and wife, from Hartney, Manitoba, with a first hand account of their work and of the work in Swarthmore, Saskatchewan, helped to a fuller appreciation of what was being done in these centers. They had been absent from Yearly Meeting for three years and much enjoyed meeting their many friends again.

The reports of the W. F. M. S., whose interests center largely in Japan, and the letters of Gurney and Elizabeth Binford aroused good interest as usual, and also the report of Friends' Africa Industrial Mission. More than $3,000 had been spent on the Home and Foreign work last year and nearly $1,000 was subscribed in the meeting for these important departments of work.

The subject of Peace was again considered and the meeting heartily approved of some fitting international memorial that will not only commemorate but help to perpetuate the peace of 100 years between our country and the United States to be celebrated early next year. To maintain peace we should prepare for "more peace." The Peace Committee presented a strong resolution regarding military drill in schools which was adopted and directed to be sent to the Minister of Education and the Premier of the Province. Militarists seem to be taking "an undue advantage of the youth and of parents by utilizing the school connection to instill in the young minds the military spirit and a false and pugnacious ideal of patriotism." They should rather receive the "higher patriotism of social service and of international brotherhood which will make all war between civilized people impossible."

The address by Clarence E. Pickett, of Toronto, on "Interpreters of Christ" was ably given and well received. He also gave an address to young Friends on their relation to the Church, and also the closing sermon from the text, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." This was his first year with us and he is much esteemed for his work's sake.

The subject for discussion at the meeting on Ministry and Oversight this year was "The Priesthood of Believers" and was introduced by H. A. Sutton. He maintained that through Christ, believers have equal rights in approach to God without other mediator, and in service for God under direct guidance of the Holy Spirit. All are priests, not by ordination by man, for no man can ordain another, but by relationship to Jesus Christ whom God has ordained. The Church acknowledges various gifts but does not confer them. As the sons of Aaron were priests through sonship, so the believer, because he is of the household of Christ through faith, is a priest unto God, and when anointed by Christ with the Holy Spirit becomes a servant to the congregation in things pertaining to eternal life. The discussion was interesting and profitable, many taking part.

Saturday afternoon the young Friends arranged for a trip on West Lake to the famous Sand Banks. It was an opportunity for relaxation after three days of close application to business. The Young Friends' meetings for business and for worship were inspirational and full of promise. They reported the $200 pledged for the education of Mrs. Binford's helper, all raised, and will repeat it for next year.

Telegrams of greeting were received from New England and California Yearly Meetings in session at the same time, to which suitable replies were sent. These direct communications from each side of the continent, coming at the same time, stimulated the feeling of love and unity for our Friends so widely separated, yet brought so near.

The meetings on Sunday were well attended, in which our visiting ministers had opportunity to present gospel messages. The closing minute was read at the close of the Sunday evening meeting, and the meeting adjourned to meet at Pickering College, Newmarket, on the 9th of September, 1915.

International Sabbath-School Convention

"It was the greatest convention ever held," said Marian Lawrence, General Secretary of the International Sunday-school Association. "More delegates registered than at any previous international convention."

"The men's parade held Saturday afternoon, June 27th, in which regiment after regiment of manly Christian men marched along the streets, thus showing their loyalty to Jesus Christ, impressed the onlookers with the idea that men are interested in the study of God's Word."

To record only partially the plans and the addresses of the more than four hundred speakers at the one hundred and fifty-seven sessions of the convention, held in forty-one churches, will require the publishing of a report of six hundred pages. More than 18,441,036 members of 175,000 schools constitute the organized Sabbath-school forces of North America.

Representatives from every province of British America, from the island possessions of the United States and from every State of the Union were delegates to the convention, which was the largest ever held. Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia also had representatives.

Only denominations recognizing the deity of Jesus Christ and the Bible as the only Word of Jehovah can become affiliated with the Sunday-school Association. This recommendation was made by the Executive Committee after it had discussed pro and con for hours the advisability of such action. The convention without a dissenting vote approved the recommendation of the Executive Committee. Christian Scientists, the reorganized Mormon and similar bodies are thus excluded from membership or any possible membership with the Sunday-school Association.

Declarations

"We declare ourselves as definitely evangelistic in purpose, and as more than ever determined to stress the one, chief aim of all Sabbath-school work, that, namely, of seeking to lead scholars, young and old, to saving knowledge of Jesus Christ as their personal and only Redeemer.

"We declare in favor of the Vacation Bible Schools and urge hearty co-operation on the part of all our forces in this great work.

"We declare in favor of the child-welfare movement, including the abolishment of child labor under the age of sixteen, and the creation of public playgrounds and wholesome amusements for the young.

"We declare in favor of national legislation for the effective censorship of motion pictures covering the entire jurisdiction of national legislation.

"We declare ourselves in favor of social purity reform, including a single standard of morals for both sexes, and the most rigid laws against commercial vice, lotteries and gambling of every form.

"We declare ourselves in favor of faithfulness and diligence on the part of all Sabbath schools in the use of the Temperance Lessons in order to educate every member for total abstinence, for the destruction of the liquor traffic, for the extinction of the cigarette and the tobacco habits in every form, and for the surrender of every self-indulgence which impairs or destroys the power to render service to God and man.

"We urge that throughout all the courses of the International Lessons, both Graded and Uniform, four Bible temperance lessons for each year shall be supplied, and that the selection of such Bible temperance lessons shall be governed by the same sound principle of adaptation to the spiritual needs of the scholar which are applied to the selection of other lessons.

"In hearty co-operation with other agencies, the Sabbath school pledges itself to unceasing warfare against the legalized liquor traffic, and we look with unfaltering confidence for the coming of that day when the united forces of religious, moral and civic agencies, God directed, shall 'take up the stumbling block out of the way of the people,' and when prohibition as the result of Congressional action shall become nation wide, and as the result of national legislation shall become world wide throughout all civilized lands.

"We declare in favor of international peace between the nations of the world, and in favor of the substitution of conciliation and arbitration in the settlement of both industrial and international war.

"We declare in favor of the submission of an amendment to the Federal Constitution delegating control of all questions of marriage and divorce to the Federal Congress, and we exhort all American States and provinces to take action to secure a uniform marriage law conforming to the highest standard.

"We declare in favor of the religious work planned by the Committee of One Hundred, appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to be done during the Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco, and commend the same to the careful attention of our constituency. We also indorse the plan to hold an International Lord's Day Congress at San Francisco during the said Exposition, and express the hope that it will result so in quickening the Christian conscience as to give California a weekly rest day."—Herald and Presbyterian.

The Weekly Prayer Meeting

BY AARON M. BRAY

The heart and lungs are of such importance to the human body that enfeebled or defective action by either results in a weak and inefficient body. The prayer meeting and family devotions are fully as important to the life and efficiency of the church as the heart and lungs are to the effectiveness of the human body. Of the public services of the church the weekly prayer meeting is of first importance. Where it is neglected or poorly attended, the vitality of the church is always low.

Certain things are necessary in order to keep the spiritual power in good working force. I mention some of them. First, All the members are at their best, living obedient lives. Second, All the members attend prayer meeting that can possibly do so. Third, All the members take some part in the meeting, or are ready to do so.

HOW CONDUCTED: I believe that as a rule the pastor should lead the prayer meeting. Usually a Scripture lesson should be given with suitable comment, exegetical in character. Freedom to engage in prayer, testimony, praise or teaching should be given to all God's children, subject to the law that we are all subject to the prophets.

THINGS TO AVOID: The meeting must not be too long. One hour and fifteen minutes ought usually to be the limit. Don't give your experience on any matter more than twice, it becomes stale after the second telling. If five words will convey your thought, don't use twenty. Be clear in your statements, don't have the people guessing as to your meaning. Commence on time, and no one late. If necessary call for an altar service, and thus help souls into the kingdom.

The prayer meeting at Newberg is not an ideal one, but is doing good work. Of those who could attend I suppose one-third are in regular or irregular attendance, the attendance having reached as high as eighty. When compared with former years this is a marked improvement. The participation in the service is quite general and usually prompt, though some need urging. The young people are faithful. Perhaps one-half of the congregation would be classed as young people. Not long since two young people took a definite stand at an altar service at the close of a prayer meeting. Harmony of spirit prevails between the old and young.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

The Present Progress of the Movement for Financial Reform

Some time ago the General Secretary addressed an inquiry to every meeting of fifty or more members within the limits of the Five Years Meeting in the United States, the replies to which revealed that at least fifty-six meetings scattered from New England to the Pacific Coast have put the Budget, Pledge, Weekly Envelope and Every-Member Canvass plan of raising money to the test of practical experience. This list covers a wide range of meetings as to their sizes and conditions. Among them are large meetings in cities, medium-sized meetings in towns and villages and small rural meetings. Forty-eight out of the fifty-six meetings, or eighty-five per cent., report that the results have been such as to justify the plan. A large majority of them regard it as eminently successful, as the following verbatim testimonies taken from some of the replies will show. The figures in parenthesis indicate the number of members in the meeting.

Falmouth Meeting, Portland, Maine (215)—"Eminently satisfactory."

Vassalboro, Maine (54)—"Increased the revenue from regular contributors and added to the list some who were giving nothing."

Winthrop Center, Maine (222)—"Great success. Money never came easier. We are urging every child in the family to have an envelope."

Amesbury, Massachusetts (52)—"Very satisfactory."

Glens Falls, New York (261)—"A complete success."

Springfield, North Carolina (157)—"We have a pastor for the first time as a result."

Mount Airy, North Carolina (185)—"Great success."

Knoxville, Tennessee (90)—"It works."

Xenia, Ohio (371)—"We appointed nine teams of two men or two women and divided the membership among them. The results justify the plan."

St. Mary's, Ohio (84)—"Missionary offerings increased just ten times."

Fountain City, Indiana (163)—"More money than ever before."

New Garden, Indiana (117)—"Doubled the offerings."

Portland, Indiana (186)—"No other way for success."

East Main Street, Richmond, Indiana (181)—"Have worked it four years and like it."

Winchester, Indiana (491)—"Each member pledges to pay so much a month. Should he grow careless, the collector for his street calls on him each month."

Union Street, Kokomo, Indiana (269)—"Every meeting should push the every-member canvass."

Oskaloosa, Iowa (561)—"The success of the method has made it a fixture."

Valton, Wisconsin (73)—"The only way of keeping up the pastor's salary."

Cottonwood, Kansas (136)—"We had a banquet. Following after-dinner speeches, pledges were taken by a speaker on the platform. The whole movement was new, but a success."

North Branch, Kansas (309)—"Almost doubled subscriptions to missions and greatly increased funds for evangelistic work."

North Loop, Nebraska (56)—"Quite a number of our children, as well as grown people, gave pledges. The plan proved successful."

Berkeley, California (233)—"We have used this system three years and are just now finishing up old indebtedness of several hundred dollars, and will start the new year free."

Newberg, Oregon (744)—"Funds are coming in regularly. The duplex envelope revolutionizes church finance if properly worked."

Portland, Oregon (216)—"Finances are not a problem here because so many of our members tithe their incomes. The every-member canvass does the rest."

At New York Yearly Meeting a few weeks ago one Quarterly Meeting (Purchase) reported that the new financial plan adopted last year had been carried out with satisfactory results in all its subordinate meetings.

Particularly significant of the progress that the movement for financial reform in our denomination is making is the action taken by two Yearly Meetings in the West this year. Nebraska Yearly Meeting led the way by issuing a direction that an entirely new plan for raising money should be put into immediate operation in all its component meetings. The Nebraska plan involves, First, A Yearly Meeting Budget to include the following items: (1) The expenses of the Yearly Meeting, (2) Support of the work of the Evangelistic Board, (3) Foreign Missions, (4) Education in Nebraska Yearly Meeting, (5) All Boards of the Five Years Meeting. Second, (1) A Budget for every local congregation to include its apportionment of the Yearly Meeting Budget and Quarterly Meeting expenses, together with the pastor's salary and other local expenses; (2) Individual pledges on a weekly basis; (3) An every-member canvass.

The recently adopted California plan includes the following provisions:

(1) That a Commission be formed to be composed of the Finance Committee of the Yearly Meeting, the Treasurer of the Yearly Meeting, and two representatives from each of the following Yearly Meeting organizations, viz., the Board of Foreign Missions, the Women's Foreign Mission Board, the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board, the Whittier College Board, the Board of Delegates to the Five Years Meeting, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, together with the Superintendent of Bible Schools and Superintendent of Temperance.

(2) That it be the duty of this Commission to determine the amounts of money to be raised from year to year for the various departments of the Yearly Meeting, the aggregate of these amounts to be the minimum annual Budget for the Yearly Meeting.

(3) That the Commission apportion the Budget to the Monthly Meetings. That these apportionments be made upon the existing percentage bases for the Quarterly Meetings as established by the Yearly Meetings and the existing percentage bases as fixed by the Quarterly Meetings for their component Monthly Meetings.

(4) That the Commission provide for carrying to the Monthly Meetings a uniform plan for raising the sums apportioned to them by the Yearly and Quarterly

Meetings together with their local expenses through some form of the budget, pledge, weekly offering and every-member canvass system. (For carrying out this provision the Yearly Meeting made a special appropriation of $100.00.)

(5) That the action herein directed need not apply to the method of raising funds for the year 1914-15.

(6) That the several Boards above named be directed to report the names of their representatives to the Chairman of the Yearly Meeting Finance Committee not later than First Month 4, 1915.

(7) That the Commission shall meet in Los Angeles at 9 o'clock on Fifth-day, Second Month 4, 1915.

Shall not this extremely important movement, thus auspiciously begun, be carried forward in every Yearly Meeting that is to occur during the remainder of the year 1914? Now is the time to agitate it.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS,
General Secretary.

525 South Catalina Ave., Pasadena, California.

Letter from Ram Allah

RAM ALLAH, PALESTINE, June 10, 1914.

Dear Friends in America:

While you are enjoying your strawberries we are eating our delicious apricots. We have no small fruit in this land, but our figs, olives, melons, grapes, oranges and other fruit fully make up for the lack of the smaller varieties.

My father returned with me and we are hoping he will spend a year with us at the mission. We arrived on May 21 and found a small delegation of friends and loved ones awaiting us at the Jerusalem depot. Friends tried to persuade us to spend the night in the Holy City, but we were determined to push on to our journey's end. Ram Allah is home and where does one rest as he does in his own home?

Shortly after I left in January, Khalil Totah, the principal of our boys' school, was drafted for three months of military drill and was compelled to drop his work at once and submit to the inevitable. About May first he was arrested on the streets of Jerusalem for wearing a cap and overcoat over his uniform. After a weary month awaiting trial, during which time he was not allowed to leave Jerusalem, he was finally court-martialed and discharged without penalty. Thus he was kept from his work for a month for a breach of military discipline of which he was ignorant. When finally discharged he decided that he would not risk being redrafted and consequently has returned to America where the country is not cursed with militarism. He has done excellent work with the boys and we shall miss him much, but while the government persists in its present policy of military proscription the work in our boys' school must be administered by Americans.

We have neither space nor time to thank the many friends who helped to fill the five large mission trunks that I brought back with me. The W. F. M. Auxiliaries are always busy and liberal in supplying the needs of the mission and dolls, laundry and sewing bags, sheets, pillow-cases, towels, and many other things testify to the thoughtfulness of friends.

You will be glad to know that the Friends meeting in Gonic, N. H., is furnishing the guest-room in the new building in memory of Timothy and Anna Hussey. We propose to call it the "Hussey Guest Room." We hope that many of the friends who read these lines may sometime enjoy the restfulness of this room.

In memory of Caroline C. Brown, recently of Westtown, Pa., a friend is finishing and furnishing the large assembly-room. In this room we shall hang a large steel engraving of Elizabeth Fry among the prisoners in Newgate. A part of a boy's education in this land is to teach him the nobility of womanhood.

The trip of the superintendent to America was quite successful and it is thought that a sufficient sum of money is in hand to finish and to partly furnish the new building. For the necessary grading and out-buildings we shall probably need about two thousand dollars more, but we believe that that will be forthcoming when it is needed. I wish to say right here that I never felt more encouraged about the work here than I do at the present time. The cordial response of many friends of the mission was very cheering. For your kind entertainment, your manifest interest and your liberal response I thank you. The returns in the lives of the Syrian boys will, I am sure, be more than compensation.

We are glad to report that a friend of the mission has promised to loan the boy, of whom we wrote in the last bulletin, a sufficient sum to assist him in school in America for the next two years and by that time he ought to be able to look out for himself. We hope he may enter Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Maine, next fall, where a number of our Syrian boys have been at school. We feel very grateful for this Providential opening.

Some of our friends in America are much disturbed by what they read in the American papers about the threatened tearing down of the walls about Jerusalem and proposed water-works, tramways and other improvements. There is no cause for immediate concern. Nearly everything that is seen in current periodicals about the Holy Land needs to be taken with a great deal of salt.

We have several crews of men at work on the new building for we realize that there is yet much to be done before we can move into it and there is less than four months in which to get the house in readiness for the next school year. We have decided upon October first as the day of dedication. On the following day we shall celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of our Girls' Training Home. This joint celebration promises to be one of the greatest occasions in the history of our mission and we hope that some of our friends from America may enjoy it with us.

Very sincerely,

A. EDWARD KELSEY.

It is easy to criticize, but to construct requires the ability of the artist and of the architect.

PERSONAL MENTION

L. W. McFarland has consented to remain as pastor at High Point, N. C., for another year.

Daniel Oliver, from England, has returned to the United States to complete his religious services.

Albert and George Peele have served the meeting at Winston-Salem, N. C., during the absence of David Sampson and wife in England.

Tennyson Lewis, pastor at Portland, Indiana, the last year has accepted the pastorate of the meeting at Everett, Washington, for the coming year.

Frank Long, who has been serving the meeting at New Westville, Ohio, as pastor, will take charge of the meeting at Pennville, Indiana, the coming year.

Charles Lescault, who has been pastor of the meeting at Haviland, Kansas, has accepted the call of the Pastoral Committee of Spiceland Monthly Meeting, Indiana, to become pastor of that congregation the coming year.

David and Sarah Sampson are expected to sail on the S. S. Carmania from Queenstown, Ireland, for Boston on August 12th. They expect to be ready for work at Winston-Salem, N.C., by the first of September. Their work in England has been very satisfactory.

Albert Cook Myers, who has spent the past year in America pursuing his quest for William Penn's papers on this side of the Atlantic for the preparation of an extended work on the life of William Penn, has returned to England. He is expected to spend from six to nine months abroad, then will again take up the work in this country. It is estimated that at least three more years will be required to cover the vastly scattered collection containing the Penn papers.

NEWS ITEMS

It is expected that a new meeting house at Up River, North Carolina, will be ready in time for the holding of the Quarterly Meeting in November. The new site is about a mile from the present location.

Twenty-one Friends are enrolled in the summer school of Wisconsin University at Madison, Wisconsin. Three other Friends are in that city studying or attending occasional lectures, although not enrolled in the summer school.

The pulpit at First Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, was filled Sunday, July 12th, by Tom Jones, Secretary of the Young People's Movement of the Five Years Meeting. In the afternoon, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Linton A. Cox, a company gathered to meet the young Friends from England, who are visiting Quaker centers in this country. The zeal and enthusiasm of these Friends and the interesting talks they gave inspired all who met them.

The Evangelistic Committee of North Carolina Yearly Meeting is considering a recommendation to the coming Yearly Meeting providing for the holding of all Quarterly Meetings some time in July, in order that greater accuracy may be secured in the preparation of reports for the Yearly Meeting in August.

ANNUAL MISSION MEETING

The foreign mission annual picnic of Friends at Richmond, Indiana, occurred on July 15th, at the hospitable home of Professor E. P. and Nina H. Trueblood. Some sixty or seventy Friends were gathered on College Avenue from different parts of the city, coming with bulging baskets and departing with sadly depleted ones.

This yearly affair is gaining significance because of its splendid provisioning. The day was not the most favorable for out-of-door suppers, but the wide, beautiful lawn was most inviting for the spread, so "in the open" gratitude was given for grace and good things. After the feast was over and all had turned homeward, the memory of the first course of which we partook that afternoon, lingered longest in our thought.

I mean the missionary program for the day. First was a letter from the far away Orient. A few extracts told of a nephew of the writer, who with his wife, Mary White Maynard, are laboring in Bitlis, Turkey. These workers are enduring a literal fight of faith, Mohammedan against Christian. Armenian trouble with angry and armed hords of Kourds occasioned the writing. Their preservation is truly marvelous; in the midst of mad mobs and flying bullets, patiently trying to win a race of fear-enthralled folk to the freedom of gospel love.

Belle C. Bailey told of the pleasure and profit she derived from her visit to the Winona Summer School for missions, June 25-July 2. She was favored in passing on much of the spirit of what she had enjoyed, especially of the lectures of Mrs. J. F. Fisher on the year book for 1915, "The Child in the Midst." The "missionary hour" each day was greatly inspiring. Mrs. D. B. Well's presentation of home mission work, using "In the Red Man's Land" as her text book, proved a helpful feature of the conference. The wish was expressed that every woman in Indiana Yearly Meeting could have been in attendance.

Nina H. Trueblood gave an account of the missionary conference held in Cincinnati, June 30-July 1. E. G. Hill, Edith Tebbetts and herself were delegates from the American Friends' Board. Representatives were present from all the churches working in Mexico, with the exception of the Reformed Presbyterians and Southern Baptists. Twenty-one missionaries were there, including R. S. Tice and Nancy E. Lee. The supreme purpose of the conference was the redistricting of the states of Mexico so that when government affairs shall have been peacefully settled, there may be better systematized and more efficient work accomplished.

There will be the one Evangelical Church in Mexico, embracing all denominations, each doing its distinctive work, but empowered to furnish letters of transfer to or from any state to another in the Republic. An accurate account of proceedings will soon appear in a letter from Robert E. Speer, the masterful spirit-filled leader of the conference. The different denominations manifesting their willingness to give up formerly dearly cherished territory is proof positive of a wider, more Christ-like understanding of the work of evangelization. Such tendency to brotherly consideration in the matter of church preferences, such friendly co-operation are truly millennium "signs of the times," enough to make one exclaim with good old Simeon, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

PHARIBA W. STEPHENS.

CORRESPONDENCE

Alva, Oklahoma, June 11, 1914.

The American Friend:

I believe a request was made some time ago in THE AMERICAN FRIEND for communications upon the topic of the "Prayer Meeting." I had been wanting to write and say that our meeting found the topics used by the Portland, Oregon, Meeting quite helpful. The topics were published December 4th.

If someone well versed in the Bible could prepare these topics from time to time, no doubt they would be helpful to many meetings. We made several copies of a topic and handed them out a week in advance, so different ones could study the same and take part in its consideration. We are without a pastor a part of the time, and used these topics in our Sabbath morning service, also we think, with very satisfactory results.

NEWS FROM THE WHITTIER GUEST HOUSE

Weather is kind to the early Guest House visitors this year. The recent rains have kept the countryside beautifully green; the cold has demolished the mosquitoes and gathered us around the fire-place. Here a wide-awake group has exchanged ideas on "The Spiritual Aspects of the Woman's Movement." In the juniper trimmed barn the villagers have joined in consideration of the wide social responsibilities put upon women of today. One lecture on the "Economics of Home-Making" called forth especially interesting discussion.

With the coming of Augustus T. Murray, we have turned our thoughts to Whittier, studying the strong, sweet elements of the poet's life as revealed in his poetry. We have read "Snow-bound" while sitting in the old kitchen at "The Birthplace."

Our discussions on Quakerism and our meetings for worship, on fine days we have held in the "garden-house," where the flowers and birds supply an outward beauty more helpful to us than cathedral windows or music.

The conference this month will be on "Modern Methods of Religious Teaching for Children." Edwin Starbuck is expected to be there and lecture.

"Present Status of Friends' Testimony against Oaths and War" will follow, 24th-27th, and a further consideration of "Methods of Religious Teaching for Children" from the 28th to Eighth Month 3d.

The entire group of English Friends will be with us from Eighth Month 5th-12th, when we have "How can the Quaker Conception of Religion be Expressed to the World."

"Quakerism and the Fine Arts" is our subject from 15th to 20th, followed on the program by "What can Friends Contribute to the Federation of Churches."

In the Ninth Month, 11th-12th, the "Tension Between Races" is to be thought about, followed by "Modern Politics and Quaker Democracy."

If you have not planned to come to the Guest House, there is time to revise your plan. * * *

ENGLISH YOUNG FRIENDS

The party of young English Friends whose movements are becoming of interest to an increasingly large number of Friends of this country, had another very full week from July 10th to 16th. Leaving Richmond, Indiana, on the 10th, the next two days were spent in the old Blue River neighborhood in southern Indiana. Fairmount and Pendleton occupied their time until Sunday, when a large union meeting was held at Indianapolis.

Friends of that city and vicinity gathered at the large, commodious home of Senator Linton A. Cox in the late afternoon for a social hour, which was followed by a few talks from the English Friends concerning the work in which they are interested. A short devotional period closed an occasion which in spite of the almost unbearable heat, was of unusual interest and profit to all in attendance. The party then took a late train for Iowa, where the succeeding week was to be spent.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

The annual assembly of the Bible School and Christian Endeavor Departments of Western Yearly Meeting will be held at Noblesville, Indiana, August 4-6, 1914. All Bible Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies are requested to send delegates. Lodging and supper the first day will be free; after that lodging and breakfast free each day. Hourly interurban services on the I. U. T. Trains north and south on the Lake Erie. Trains east and west on the Midland. Delegates from the Junior Societies are urged to attend. It is expected to be one of the greatest assemblies Western Yearly Meeting has ever held. Write for entertainment to Charity Owen, Noblesville, Indiana.

GOOD CHANGE

Coffee to Postum

The large army of persons who have found relief from many chronic ailments by changing from coffee to Postum as a daily beverage, is growing each day.

It is only a simple question of trying it for oneself in order to know the joy of returning health as realized by an ill young lady. She writes:

"I had been a coffee drinker nearly all my life and it affected my stomach—caused insomnia and I was seldom without a headache. I had heard about Postum and how beneficial it was, so concluded to quit coffee and try it.

"I was delighted with the change. I can now sleep well and seldom ever have headache. My stomach has gotten strong and I can eat without suffering afterwards. I think my whole system greatly benefited by Postum.

"My brother also suffered from stomach trouble while he drank coffee, but now, since using Postum, he feels so much better he would not go back to coffee for anything."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

- 1:55 The Winona Conference—Winona Delegates.
 2:20 The Place of the Society of Friends in Modern Church Movements—Thomas E. Jones.
 3:10 Business.
 3:40 Music—Concert by Orchestra.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

August 2.

Subject—The Triumphal Entry.

Lesson—Mark 11: 1-11.

Golden Text—Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee.—Zech. 9: 9.

Jesus and His disciples were now approaching Jerusalem on the final journey. They had reached the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives and were at Bethphage. The exact location of this town has not been determined, but it was evidently near Bethany, and less than an hour's walk from Jerusalem.

They were in the line of the great highway of travel from the north and east. The passover was approaching and we may imagine the roads were almost literally lined with pilgrim Jews coming from Galilee and Perea and from the countries of the east.

On Saturday evening Jesus has had supper at Bethany with Mary, Martha and Lazarus, and on Sunday morning He begins to make ready for His entry into the city, knowing full well the fate which would be His before another week had ended.

He sends two of His disciples to a nearby village for a colt upon which He was to ride in token of His peaceful mission. There is no reason to doubt the supernatural knowledge of the presence of the colt, and yet it is just as easy to suppose that there was an arrangement already made with the owners for its use. At any rate they were to return the colt as soon as Jesus was through with it, as is indicated plainly by the Revised Version.

We can easily imagine the presence of a great throng, men from Galilee and Perea, who had now joined the disciples. Throwing their garments upon the colt, and spreading clothing and branches along the highway, the procession starts, and what a procession it was! It was a spontaneous assemblage of men and women who hailed the Messiah as King with their loud acclaim.

Hosannah, which means "Save, we pray." "We take it to mean here, 'May Jehovah be gracious and bless him who now comes as Messiah to restore the kingdom of David.'"—S. S. World.

Luke (19:39) narrates a discordant feeling in this triumphant procession. The Pharisees, true to their nature, object, and bid Jesus to rebuke His disciples for this demonstration. But the climax has been reached. This is the hour of triumph no less for the disciples, and if they hold their peace, "the stones will cry out."

Why Jesus permitted this demonstration is not easily explainable. The S. S. World says that "This was, on the part of Jesus, the definite and honest offer of Himself to the people as Messiah," that he "used the occasion to put Himself fairly, and fully before the people as such." Perhaps this is the correct interpretation.

Jesus now, no less than then, is able to provoke religious enthusiasm that will sweep multitudes into the kingdom, when once the masses get a vision of Him.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

August 2.

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. VIII. The Courage Verse. Joshua 1: 9 (Consecration Meeting).

The consecration meeting may easily grow into a formal, meaningless occasion. The leader should be cautioned to direct the exercises in a way to impress the meaning of genuine consecration.

The Christian life is not without its perils. Temptations exist on every hand, and will while sin remains in the earth. No one will be carried to heaven "on flowery beds of ease."

Christians must be very courageous, else they will stumble at divers temptations. They will be constantly meeting difficult tasks, and without courage, they will often be tempted to run away.

We grow courageous through experience. Every difficulty overcome makes us bolder to resist other difficulties.

Read the ninety-first Psalm, noting especially verses 3, 4, 7, 10, 11, 12 and 15.

Many meetings and small Christian Endeavor Societies sometimes grow faint-hearted and are about ready to give up. Let them read Luke 12: 32.

In a conflict with evil, take comfort in reading Isa. 35: 4; Eph. 6: 10, 11 and Neh. 6: 1-4.

Other references: Num. 13: 20; Deut. 31: 6, 7, 23; Josh. 1: 6, 9, 18; Josh. 10: 25; I. Chr. 19: 13; I. Chr. 22: 13; I. Chr. 28: 20; II. Sam. 10: 12; Ezra 10: 4; Ps. 27: 14; Ps. 31: 24; Isa. 41: 6.

We ought to be courageous in the things God commands us to do. Courage grows with faith. Select Bible characters for discussion who showed that they were unafraid and courageous.

"THE UNITY OF FRIENDS"

Both the London Friend of July 3, and the Friends' Intelligencer (Philadelphia) of July 4, quote in part from an editorial on the above subject in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of June 18th, the latter without comment and the former with the following introductory statement:

"In an editorial of THE AMERICAN FRIEND just to hand, the subject of the growing sense of unity among the different bodies of Friends is discussed in a very hopeful spirit. Quoting from a recent article in this journal the writer asks: 'If the Society is to be reborn—and God grant that it may in the spirit as expressed by our London editor—must it be reborn in the same divisive molds that leave us in detached sections as we face the tasks of a common mission?' The editor regards the differences which hold us apart as largely those of time and circumstance and technique, rather than fundamental or necessarily permanent. Reading the accounts of the recent proceedings in London and Philadelphia he recognizes 'the presence of the same spirit of progression as characterized the proceedings of our last Five Years Meeting,' and he continues:—"

Here follows a quotation direct.

SUCCESSFUL SPEAKER A FRIEND

During the college year Indiana University organized and promoted a statewide contest in public speaking among high school students with a view of having a popular dissemination of knowledge concerning the needs of a new constitution. Each high school student who entered the contest spoke upon that topic. As a result of a series of contests, one contestant was chosen from each of the thirteen congressional districts of the state, and finally a contest was held at the State University between these thirteen contestants. The successful speaker was Donald Snider, a member of the Friends' Meeting at Wabash, Indiana, and a prospective student of Earlham College. He is reported as being a young man of splendid character and good Christian experience, and with his demonstrative ability as a public speaker should be an instrument for great good in the world.

HOME MISSIONS IN KANSAS

Since the home mission work of Kansas Yearly Meeting is largely concentrated upon the Wichita north-end meeting and the work at the Orient Chapel, it seems fitting that the members of the Yearly Meeting should know of the progress of the work. The north end meeting has suffered some loss by the moving away of some of the best workers, yet it has been able to keep its numbers about the same by additions to its membership. The pastor, Zimri Stubbs, has done faithful work and much interest was further awakened by a three weeks' series of revival meetings conducted by Calvin W. Choate, who also was engaged for about two weeks in revival efforts at the Orient Chapel.

The results at the latter place have been especially gratifying. There had for some time been a steady growth of interest which culminated in a thorough going revival. The work for a long time seemed to reach the children only, but lately several families have been brought in and have asked to join with Friends. The interest became such that services were demanded regularly every Sabbath evening, and Miss Elsie Real has been engaged to have pastoral charge. Some homes which were closed to prayer meetings but open for dances have changed about, now barring the dance and welcoming the cottage prayer meeting.

The chapel building is no longer adequate to the needs of the work. Instead of enlarging the present building, there is a willingness, however, to put up with it for a time hoping for something very much better in the near future. The enlarged work is calling for increased funds to carry it on, notwithstanding the fact that the new converts are showing a commendable willingness to give financial aid so far as they are able. There is need for all the funds which have been subscribed and any further contributions could be used to good advantage. Let all pray for the continued growth of the work, that all may be done according to the Master's will.

Died

Barber.—Luther J. Barber, of Tecumseh, Michigan, and formerly of Hanover, Michigan, was born July 23, 1837, and died at the Soldiers' Home hospital at Grand Rapids, Michigan, June 23, 1914. He was converted in early life and joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church, but united with Friends over thirty years ago. He gave much time and labor to the Church and was always loyal to it.

Binford.—Joseph L. Binford, son of Robert and Martha Binford, was born in Hancock County, Indiana, March 19, 1852, and died at his home near Western Grove Church June 5, 1914. He was a birthright Friend and was a highly honored and valued member of Western Grove Meeting. With his fortitude of character and extensive resources he contributed much to the efficiency of the Church. He is survived by his widow and six children. Funeral services were conducted at Western Ridge by Charles M. Elliott, the pastor, assisted by Mary M. Harold, Charles S. Winslow and Dr. T. R. Woodard.

Coffin.—Sarah R. Coffin, wife of Levi Coffin, and daughter of Samuel Rich and wife, was born near Thorntown, Indiana, and died at the home of her son near Westfield, Indiana, June 15, 1914, aged eighty years and twenty-seven days. Her end was peace.

Johnson.—Joseph Johnson, son of Timothy D. and Michal Johnson, was born in Dinwiddie County, Virginia, September 20, 1823, and died after several months suffering incident to old age, May 18, 1914, in his ninety-first year. He is survived by a son and two daughters.

Jones.—Wilbur D. Jones, son of Reuben S. and Mary Jones, was born in Grant County, Indiana, May 30, 1891, and died June 8, 1914, aged twenty-three years and eight days. He was a birthright Friend and accepted Christ at the age of eight years. He was educated in the Marion High School and later in Marion Normal School. At the age of nineteen he accepted a position in Chicago as telegraph operator. An attack of typhoid fever was followed by an illness of eight months. His last days were largely spent in reading the Scriptures in which he was a firm believer. He testified to the saving grace of his Heavenly Father. Funeral services were conducted by David Harris and Charles E. Hiatt, of Marion, Indiana.

Mendenhall.—Ruth Mendenhall, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Chamness, was born in Guilford County, North Carolina, December 29, 1830, and died at the home of her daughter near Phlox in Howard County, Indiana, January 14, 1914, aged eighty-three years and sixteen days. She was married to Thomas Mendenhall in 1850. She was a birthright Friend and at the time of her death was a member of New Hope Monthly Meeting. She was a Friend in belief and practice and lived a consistent Christian life.

Outland.—Zilpha C. Outland, daughter of Joseph and Hepsabeth Outland, was born in Parke County, Indiana, November 21, 1833, and died at the home of her brother-in-law, E. S. Cox, at Long Beach, California, June 28, 1914, aged eighty years seven months and seven days.

Trescott.—Margaret S. Trescott, wife of Dr. W. H. Trescott and daughter of Nathan and Mary Ann Elliott, was born at Oskaloosa, April 14, 1858, and died at her home in Los Angeles, California, June 8, 1914. She was a birthright Friend and died in the living faith which she so long professed. Much of her life was spent in earnest endeavor to alleviate physical suffering and to bring comfort to those in distress. She leaves two sisters and three brothers. Funeral services were conducted by H. Edwin McGrew.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, at Chicago, Western Canada carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

As to You

By J. W. FOLEY

Did you give him a lift? He's a brother of man
And bearing about all the burden he can;
Did you give him a smile? He was downcast and blue,
And the smile would have helped him to battle it through;
Did you give him your hand? He was slipping down hill
And the world, so I fancied, was using him ill;
Did you give him a word? Did you show him the road?
Or did you just let him go on with his load?
Did you help him along? He's a sinner like you,
But the grasp of your hand might have carried him through.
Did you bid him good cheer? Just a word and a smile
Were what he most needed that last weary mile.
Do you know what he bore in that burden of cares
That's in every man's load and that sympathy shares?
Did you try to find out what he needed from you?
Or did you just leave him to battle it through?
Do you know what it means to be losing the fight
When a lift just in time might set everything right?
Do you know what it means, just the clasp of a hand
When a man's borne about all that a man ought to stand?
Did you ask what it was, why the quivering lip
And the glistening tears down the pale cheek that slip?
Were you brother of his when the time came to be?
Did you offer to help him, or didn't you see?
Don't you know it's the part of a brother of man
To find what the grief is and help when you can?
Did you stop when he asked you to give him a lift,
Or were you so busy you left him to shift?
Oh, I know what you mean, what you say may be true,
But the test of your manhood is, What did you do?
Did you reach out a hand? Did you find him the road,
Or did you just let him go by with his load?

To Those in Arrears

We find that there are quite a number of persons who are in arrears in their subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We will greatly appreciate it if all these will send their remittances at once. This is the dull season of the year, but our bills go on and must be met.

To New Subscribers

All new subscribers entered upon our lists at the special low rate offer of fifty cents for six months will receive the paper for a full six months from the time their names are entered. We have no more of the early July copies, and a number of new subscribers will find their subscriptions expiring some time in January.

Only a Few More Days

Only a few more days remain during which new trial subscriptions can be taken at the special offer of fifty cents for six months. We sincerely trust that a number of meetings which have not yet reported will do so within the next few days. Many meetings are proving that new subscriptions can be taken if only the effort is made in the proper way. For the benefit of some who have been slow in taking the matter up, we are holding the offer open until after the 2d of August. We trust that all reports will be made promptly after that date. We are now printing more copies of THE AMERICAN FRIEND than at any other time since the paper was brought to Richmond.

The Educational Number

The issue of August 13th will be the annual educational number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. There will be some articles of special interest educationally, besides considerable news about our various educational institutions. There were many favorable comments upon the educational number last year and we hope to make this a still better one.

An Association of American Colleges Planned

In conference with representative college presidents of denominational institutions, the Executive Committee of the Council of Church Boards of Education, in session at St. Paul, July 7th, authorized the organization of an Association of Church Colleges. The purpose of the organization will be to correlate and co-ordinate the efforts of the evangelical churches in the endeavor to give religion its proper place in the educational system of the country, and to co-ordinate generally her efforts in the broad field of Christians.

A committee of nine representative college presidents are to be appointed and convened by President R. L. Kelly, Chairman of the St. Paul Conference, for the purpose of preparing a brief constitution and by-laws for this Association; also to fix and recommend action fixing the relations of this organization of American Colleges to the Council of Church Boards of Education.

The formation of this Association of American Colleges at this time looks forward to the participation of this organization and the conference of Church Workers in State Universities, already in existence, with the Council of Church Boards of Education, in an Educational Congress which is to be held in Chicago during the early part of January, 1915.

The three organizations comprising the Congress will hold individual day sessions to discuss the problems of vital interest largely to their own organizations. The evening program will be of a popular nature, and discussions will be had of the larger problems of policy, in which all the organizations have equal and definite interest.

It is the purpose of the Program Committee in arranging the program for the joint conferences, to have such problems as the "Place and Function of the Christian College in our Country's Educational System," "The Place the Study of the Bible and Religion Should Have in Christian Colleges," "How to Keep a College Christian after it becomes Wealthy," and other equally vital problems, by the ablest Christian educators.

This Congress, which is to be held in Chicago in January, will represent thirteen Church Boards of Education, the Church workers in a score or more of State Universities, over three hundred colleges and universities, and approximately fifteen million Protestant communicants.

The organization of the Association of American Colleges and the correlation and affiliation of this organization, together with the Conference of Church Workers in State Universities with the Council of Church Boards, into one body, and the holding of an annual Congress for the purpose of studying and closely correlating the efforts of all evangelical Churches in the field of education, marks the beginning of one of the most significant and important advances the Church has contemplated in this generation.

Some Danger Signals

In this age when great achievement is marking every department of human activity, the church of Christ needs to guard itself particularly against the temptation to yield to the spectacular and to that which is purely mechanical in its operations. That which is spiritual can never afford to be put into competition with that which is material. "Regard first things first" is a motto of peculiar adaptation to the Church. The spiritual must ever be dominant over the physical.

"Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? * * * for the temple of God is holy, and such are ye." As the evangel of a gospel that saves to the uttermost, the Church has to do primarily with the inner life of humanity. Its success is not measured by a book-keeper's ledger, nor by the count of a statistician. It is only in the reckoning of the centuries that its true value will be revealed. It is an invisible leadership which the church is called upon to follow and its fruition is not always manifest except to Him who holdeth the world in His hand.

Perhaps the church is having very much the same kind of temptation which may have suggested itself to Jesus at the time of His triumphal entry into Jerusalem. Had the word been given by the Master, undoubtedly the multitudes would have proclaimed Him their King, and hastened to take up arms in His defense. Probably the popular "Hosannas" were in anticipation that this would actually occur. It is easy to conjecture the possibilities of such an uprising and in consequence of it to picture Jesus as a leader who might rank with many another great general of the world.

But His success was not of this order. It was to be measured by no such standards. Jesus was building for the ages—for eternity. His was to be a success infinitely greater than would have been possible by yielding to the temptations of the passing hour. His career on earth was to be measured only in the light of eternity. He had set the leaven to work among a few feeble followers, which was to develop through the centuries in breeding new races of men, in transforming nations by the power of a new life. In the humility of His defeat Jesus became the world's conqueror for all time.

"There shall be abundance of grain in the earth upon the top of the mountains," with the result that "the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon." "And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened." Such are the characteristics of the true Christian Church. Its mission is to be the evangel of a saving gospel, which, when revealed to the consciousness of needy men and women, is potent to transform their lives into a holy relationship with their Heavenly Father.

It is not to be considered that the church is not expected to grow in numbers by the enlargement of the kingdom of God in the earth. There is universal rejoicing among Christians when any church is adding to its church roll. It is perhaps evidence of the lifelessness of many churches that they are declining in membership. There is certainly no inconsistency between a high degree of spiritual life and a constantly enlarging list of members. The latter is largely the outward evidence of the former, but even here there may be a mistake in the reckoning. The church that operates largely by mechanical processes and which thereby is able to boast of a constantly enlarging membership roll, is in danger of yielding to the temptation of sacrificing the highest and most permanent good for the sake of temporary display.

Undoubtedly there are meetings which are never known far beyond their own localities, but which are quietly but constantly infusing new truth and new life into the lives of all who come within the circle of their influence. It is such communities that are doubly blessed, and it is such meetings that will reap the rewards of the faithful.

We must not be thought as discrediting the outward evidences of life. Ordinarily the live church is the growing church, and its growth may generally be taken as the evidences of life. But no church can be measured with exactness by its meeting house, or by the size of its enrollment book, or by its ability to dominate the political situation, or by the place of its members in the society columns of the newspaper, or by the number of its mission fields, or by its position in relation to the moral questions of the day, or by its dominance of the affairs of state or of the civilizing agencies of the world.

The church must be measured by its ability to change human life and lift it into holy relationships with God. Having done this, the transformed life will manifest itself in better neighborhoods, purer municipalities, cleaner politics, safer legislation and a nobler civilization. But the Church can become a world power only by becoming a spiritual power, by sacrificing all ambition for secular position and by devoting itself to simple, faithful discipleship as it undertakes the great task of human redemption. It is "not by might nor by power but by my spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts." By such processes must the church win this world to a knowledge of Jesus Christ.

A Problem Pressing for Solution

We sat recently in the business session of a Monthly Meeting—and it was an anniversary occasion, too,—but while it was a most interesting and profitable hour, we could not fail to notice that there was probably four times as many women present as there were men. The membership roll of this particular meeting will hardly show any such disparity, and we were led to ponder upon the cause of it.

The sadness of our discovery was only heightened by the probability that this showing was by no means an isolated one. In how many of our Friends Monthly Meetings can this same difference be duplicated? We are forced to believe that it is the rule and not the exception both east and west.

The problem is not that there are too many women or that they are not capable of administering the affairs of the church. Their capability and the desirability of their active participation in the work of the church are not to be questioned. Our concern relates to the paucity of our Quaker men in the active, constructive work of the denomination. That it is a situation which ought to be remedied will probably be admitted by all. Perhaps in almost every community, there are leaders in the local world of action, farmers' organizations, literary societies, political or social clubs, business associations, or municipal activities, who apparently never give a thought to their responsibilities in the local meeting or in the gathering of the annual body.

The causes are perhaps multitudinous, and some of them perhaps multiplex. Probably a more pronounced and positive spiritual experience would solve the problem in many cases. Yet perhaps their general lack of interest in the affairs of the church accounts for their indifference to the spiritual life. In some instances there will be the excuse that the business of the meeting is controlled by a select few, and perhaps they are right. In all too many cases the men have become creatures of habit and have grown to be naturally indifferent to their privileges and obligations as members of the Society of Friends.

A more discerning analysis will probably disclose a reason that is more fundamental and therefore more difficult. Too many meetings are content with the commonplace and therefore never get beyond the routine stage of operations. The reading of reports and their acceptance grow to be matters of dull formality, especially when the message is in stereotyped form and reveals nothing of particular interest to anybody. The holding of the business meeting and the transaction of the business on the program become in themselves formalities, and the impression becomes fixed that the meeting exists for the sake of existing and all obligations are met, if the program as required by the discipline is carried out on stated occasions.

Somehow, all too often, both the Society and its constituent meetings fail to reveal any plan which would call out the best in its membership, and which would appeal especially to the men. Apparently there is often no program for a campaign of effort that is worth while, no purpose to go forward aggressively, no disposition to seek for great tasks, or having found them, no disposition to face them. Is it any wonder that many of our men disconnect themselves from the business operations of the church?

It is largely for the purpose of meeting this situation, that we have advocated a conference of our Quaker men; that they might come together and face their responsibilities, that they might get a vision of the tasks to which the Christian church is being called, and which would appeal to them as being worthy of the best which the manhood of the Society of Friends can furnish in the way of Christian living and Christian service.

What are we going to do about it? Will we be satisfied to drift, or be content with the ordinary or commonplace? Shall we conclude that the problem is unsolvable, because perchance it is too difficult, or perhaps too costly, or because we imagine that the remedy will upset some of our churchly customs? The question of the holding of the proposed conference is now with the Executive Committee, but we imagine the committee will want to know what Friends generally think of the plan. Many have not yet spoken, and many others have voiced their approval in private that ought to be heard in the open.

Is there any problem more pressing than that of trying to enlist our Quaker men more actively in the work of the church? Upon its solution depend in large measure the solution of questions of finance, of internal adjustments and relationships in our denominational organism, and of our relation to the mighty world tasks to which God is calling His church with a fresh inspiration in these early years of the twentieth century.

Becoming. Mark 1: 17.

BY LINDLEY D. CLARK

When Jesus called Peter and Andrew to leave their work on the Sea of Galilee, He promised them still a vocation. The call was less away than to: "Come, I will make you to become."

The invitation of Christ has been voiced in many ways since that day, and its effectiveness has depended largely upon the emphasis that has been placed on the two elements of separation and union, of yielding up and obtaining, of self-sacrifice and high self-realization. There is no uncertainty anywhere in Jesus' teachings as to the nature of the preliminary step. The fishers must leave their nets and the publican his toll booth, as He Himself had left the carpenter's bench, because for them there was a requirement for full time service. And for everyone there is a reckoning to be made. Jesus calls it taking up the cross,—and this means going forth to death. He tells men to count the cost; but when He says this He says also that they who forsake find an hundred fold reward,—that giving up is but the opening of new and truer channels of blessing.

Count the cost, then, of accepting His call, but count also the cost of failing to accept it. There is no room for a preaching that dwells unremittingly on hardships and self-sacrifice. Paul knew about them, and sets forth a catalogue from his own experience that none of us would choose to undergo; but he forthwith labels them "light afflictions," transitory, and giving way to an eternal weight of glory.

So it is in all that Christ proposes. If he urges a rock foundation at the cost of deep searchings and profound personal experiences, He shows clearly the reward of such effort and the loss of the whole work of the one who builds on sand. If He urges the rich young man to sell his possessions and give to the poor, it is that he may fill his life with satisfactions that by his own confession wealth had not brought him.

Roger Bacon, seven hundred years ago, set down four prime causes of human ignorance,—authority, custom, popular opinion, and pride of supposed knowledge. President Wilson, in opening the Methodist University at Washington a few weeks ago, said that the four years of a young man's college life were chiefly spent by his teachers in attempting to overcome an apparently unending series of barriers to the reception of the truth and the discipline of mind and spirit that comprise a collegiate education. The great battle is to lose self that we may find life.

We are bounded by our horizons,—the measure of the range of our vision. The Psalmist yielded to the upward call, and testified that "He brought me forth into a large place." Paul was not disobedient, and went from unsatisfied persecutor to a glorious apostleship, becoming the greatest human teacher the world has known. The orphan lad, Colgate, had his angelic message from a canal boatman as he was on his way to New York: "Somebody is going to be the best soap-maker in New York, and you might as well be that man," and urged him to keep his faith in God. What he became is recorded not only in the annals of successful business, but in the records of countless benefactions as well.

But whether the world knows it for a success or not, the life that heeds Christ's call to become is a life of enlargement in the present and foundation for a future that may be anticipated with peace and gladness and not with fear. How many a man's horizon closes in upon him with the passing years until nothing is visible that seems worth while, and the hand of self-destruction closes the chapter here of a life of deterioration and self-stultification that had seemed in earlier years to be a life of freedom because it was a life of self-indulgence. I recently heard a traveler tell of a Korean city that by reason of the sloth and neglect of its inhabitants reached such a state of physical uncleanness that it was constantly visited with deadly diseases, the people reflecting the unwholesomeness of their surroundings in their own degradation, spiritual, mental, and physical. But he was able also to depict the effect of a thorough reform. By paying the price of the surrender of the old, the new became fruitful of a life of cleanliness and health and growth in all right living. Our own Nation is called upon to free itself from the waste and wrong and peril of war and intemperance, and of the inequity of social and economic conditions that emphasize and increase the distinctions between strong and weak, and rich and poor. For salvation reaches also to communities and nations, no less than to individuals. Authority, custom, preconception and pride are here to be combatted, as well as powerful selfish interests; but as the vision of the nation is clarified, and the false pleas of discredited ideas and businesses are rightly rated, the way is opened for new activities,—the bringing in of conditions that work for righteousness and the development of manhood and womanhood in the likeness and image of God.

This is what Christ offers in His call,—to pass from self-deception and deterioration to a saving knowledge and growth; to exchange low ideals for high, the quick and transitory gain for the enduring reward, the circle bounded by self and selfish interests for the larger field of investment that gathers rewards from a hundred sources, and enters into the pleasures of a common welfare, fruitful now as we become workers together with Him who calls, "and it doth not yet appear what we shall be," but it is still a becoming, for we "shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

A Quaker in the Turkish Army

BY KHALIL TOTAH

It is inconsistent enough for a birthright member of the Society of Friends to serve in the Turkish army, but such inconsistency will be even more sensational when charged against a Monthly Meeting Clerk, whose duty it is to read aloud the query, "Do you refrain from bearing arms and from performing military service?" Finding comfort in Emerson's theory that consistency is the bane of little minds, I proceed with my tale.

Far back, when the Ottoman Sultans first ruled Christian lands, Christians were only tolerated. They paid tribute, but were allowed no share in the glorious wars of conquest. A non-Moslem was considered unworthy to line up in the ranks of the "believers." Neither would a Christian subject fight against a fellow co-religionist in order to increase the prestige of the Mohammedan faith. So well did both sides grasp the full significance of the situation that the payment of a little sum a year in place of serving in the army was quite satisfactory to both ruler and ruled. But things change—even in Turkey—and the constitution of 1908 demanded military service from Moslem and non-Moslem alike. In principle, such a policy is compatible with equality and with modern European custom. In practice, it is compatible with neither equality nor justice.

Service in the Turkish army is now obnoxiously compulsory. Every man is government property between the ages of twenty and forty. This score of years is divided into three terms:

1. Military service proper of three years (it may be reduced to two years in the near future).
2. Reserve duty called "ihtiat" for six years.
3. Re-enforcement duty "redif" of eleven years.

The first term of three years must be served in full. A man is always sent away from home to serve in a different section of the Empire. Thus Syrians are shipped to Yemen (Arabia) and former European Turkey; while Turks are sent to non-Turkish speaking communities. It is this first period that is most dreadful. It is also fortunate that a soldier can buy himself out. The price fluctuates according to the market. It happened that I had to pay $280.00, plus three months of training, which I have just served.

It was early in last February when I received an urgent call to report at the barracks in Jerusalem. I was to begin right away in drilling with the soldiers. The absence of the superintendent, the lack of workers and the awkwardness of the whole situation made no difference whatever. Those were military orders and must be carried out immediately. The dragoman of the American Consulate was on good terms with the Turkish officials. His mediation helped some, but it could not postpone this task for the following summer when our school would be closed up. Facing the inevitable, I handed my work over to Marion Kelsey in addition to the duties of the superintendent and the care of the baby which were already in her hands.

So early at 7:00 a. m., February 11th, I was entering the barracks which are opposite the "Ecco Homo" arch—the traditional spot where Pilate said "Behold the man!" on seeing Christ with a crown of thorns. How little did I think of the Master carrying His heavy cross on this "Via Dolorosa" which I trod four or five times a day. In those barracks where Jesus, perhaps, first carried His cross, I bore mine too in the form of a Mauser gun and bayonet. On first reporting I was handed over from one officer to another until I finally settled down in a dingy, dark, ill-ventilated, crowded barrack room, where the poor soldiers slept on nothing but a thin blanket on a hard, dirty floor, with nothing but one blanket and an overcoat for a cover. I was a curiosity among them, first for having a smooth face, secondly for having a respectable uniform (not furnished by the government), and thirdly for wearing glasses. I felt out of place altogether, but soon after I got into the game and began to wander from one group of soldiers to another. On the whole, they are a good hearted crowd, full of life, and in their horse-play and other crude amusements resemble college boys.

I found that they looked on me as upper classmen do on a freshman and I acted accordingly. Anyone who has had the privilege of serving as college freshman will have no difficulty in the Turkish army where a new comer is first eyed, tested and then handled accordingly. I made up my mind at the outset not to put on airs lest I might suffer. I anticipated no trouble from those who had real authority, but it was those petty officers against whom I had to guard myself. I was a "sport" and did what my ignorant, illiterate sergeant ordered me to do as long as I knew I had to. The army is no place for a tender-foot and "please" is foreign to them. My ability to read and write Arabic served me in good stead, for often was I called upon to read or write a letter for those who were over me. Frequently the soldiers gathered around me to hear the news of the outside world. I only went down to the barrack for drill and I boarded outside. I often took a book with me to read in spare moments and if it happened to have pictures they were delighted to look at them.

Most of the time the soldiers are doing one thing or another. It seems to be the policy of the army to keep them occupied so when they do have a breathing spell, they won't have energy enough to get into mischief. At seven a. m. at the bugle call, we are all on our feet armed to march out to the field. Each officer takes his company to a spacious open yard where the whole regiment meets. Then the roll is called and we are given orders to march out in fours with the band playing before us. We are trained in small groups by non-commissioned officers and experienced soldiers under the close supervision of our officers. On first going there we were taught to stand "attention," "shoulder arms," etc., taking more difficult movements as we go on. The system is German, the gun is Mauser and the official language, Turkish.

Later we had to dig trenches, go into sham battles with another regiment, practice at target, and all the other necessary arts of war. We were kept drilling until eleven o'clock a. m., with half an hour intermission, starting again in the afternoon at one-thirty and stopping at four. So much for a day scholar like me. The regulars had other duties in the night like sentry work, doing errands and attending evening classes of a military nature.

I was fortunate indeed to be on the right side of my captain who was a true gentleman. I invited him out to see the school which he did. He enjoyed being with us. He praised our educational work and wanted to have his son enter our boys' school. Ever after he permitted me to go home every Wednesday afternoon. So I spent the rest of the week in Ramallah. I was entitled to Sunday anyway. Friday was their Sabbath. Thursday was for general cleaning up and for washing, so I really missed only one day of drill—Saturday. That was helpful indeed, because I could get back to the school and help the overworked staff.

Military discipline is severe, but perhaps not quite so much as in Germany. A private could never speak to an officer officially without being accompanied by a sergeant. An officer is of course to be saluted wherever met. As a general rule, my officers were very decent to all those who minded their own business and paid attention to orders. Some of the young officers were exceedingly pompous and made it a little disagreeable for us.

One Sunday afternoon I was seen on the street with civilian cap and overcoat over my uniform. The uniform didn't show at all. I have worn those things many a time and was seen by many officers who never said anything to me, but this time I was stopped by a rough, beastly looking officer from another regiment, interrogated as to why I wore civilian clothes and arrested. I was confined in the barracks for about a week, awaiting my court-martial for this breach of discipline. They set the date for my court-martial three different times. I was there on the minute, but they never got around to trying me. At last I had Mr. A. E. Thompson, a loyal friend of mine, and a Canadian missionary in Jerusalem, interview the head of the military division, who hastened matters and released me with no further torment.

Thus I completed my first term of service. As soon as they handed me my papers, they put me down for the next one, which means that I must serve any time the government is in need of men. I can buy myself again for two hundred dollars, but as soon as I pay that I will be ready for another call. The state of affairs would keep up until I become forty years old. Teachers in government schools are exempt, but if one is called to serve before he was a teacher he will have no exemption. It is unwise to register our school as a government school because we cannot depend on Turkish laws, they are so changeable. The American Embassy was opposed to it too.

Such an unreasonable policy of militarism is fast ruining the country. It is only a matter of time as to when it will collapse. It is bankrupt, being depopulated, hated by all subjects, all creeds and races. In spite of all this, Turkey is borrowing more money with which to buy second-hand dreadnoughts. Enner Pasha, the present war minister and the hero of the revolution of 1908, is one big fool. It is his personality, position and policy that is causing misery to thousands of people. He wants more soldiers, more money for war, modern naval and military weapons, airships, and all these luxuries, which Turkey cannot afford. They must hire Germans for their army, Frenchmen for aeroplane, and English for their navy, and these things cost money which is squeezed out of the starving population. "O Lord, how long!" is the cry. Militarism in Turkey is a decided curse. If any one disease is going to kill Turkey, it is its military policy. Nobody is willing to serve that can escape. Not long ago a hundred and twelve men were called upon in Ramallah and only four were to be found. The people hate Turkey. They are praying for its immediate downfall, and may their prayers be speedily answered.

A Hoosier in North Carolina

BY GEORGE N. HARTLEY

(CONCLUDED)

The prohibition law of North Carolina is a great success when compared with conditions existing under the open saloon. In some sections it is rendered almost void by what they call the jug law. Anyone may order by express a one gallon jug of whiskey as often as he wishes, but he must not have more than one gallon on hands at one time. This law makes the blind tigers much more easy. One postmaster told me that he issued 200 postoffice orders in one day during holidays for whiskey.

Although there is much drinking from this source, yet there is no legalized place where drinkers and gamblers may congregate. Boys are not so much enticed, so drunkenness is much on the decrease. Indeed, it is a rare thing that a drunk man is seen on the streets. An effort is being made to do away with the jug law; when this is done and the Virginias fall into line, North Carolina will have a good chance to live sober.

It afforded me great pleasure and comfort to be so kindly received, and given all the liberty and time I desired to address the many schools that fell in my way. Public schools, high schools, academies and colleges all gave me the best of attention and apparent appreciation. One school I desired to enter, but I was informed that the city was Catholic ruled, and they had no chapel exercises and allowed no minister to come in to speak to the students, so I made no application there. These addresses were given to inspire the young people to live a life that is worth while; to conserve the physical, mental and moral powers God has given them; to leave off all narcotics and whatever would hinder the highest development of all our faculties. Many quit using tobacco and many others pledged themselves never to begin it, nor to take any strong drink.

Guilford College is a power for good, not only among Friends, but others as well. I entered the homes of many who at some time had been students at Guilford College or New Garden Boarding School. In these homes I found a different life, which also was felt in the Sabbath Schools and meetings. Even the table service was superior and the biscuits much better. Biscuits were everywhere, and always three times a day with very few exceptions, and when made by Guilford girls they were always palatable.

My stay of a few days at Guilford College was of much interest. As I mingled with the students and addressed them on different occasions, I realized that the possibilities before such a fine company of young people were great, and, judging from their conduct, the promise is good. The management is prime and the teaching force is equal to the demand. President L. L. Hobbs, who has been in the institution since 1876 and who was an associate teacher with myself for two years, has proved himself a worthy and efficient head of the institution for these many years. Guilford College with its numerous buildings and equipments and its beautiful campus ranks among the first colleges of the South.

One of the greatest hindrances to the church work was the lack of punctuality. It was not uncommon to hear men say, "Sunday School is at ten o'clock, but nobody will be there on time so it is not worth while to go yet." So say all and so it is. Some ministers say so too. Some say we will begin on time and they do and these Sabbath Schools and meetings are alive. The Yearly Meeting is short of ministers that are physically able and capable of doing active work as pastors and evangelists. Some pastors have the care of as many as four or five meetings, going to each place once a month. Some meetings have gone almost out for the lack of a leader. The city meetings are well cared for by regular pastors. Lewis W. McFarland, of Western Yearly Meeting, is pastor at High Point and is doing excellent work. Fred E. Smith, of Indiana Yearly Meeting, is at Greensboro and the meeting is flourishing under his leadership. There are a few others from the north that are doing well. So many of their young people come north or west and do excellent service, so it is quite right that we should send some south to help them.

In four Quarterly Meetings I found some had drawn off from their meetings and set up little meetings and in some way connected themselves with Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. As it appeared in some cases, some little unpleasantness would arise in a community, and a few, ten or fifteen, members would separate and apply to the Trustees of the Charleston Fund of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting for money to build a new house, and a new house would soon be standing near the old one, and two little meetings would be held and sinners would say, "Behold how these Quakers love one another!"

This Charleston Fund is thus being worse than wasted, as it is an encouragement to these little divisions, thus weakening the power of both for soul winning. Then these new meeting houses, as a rule, must close soon, as some have done already as I was informed. Some of these little divisions have no real leaders, no ministers. The members went off because of some disagreements, no principle being involved, so they cannot survive long. The principal reason given me was that they objected to a hireling ministry and other advanced movements of the Church.

They do not take into consideration the fact, that because a minister receives a support, either a fixed amount or as Friends have a mind to give, this does not necessarily make him a hireling. This is especially true when the minister does not know where the next meal is to come from or his little ones cannot go to Sabbath School for lack of sufficient clothing. A hireling is one that will not sacrifice himself and can easily be hired to quit preaching. I am sure I found no hireling ministry in North Carolina, but I did find a goodly number of very faithful, overworked, underpaid, active, self-sacrificing ministers, cheerful and happy, some having no homes of their own, living in such cast-off houses as they could find to give them shelter.

The Church ought to divide up a little and provide better places for some of these and make them feel that their services are appreciated. By so doing they will make the gospel free, and the messenger that brings it will have a mind that is clear and free from the special care of his home. Some say, "Let the minister trust the Lord." That is the way they do and they get on well, when the Lord can trust them. If any are hirelings and have quit helping and gone to storing up money, then the minister fares hard.

After having spent 198 days within the limits of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and having visited all the particular meetings, save three, and having mingled with the people in many homes and elsewhere, I feel free to say I found a goodly number of very earnest, spiritual worshipers, young as well as old. The hospitality and kindness shown me everywhere throughout the state was of the highest type. Though I changed places many times, and in a number of instances, during the stormy part of the winter the conditions were very uncomfortable, yet the good hand of God was upon me and I was kept in good health and strength and able to give from one to four addresses almost every day during the whole time. To Him be all the praise.

Echoes from the Haverford Summer School

To gather up more than "echoes" would be a difficult task for one person, so "many voices" were in the air at the Haverford Summer School, so many opportunities were given us. And yet the prevailing note was of harmony and unity of purpose. Entire accord was hardly to be expected, for many phases of Quakerism were represented in that large gathering of one hundred or more and there were some outside our membership altogether. Yet there was not only social harmony, but the accord of the program was also noticeable. Certain lectures or conferences seemed naturally to succeed others, even where no connection had been planned.

The teaching of Walter Rauschenbusch on "Christianizing the Social Order" was, for example, a prelude to Eleanor D. Wood's account (on another day) of the community life at Corinth, as pictured in Paul's letters, and Hugh Black's eloquent lecture on "The Open Door" led naturally to a consideration of the wider opportunities and responsibilities which such gatherings as Friends' Summer Schools bring with them.

Walter Rauschenbusch, known to some of us heretofore only by his writings, was most interesting as a lecturer, and was also kind enough to devote a twilight hour on the lawn to answering some of the many questions which he had raised in our minds. Perhaps nothing that he said would be more appropriately quoted here than when, after having spoken of the "social habits, which spread by imitation, such as smoking and alcoholism," he included the "dress habit" (i. e., extravagant and foolish dress) among these, and added, "I feel like paying my tribute to the women here, who are so sensibly and comfortably dressed. And, while you have largely given up your distinguishing dress (and I regret it), it seems to me that just here lies a part of the mission you Quaker women have to the rest of the world—to say to them, by your dress, 'Come, and be sensible and beautiful with us!'"

Even if we could not go as far as he does in social reform, we could all feel grateful for the combination in him of the active "social conscience" with a loving heart, a sympathetic nature, and a delightful touch of humor.

Rufus M. Jones, in his three lectures, "A Quietist in Action," and the two on Guyon and Fenelon, drew and sustained a very interesting parallel, between the Quietists and some Friends; notably Thomas Shillitoe (who formed the subject of the first lecture), Thomas Story and Job Scott.

While there was much in the lives of Guyon and Fenelon, which was widely different from these Friends, and others who had been influenced by their writings, there was the same desire to be emptied of self, to be, as Thomas Shillitoe said, "like a cork upon the ocean," carried passively wherever the deep current of Divine Love would move.

A closer study of the lives of Guyon and Fenelon revealed much which seemed, as the speaker said, to lie "only in negations," and also a morbid element.

Not "the selfless life," but a consecrated self, glad to serve, or to wait, is to be the ideal of our day.

Prof. Augustus T. Murray's two Bible lessons—"The Test of Discipleship," and "The Fellowship of Suffering," led us, as he said, "into deep waters," but were well calculated to follow a study of the Quietists, stirring up an earnest conviction that "we are never saved by the 'thou shalt nots,'" as Paul found out for himself, but rather by feeling as our Savior did that His mission could only be fulfilled by entering into the world, with all its pain and sorrow, and meeting the base and evil conditions "yet without sin." Dr. Murray used in his lessons the old version of the Bible, or the Greek Context, saying that his concern was to find "what the Master meant; not what men think that He meant."

How well, following these lessons came, the next day, Hugh Black's utterance, "Not what you think of religion—not what you say of religion, but the things by which you are living—that is the touchstone."

Two of the "informal conferences,"—the one on "Eastern and Western Quakerism," and that treating of "A Wider Fellowship,"—were helpful and interesting. In these, also, there was a widely differing attitude, yet harmony and good feeling. In the first, an expressed, as well as a felt, desire that East and West, we may learn from each other;—in the second, the thought was expressed that like points on the outer rim of a circle, we draw nearer together as "we draw nearer to the Centre." It was at the close of this conference that the younger Friends were earnestly asked not to forget to be loving and patient with their older Friends even when they felt that they were "not understood" by them.

The close of the week brought our English visitors and also our young Friends in large numbers. Two earnest and interesting conferences on Seventh-day afternoon and evening were followed on First-day morning by quite a general visitation of nearby meetings, by different groups, this being aided by means of automobiles, kindly loaned; though muddy roads did not discourage the "trampers," of whom there were a number. The afternoon brought a conference at which eight Friends representing conditions in Australia and New Zealand, Canada, Indiana, England, New York and Ireland, respectively, told us how our members in these different parts are working out their own way of meeting the "challenge" of our time.

In the evening was reached what seemed the culmination of all the deeper thought of the week, when we heard first of the fundamental need of spiritual life, then of public worship, as an aid to that life, which brought before us the responsibilities and privileges of our meetings for worship. Next, personal religious communion, as an aid, and a deep need of the spiritual life was presented, and the danger pointed out of our being too busy, even with what we felt to be our Master's work, as to miss the sense of His presence. The influence of Christ was next presented. "Only as Christ is within, is He 'the hope of glory.'"

Then all was summed up, in "carrying out spiritual ideals in daily life," for as we were reminded, it is only the man who "heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," whose house is "built upon the rock."

The conference closed with a period of "living silence," which the large gathering seemed slow to break.

After all it may be that we gained as much from our daily association as from any appointed gathering. Getting together in the dining-room, or in chance talks as we sat under the trees, quiet walks toward sunset, when the wood-thrushes were singing, and cool shadows stretched across the lawn, gave many opportunities to be really neighbors,—"nigh-dwellers."—Frances Tatum Rhoads in Philadelphia Friend.

The Place of Meeting—A Mystery Explained

BY MEAD A. KELSEY

Having enjoyed the high privilege of attending the recent International Sunday School Convention which was held in the Medinah Temple, Chicago, I have thought that it would interest the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to know something of the place of meeting; that is, the Temple. To the uninitiated, like myself, the name "Medinah Temple" must have involved a mystery, and this was by no means lessened when we saw the magnificent structure, that could not have cost less than half a million, with its mosque-like domes, two of which were surmounted by huge scepters each bearing at its upper end a crescent, the universal emblem of Islam. Was this then, a Mohammedan mosque to which we were going? No, not exactly, although related. It is rather, as I learned, the home of a lodge of the "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine,"—Shriners, they are called for brevity. This called for an investigation, for although I had long known of the Shriners, I knew nothing about them. Here then is what I found:

"The Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine was established at Mecca, Arabia, in the year 5459 (in the year of our Lord 1608). . . . The order was revived and instituted at Cairo, Egypt, in 5598 (equivalent to June 14, 1837). . . . Temples were also instituted in various cities throughout Europe some years ago. . . . In 1871 the ritual was brought to America by one of the transient foreign members, and placed in the hands of Dr. Walter M. Fleming, 33d degree Sovereign Grand Inspector-General A. and A. Rite, and Eminent Commander of Columbia Commandary No. 1, Knights Templar, New York."

Thus it was that this order of Moslem origin was introduced into America, and Mecca Temple No. 1 instituted in New York. The ritual was revised and adapted, some features being taken from "the old burlesque association known as the Sons of Malta. . . . And a portion of the work taken from the higher degrees of the Rite of Memphis and the Scotch Rite, as well as the Royal Arch and Templar degrees York Rite." But with all the changes, it still retains a strong coloring of its Islamic origin. Only Knight Templars and 32d degree Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons are eligible to membership in the American order.

Among the official titles are to be found such as these: Illustrious Grand Potentate; Illustrious Chief Rabban; Illustrious Most High Prophet and Priest, —God save the mark! On the walls of Medinah Temple were to be seen the portraits of a number of Illustrious Grand Potentates in their gorgeous robes, —in striking contrast to the portraits of Potts, Jacobs, Trumbull, Harshorn, and others of our great leaders to be seen within,—men the insignia of whose honor is deeds and not gorgeous attire.

Since my readers may not see the portraits of these Illustrious Grand Potentates, I will insert here a description of their official costume: "Velvet purple robe or domino (beautifully wrought); flowing sleeves, trimmed with yellow or gold braid; yellow or gold colored sash; high purple and yellow silk or satin turban, with crescent of gold and jeweled; jeweled scepter with crescent at top." A copy of the Bible and the Koran lie upon the altar in the lodge room. (This I did not see, but I have it on good authority.)

The Temple itself bears the name of the sacred city of Islam, Medina, where Mohammed died and was buried, as the first temple in New York was named Mecca, for the place of his birth. Thus do men in a professedly Christian land honor the False Prophet and show respect to a faith that has been for centuries the most formidable foe of Christianity! But I did not intend to comment, but only to state the facts as I found them, and ask the question, Whither?

But one thing I think must gladden every Christian heart: Over the platform in the great auditorium, above all Illustrious Grand Potentates and every other name that is named, blazed in living flame the holy resolve of the assembled hosts, JESUS SHALL REIGN. God speed the day when that device shall be read in every temple, synagogue, mosque, and above every shrine in all the world,—yea, rather, in every heart let it be written, JESUS REIGNS!

The Church Peace Union has addressed a letter to the ministers of the United States offering prizes as follows:

One thousand dollars for the best monograph of between 15,000 and 20,000 words on any phase of international peace by any pastor of any church in the United States; three prizes, one of $500, one of $300, and one of $200, for the three best essays on international peace by students of theological seminaries in the United States; $1,000 in ten prizes of $100 each to any church member between twenty and thirty years of age; twenty prizes of $50 each to Sunday School pupils between fifteen and twenty years of age; fifty prizes of $20 each to Sunday School pupils between ten and fifteen years of age. Pastors are asked to make announcement of these prizes. Only one essay should be sent from each church and Bible School, essays of the local church and Bible School being read by a local committee and the one winning essay forwarded.

"Packing Pork to Pay Expenses"

I wish to tell you a story which I heard from the lips of the man of whom I speak. He was William Reynolds, of Peoria, Ill. Several years before, he was stopped on the street by a friend who asked him this question, "Mr. Reynolds, how long have we known each other?"

"About fifteen years."

"Mr. Reynolds, do you believe that I must accept Christ as my Savior, if I am to be saved?"

"Yes, I do."

"Mr. Reynolds, are you a Christian?"

"Yes, I believe so."

"Mr. Reynolds, do you care whether I am saved or not?"

"Why, certainly I do."

"Pardon me, I do not mean to hurt your feelings, but I do not believe it. As you say, for fifteen years we have known each other. We have frequently met in social contact. We have discussed almost everything under the heavens; yet in all this time you never once uttered one word to let me know you cared about my soul. When I put the question you assert your concern; but surely if you had cared you would have spoken. You are a leading Christian in the city, and if you had told me you had something precious in your life which I ought to have, I would have listened to you with respect. But you never spoke the word, and I CANNOT BELIEVE YOU REALLY CARED."

With shame Mr. Reynolds confessed that he had shirked many an opportunity to speak for Jesus Christ. But being much affected by this conversation he said to his friend: "What has happened to stir you up in this way?" His friend replied that on the previous day, as he was entering the train at Chicago, a man came in after him, occupied the same seat, and began a conversation somewhat as follows:

"Pleasant day!"

"Yes, quite pleasant"

"Fine crops!"

"So I believe," was the reply.

"We ought to be very thankful to the good Lord for all His blessing!"

"Why, yes, I suppose we ought!"

Then came the real question: "My friend, are you a Christian?"

"Well, I believe the church is a good thing—I would not wish to bring up my family in a city that had no churches in it; but really, I have never given any serious thought to this subject." Then the still more surprising statement from the stranger was this: "My friend, I would like to pray with you!" "If we were in a convenient place, I do not know as I would have any objections." "Oh, we will never have a better place than this!" said the stranger; and, Reynolds, before I knew it, he pulled my head down behind the car-seat, and was praying as I never heard a man pray.

He prayed as if he believed there was no possible hope for me unless I accepted Christ as my Savior. He prayed that God would give me no peace until I had repented of my sins and my indifference, and had turned to God in faith. I never heard such a prayer. Suddenly the brakeman called out the name of a station, and he said, "Good-by, my friend, I must get off here. Remember, 'Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation,'" and he was almost gone before I realized that I did not know his name. I rushed after him, and said: "Sir, will you tell me your name?" He replied: "My name is D. L. Moody."

He continued: "Mr. Reynolds, I have heard of that man Moody and his wonderful work in Chicago. There is one man in this world who cares about my soul. He never saw me before, and never expected to see me again; but he could not miss that opportunity to lead me to my Savior. Hundreds of Christians would have said that was no place to speak to a man about his soul; but he wanted no better place. The matter is so upon my heart that I must go to Chicago and hunt up that man Moody, and settle this matter."

But William Reynolds was too much of a Christian to allow his friend to go away alone in that state of mind, and before they separated that evening he had led him to give his heart to Christ. Then as he turned homeward he exclaimed: "O God! forgive me! forgive my sin of unconcern about the dying men all about me! Here I have been counting myself one of the leading Christians in this city. Yet here is a man who can tell me that for fifteen years I have known him, and have never uttered a word indicating any concern about his soul. There is something wrong about my Christianity! I think I will go to Chicago, and get acquainted with that man Moody!" Go, he did, and then began an acquaintance which transformed William Reynolds' life. He went home to begin a work of positive Christian activity such as he had never before dreamed of.

Some years before he died I met a gentleman from Peoria on the Pacific Coast. I said to him: "I suppose you know my friend, William Reynolds?" He replied: "Oh, yes; every one in Peoria knows him." I referred to his great work, as he had gone from the leading church to a destitute part of the city and had built up a strong people's church from a mission Sunday School started in a hall over a saloon. This gentleman spoke in the highest terms of the extent of blessed influence which had radiated from that work. Then I asked: "What is Mr. Reynolds' business now?" He replied: "Why, have you never heard what they say about him in Peoria? They say that William Reynolds' BUSINESS IS TO SERVE THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, AND HE PACKS PORK TO PAY EXPENSES."—Howard A. Johnston.

PERSONAL MENTION

Nathan Frame remains in about the same condition he has been in for some time. He suffers a great deal.

Mearl Wilson is pastor of the meeting at Keystone, Indiana, and is doing very efficient work in that meeting.

Professor W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College, Iowa, is supplying the vacant pastorate at Hubbard, Iowa, until Yearly Meeting time.

Drs. George and Isabelle F. DeVol and children, of Luh Hoh, China, are spending a few days with relatives at Richmond, Indiana.

Ancil E. Ratliff and Richard Haworth of Farmland, Indiana, gave a report on a recent Sabbath evening, of the International Sunday School Convention held in Chicago.

Fred E. Carter, pastor of Friends' meeting at Jonesboro, Indiana, has resigned to accept the pastorate of the meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, succeeding Richard Haworth.

Horton Ballard, Verna Shriver, Beatrice Wiltsie and Homer Bundy are representing the First Friends' Church of Marion at the Winona assembly of Young Friends this week.

Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood has so fully recovered his health as to be able to attend to his duties as Secretary of the American Peace Society and as Editor of the Advocate of Peace.

Marie Cassel has charge of two meetings belonging to Marion Quarterly Meeting, Indiana. One is at Barbers Mills and the other at Pleasant View. Both meetings are prospering under her care.

Charles E. Hiatt has accepted the unanimous call of the congregation of the First Friends' Church of Marion, Indiana, to remain as their pastor for the coming year. This will be his sixth year as pastor of that meeting.

Albert J. Furstenberger, pastor of South Wabash Friends' meeting, has accepted a call to the pastorate for another year. The meeting has paid off a debt of over $2,000 the past year and is in a prosperous condition under his guidance.

Professor Elwood C. Perisho, who for some years has been State Geologist of South Dakota, and head of the Geological Department of the University of South Dakota at Vermillion, has been elected President of the State College of South Dakota at Brookings.

R. Solomon Tice, returned missionary from Victoria, Mexico, attended the meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, on Sabbath morning, July 19, in the interest of the building for boys to be erected on the farm at Victoria. His message was highly pleasing to Friends.

Professor David W. Dennis, of Earlham College, is holding religious services every Sabbath afternoon in a neighborhood not far from Centerville, Indiana. Members from different denominations and of no denomination are attending and the outlook is promising. A Sabbath School has been organized.

Frank D. Ashba is closing his fifth year of pastoral work at Georgetown, Illinois. He has accepted a call to Plainfield, Indiana, and will move to his new field of work in September. Georgetown Friends feel deeply the loss of so able a pastor. His work has been most faithful and helpful. He and his estimable wife and family have made a host of friends in Georgetown.

Horace E. Coleman, his wife and little son, of Tokyo, Japan, are spending the summer in the home land, and will be at Bloomington, Indiana, for some time. In addition to his regular work at Tokyo, Mr. Coleman has recently been appointed General Secretary of the Sunday School organization in the Japanese Empire, a place of great responsibility and wide opportunity. He very acceptably filled the pulpit at both the morning and evening services on July 19th at Bloomington, in the absence of the pastor, Enos Harvey.

Daisy D. Barr, who for four years has been pastor of the Friends' Memorial Church at Muncie, Indiana, has handed in her resignation to the Monthly Meeting and has accepted a position with the evangelistic party of Dr. Milford H. Lyon, who conducted a great union revival in Muncie last winter. Mrs. Barr will have charge of the Women's Department, a new feature of the evangelistic work. She will be assisted by two other women of the party. Her resignation will take effect September 1. She will make her home at Fairmount, Indiana.

NEWS ITEMS

Anyone traveling or residing in reach of the Friends' meeting at Boulder, Colorado, will receive a hearty welcome at all of the services.

The pastorate of the Georgetown, Illinois, meeting for the coming year is vacant. Anyone feeling a call in that direction is invited to correspond with O. P. Rees, Georgetown, Illinois.

On July 19th the Friends of Sugar Valley Meeting, Ohio, held a public meeting for the new members. The sermon was based on Psalms 84: 10. Nineteen new members were received.

The Friends' Sabbath School at Des Moines, Iowa, held its annual banquet in Union Park on the evening of June 22d. Supper was served at 6:30 o'clock and there was a large company to enjoy the bountiful repast.

The three meetings in Deer Creek Monthly Meeting, Indiana, are all holding their own. Irvin Stegall is pastor at West Branch. An all-day basket meeting a few Sabbaths ago manifested considerable interest in that neighborhood.

A few Friends living in Winnipeg, Canada, hold a meeting for worship after the manner of Friends at the Y. W. C. A. rooms every Sabbath morning at eleven o'clock. Any Friends passing through Winnipeg will be welcomed to these services.

The First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, under the pastoral care of Charles E. Hiatt, since the union revival meetings last winter conducted by Dr. Lyon, has received nearly two hundred new members, and the spiritual life of the church has been considerably revived.

The meeting at Milo, Indiana, about three years ago was reduced by removals and deaths to only two or three families. Its membership now is nearly fifty and nearly everyone is an active Christian. The meeting house is often crowded with a deeply interested congregation.

Arrangements have been perfected between Penn College and the State University of Iowa and also the Iowa State College at Ames, so that those who are looking forward to professional degrees may do the first three years of their work at Penn and the remainder at the other institutions.

Boulder, Colorado, Monthly Meeting was held July 12th. All Friends were delighted to have present Charlotte E. Vickers, of Oak Park, Illinois, President of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union. She brought a message on the "Offices of the Holy Spirit." All felt a new inspiration for having come in touch with her life.

The services at Friends' Meeting at Stafford, Kansas, are very well attended, considered the hot weather and the busy season. Good interest is manifested in all the meetings. The attendance at the Sabbath School is well kept up. Philander E. Hinshaw, who has been visiting there, has been helpful both in the Sabbath School and through his ministry.

The Pilgrimage of the New York joint Fellowship Committee to Croton Valley Meeting (Orthodox) will be held August 2d, instead of 9th, as formerly planned. Meeting begins at 11:00 o'clock. Conference at 2:30 p. m. The conference topic will be "Simplicity: A Quaker Message." Train leaves Grand Central Terminal, New York, at 9:05, for Mt. Kisco.

The Second Friends' Church in Marion, Indiana, has been blessed with a genuine revival spirit for many months. The attendance is splendid, the church being crowded frequently. DeWitt Foster is doing splendid pastoral work and the church will retain him another year. One hundred and fifty new members have been added to the membership roll since he began his work less than two years ago.

Announcement has been made of the marriage on August 13th of Professor Roderick Scott, formerly professor in English at Earlham College, but now a missionary doing Y. M. C. A. work in Russia, to Miss Agnes Kelly, daughter of President and Mrs. Kelly, of Earlham College. After attending a summer conference at Northfield, Massachusetts, they will sail for Russia by way of England.

The evening of July 14th was a time long to be remembered by Friends of Boulder Meeting, Colorado. The Sabbath School had just closed a two months' contest by which the class bringing in the greatest number of dollars for the church lot should be an honored guest at a social. The intermediate boys class won and a large company assembled on the beautiful lawn at the home of the pastor, Kirby V. Bowen. A financial statement of the lot fund was given showing a deficiency of $45.00, which was pledged in a few minutes, resulting in the mortgage being released.

Smith's Mills Camp Meeting Association, of which John S. Kimber, pastor of Friends' Meeting at Newport, Rhode Island, is president, will hold its annual summer camp at Smith's Mills, North Dartmouth, Massachusetts, August 14-24. The workers will be L. B. Compton, of North Carolina, Charles T. Potter, of Norwich, Connecticut, and others. Children's meetings will be held daily in charge of Charles B. Donle and his assistants. The music and illustrated lectures will be in charge of J. A. Morris Kimber. For accommodations and further particulars, address Jabez Slogum, Dartmouth, Massachusetts.

THE ENGLISH DEPUTATION

The English Friends visiting in America met in an informal way the young people and others of Fairmount

Quarterly Meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, July 9th. The meeting for worship and religious instruction and the social hour which followed made the evening a very helpful one to the members of the Quarterly Meeting. But the evening was so crowded with messages and varied activities that two of the visiting young Friends, viz.: James Douglas, from Ireland, and Margaret Thorp, from Australia, did not feel just free to leave without attending another meeting. Accordingly arrangements were made for their attendance at the Sabbath morning meeting at Fairmount, July 12th. Round Table conferences were also arranged for the afternoon, the young ladies with Margaret Thorp, and the young married people with James Douglas. Their services proved very helpful and encouraging to Friends.

Sylvia Marriage and Robert Davis, two of the Young English Friends who are touring this country, visited the Friends' Church in Des Moines on Sunday, July 19th. Thomas Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends' Activities of the Five Years Meeting, and Professor Homer Morris, of Penn College, accompanied them. Sylvia Marriage and Robert Davis gave very interesting accounts of the Young Friends' Work in England. Thomas Jones addressed the Sabbath School, telling of the different activities in which Young Friends in the United States are engaged. The day was a most enjoyable and profitable one for the Friends of Des Moines.

The English Friends Deputation is attending the Young Friends Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, this week. The coming month will be spent in Pennsylvania, at the Whittier Guest House, and other points in the east.

CORRESPONDENCE

Garden City, Kansas, July 22, 1914.
Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

I wish to say to Friends that if any of them are passing through Garden City they should remember that I am living here and have been in the practice of entertaining Friends during the fifty-four years of my residence in the state. My latch-string is out and the bell-button is in working order. I live three blocks due north from the railroad station. JACOB V. CARTER.

HEADS THE LIST

William K. Pruitt, pastor of the Illinois Grove, Iowa, church sent us the largest list in proportion to the membership in our campaign for trial subscriptions.

ANNUAL MEETING IN CUBA

On July 14th and 15th, the annual meeting of the Friends' missionaries in Cuba was held in the rooms of the new school house at Gibara. The following missionaries were present: Zenas L. Martin, Clarence G. McClean, Raymond S. Holding, Henry D. Cox, Alma W. Cox, Lena A. Hadley, Clotilde L. Pretlow, Sylvester Jones and May M. Jones.

The work of the past year was fully reviewed and showed a net gain of 21 members, a good showing in view of the care taken in the reception of members. There have been 74 received as candidates during the year. There has been an increase of almost fifty percent. in self support during the year. The enrollment in the schools showed an increase of 76.

Plans were laid for an aggressive work the coming year. A larger number of natives will be used. Two young men are just beginning work as preachers to their people. Another, who had several years' experience as a preacher, has moved into the midst of a very needy field in order to labor for his people. Advance steps are planned for the school work. Plans for the beginning of a boarding school at Holguin were made.

Zenas L. Martin will be in the homeland for some months on furlough. His address will be in care of Samuel Hawthorth, pastor of Friends' Church, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

THE CHILSON MISSIONARY CONTRIBUTIONS

During Arthur B. Chilson's stay in this country he took a number of subscriptions for the work in Africa, and there has been a question with some contributors as to whom they should be paid. All such contributions should be sent finally to Edgar F. Hiatt, Treasurer, Richmond, Indiana. William C. Taber, Treasurer of the F. A. I. M. Board, is also authorized to receive them. Wherever the requirements of any Yearly Meeting request such payments to be made through the Missionary Treasurer of the Yearly Meeting or subordinate meetings, they can be so made, but in such cases they should be distinctly designated for the Chilson African Fund, and should be forwarded by such treasurers to Edgar F. Hiatt, Treasurer, as above. Otherwise they cannot be properly accounted for.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS,
Gen. Secy. A. F. B. F. M.

Friends desiring room and board at Winona Lake, Indiana, will find the Winona Cottage a pleasant place. For particulars, address PHEBE HENLEY, Box 227, Winona Lake, Indiana.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

August 9

Subject.—The Barren Fig Tree and the Defiled Temple (Temperance Lesson).

Lesson.—Mark 11: 12-33.

Golden Text.—By their fruits ye shall know them. Matt. 7: 20.

It is easy to advocate reform in a general way. It is not always so easy to attack sin in a hand to hand conflict. The preacher who generalizes will be applauded by evil doers. The man who takes up arms against iniquity and undertakes to do a genuine job of house cleaning is not always so popular.

"What Jesus said hit the chief priests and scribes. They had reason to smart and they did. Theoretically they had been greatly troubled at the heresy of this rabbi from Nazareth; but now that their piety for revenue only was in danger, they raged. They lined up for an attack upon the Leader who dared to cut off their income and it was war to the death from that moment."—S. S. World.

The first part of the lesson reveals the wrong of failing to bear good fruit. One does not have to be an outbroken sinner in order to miss eternal life. Failure to bear good fruit is a sin. A refusal to take sides on the saloon problem will bring no justification to anyone in this enlightened age.

To bear no fruit was equivalent to bearing bad fruit, so far as the fig tree was concerned. There was no essential difference so far as furnishing food was concerned. Neutrality on the liquor question in this age does not help the cause of sobriety. Rather does it help the opposition, because energies are withheld and the cause of sobriety weakened, when they ought to be directed positively against this evil.

The fig tree was in full leaf and thus gave evidence of having fruit. It was the leaves that deceived the situation. Many persons want to be understood as being opposed to the saloon, and yet never do anything but talk. It is votes and positive effort that count. The shammer is doomed in the final analysis.

Cleansing of the Temple

Government has been ordained of God. But government has been defiled. Evil doers have entered in—by the consent of the powers that be, that is, the people—and are corrupting every avenue of human life.

How very much like this situation is the graft of evil-minded and over-grasping officials! The guardians of the temple profited by this abuse. How we are reminded of corrupt political machines and of corrupt police forces, which thrive on the profits which come from the defilement of the public!

He began to cast out the evil doers. He did not stop to argue about it, or to debate the problem of personal liberty, or try and convince the business men that this was all wrong. He drove the wrong doers out, and prohibition prohibited.

The American saloon has sinned out its day of grace. The time for debate has passed. The people now need to act in accordance with their light and knowledge, and by so doing the liquor traffic is doomed. The saloon has no defense. It should be driven out of our civilization for the same reason that Jesus drove the traders out of the temple.

The church, business, science, the railroads, good athletics, clean politics, good government, all unite in condemning the liquor traffic. And Jesus teaches in the latter part of the lesson that what is necessary to be done can be done. Prayer and action go together. We should pray for the strength and wisdom to do our part in helping to "destroy the works of the devil."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

August 9

Topic.—Who is Free? John 8: 31-36.

The antithesis of freedom is slavery; and there are many kinds of slavery besides the bondage of the body.

There is the slavery of ignorance, the slavery of custom, the slavery of superstition, the slavery of society, the slavery of politics, but worse than all these is the slavery of sin.

Freedom is by no means license, neither is it lawlessness. Freedom is ruled by a higher law, the law of truth, "for the truth shall make you free."

No one can be at his best so long as he is conscious of bondage and there is no perfect freedom except the freedom which comes in Jesus Christ.

Seek first the abandonment of sin, for sin not only dries up the soul but burdens the mind and easily leads to the bondage of the whole life.

Seek to know the truth. So long as ignorance exists, there can be no perfect freedom. Ignorance is darkness and truth reveals the light.

A man may be in physical bondage and yet the soul may be free. Many a slave knew God, while the master was groping in spiritual darkness.

Many a man boasts of his freedom as a citizen and waves aloft the banner of the Republic as the emblem of liberty and yet is a slave to appetite and passion. There is no freedom except God's freedom.

Liberty to do as one pleases is to be the slave of selfishness. Liberty buttressed by law is the ideal.

WE ARE MOVED TO REMARK

That Friends should heed the splendid advice of our General Secretary in behalf of a better financial system.

That the discordant elements of Mexico can be brought together by the proper kind of diplomatic guidance.

That monthly and yearly meeting reports can be improved somewhat by using present-day descriptive terms in recording action taken.

That certain hot weather patriots are apparently rushing the political season.

That every Friends' meeting has a mighty task before it; that of winning the community, individually and collectively for Christ and the Church.

That the advocates of free tolls for the Canal might consider the question whether or not if the government should own the railroads, free transportation service should be granted to certain shippers and tradesmen.

That elderly Friends should not monopolize all the time in the business meeting, and that young Friends should not wait to be handed an assignment for religious work upon a silver platter.

That the bounteous wheat crop ought to make plenty of toast for city folks next winter.

That Friends ought to prove the adaptability of their denominational name by being friendly.

That the peace of Europe will never be assured until the Big Powers face their difficulties honestly and attempt to settle them upon the basis of justice rather than of expediency.

That Friends everywhere should see that their children are given Christian training and taught the principles of the Church.

That the liquor traffic is up against the wall fighting for its life in this country, as it sees an aroused people determined to hasten its doom.

PRIZE FOOD

Palatable, Economical, Nourishing

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for seven years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods, but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts, I was almost a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

"They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe siege of whooping cough they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed.

"Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

INDIAN MISSIONS IN OKLAHOMA

All the reports which come monthly from our Indian missionaries contain something of interest. The one of May last has some of special interest. At Shawnee mission the report says: "It was a beautiful sight last Sabbath night (May 31) at Shawnee, when the hand of fellowship and good cheer was given to nine of our larger girls, who had expressed a desire to unite with Friends in church fellowship and had been received by the Monthly Meeting just preceding." Five of these girls belong to the Shawnee tribe and the other four to the Kickapoos, while they all reside within reach of our missionaries.

Harvey Wallace, missionary at Seneca, says: "We decorated the cemetery on the 30th of May. The Indians asked me to have prayer, after which I gave them a talk on keeping up their graveyard. It is in fine shape now. We had a good meeting at Jack Armstrong's (a Christian Indian). Twenty-five Indians were present, seven of whom gave me their hand and had me pray for them that they may give their hearts to God."

Isaac Frazier, missionary at Wyandotte, says: "On the 31st of May, we had with us our dear Friends, William P. Haworth and Harvey Wallace. During the day we visited the school and witnessed the aptness of the children in their recitations. At the close of these exercises, the whole school was collected and W. P. Haworth gave them a very impressive talk, which was listened to with much interest. In the evening he preached a sermon, the first of a series of six sessions, held in the Friends' church in Wyandotte. One evening six of the larger girls came forward to an altar of prayer and found peace. On another night, we witnessed a most beautiful sight, when twenty more came forward and wept and prayed until they found peace in Jesus." "To Him be all the praise."

I have a letter from the supervisor of Indian schools of the United States, in which he requests that we encourage more of our young people to take the civil service examinations and enter into the Indian work. Teachers are wanted in various departments. Many of the government schools teach many industries, and teachers are wanted, as some are going out and others must be had to fill the place. Anyone wishing to do mission work can find a place in these schools and be well paid and cared for at the same time. The government prefers good Christian teachers. It is indeed very desirable that these schools should be supplied with those who can and will lead the young Indian people right. Many teachers are there simply for the money they can make. Let those who read this note call attention to young people who can enter this field and encourage them to do it, that they may be helpers in civilizing and at the same time Christianizing the Indian. That makes real civilization.

GEORGE N. HARTLEY.

Fountain City, Indiana.

EVANGELISTIC AND PASTORAL PLANS FOR INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

The following plans were adopted at the last meeting of the Evangelistic and Pastoral Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Many of them have been in use to a greater or less extent but will be much more thoroughly developed.

1. Arrange a card catalog of all ministers and persons called to the ministry, noting personal characteristics and qualifications for service.
2. Arrange a card catalog of all the meetings, noting physical and spiritual equipment of each one.
3. Group and arrange meetings for pastoral convenience and support, thus enabling each pastor to receive full support for his family.
4. Send a letter to each pastor immediately following Yearly Meeting, embodying any new ideas which may have been gathered and offering suggestions for the next year's work.
5. Hold conferences in each Quarterly Meeting to discover workers and needs of meetings and suggest plans of work.
6. Give assistance, where a need appears in any department of church activity, to individual meetings and pastors, to enable them to work together as one in finding and working out God's plan for the meeting in the community.
7. Direct Evangelistic campaigns annually.
8. Pursue aggressively church extension work.

It was also learned that the present superintendent, Ira C. Johnson, will not be able to continue in that capacity after Yearly Meeting in September. The Committee then unanimously chose Truman C. Kenworthy, at present pastor of East Main Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, to be nominated to the Yearly Meeting as superintendent for the coming year.

FANNIE ELLIOTT,
Secretary.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

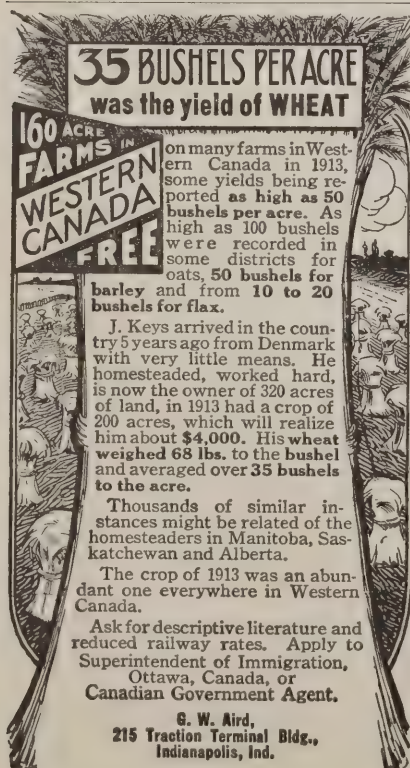

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

On many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 50 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, 50 bushels for barley and from 10 to 20 bushels for flax.

J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 68 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

Man Must Do More For Man

It has taken the ages to teach us,
Long struggles through error and pain,
Too slow was the truth to reach us,
Though the truth was always plain;
But we know at this latest hour,
As the wisdom of God's great plan,
If the race shall grow into power,
Man must do more for man.

'Tis the centuries' one conclusion,
The gift of the blood-drenched years,
The dawn from the night's confusion,
The hope that is forged from fears;
And the words burn now like fire
(Though obscured when the world began,)
If we as a race rise higher,
Man must do more for man.

Dead peoples knew of His sayings
And they kept the truth in their creeds,
They voiced the truth in their prayings,
But they lived it not in their deeds;
Self-love and the self's own pleasure
Was the rule and the law with men,
Now the heart has a broader measure
And the race has a larger ken.

We have come to the clear decision
Through the travail of the soul,
But at last we have seen the vision—
Humanity moves as a whole;
And we know at this raptured hour
That the welfare of all is His plan,
And the race shall come into power
When man does more for man.

Important Notice About "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting"

The series of articles about "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which ran through several issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND earlier in the year, appear to have created wide spread interest. Numerous approving references have been received in letters from time to time, and many have in other ways voiced their interest in the progress made by this remarkable congregation.

A Friends minister said publicly recently that this was the most important contribution that had been made to Friends literature for a good while. There is evidence that the story has been an inspiration to many, and it is felt that it ought to have a wider and more permanent circulation.

In response to this feeling THE AMERICAN FRIEND management is ready to put the entire story in booklet form for general circulation provided it can have orders enough to make it pay.

Another chapter, a final one, will be found in this issue, and the story complete will make a booklet of about eighty-four pages, with a paper cover, and can be mailed to any address for fifteen cents single copy. Ten copies can be sold for $1.00 and twenty-five copies for $2.25.

This will be a rare opportunity to put a copy of a work that is full of inspiration and practical suggestions into the hands of Friends generally.

We must have orders for not less than 500 copies by August 20. We ask Friends to drop us a card AT ONCE, stating how many copies they will take. If the required number is ordered, the fact will be stated in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and all orders will be filled as soon as the booklet is out, when the money can be sent. Address, Manager of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

End the Perjury Scandal

Under the above heading the Homiletic Review for July has an interesting editorial, which is of special interest to Friends because of the strong endorsement of their position on the question of judicial oaths. The editorial is as follows:

Two recent murder-trials in Georgia and New York have been notorious for the mass of perjury perpetrated therein. The law penalizes perjury as a crime, a crime committed much oftener than it is punished. Legal proof of it is often lacking where the moral certainty is clear. It seems to be increasing, and is even brazenly defended. A New York lawyer has published a tract maintaining that justice can not be secured in court without resort to perjury. Is it not time for the churches, now beginning to unite in combating other evils, to use the axe on this? It is doubly execrable as both a profanation of Deity and moral treason to the state.

Such profanation can easily be abolished whenever an enlightened public opinion determines to abolish its occasion. This is, that a witness is not allowed to give testimony till he has sworn before God to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—a solemnity often turned into a profane travesty by the mode of its performance. Quakers have religious scruples against it, and are not required to swear, but simply to affirm that they will testify truly. Is it not time for others than Quakers to have religious scruples against giving needless occasion for sacrilege and blasphemy to an unscrupulous witness? Abolish that occasion by changing the law. Let the penalty for false witness stand. Dispense with the oath; let the non-Quaker testify on the same terms as the Quakers.

The oath in judicial trials is a survival in modern Christendom of the superstitious mode of trial by ordeal, practiced by our Anglo-Saxon ancestors and other primitive peoples, the essence of which was an appeal to divine judgment. Whatever its imagined usefulness today, it is distinctly harmful in fostering the immoral notion that truthfulness is less imperative without an oath than with it. For a religiously moral man oaths are superfluous; yea and nay, as Jesus said, are sufficient; "whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil," and tends to evil.

Decisive on this question is Paul's teaching, "that no man put in his brother's way an occasion of falling." Can the churches be blameless while they allow an occasion of falling into impious sacrilege to be put in the way of so many by a needless oath?

To abolish it they need only the zeal for religious interests by which they prevented the abolition from our national coinage of "In God We Trust."

Faith is a grasping of Almighty power;
The hand of man laid on the arm of God;
The grand and blessed hour
In which the things impossible to me
Become the possible, O Lord, through thee.

Die when we may, I want it said of me by those who knew me best, that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow.—Abraham Lincoln.

Christianizing Our Reforms

An exchange calls attention to a remark of The Biblical World that the church "is leaking at the top," and deplores the fact that the church "is losing young and vicarious idealists who are ready to sacrifice for the cause of Jesus, but who believe that His cause can better be served in some other institution than the church." These are referred to as social workers, municipal reformers and other leaders in the struggle for larger social good.

The questions raised are vital both to the church and to the highest good of the social order. If it be true that there is a modern tendency to promote important social reforms apart from the church and by those who have become alienated from the church, a problem is presented that calls for earnest and sincere investigation.

The inference that social reforms are being generally propagated by the antagonists of the church is hardly warranted. That there is a certain class of reformers, which, either through ignorance of the purpose of organized Christianity or through a misinterpretation of it, has undertaken to espouse the cause of human brotherhood outside the pale of the church and in hostility to it, can hardly be denied. It is perhaps time that the church and these had a reckoning.

The real church of Christ can have no controversy with genuine social reform, except that in so far as formation is better than reformation the church ideally has the better program. Taking life as it finds it, however, every church, which in truth teaches the gospel of the Son of God, is a reforming agency. Theoretically at least the church must stand for human uplift and betterment, whether applied individually or collectively. Christianity is more than altruism, but it includes the altruistic. Possibly the church has not always realized the force of this latter truth, and, by spiritualizing wholly the parable of the good Samaritan, has lost its grip upon many of its sons and daughters, who have been allowed to wander far afield into the realm of a materialistic sociology.

It is no discredit to the splendid work being done by the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations to say that if the church had lived true to its ideals of human brotherhood, the necessity for the organization of these great movements would never have existed. It is a calamity amounting almost to a tragedy that any organization has been able to develop a closer relationship with the moral and spiritual life of multiplied thousands of young men and women than has the church. Yet when the church failed in large measure to socialize its activities in a way that would grip the attention and interest of the youth of the world, it was fortunate that these sympathetic Associations sprang into existence to provide a remedy for this defect, and it has been still more fortunate that the leaders in these two organizations have for the most part maintained such high degrees of Christian purpose and character.

A little later the church narrowly missed the possibility of having a distinctive religious movement among the young people formulated under other auspices. Had it not been for the loyal devotion of Francis E. Clark and other similar leaders in young people's work, there would have been danger of these movements forming outside of denominational directorship. Had the church lived up to its ideals on the temperance question, by incorporating this into its fundamental mechanism as a part of a gospel intended for the whole man, there would probably never have existed the necessity for many of the so-called temperance organizations of today.

The church cannot afford to divorce the field of social reform from its program. Indeed the social order affords the natural field for the operations of the church. While holding steadily to its central doctrine of soul winning, it must recognize that God has placed no limitations upon the avenues which lead to the awakening of the human soul. The language of the church must ever be in terms of human need, and its operations must be carried into every field where men and women are groping after truth and longing for true happiness and contentment.

With the church of today giving itself more zealously to social service—let us hope in its truest and best sense—it would seem that there is no longer the necessity of any estrangement between our social reformers and the church. With all its failures the church ought still to retain the confidence of every man and woman that has any purpose to extend a helping hand to the derelict of humanity. In fact, any effort to reform without a corresponding effort to save is shortsighted philanthropy. No man can have the true spirit of the reformer who holds that religion is subordinate to ethics.

The Biblical World has done well in pointing out the fact that the attitude of this liberal and somewhat materialistic class of reformers is not due to any questions of orthodoxy, because it observes that "such men and women are found no more universally in 'liberal' churches than in orthodox." The author of a somewhat recent and widely read book, "The Inside of the Cup," has made an effort to harmonize the modern views of social reform with the teachings of religious truth, but unfortunately, in so doing he has felt it necessary to criticise, by implication at least, the prevailing standards of Christian faith. It is a just criticism upon this somewhat popular work that in endeavoring to adapt religion to the needs of the social order the author has raised a liberalistic standard of faith, when the facts are that the denominations of so-called liberal faith do not stand the test, even in the realm of socialistic reforms, in comparison with those that have adhered to the standards of so-called evangelistic faith.

We are not herein discussing questions of doctrine, and are only trying to emphasize the fact that the problem before us is not that the church must readjust its tenets of belief, but merely that it must so adjust its relationships to the great problems of human need, that thereby our critical social reformers will be enabled to see that there can be no abiding reforms which are disassociated from the ever living gospel of Jesus Christ. The need is not that Christianity shall be reformed, but that our reforms shall be Christianized. Not a new religion, but a more practical application of the one we now possess.

The Ulster Situation

It has not been easy for many Americans to understand the opposition of the Ulsterites to home rule in Ireland. Ulster is one of the richest and most populous parts of the island, and ordinarily a prosperous, independent people would welcome greater freedom and better opportunities for self-government.

The fact that Ulster is Protestant, while Ireland is Catholic, explains the revolutionary spirit in this northern part of Ireland. An Irish parliament would be dominated by Catholicism. The spirit of the seventeenth century has been revived, and the people of Ulster are feeling that home rule now will be the destruction of what was gained at the battle of the Boyne in 1690, when William III defeated James II and thus destroyed the hopes of Catholic rule in England.

The Ulsterites have renewed their allegiance to the King of England, and have declared their purpose to hold Ulster in trust for the British Crown. Whether or not England will compel Ulster to yield to Irish dominion is an open question. Meanwhile Ulster is aflame with the warlike spirit, and it is difficult to see how civil war can be avoided.

Apparently the question in England is a political one, and we find that Friends are divided, according probably to their political affiliations. Friends in Ulster have advised their members to abstain from warlike demonstrations. The problem is far from being solved, although it will probably be held in abeyance pending the settlement of the larger difficulty now disturbing the peace of all Europe.

The European Conflict

It was well nigh unbelievable that within a few days the whole continent of Europe could be enveloped in a war cloud of astounding proportions. Extended comment at this time seems altogether useless. In the presence of a destroying conflagration, about all the masses can do is to wait—and pray.

May be if there is to be a general war, it will be the occasion of calling the whole earth to its senses with a determination never to permit another one. Therein lies an element of hope. Meanwhile organized Christianity must strive as never before to establish the Christian ideal as the ideal for all mankind in every avenue of human activity.

Until then, war is not an impossibility, and wrong will assert itself upon every occasion when demands are made that selfishness be satisfied. War may be opposed to advantage for economic and social reasons, but in the final analysis, the peace of the world will be permanently assured only when the Friends' ideal of the unrighteousness of all bloody strife shall have become incorporated into international law.

Unity of Friends

"In a recent number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND there was an editorial on the subject of unity among Friends. The idea is an excellent one if it could be on the basis of Christian faith and experience, but there never will be any unity of the whole so long as a part persists in being un-Christian."—The Evangelical Friend, July number.

We most heartily agree with the statement that unity must exist upon the basis of Christian faith, and we cannot conceive of any such attempt being made upon any other basis.

We are all creatures of habit, and it is just as easy to get into the habit of serving the Lord as it is to form the habit of serving Satan, and far more satisfactory and profitable.

Cheerfulness is an essential quality of the Christian life, but one would never suspect it by some of the testimonies that are given at the prayer meeting.

A Man After God's Heart

[A Bible Reading, by Arthur Dann, at a meeting of the F. P. L., at Manchester, England, and furnished us by the author.]

I Sam. 13: 14. "The Lord hath sought Him a man after His own heart."

Acts 13: 22. "He raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also He gave testimony, and said: I have found David, the son of Jesse, a man after Mine own heart, which shall fulfill all My will."

The Lord's search for men after His own heart did not begin and end on that occasion. He has always been seeking for such. His brief description of such a man is that he will fulfill all His will.

In I Sam. 16: 18, we are given a description of David by one who may have been not much more than a casual acquaintance. When they were seeking for a man to play to Saul, one of Saul's servants recommended David; and we learn from this description the sort of impression David produced upon this young man. It is a very searching question for us to ask ourselves, what would be the description given of us by some one who has been watching our life; someone, it may be, quite unknown to us personally. We are either a savour of life or of death to those who come under our influence. Here is this young man's description of David:

(1) A man cunning in playing. In order to become cunning players, people must be whole-hearted in giving time to practice, and only those who are born musicians are able really to excel. David's heart was in it. He had probably had his harp out with him on the mountains when he was minding his sheep. He who knew all about Saul's need had been preparing young David for his introduction to the court of Saul. Let us become wise to win souls in whatever vocation we are.

(2) A mighty man of valour. To become strong we need to comply with the conditions of health. The mountain air and healthy exercise had no doubt given David an appetite for good wholesome food, and he had grown strong and able to endure hardness. The same is true in the spiritual sense. If we would become mighty men of valour, we must wait on the Lord and have a good appetite for spiritual food. It is largely our appetite which regulates the amount of time we spend in feeding on the Bread of Life and on the sincere milk of the Word. There must also be the negative side of abstaining from any indulgences which would make us weak.

(3) A man of war. There are mighty men who are not also men of war. To become such it needs courage, skill and training. In the army of the Lord there are those who make a very fair appearance on the battlefield, but they are not much use for fighting, and only get in the way. The hinderers in the fight are not so much the open and avowed enemies of the Cross of Christ, but those who have on the uniform and yet have not the courage, skill and obedience to make good soldiers. There are only a few moments allowed to the soldier to obey—just as the voice of the officer reaches him. "A man of war"—it was a wonderfully accurate description. David relied only on the Lord when he went to fight the giant. Unbelief is the great giant we have to fight today; many are hiding behind this champion of unbelief. What God is looking for today is champions who will go forth with the smooth stones of truth and hurl them at the enemy.

(4) Prudent in speech. David must have been a thoughtful man, with his tongue under divine control. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The Christian should be joyful and happy, yet careful not to offend in word. We need the note of joy in our hearts, and if our hearts were filled with the Spirit of Christ, there would be more thanksgiving and praise in our mouths.

(5) A comely person. Grace was manifested in David, and made him attractive in appearance. "Perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee" (Ezek. 16: 14). Are we so attractive to others that we are attracting them to Him who is the Lily of the Valley and the Chiefest among ten thousand? "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." What is that beauty? It is the beauty of holiness. Holiness is beautiful. And the Lord Jesus was the most beautiful, the most comely Person, because He was the most holy.

(6) And the Lord was with him. Is that what people are saying who mix with us in social or commercial life? Are they saying, "I know I can trust him to sell the right thing?" Are the people who stay in our homes, or whose guests we are, saying of us, "The Lord is with him?" Four or five times over this was said of David, and we read that Saul was afraid of David because the Lord was with him. Saul saw and knew that the Lord was with him, and he exceedingly feared and trembled—not so much because of what David was, but because the Lord was with him. There is a hymn which says, "Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees." Have we made him tremble much lately? Is he afraid of us when we get on our knees? Is he afraid lest we should by our prayers liberate those who are his bond-servants, lest they should be set free and serve Christ? "The Lord is with us"—that is what the Church needs—One with us who hath almighty power. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the earth, to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him." "A man after Mine own heart, who will do all My will," that is the sort of man who will make the Devil tremble.—Friends' Witness.

If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life, he will soon find himself left alone. A man should keep his friendship in constant repair.—Samuel Johnson.

Review of New England Yearly Meeting

BY THOMAS J. BATTEY

[This account is the substance of a report made by the author to his home meeting. It has been thought advisable to give it a wider circulation.]

It is no easy matter to gather up a few fragments of a great feast and arrange them in such a way that anything approaching an adequate impression of the original shall be produced. Even the viands themselves, could they be re-presented, would lack the setting, the stimulus of members, the social atmosphere, the subtle, evanescent aroma that can be enjoyed but not described, and which lingers long in the memory of those who experienced its presence, but can scarcely be awakened in those not thus privileged.

The meetings began quietly enough. No special signs were visible that anything much out of the ordinary was going to happen. Tender and appropriate notices were read or uttered of those who had passed away during the year. "Zion's strong ones," who had long borne the brunt and burden of the battle, and whose places in the ranks now vacant seemed hard to fill, Charles H. and Elizabeth Jones, scarred and faithful veterans in so many fields of Quakerly activity; Timothy B. Hussey, the very pillar and ground of the Ramallah Mission; William Wood, of Lawrence, the tender, lovable man who had done so much to build up that meeting; Joël Bean, the saintly mystic of College Park, and memorial service for these and others emphasized our losses, without brightening much our future. But in close connection with this, there were introduced to the meeting eight or nine young men from Wilmington and North Carolina Yearly Meetings, who were to be present through the meeting and then scatter to various needy centers for gospel service during the vacation season. The presence of these earnest, consecrated young men, full of enthusiasm, expecting difficult tasks and eager to meet them, was a cheering glow on the horizon of our hopes.

Next may be mentioned the epistles from London and other Yearly Meetings, full of encouragement and sympathy, sparks from anvils of service, struck off at white heat, to hearten us. That from London, always choice, always uplifting and instructive, this year took on, somehow, a richer, deeper note than ever, that cannot be adequately revealed to us till we can read it for ourselves in the printed minutes.

The epistles from our American Yearly Meetings had been carefully summarized so as to present under suitable topics, the main concerns with which they dealt in a concise and impressive way. When the first business session had thus drawn to a close, it was 11:45 a. m. For two and a quarter hours we had been in close conference. The benches were hard and uncushioned and the company, naturally, somewhat tired. There remained the "Bible Half-Hour," which had been somewhat experimentally arranged for the previous year. Would the audience remain or mostly withdraw for rest and recreation in the glorious air and beautiful scenery of that magnificent hill-top? Who could blame them if they did? It was a new feature on the program and some misgivings were felt for its success. But after standing up for a few minutes and the singing of a hymn, we were again settled in our seats and Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, took his place on the platform. Quietly, in simple but beautiful language, he began to read and speak to us of the story of Abraham to illustrate the origin of the true and mystical religion. He pictured the way in which he alone of all his countrymen in that far-off time, heard and heeded the "still small voice" that in the depths of his soul called him to leave his home, his kindred and the idols which he saw all about him, and through faith in the Unseen Presence, go out trustingly to unknown lands and unknown experiences. This formed a most important epoch in human history. The religion of this early mystic was one of visions and revelations. He had no Bible, no priest, no church, nor any help outside himself, only faith in those revelations to sustain him through the long intervals that separated them. He could depend on nothing but God and His spirit, and how similar in this respect seems his experience to that of the Early Friends.

How we recall that crisis in George Fox's early career, when after searching long in vain for relief from his spiritual struggles in the teaching of priests and other religious leaders, he left them all, and only then did he hear the satisfying words, "There is one even Jesus Christ, who can speak to thy condition." Abraham was called the Friend of God, and we are called Friends today. It has been well said that this first-hand spiritual contact with God is the foundation principle of all real religion. Helen Keller said to Phillips Brooks, when he was given the delicate task of first telling her of God, "I have known Him, I have known Him, only I did not know His name."

The half hour sped by; we forgot that we were tired. A curtain seemed to have been drawn aside, and we had been ushered into the presence chamber of the unseen Holy. Old familiar truths took on new meaning from the setting given them through the speaker's deeper search and wider vision. Abraham's life became typical of our own,—passing on as he did from city to city, stopping only long enough to look inside their gates and see their godless, unsatisfying life, he grew conscious that he was seeking for a city that had foundations, whose builder and maker is God, or as at a later date St. Augustine puts it, "Lord, thou hast made us for thyself and our souls are restless till they rest in thee." The half hour was up but the hush into which we had been introduced still lingered for a little. We all seemed to feel as Peter did on the mount of transfiguration, "It is good for us to be here."

Not for once only in the novelty of an unusual service, was this experience realized, but it continued through all the four days in which this Bible half-hour was observed, as Alfred Garrett led us on from Abraham, the grand old western pioneer of ages ago, pursuing the gleam of the heavenly city, down through a long line of mystics who were needed to pass on the secrets of God, thus introducing the elements of tradition into religion,—oral at first, as it was handed on from father to son, then written down, thus giving rise to those priceless, peerless and unique writings we call the Holy Scriptures, the much needed aids to the true religion.

George Fox perceived that it was the same spirit that gave them who appeals direct to us, and herein lies mainly his distinctive teaching. In developing his theme, Alfred Garrett led us next to consider the prophets whom he termed the "protestants in Israel," since they were forever protesting against the established religion of sacrifice and ritual which centered in the temple at Jerusalem, and the shrines at Bethel and elsewhere, and might be termed the religion of the State.

The case of Samuel against Saul was adduced as an example, where Samuel said to the disobedient king, "Hath Jehovah as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of Jehovah? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

The Psalms are brimming with prophetic insight as in the 40th and 51st, where utterances like these occur: "Sacrifice and offering thou hast no delight in. Mine ears hast thou opened: burnt-offerings and sin-offerings hast thou not required. Then said I, lo I come. I delight to do thy will, O my God; Yea, thy law is within my heart." And again: "For thou delightest not in sacrifice, else would I give it. Thou hast no pleasure in burnt offerings. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

These bring us the full voices of the great Hebrew prophets. Other examples followed. The scene of Amos at the shrine of Bethel was vividly portrayed, where the plain man of Tekoa, the herdsman and dresser of Sycamore fruit, lifts up his voice in stern protest against the gilded professionalism of the elaborate service at the king's chapel.

The great saying of Micah in which some troubled soul cries out for pardon and reconciliation, was called to our attention, Micah 6: 6: "Wherewith shall I come before Jehovah and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves a year old? Will Jehovah be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee O man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Similar passages are found in Isaiah I. and elsewhere, all of which go to show the desperate failure of the old sacrificial and ritual system, and the simplicity of the true religion. It is all summed up in the great words of Hosea 6: "I desired mercy and not sacrifice."

In following up the successive phases of this true spiritual religion, Alfred Garrett came next to speak of the Messenger of the Covenant, the One who was to come and fulfill in himself all that the prophets had seen in vision. The question was asked: "What does the total impression of the life and personality of Jesus Christ sum up to be as compared with the prophets?" And the answer is something like this: "More quietness, less rhetoric, a greater reserve power, infinite sanity, a profound and sober optimism." No longer do we hear the woes, lamentations and despairs of the prophets, but in their place is a deep-seated hope that gives quietness, poise, confidence, and withal a deep joyousness broods over his life as a characteristic trait. Then, too, there is a larger ethical element in his teaching than in the prophets, that is with what has to do with human conduct.

William Newton Clarke has said: "The two fields of Ethics and Religion are equally covered in by the teaching of the Christ."

The mystical element in Jesus rises to its supreme height. Really an awful subject for us to contemplate in his Communion with the Father. We may think of Him as having at the beginning a sense of the presence of God, different from that of His companions. Heaven lies about us in our infancy, and how it must have lain about Him. Was it because He wished to find out in the temple what the doctors knew of this life of God in the soul that He still lingered there after his company had gone away? Was He unique in the sense of this conscious presence of God? It is a deep question, but there are some passages that seem to throw light upon it, as for example, John 11: "Father I thank thee that thou hearest me always," and again, "The Son doeth nothing of himself, but what He seeth the Father doing. No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Father revealeth Him." He seems to have had an utterly cloudless confidence in the Father, a confidence begotten of immediate communion. Can it not be possible that when He uttered those words at the gate of Nain, "Young man, I say unto thee arise," He was making the first great venture of this all-conquering confidence, and that when He said, "Have faith in God; all things are possible to him that believeth," He was speaking out of the depths of His own experience?

Sidney L. Gulick, representing the Commission on Japan of the Federal Council of Churches, is advocating the idea of national education in our public schools on matters Oriental. He thinks American children should be taught to look with good will upon immigrants of all races and to know that the prosperity of America depends in some small way upon their presence.

A Monthly Meeting Chronicle

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

XVII.

(CONCLUDED)

The religion of Slow Valley Meeting was being put to a severe test. "Just wait till hot weather comes with its busy season, and then we will see the religious fervor of those Quakers dying out," was a somewhat frequent remark in the community.

But mid-summer had now come with its July heat. A busy and bounteous harvest had just been concluded, and threshing was in immediate prospect in the country portion of the neighborhood. But there was no sign of a religious drouth in the vicinity of the Friends' congregation. Here it was the forenoon of the seventh day of the week with the thermometer ranging in the nineties, yet nearly three-fourths of the resident adult membership had assembled for the monthly business session of the meeting.

For forty-five minutes the spirit of worship brooded over the gathered company, and in song, by prayer, through the spoken message and with testimony, they poured out their souls in thanksgiving to God. In a brief but stirring message, the minister emphasized the value of the consecrated life as the equipment for the truest and highest service and thrilled every heart by raising the slogan, "This entire city and neighborhood for Christ." In brief forms of expression, a dozen or more responded to this challenge with an enthusiastic acceptance of the tasks which such a watchword would impose, and, with a closing prayer by the resident minister dedicating the congregation to the work before them, the business of the meeting was taken up.

The building committee reported substantial progress upon the new meeting house, which was expected to be ready for occupancy by about the middle of November, in time for dedication on Thanksgiving Sunday. The committee had assumed the responsibility of changing the plans somewhat at an additional cost of about $1,000.00 to provide more adequately for the care, entertainment and comfort of the children of the congregation. This had increased the total cost to approximately $20,000.00, of which $17,645.00 had been subscribed.

A request was presented, signed by seventy-six persons in the vicinity of the Bennett school house, asking that a regularly constituted meeting for worship be set up, which caused considerable discussion. After it was shown that the meeting could continue to occupy the school building for the present, and that a new meeting house would not be needed before the late autumn of next year, the request was granted, and a committee was named to attend the opening session on the first Sabbath in August. It was announced that the school teacher had consented to serve as pastor of the meeting for the present.

Someone started "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and with the congregation standing a number of prayers were offered in behalf of the new work, and especially for the school teacher who henceforth would have such added responsibility.

There were intimations that a similar request might come from the Turkey Hollow community next year, inasmuch as the new Bible School there and the religious services now being held every Sabbath afternoon were taking a deep hold upon the life of that community. It was announced that the still newer Bible School which had been started in the poorer section near the foreign quarter was prospering beyond expectation. New quarters had to be selected and on the previous Sabbath there had been a total attendance of one hundred and two, a number of adults having been recently brought into the school through the personal religious work that had developed as the result of the efforts with the class of neglected children.

The Evangelistic Committee announced that during the past month, as the outgrowth of a social visit made by two members of the meeting to the village of Hartwell on Pidgeon Creek, eight miles to the east, meetings had been held on the two previous Sabbaths, and a number of families had been visited. The committee had planned for a delegation of five to attend a called meeting at that place on the following afternoon, when after a time of worship, the views of the community would be sought relative to further services and a Sabbath School. The outlook was thought to be hopeful, inasmuch as the only other religious work being done in the neighborhood was a service once a month by a Christian (Disciples) minister living twelve miles away.

It was reported that the work recently undertaken at Oldtown was doing fairly well, the average attendance for the past month being forty-one. The committee expressed its conviction however, that nothing short of a stirring revival would serve to put that community in its right relationship with the religious life and Christian activity. The field was being prepared for such an effort, and the members were praying that an opening for such an awakening would come not later than the autumn.

Religious services were now being held twice a week at the mission in the foreign quarter, and despite the hot weather, a class of twenty-two boys and girls met for an hour five mornings in the week to be taught English and various American customs. A quartette of two young men and two young women came each Sabbath to sing at the mission, two of them being Friends, and this was adding both to the interest and the attendance.

Announcement was made that on the next evening all the churches of the city would unite in a mass citizens' and temperance meeting, which would be addressed by a noted temperance speaker, and that on the following Tuesday evening a meeting was to be held in Evans hall to consider the question of permanent reform work in the city and of a definite organization to have such matters in charge.

Reports of internal work in the congregation were for the most part satisfactory. Nine new members were received and applications for six others were read and referred to a committee for investigation and report. The Christian Endeavor Society was prosperous, despite the fact that ten of the best workers were now engaged elsewhere each Sabbath afternoon. The new Ladies' Aid Society had a membership of fifty-six, and was giving its attention to the raising of funds for the new meeting house, and the securing of money to help maintain the missionary in the African field now being supported by Slow Valley Meeting.

The Brotherhood, which had been organized in May, had grown to a membership of 146, of which 59 were not Friends, and was now giving special attention to civic conditions in the city, with a view to taking active part in the temperance campaign in the autumn. The Junior Christian Endeavor Society had developed considerable interest in religious work on the part of the children, and it was hoped that eight or ten would be transferred to the active membership of the church before the beginning of next year.

The Finance Committee reported that for the most part, pledges were being paid promptly each week, and that there were only seventeen pledges which were not paid in full to date. While not reported to the meeting officially, it was with great satisfaction that many of the members learned that at the previous session of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, a unanimous recommendation had been forwarded to the corresponding body of the Quarterly Meeting, that the young school teacher and the young woman member of the Christian Endeavor Society who had been showing marked ability in the ministry, should be recorded ministers of the gospel.

The session proved a most satisfactory one, and somehow, there was coming to each member the conscious meaning of the fact that in trying to save others they had found salvation for themselves. The concluding minute was read, which was followed by a devotional pause, in which apparently everyone present was girding himself with new strength for the duties which were revealing themselves with startling clearness in the light of a constantly enlarging vision of the neighborhood needs all about them.

Thus endeth for the present at least this chronicle of an average congregation in the Society of Friends. If some of the developments appear to be unusual, they are at least, not unnatural, and certainly not impossible for any meeting that will surrender itself to the Christian life and to the various avenues of Christian service to the extent that Slow Valley Meeting has done. In the hope that to many this recital will continue to be an inspiration for many months to come, and that by reading this record many Friends congregations throughout America will be led to strive for the larger life that awaits them, this Chronicle is submitted for the prayerful consideration of the Society of Friends as a whole.

It is our confident belief that Slow Valley Meeting has just begun to reap the rewards of faithful service, and that eternity alone will be able to record with exactness the widely extended results of its devoted ministrations. "So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto half the height thereof: for the people had a mind to work."

Compulsory Military Training

Under date of June 10th we had a letter from Australia concerning the outrageous treatment of Tom Roberts, a lad of sixteen years, because he refused to train under the Defence Act. His parents are Friends and hold strong views on the subject of militarism. The boy was placed in solitary confinement at Victoria on a Thursday night where he was confined until eleven o'clock Saturday morning and then court-martialed. The military court then ordered him to be placed in a cell for seven days. This cell was 10x10 feet, built of wood with an iron roof. It had no window, the light coming through a grating. He had a wooden stretcher, the mattress and blankets being taken away in the morning and were not brought back until dark. He had half an hour's exercise in the morning and again in the afternoon. He was on half diet, was not allowed to read, nor to write to his parents. It was stated by a leading lawyer that solitary confinement is considered inhuman and is only used in the case of refractory criminals of the worst type.

A letter under date of July 1st states that after this particular case had been freely ventilated in both Houses of the Federal Parliament, and after the system of solitary confinement had been severely criticized, the government changed its policy. Strong opinions were expressed from church pulpits, in public meetings, in the daily and religious press, and finally the government was bombarded from so many quarters that it publicly announced that punishment by solitary confinement will be canceled in regard to refusals to train under the Defence Act.

A writer in the Melbourne Argus, of June 27th, states: "For one Quaker there are probably at this time ten non-Quakers who refuse military service on moral grounds. These are not less entitled to toleration. The attempt to frame a just and practicable 'Conscience Clause' is pretty sure to fail, for, besides those whose conviction is definite on this matter there is a much larger number who have doubts. They cannot make up their minds that soldiering is always wrong, but they dislike it so much that they wish to have nothing to do with it. Between the militarists and the Quaker there are many grades of thought, each with a large number of adherents."

Events at Northfield during July included an attendance of over 800 delegates at the Young Women's Conference which closed on July 8th, the Summer School for Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies with a record breaking attendance of more than 800 delegates, the Home Mission Summer School and the Summer School for Sunday School workers, both of which opened July 18th with an attendance of nearly 1,100. The General Conference of Christian Workers will convene from August 1st to 16th. Dr. F. D. Meyer, of London, will be one of the leading speakers. A series of Bible lessons for conference delegates and visitors is being held throughout the summer.

Work and pray for the things that will make you better, and happiness will come of itself.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Divine Provision for an Unlimited Wireless

DARTMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

Editor American Friend:

In Christ's farewell table talk to the faithful eleven, the keynote is the Spirit's abiding under different types, of which the central chapter, John 15th, is to many the supreme, highest, most perfect and most beautiful presentation of Christian living; the semi-conscious influence of a blessed abiding, producing a fruitage for the blessing of the world.

To say that because this was spoken only to the eleven it is, therefore, beyond our privilege in the Gospel, would be taking from the Book; and on the same ground its mutilations would be unlimited, but this limitation we dare not make. Jesus says in this abiding we may ask what we will and it shall be done. When we are lifted above the world's obstructing influences, that is, when we abide in Him and His word abides in us, prayer is without limitations, because the asking will be in the Divine will.

And this is a part of the Divine Commission, John 15: 16, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it to you."

Oh, blessed thought, whether for the old and superannuated, or the bed-ridden, pain-suffering child with longing heart to have part in the mighty bloodless conflict! Whether one is longing for the mission field, to do and dare, or to stop the struggle, the waste and pain of war, whether to aid the victories in the prohibition struggle, or to do something to hasten the glad day clearly foretold of Christ's blessed world-wide reign, in it all we may all have a part, and who shall say which shall yield the greater fruitage?

We have been divinely commissioned to pray out the heaven born longing with a blessed confidence in assured results; and to this end He has chosen each as a separate and special channel of power.

It would seem by Matt. 18: 19 that there is yet more, because of combined power, when two agree as touching anything. Who dare put limitations on Divine utterances? Christ assigns a reason in the 20th verse, for "where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them."

In the case of a united request when the answer is not apparent, it would be wise to conclude that the human was at fault, or, that in divine wisdom, delay in answering would fulfill the human petition, or again, human limitations might hinder us from recognizing the answer divinely given. Oh, blessed provision of divine love and grace, to give such high and holy privilege to men to pray!

Such solemn obligation, such holy employment, such glorious participation, such humbling in divine association, yet such blessed communion! Who will not use the wings of faith and prayer, who will not let earth's mists hide the unseen? Earth's jarring notes, earth's alluring call dull the listening ear and rob the soul of its heavenly treasure, of its heavenly peace and of its joy supreme.

CHARLES W. GODDARD.

Answering Prayer

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, June 22, 1914.

Editor American Friend:

I have a criticism on an article in the issue of June 4, on page 357, entitled "Under What Conditions Does God Promise to Answer Our Prayers?" It seems to me the writer is inconsistent, for he says, in referring to John 16: 23, "There is no limitation to this promise. What conditions have we a right to place upon it?" After quoting John 15: 16, the writer says, "We have no more right to limit 'whatsoever' than to limit 'who-soever' in John 3: 16," and then he says, "I prefer to believe these passages indicate the giving of an unlimited power to a favored few who had been Jesus' personal companions for three years and whom He chose from a host of disciples," thus limiting it to these chosen few.

Then, on page 358, in the last paragraph of the first column, he says, "There is another promise which I think was probably also intended for the eleven disciples, Matt. 18: 19, 'If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything ye shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven.' The preceding verse, 'Whatsoever things ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven,' surely does not apply to all Christians." I do not see why both passages do not apply to all Christians, if when they pray they follow John 15: 7: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you"; and again, quoting from I John 5: 14-15, "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us; and if we know that he heareth us whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions, which we have asked of him." It seems to me these are the only conditions under which God will answer any of our petitions.

The writer also cites the instance of the women of Lawrence, Kansas, failing to receive the answer to their prayers for the closing of the saloons of that city. Have not their prayers been answered? Are not the saloons closed? The seeming failure was not in the accomplishment of the object, but in the time when it was accomplished. See Luke 18: 7, "And shall not God avenge his elect, that cry unto him day and night, and yet he is long suffering over them?"

I think that James 4: 3 explains nearly all, if not all, the instances where prayers are not answered; "Ye asked and receive not because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures," for if we follow John 15: 7 and I John 5: 14, 15 we will not ask amiss.

Yours in Christian love,

HENRY C. SLOCUM.

And all along the way it makes a difference whether a man is going to the scrapheap, or whether he is going home.—Henry Kingman.

PERSONAL MENTION

Emma F. Coffin is serving the meeting at Whittier, California, as assistant pastor.

R. L. Cosand has taken charge of the pastorate of the meetings of North Loup and Pleasant Hill, Nebraska.

William P. Pinkham and wife are spending a few weeks in rest at the home of their daughter at Arlington, California.

Ruth Joyce, of Central City, Nebraska, has undertaken the work as Field Secretary of the Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union.

Olive Guyer, who has been serving the meeting at Denair, California, as pastor, has begun similar work at San Jose in that state.

Amos Kenworthy is engaged in religious work this summer in some of the middle states, having left California about the first of July.

Fred L. and Olive A. Ryon, who have been serving the meeting at West Branch, Iowa, as pastors, will leave the work there after September 15th.

Theodore and Estella Foxworthy, pastors at Plainview, Nebraska, have taken up additional work six miles from the town, where they attend services every two weeks.

Charity Davis, of Arizona, has been visiting at Los Angeles, California, for some time, and her messages have been greatly appreciated. She will return home in the near future.

M. Davis Branon has accepted a call to serve the meeting at Mt. Airy, North Carolina, another year with an increase in salary. He seems to be filling the place with great satisfaction.

Milner Angel Cox, of Ulah, North Carolina, is holding a successful meeting at Oak Hill in Deep River Quarter, North Carolina, assisted by Bertha Smith, of Holly Spring Meeting.

W. Carleton Wood, who has served as pastor of the Friends' meeting at Winthrop Center, Maine, for nearly three years, has asked the meeting to release him from further service after the first of October.

Absalom Rosenberger and wife have accepted a call from the meeting at Los Angeles, California, to serve as pastors for the coming year. They have been living at Whittier, but expect to move to Los Angeles in the near future.

Susan E. Allen is serving the meeting at Paonia, Colorado, as pastor, for a few months this summer. She will probably return in the fall to continue her help in the meeting at Casa Grande, Arizona.

Wilson and Lucy Cox sailed from San Pedro, California, on June 18th, for Alaska, where after an interruption of nearly two years, they will resume their work as missionaries among the Esquimaux.

Earle J. Harold, Secretary of the Church Federation of Greensboro, North Carolina, and who was formerly pastor of the Friends' meeting there, had a serious operation performed recently at the Reid Memorial Hospital, Richmond, Indiana. He is getting along splendidly, however, and expects to be ready for service again in a short while.

Lindley A. Wells, Evangelistic Superintendent of Oregon Yearly Meeting and Field Evangelist, recently held a two weeks' tent meeting campaign at Rex, Oregon. While there were no great visible results, it is felt that much precious seed was sown that will bear fruit in the future. From Rex, Lindley Wells went to Salem and Rosedale.

Dorothy Lee, of Seattle, Washington, held a few special meetings recently at the Friends' Church at Lake Stevens, Washington. A good spirit was manifested in the meetings and the community requests that she return in the near future to complete the work that has been started. It is asked by our correspondent that all Friends and others reading this notice will remember the meeting at Lake Stevens at the Throne of Grace.

Fred E. Smith, of Greensboro Meeting, North Carolina, is in Contentnea Quarter for religious services. He joined Ada E. Lee in a series of meetings at Bethesda and writes that the meetings have been very successful. There were twenty-five renewals and conversions and five were received as members. Ada E. Lee went on to Eastern Quarter to engage in evangelistic work after the arrival of Fred Smith at Bethesda.

Edgar H. Stranahan, for seven years a resident of Wichita, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Friends' Church at Oskaloosa, Iowa. Professor Stranahan is one of the most capable church workers in Kansas Yearly Meeting and will be greatly missed. He left his place as a member of the faculty of Friends' University two and a half years ago to become general secretary of the Wichita Interchurch Federation, in which he has done excellent work.

WANTED

At Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Maine, energetic, capable man for general work, power-house, farm, etc., with wife for cook. Good positions for competent people. Must furnish unquestioned references as to character and reliability. School year opens September. Address, "The Principal," at the School as above.

NEWS ITEMS

The Sabbath School at Bell, California, reports an average increase of thirty-five in attendance during the past year.

A Quaker study class has been organized by the young people at Central City, Nebraska. The class meets once a week.

The various churches of Plainview, Nebraska, including Friends, have united for a two months' Sabbath evening service during July and August.

Seventeen Friends are studying at the Columbia University Summer School in New York. They have attended the Twentieth Street Meeting very helpfully.

At the recent sessions of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, Union Quarterly Meeting was united with Spring Bank Quarter. Hereafter, all reports and business should be sent to the Clerk of Spring Bank Quarter.

The meeting at Los Angeles, California, has fitted up the basement of the meeting house, and about two hundred children have been gathered in from the street to be taught from the Bible and other things which they were not able to get elsewhere.

Purchase Quarterly Meeting was held at Chappaqua, New York, on August 1. W. Whitson, of Haverford, Secretary of the New York Yearly Meeting Social Service Commission, was present and spoke on Social Service. Professor R. W. Kelsey, of Haverford, was also present.

A ten days' meeting has just closed at New Hope, Indiana, with Amos N. Kenworthy, of Whittier, California, in charge. It is felt that the members have been greatly benefited by his labors. They were reminded of their duties to the Lord and to one another in a most stirring way.

"The new Attorney-General for Ireland, Jonathan Pim, is a member of Dublin Monthly Meeting. Last year he became Solicitor-General for Ireland. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the gold medal in Modern Literature."—The London Friend.

We quote the following from The Philadelphia Friend: "The so-called 'Quakerism Class' had its origin in our Yearly Meeting about fifteen years ago. Its chief object was to interest the younger members in Friends' history and literature. It has since, as would be natural, widened its scope.

Kansas City Monthly Meeting received eleven new members at the Monthly Meeting in July. These were publicly welcomed into church fellowship on Sabbath morning, the 19th. The local congregation held its annual picnic on July 4th at Randolph, Missouri. Two special coaches were provided to convey the members to the picnic grounds.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Bloomington, Indiana, held a guest meeting in honor of Floy Elizabeth Coleman, of Tokyo, Japan, on the afternoon of July 24th, at the home of E. T. Coleman. The sixty women present greatly appreciated the very interesting talk given by Mrs. Coleman on their work in Japan. Refreshments were served, and a very pleasant social hour followed.

An open meeting was held on June 10th by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of East Whittier, California. Martha E. Newlin, of Pasadena, was present and gave an interesting report of the triennial conference at Muncie, Indiana. Mrs. Amos Cook gave a short lesson from "The King's Business," and Amos Cook followed with an arousing plea that more men ought to co-operate in missionary work.

The Friends' Bible School at Charity Union within the limits of Friends' Chapel, Ohio held their annual picnic on July 30. The forenoon was spent in a social way and after a bounteous dinner, the people came together for a short program of gospel songs and recitations. The exercises closed with a short temperance address by Elmer Hale, the pastor. A number of persons from nearby schools were present and took part in the program.

The Pastoral Committee of Spiceland Monthly Meeting, Indiana, has announced the receipt of a statement from Charles Lescault, of Haviland, Kansas, that having felt a call to engage in evangelistic work, he wishes to be released from his obligation to serve Spiceland Meeting as pastor the coming year. After full consideration the Committee was united in releasing him. Spiceland Meeting now has no one engaged as pastor for the coming year.

A Philadelphia paper gives an account of the repairing of the old Caln meeting house north of Thorndale in Chester County. The building was probably built in 1720. A plat of the graveyard has been made and all headstones, numbering more than one thousand, have been reset. The earliest grave stones were marked R. P. 1754 and M. P. 1763. Caln Quarterly Meeting is the smallest of the seven Quarterly Meetings in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

From the "Friends' Messenger" we learn that Friends were the first denomination to effect a religious organization in the Carolina Colony. There are accounts showing the establishment of a Quarterly Meeting as early as 1680. The first session of the Yearly Meeting was held in 1698, at which time John Archdale, a Friend, was Governor of the Colony of North and South Carolina. North Carolina Friends will convene this week in their annual gathering at Guilford College.

Wednesday, July 15th, was Pacific College day at the Willamette Valley Chautauqua held at Gladstone Park, near Oregon City, Oregon. Professor Alexander Hull and Mrs. Eva H. Hull, who are at the head of the music department of the college, gave several musical numbers, and President Levi T. Pennington, gave an interesting address on "Four Faces." Besides the others present there was a good representation of students, teachers, alumni and other friends of the college from Portland, Salem and Newberg.

David E. and Sarah M. Sampson, since Yearly Meeting, have continued their services in various parts of the country, visiting the following meetings: Chelmsford, including Witham Monthly Meeting; Gloucester and Nailsworth, including Monthly Meeting at the latter place; Bristol, Weston-super-Mare, Norwich, Ackworth General Meeting, Dewsbury, York, Reigate, Brighton, and Dorking, Horsham and Guildford Monthly Meeting at Ifield. This week's engagements have included Devon and Cornwall Quarterly Meeting at Falmouth, meetings at Redruth, St. Austell, Exeter, and Plymouth; and next week our Friends hope to attend Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting at Street, and meetings at Hereford, Bromyard, and Worcester. They expect to attend Armscott General Meeting on the 2d prox., and their last engagement in Great Britain will be attendance of South Wales Monthly Meeting at Cardiff on the 5th. They intend to spend their last week in the South of Ireland, leaving Queenstown for Boston on the 12th by the s. s. Carmania. In some of the places visited David E. Sampson has given accounts of the work of Friends in North Carolina. Their service has been much appreciated.—London Friend, July 17.

ERRATUM

On page 492 of last week's issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in the last paragraph of the second column, the name "Sugar Valley Meeting" should be "Spring Valley Meeting."

BOOKS RECEIVED

"Spiritual Reformers in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries," by Rufus M. Jones, M. A., D. Litt. Published by Macmillan & Co., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City. 362 pages. Price, $3.00.

This work, originally intended to be devoted to Jacob Boehme and his influence, has taken a much wider scope, as the author discovered a far-reaching historical movement, designed "to carry the Reformation to its legitimate terminus, the restoration of Apostolic Christianity." The author avows two purposes; one the tracing of a religious movement as a side current of the Reformation, and the other the discovery of the background and origin of seventeenth century Quakerism. The book has an introductory chapter on "What is 'Spiritual Religion?'" and thereafter deals in order with the life of Hans Denck; Bunderlin and Entfelder, two prophets of the inward word; Sebastian Franck; Caspar Schwenckfeld; Sebastian Castellio; Valentine Weigel; Jacob Boehme, and other religious reformers. The book is of exceptional interest as dealing with a movement that was at least connected with the rise of Friends, and is written in the usual vigorous and scholarly style of the author.

"Jewels From My Casket," by Anna J. Winslow, a Friends minister of El Modeno, California.

The book, which contains 193 pages, has an introduction by Gilbert Bowles, of Japan, and is an account of the Lord's dealings with the author as a minister of the gospel. The book is in 27 chapters and deals with work done in Kansas, Iowa, North Carolina, Oregon, Nebraska, Oklahoma and California. The writing is largely in narrative style, and reveals the leading of God in much important service. Friends will render appreciated service by ordering the book direct from the author.

"The Sufferings and the Glory," by J. Rendel Harris. Published by Headley Brothers, Bishopsgate, London, E. C., England. 164 pages. Price, 2 shillings six pence (55 cents) net.

The book is a selection of addresses made at different times by the author at Woodbrooke. The author regards "the central historical fact in the traditional message of Christianity to be the Death of its Founder," and that "the central doctrine of Christianity ought to be an interpretation of its central fact." The writing is expository and somewhat analytic, and is an interesting presentation of the idea that the historical fact of Christ's death and the evangelical message go hand in hand.

LIVE MEETING AT CHESTER

From many quarters we hear a murmur of lament over the failure of the church in rural districts. If we allow discouraging circumstances to daunt us we are forfeiting the inheritance left us by early Friends, whose courage stood the test of the severest persecution. Out of discouraging conditions a thrifty church has developed at Chester, a rural community in Wilmington Yearly Meeting, Ohio. A few years ago Chester was one of the "little" meetings. There were few young people. There was so little interest in Bible study that the Sabbath School was laid down during the winter months.

Yet there were a few who labored persistently with hope for the future. When the pastoral system was adopted by the Yearly Meeting, Chester stubbornly refused to submit. However, there have always been two or more local ministers who have labored faithfully. Their work has been supplemented by repeated evangelistic efforts which have resulted in a vigorous growth of the church, until now, when conditions are in striking contrast with those of a few years ago.

At the present time there is a host of sincere, enthusiastic young people, who maintain a flourishing Christian Endeavor Society. The Sabbath School has an average attendance for the whole year of one hundred and maintains one of the largest teacher training classes in the county.

The present climax was the dedication on June 28th, of a new, modern ten thousand dollar church. Upon that occasion services were held throughout the day. In the morning Levi Mills gave an historic review. In the afternoon the dedicatory address was delivered by Albert J. Brown. In the evening the service was evangelistic, conducted by Frank and Fremont Milner. The basement is fitted up as a dining-room and upon this first occasion about four hundred were served at dinner. A great throng came in the afternoon, but among them all there were only two who attended the opening of the old church seventy years ago. These were Annie C. Wall and Clarkson McMillan. Funds were raised by the generous help not only of the members, but of disinterested residents as well.

The dedication of the church to service is an incentive to continued enthusiasm and greater exertion. It shall not be a mere monument or resting place, but the symbol that hitherto God has blessed us and His arm is outstretched still. The beautiful sentiment of Holmes very truly embraces the pervading thought of the entire dedicatory services:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

HELPING THE AMERICAN FRIEND

In the July issue of "The Friends' Messenger," Mary M. Hobbs, of Guilford College, has an interesting communication on the work of the Five Years Meeting, in which she calls special attention to the work being done by Joseph John Mills, the General Secretary. She makes several references to the importance of taking THE AMERICAN FRIEND in order to keep track of the progress of the church. Among other things she says:

"There is no more difficult problem confronting our denomination than the adequate financial resources of every meeting. J. J. Mills is studying this problem, and in THE AMERICAN FRIEND he gives the results of his study and explains how the meetings which handle these matters best proceed. These methods are not beyond our capacity, but would work as well for us as for others. We should study them and determine that we will co-operate and do our best to fill our places in our own meetings, in our Yearly Meeting and in the Five Years Meeting. It is a case where loyalty and fidelity are much needed as in an army on the march or in the field. It is not for us to quibble and argue over some small personal matters, but the time demands devotion and courage and self-forgetfulness if our denomination is to hold its rank and do its part in saving the world. Let us acquaint ourselves with the objects and aims of the Five Years Meeting, use its available resources, and further its efforts by our own helpfulness.

"Since these are matters which at present are claiming the attention of our General Secretary, would it not be well for those Friends who were delegates to the Five Years Meeting and who remain component parts of that organization until delegates shall be appointed for the next, to take up in their several meetings and especially in the ensuing Yearly Meeting the subjects above referred to, and endeavor to extend the circulation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, to increase the interest of all in the united efforts put forth by the Five Years Meeting and particularly to encourage a systematic method in our contributions to the work of our denomination?"

AT INDIANOLA, IOWA

The Friends' Meeting at Indianola is the most prosperous it has ever been since its organization. Every branch of the work is being carried on with enthusiasm. The attendance at the regular church services has been unusually large and regular, especially for the summer season. The Sunday evening services have not been abandoned as is the case with many of the churches.

The Sunday School, under the very efficient superintendency of J. O. Eno, is in excellent working condition. During the past year the attendance has soared above the two hundred mark. On Sunday, July 26, a very hot summer Sunday, the attendance was one hundred and fifty. The Christian Endeavor is also in a healthy, flourishing condition. At the missionary service recently, Miss Katie Miller told of her work at Southland College in Arkansas among the colored people, where she has been teaching during the past year. It is very interesting to hear of this part of our missionary work.

A few weeks ago the Indianola Friends had the pleasure of entertaining two Friends from England, Miss Sylvia Marriage and Mr. Robert Davis. These, in company with other young Friends from Ireland and England, are touring America in order to study conditions among Friends. They had attended services in Des Moines Sunday morning, and were brought to Indianola in the afternoon by Des Moines Friends in automobiles. After a brief religious service in the Friends' meeting house, all withdrew to the pastor's lawn for luncheon and a social time. About eighty gathered for the occasion. At the close of the brief social time all joined hands, forming a circle, and sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." A great deal of credit for our prosperous condition is due the faithful and efficient work of our pastor, Charles L. Moore.

The Denver Friends' Meeting extends a cordial welcome to all Friends, who may visit Denver, to attend meeting whenever possible. Meeting house is at 4100 Shoshone Street. Sabbath School is at 10:00; meeting at 11:00 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. Pastor, George D. Weeks. Address Walter W. Weesner, Clerk, 4023 Umatilla Street, Denver, Colorado.

Friends desiring room and board at Winona Lake, Indiana, will find the Winona Cottage a pleasant place. For particulars, address PHEBE HENLEY, Box 227, Winona Lake, Indiana.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

August 16

Subject—The Wicked Husbandmen.

Lesson—Matthew 21: 33-46.

Golden Text—The stone which the builders rejected, the same was made the head of the corner. Matthew 21: 42.

Place—Jerusalem.

Time—Tuesday before the Crucifixion, April 4, A. D. 30.

It was the last day of the public teaching of Jesus. Within three days he would be crucified. Apparently he is trying in one last effort to get the Jews—the Pharisees—to understand the situation.

The parable concerns the Jewish nation directly. As a people chosen ages before to perpetuate the religious idea of Jehovah worship in the world, they had had rare opportunities to render an accounting as stewards that would merit the Divine favor.

From time to time through the centuries God had been showing favor to His people. They had been given the law for guidance, and later the kings became the leaders of the husbandmen. Then came the prophets who sought to safeguard the estate for the coming of the Lord.

But the results had not been assuring. The kings had wasted the estate, and the prophets had been rejected and stoned. Now the Son had come in person and for nearly three years had given opportunity after opportunity to the Jewish nation to accept the Sonship of Jesus and thus preserve the estate intact.

But the mass of the Jews gave no heed to the admonitions. They voluntarily threw away the golden opportunity, and now the leaders were plotting to destroy the Son.

Out of their own mouths, Jesus compels the condemnation of their own actions (verses 40, 41). Within forty years Jerusalem was destroyed, the temple was burned, and the people perished en masse. They had the opportunity to save the nation, but they missed it.

But the stone the builders rejected became the head of the corner. The Jewish nation which caused the Son to be crucified went to pieces, but the Son is alive forevermore, and His cause has continued to spread throughout the whole earth.

The church today is the vineyard of the Lord, and is expected to bear fruit to the glory of God. If it fail, the opportunity will be taken away and given to another. All Christians will stand or fall according to the degree of loyalty and obedience they manifest in their lives.

No one can break the Divine law without himself being broken thereby. "No man ever has trifled with God or ever can." No one can withhold from God his due and escape the consequences.

Take THE AMERICAN FRIEND and keep up with the advance movements of the church. $1.50 per year.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

August 16

Topic—Our Social Life for Christ.

Luke 24: 13-35. (Led by the Social Committee.)

It is a common saying that man is a social being. Few people could be satisfied to live alone. There is a craving for the touch of human sympathy that nothing else can quite satisfy.

It is through the contact of life with life that people come best to know each other, and it is by this method that one person is able best to influence another.

Many a controversy would be avoided, many a misunderstanding healed over if the participants were only able to touch each other in a social way. By such means we learn to know the viewpoint of others and are the better able to understand their motives and have charity for their actions.

All too often we stand aloof from those we desire to influence. People are preached at, and resent it and go away, when if they were brought into fellowship in a social way with the sources of good, the results would be far different.

"Was not our heart burning within us, while he spake to us in the way, while he opened to us the Scriptures?" How different it would have been to have had the same things said in the synagogue, or upon any other formal occasion!

Christian Endeavorers are always glad to welcome young people of the neighborhood to the regular prayer meeting, and some will always be helped by such attendance. But there are others who are so constituted that they can never be reached amid such formal surroundings. For them, it will take a social evening, or a camp supper in the woods, or a friendly social event at somebody's home, to impress them with the need of the Christian life.

If the church will only learn to utilize for religious purposes the same social quality which many people possess that makes a politician a good mixer, it will have more influence in winning the masses for Christ.

The church is trying in various ways to reach the masses, by revivalistic efforts, by street corner preaching, by theater meetings, in the shops at the noon hour, and all these are valuable, but in many instances the same amount of energy exercised in reaching families in the home through social and sympathetic mingling would yield a much greater in-gathering of souls for the Kingdom.

The Christian Endeavor social can itself be made too formal to get results. People are never won by being patronized. It is only when they are made conscious of a sympathetic interest and when they realize the touch of a living heart, that they are willing to respond.

It is the love of Christ alone that begets such interest and such fellowship. By seeking His direction we may become fishers of men—soul winners for the Master's Kingdom.

You cannot afford to do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND. $1.50 per year.

Born

Allen—At Elyria, Ohio, July 16th, to Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Allen, a daughter.

Pribbenow—At Lowell, Kansas, June 29, 1914, to William F. and Vida Riggs Pribbenow, a son, William F., Jr.

Died

Bundy—Ira S. Bundy was born in Henry County, Indiana, December 17, 1843, and died at Sterling, Kansas, following a serious operation, July 14, 1914. He was converted at an early age and immediately began to work for the Master. He was soon recorded a minister and was always zealous for the best interests of the church. He had preached more funerals and performed more marriage ceremonies than any other minister in the county. He always had a smile and kind word for everyone he met. Funeral services were conducted at the United Presbyterian church, Friends' meeting house being too small to hold the congregation. He leaves a wife, two sons, five grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Hinshaw—Mildred Eloise Hinshaw, daughter of C. W. and Flora A. Hinshaw, was born in Lawrence, Kansas, July 26, 1895, and died at the home of her grandfather, John Newlin, in Lawrence, Kansas, May 20, 1914. She moved to Denver, Colorado, with her parents about fifteen years ago, but returned to Lawrence last year to attend the State University. She was converted at the age of ten years. Her beautiful young Christian life has been a blessing to many. She was a teacher in Friends' Sabbath School at Denver. One of her favorite hymns, "Abide With Me," was sung by her class at the funeral services, conducted by Rachel C. Woodard.

Holzer—Stephen B. Holzer was born January 25, 1889, and died at Red Wing, Kansas, July 10, 1914, aged twenty-five years five months and fifteen days. He was married to Delia Parker in 1912. He was a Christian and a member of the Calvary Friends' Church. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Orestes A. Winslow.

Howell—Etta Mae Howell, daughter of B. Franklin and Elizabeth O. Howell, died at Danville, Indiana, July 23. She was a birth-right member of the Friends' Meeting at Danville.

Jenkins—Cyrus Milton Jenkins, son of Samuel and Sarah Jenkins, was born in Miami County, Ohio, May 14, 1844, and died at Mooresville, Indiana, June 22, 1914, aged seventy years one month and eight days. He was a life-long Friend and during his residence in different sections he so identified himself with the church that his influence was felt in a telling way whether as teacher in the Bible School or in any other position.

Lee—Harriett R. Lee died at Stafford, Kansas, July 14, 1914, aged fifty-eight years five months and eight days. She was converted last December at the revival meeting held by Olen Hunt, of Missouri, and was received into membership with Friends at Stafford. She bore her affliction with patience in the love of the Lord and expressed a willingness to enter the haven of rest. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, A. F. Bond.

Mendenhall—Hessie Mendenhall, wife of Owen Mendenhall, died at her home in Portland, Oregon, July 19, 1914, aged fifty-nine years one month and four days. For a number of years she suffered much but through it all she was hopeful, ever showing a cheerful and happy spirit. Although afflicted so much, her council and advice were much valued. Such remarkable patience is ever an evidence of a peace which passeth understanding.

Outland—Verena May Outland, youngest daughter of D. Amos and Rhoda M. Outland, was born in Richmond, Indiana, May 22, 1892, and died at the home of her parents in Argonia, Kansas, June 8, 1914, aged twenty-two years two months and sixteen days. She was a birthright Friend and lived a true Christian life. Her life was always a blessing to others. She leaves a father, mother and two sisters. The body was taken to Cambridge City, Indiana, for burial.

Sanborn—Robert Sanborn died at the home of his daughter in Upland, Indiana, July 15, 1914 in his eighty-fourth year. He always took a deep interest in the welfare of the church and had been a member of Upland Monthly Meeting for about twenty-five years. He died trusting in Christ his savior. Funeral services were held at the Friends' Church in Upland and were conducted by the pastor, Ellis A. Wells.

Williams—Benzette Williams was born of Quaker parentage in Logan County, Ohio, November 9, 1844, and died at Western Springs, Illinois, June 22, 1914. He was one of the ablest and best known civil engineers in the United States. He was graduated from the University of Michigan, class of 1869. This year that University arranged to confer upon him the Master's Degree in Engineering, but death overtook him just as he was leaving for Ann Arbor. He was the first engineer of the great Chicago drainage canal and was engaged on many other important municipal and other works. He was a man of unusual power and attainments. His knowledge of the history of Friends and his understanding of its doctrines and practices were remarkable. Such was his modesty that only his family and intimate friends knew this. He was married in 1871 to Lydia Jane Terrell, of Mt. Pleasant, Ohio. She with four grown children survive him.

PENN COLLEGE

The tract of land known as "The College Farm" and consisting of forty-nine acres adjoining the college campus on the north, is being prepared for sale as a real estate proposition. The place is being plotted and will be known as the "Penn Addition" to the city of Oskaloosa. There will be some two hundred lots in the tract. The location of the tract puts it within easy reach of the business section of the city. It is protected on all sides, so that there will never be any undesirable features in connection with it. The contour of the land provides well for drainage, and in every particular it is a most desirable location.

The Penn College Bulletin just being issued will contain a complete statement concerning it.

"I do not see how any Friend can do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND," says a writer in a letter. $1.50 per year.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

The Graduates

I saw them beautiful, in fair array, upon Commencement Day,
Lissom and lovely, radiant and sweet,
As cultured roses, brought to their estate
By careful training. Finished and complete,
They passed in maiden grace along the aisle,
Leaving the chaste white sunlight of a smile
Upon the gazing throng.

Musing, I thought upon their place as mothers of the race.

O, there are many actors who can play
Greatly, great parts; but rare indeed the soul
Who can be great when cast for some small role;
Yet that is what the world most needs; big hearts
That will shine forth and glorify poor parts
In this strange drama, Life. Do they Who in full dress-rehearsal pass today
Before admiring eyes, hold in their store
Those fine high principles which keep old Earth
From being only earth, and make men more Than just mere men? How will they prove the worth
Of years of study? Will they walk abroad
Decked with the plumage of dead birds of God,
The glorious birds? And shall the lamb unborn
Be slain on altars of their vanity?
To some frail sister, who has missed the way,
Will they give Christ's compassion, or man's scorn?
And will clean manhood, linked with honest love,
The victor prove,
When riches, illy-gained, dispute the claim?
Will each guard well her husband's home and name,
Or lean down from her altitude to hear
The voice of flattery speak in her ear
Those lying platitudes, which men repeat
To listening Self-conceit?
Musing, I thought upon their place as mothers of the race,
As beautiful they passed in maiden grace.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

---

EARLHAM COLLEGE is striving to serve the community. By this we mean any community and every community where the influence of the college may extend.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICAL CULTURE, to which is closely allied the work of the nurses, in and out of the college hospitals, constitutes a Department of Health.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION is closely affiliated with the Richmond public schools, which afford an extensive educational laboratory.

THE BIBLICAL DEPARTMENT places emphasis upon practical effort to help humanity. Student activities in Bible School, Endeavor Societies, Mission work and the ministry are carefully and sympathetically supervised.

THE DEPARTMENT OF HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS is training girls not only to bake good bread and pastry, but to appreciate the supreme importance of the art of home making.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STUDENT AFFAIRS in the dormitories and out, is fostering student initiative and self-control.

The effort in each department of the college is not only to teach the subject, but to teach the student—to lay the foundations of scholarship and at the same time to develop efficient personalities capable of social service.

That Earlham's standards of thoroughness are recognized, is evidenced by the fact that Earlhamites are to be found as teachers in forty of the American universities and colleges of the highest rank. The Association of American Universities this year listed Earlham as one of a small list of American Colleges whose work ranks with their own, this list having been prepared at the request of the German Universities.

That Earlham produces efficient personalities is evidenced by the large number of men and women educated at Earlham who are conspicuous leaders in various phases of the world's work.

Maintaining Religious Standards in Education

The Christian school, which includes the Christian college, is fundamental to the educational life of the Nation. Without it there is always danger that our educational system will grow materialistic and our systems of instruction will grow intellectual without the leaven of the ethical. It is the Christian school that serves as a magnet to neutralize certain destructive tendencies in education, against which materialism tugs in vain beyond certain safe limitations.

While now and then our religious systems of education feel the blight of the irreligious tendencies of our secular institutions, it is equally certain that the latter are constantly feeling the redeeming influence of Christianity as professed and realized in the former.

It is one of the weaknesses of religious education however, especially as found in denominational schools, that in order to keep pace with the standards of present-day education, there is a tendency to choose members of the teaching force whose influence for things ethical and things spiritual is at least neutral. It will be a sad day for the cause of the best and the highest in educational life, when any considerable portion of the faculties in our denominational schools falls below the standard of the true religious tests by failing to maintain a direct interest in the religious life as well as the intellectual life of the student body.

Perhaps this danger is less marked among Friends than elsewhere, but it is essential to the success of a religious education that the instructors as a contemporary puts it, "should not be so busy with microscopes and test tubes and historical research that they cannot see the stars." This must not be considered as a plea for less efficiency in the field of college or university instruction, but rather as an emphatic insistence that religion shall not be sacrificed to intellectual culture. There can be no controversy between the two and a little carefulness in administration will preserve the standards of both. No school that professes to the characterization of being religious can afford to maintain a professorship whose head reveals no vital interest in the religious welfare of the students who come under his influence.

A possible danger lies in another direction. For a generation past, our educational systems have been dominated more or less by a liberalistic, materialistic spirit that was supposed to accord with prevailing scientific opinions. It is not surprising that this situation has existed. The danger is that some instructors will fail to note a well marked turn in the tide of scientific and critical thought toward the recognition of the vital place which the spiritual holds in all human life. Some months ago Sir Oliver Lodge, noted English scientist, was quoted extensively in this direction, and now we find John Burroughs, who is defined as "America's most famous living nature-writer and philosopher of common life," expressing himself in similar terms. The Continent, in a recent issue, quotes him as follows:

In this age of science we have heaped up great intellectual riches of the purely scientific kind. Our mental coffers are fairly bursting with our stores of the knowledge of material things. But what will it profit us if we gain the whole world and lose our own souls? Must our finer spiritual faculties whence come our love, our reverence, our humility, and our appreciation of the beauty of the world, atrophy? "Where there is no vision the people perish"—perish for want of a clear perception of the higher value of life. Where there is no vision, no intuitive perception of the great fundamental truths of the spiritual world, science will not save us. In such a case our civilization is like an engine running without a headlight.

The tendency of civilization is toward higher standards of learning, and our Christian colleges, while maintaining these standards, must guard zealously against the temptation to becloud the need of the spiritual factor in any department of life. Burrough's plea that the engine needs a headlight is a fine characterization, expressive of a hopeful tendency toward the equitable harmonization of that which is spiritual and that which is material in all phases of human thought and research. The best test of the Christian school is the ability to reveal the handiwork and personality of God to the consciousness of the youth of the passing generation. Herein the school can become the handmaid of the church as an important factor in its scheme of world-wide evangelization, and herein the church should find one of its greatest opportunities.

When agnosticism begins to get a vision of the verities of life that have their tap root in the spiritual, the door of opportunity opens to the Christian school in a way that has never been realized before.

The European Tragedy

"Rise, O America, rise in thy splendor,
Lead forth the nations to war against war;
Stand for the highest, be Freedom's defender,
Brotherhood, justice and peace evermore."

This bit of idealism from the New York Observer will find a ready response in the hearts of all true-hearted pacifists in this country. In the face of a staggering bloody scourge which even yet is almost unbelievable, faith looks out behind the war cloud and dares to hope that America may somehow find the way to permanent peace.

It is too early to philosophize wisely upon the conflagration that is now sweeping unfortunate Europe. It is impossible to think about it with complaisance. It is difficult to consider it with any degree of patience. So far as any direct and immediate cause is concerned it all appears so utterly useless. In the light of history it may be predicted that Austria's excuse for war will be found to be no excuse at all. For the sake of monarchical pride, she has sent her battalions against a feeble folk already impoverished by recent strife.

Germany's sin of plunging the whole continent into war will not be easily atoned, for had the Kaiser held himself in check, it can never be made certain that whatever struggle there was would not have been confined to Austria-Hungary and Servia.

What now becomes of the favorite argument of the militarists that a great standing army is the surest guarantee of peace? Apparently the existence of armies ready to take the field has, in this instance at least, proved to be the surest guarantee of war. Can it be imagined that if Emperor William had been compelled to create and train an army before any belligerency could have been thought of, he would have been so quick to sound the tocsin of war? And without an army, what would the Kaiser have had to fear? Russia's mobilization was against Austria, and even then it may be doubted whether she had any other motive than merely to be in readiness to see that Servia was not obliterated altogether.

Carrying the argument further, what could Germany have feared, if both Russia and France had no standing armies? And who could believe that Austria's pride would have been so difficult to satisfy as the result of Servia's humiliating reply, had Austria not had a standing army ready to take the field to inflict the punishment she sought?

President Wilson is to be congratulated upon the tender of his good offices in favor of mediation or arbitration. Perhaps a little later his offer will prove Europe's only hope. Until then the civilized world can only wait—and pray, for civilization can have no permanency while war has a place in its program.

The Educational Outlook

BY ROBERT LINCOLN KELLY *

We have in mind of course, the outlook for Friends' educational activities. The interest in education throughout the country, particularly in public education, and the resultant development of our school system constitute one of the marvels of our age. There is nothing in our country more nearly universal in its extent or more highly complicated than the machinery of education. Great ideas are dominating educational leaders and tremendous resources are at their command.

The challenge comes to Friends' institutions as it has never come before, to make whatever contribution they can to this great work. If the educational effort of Friends is really to count it must meet certain pretty well defined conditions.

America has passed out of the pioneer stage of education, at least in the communities where Friends reside. The modern school must be well housed, well equipped, well manned. Inadequate facilities and primitive methods no longer command respect. The school cannot be run by amateurs. Teaching has become a learned profession. Ours are the days of discrimination and competition. There must be something else behind a school besides the good intentions of a group of promoters.

This means that Friends should count the cost before undertaking to establish additional schools. There certainly is no field at present for another Friends' college, and it is doubtful if there is a place for another secondary school, unless indeed very considerable resources are available. No new school should be founded unless the community which founds it is able to finance it adequately.

It means also that certain schools already founded must change their status or be crowded to the wall. During the year representatives of the Board have visited two schools and as a result of their carefully prepared reports, the Board has been unanimous in advising more intensive and less extensive work. In one case the school was advised to affiliate with the public school system, and in the other to reduce its course of study to a program actually within practical realization. No school should undertake work for which it is not fitted. We should not wish to promise in educational matters what we cannot perform and it is certain that if we do make such promises they will be duly discounted by a discriminating public. Nothing can come forth from the prevalent fires of competition, and standardization, and efficiency-measurement except pure gold. Friends' schools ought not to shrink from the ordeal. If our shortcomings are pointed out we will go to work with a will to correct them. This is no new philosophy, for Jesus commanded that if thine eye offend thee pluck it out and cast it from thee. It is drastic treatment to be sure, but it follows the prescription of the Great Physician. The facts are that just now Friends' schools are undergoing the most careful examination they have ever known. The pruning will go on with considerable severity. If we do not do it ourselves, it will be done by outside agencies.

But we should be encouraged in the knowledge that there is life in the vine. However much we may fail to realise our ideals, it still remains that we have something of great value to contribute to American education. Ancient educational effort attempted to inculcate an appreciation of the true, the beautiful and the good. Schools today are concerned for the most part with the true. They are beginning to give some attention to the beautiful, but they touch rather lightly on the good. Friends' schools have stood for the true and the good and at least some phases of the beautiful.

To state the case in plainer language, the ethical and the religious elements are almost eliminated from the program of public education. The child is entitled to his full inheritance and children who are educated in Friends' schools may be exposed at least to two phases of the rounded education referred to. Two-thirds of an education is better than one-third and some of our schools are attempting to give the full three thirds.

We can determine to some extent the trend of our future civilization and we can help to place it upon a higher plane than will be done by an education that is simply and only scientific and utilitarian. We can stand and should stand even more firmly than we have stood before for a Christian manhood and womanhood that will strive to lend a hand. If you say that is the purpose of modern education, I reply that it has recently been found that in American universities there are 3,500 professors whose church membership, if they have any, has not been reported by them in the towns in which the universities are located and in which they are doing their important work. It is something to strive to counteract the present tendency to completely secularize education. We can at least pray God that our schools may be a small part of the leaven in the big lump.

Earlham, Indiana.

The Reformed Church has refused to merge with the Presbyterians, and the United Presbyterians failed to unite with the Southern Presbyterians, but there is said to be a growing sentiment in favor of a larger union to include all four. The Southern Methodists have voted in favor of a union of all branches of Methodism. The suggestion is now made that the Unitarians and Congregationalists merge, but the suggestion has not met with much favor among the members of the latter body. Meanwhile preparations are going on for a conference to consider Christian unity among all denominations, under the auspices of the Commission on Faith and Order.

College Discipline

BY ISAAC SHARPLESS

The matter of student government has been a problem ever since there were any colleges. The early plan was to make rules with penalties for their infringement serious enough to deter the unwilling youth. But there still remained the vexed problem of detection. Sometimes the professor was shrewd enough to solve this, more often, not. When a lot of elderly graduates get together the prominent subject for discussion often is how they outwitted old Professor Smith, or how they were caught and punished by the wiser Professor Jones. These memories seem to cause the intellectual triumphs or failures to sink into insignificance. How they rolled cannon balls down the dormitory corridor, or introduced a strange animal into the classroom, or dragged a poor proctor into the night air to quell a fake riot; this sort of thing seems to yield the most vivid and pleasing recollections. With this attitude to discipline, good government was often impossible. A wise and kindly man could sometimes secure it for a time, but the fortunes of war would change with his exit and old conditions return.

It was an unequal game. Numbers counted for the students and the rules were on their side. They could indulge in all sorts of underhand methods, but woe be to the officer who was caught "sneaking." He was doomed. The process sifted out a lot of unfit professors and some, who except for a certain weakness in discipline, were very fit and scholarly. It often sifted out also some unfit students, and some who, except for their extra zeal in playing the game, were very promising youths.

The simple remedy is to abolish a lot of rules which while directed against real evils do more harm than good. It will not do for men, however wise, arbitrarily to prohibit everything which is wrong. The government of colleges has passed through the political stages of absolute monarchy and limited monarchy and is fast becoming a democracy. Penalties still exist, but they are such as to commend themselves to the judgment of the governed and are often automatic in their action. Even where no organized system of self-government exists there often grows up certain natural relations in the student family which practically constitute self-government.

But many colleges are coming to the conclusion that some organized system is desirable and hence student "councils" and "senates" of elected representatives of the student body are having a larger place in many colleges. The faculties are turning over to them many of the functions which they have exercised and thus relieve themselves of many of the unpleasant situations which they have had to meet in the past. It is, however, a mistake to think that a lower order of disciplinary talent is required under these circumstances. It has sometimes happened that an official who was himself unable to govern has sought to solve the problem by introducing self-government. The effect has been disastrous. Sympathetic and acceptable cooperation on the part of the faculty is a necessary condition of success, and this means the highest tact and wisdom.

But assuming this the advantages are many. The college is better governed. In the elimination of the temptation to worry the governor, there is a great gain. In the development of a sense of student responsibility for college conditions there is another. The training of the undergraduate to accept responsibility for the conditions of his community in after life is another, and perhaps more important than any, the habit of officers and students working together for a common end and the abolition of the old state of warfare, which allows them to influence each other in other matters, is another.

It is well that these systems should grow up naturally. They can not be forced upon an unwilling college. But if the students want them, they should be given ungrudgingly. It will not do to grant little liberties so hedged in that the real power still rests with the faculty. They need not cover every phase of college life at first. Indeed it is probable that such questions as attendance at college exercises should never be included. But matters of ordinary discipline and morals in the dormitories and on the grounds, rules for athletic relations, hazing and cheating in examinations, may under good circumstances all be relegated to student action.

Over 100 colleges in the United States now have the "honor system" in examinations. The teacher gives the questions and either leaves the room or, if remaining, pays no attention to matters of deception. In some cases a simple pledge is given by each student that all has been fair. "This does not always work, for in every community there will always be a few who will cheat if they can do it with safety from detection. Consequently where the plan works permanently there is a student committee formed, and each student also pledges himself to inform the committee of cases needing attention. This second pledge is usually the occasion of stumbling. In some colleges the students will not agree to tell even a committee of their own selection, the misdeeds of a mate. If so, the "honor system" will usually fail.

Where the spirit which is said to prevail in the University of Virginia exists, there is no trouble. There the man who cheats or lies is considered to be unfit for the society of gentlemen and, if detected, he might as well go home without waiting for instructions.

But the shifting of responsibility from the official to the undergraduate body, whether systematized by rule and custom or not has created a new college atmosphere, one which makes of two bodies, one in sympathy and loyalty. An indirect effect is that the graduates feel that they have a permanent interest in and an accountability for college management. Sometimes there will be less decorum when in the presence of officers, but there will be a continuing devotion to the principles and the prosperity of alma mater which may be counted on in many ways in the future to add to her resources and her beneficent influence.

Haverford, Pennsylvania.

Educational Portraits and Principles

BY ELIHU GRANT

I have in mind four very different educational institutions of which I have made some study recently. They do not belong to Friends.

1. The first was made possible by the gifts of three wealthy donors to whose original endowment large additions have been few and far between. The institution seeks to compass the field of the university and is especially strong in two or three departments while weak in others. Its expansion has made the financial problem a serious one always and at times a critical one. Among other expedients it has tried the plan of what it calls a "living endowment," small annual gifts from graduates, to be used for current expenses instead of being added to the permanent endowment. The university has been involved in the controversies about heresy and has so far yielded to the pressure in a recently closed age of theological prurience as to lose of its teaching force and much of its scholarly independence. An unfortunate dispute concerning the succession of presidents of the institution has done harm. Just now a strong administration is helping to redeem the situation and a rejuvenation of several departments has ensued though the damage done through years will not be mended in months.

2. A very old institution for America has had several of the experiences suffered by institution number one, but the size and weight of interests have been so great as to make the shocks less apparent. It is at present throwing its major strength into the college department to the distress of certain ones, who are more interested in graduate work and research. Its gifts and endowments are accumulating in a healthy way and its strong administration is hindered chiefly by a certain bulkiness which is the menace of some of our more complicated institutions. Departmentalizing will ordinarily overcome the educational perils of immensity, but it remains to be seen whether the religious and social integrity of a great group can so readily be assured.

3. Number three is able to confess the pinch of poverty in spite of certain amazing gifts of late. They are amazing in view of the fact that gifts so large for the narrower field represented by the institution are very unusual. Neighbors wonder if such inheritances are justifiable, but then neighbors have a way of wagging their heads at the ways of Providence. The institution tends to specialization of a high order and its one danger above others is that it may go over the heads of the American public in every type of service which it renders.

4. Sic transit universitas. Number four is the only college, that is frankly so, of the group of four. It is a good one. It desires no one thing quite so much as its peculiar glory as a first-rate school of the liberal arts. It eschews special students, and gives slight comfort to post graduates, but it does devote itself to bestowing the A.B. course with as full and rich a content of meaning as possible upon its homogeneous family of under-graduates. After its original endowment, which seemed large at the time, but would seem pretty small now, the college had comparatively few large gifts until its fame as a college pure and simple was established. Lately it has fared more richly. It has had a rare succession of executives and a singular freedom from politics.

Now the four portraits would be drawn more completely if our object were really to delineate them in and for themselves, but just here in a few paragraphs it is rather the purpose to select the contrasts to illustrate certain features in the composite portrait of American education. Those features discernible to any earnest student must here be made to pass rapidly into a set of principles or, better, observations.

1. Many would agree that college (and secondary school) work afford the greater educational opportunities today. Duplication of plants more or less equipped to do graduate work is more of an evil than multiplication of colleges.

2. Permanent endowment is the only wise repository of gifts ever so small and patiently secured.

3. Freedom of teaching is a sensitive condition of true education.

4. Good administration depends upon choice personalities wisely selected and fully trusted.

5. Age, educational dignity and weight of loyalty are more precious than gold.

6. It is often easier to secure a large gift than to perform large service with it.

7. But the time is nearer when all gifts will more nearly conform to proved usefulness.

8. Denominationalism in theology is passing out.

9. Very large gifts are apt to scare away as many thousands as they bring.

The Power of a United Church

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

The body of Christ is His Church and is composed of all true believers. He alone knows His own, and His own know Him. It is His supreme will that His body should be one body, as completely one as is the head. For this He prayed four times in His last intercessory prayer: "As thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us" (v. 21). "That they may be one, even as we are" (v. 11). "That they may be one even as we are one" (v. 22). "I in them and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one" (v. 23). And the reason for it—"That the world may believe that thou didst send me" (v. 21). "That the world may know that thou didst send me, and lovedst them even as thou lovedst me" (v. 23).

That this prayer should have occupied so large a place in this crucial hour shows clearly that in the mind of the Master it was of supreme importance. Those whose fellowship is with the Father and with His Son, Jesus Christ, and walk in the light as He is in the light, have fellowship one with another (I John 1, 3 and 7). No cleavage of the body can have its source in Him. They must be due to human sin and frailty. Every decisive element in the body must be a fresh spear thrust in His side. No denominational line of division can claim His sanction, nor can any denomination claim freedom of responsibility in the matter. Historically we are all guilty and it is time we should confess our sin, pray for pardon, and seek by prayer and fellowship to wipe out these unseemly divisions.

Moreover, the movement of God's leading within the church for the last seventy-five years has been preparing for the healing of this "hurt" of His body. The work of foreign missions is impelling the church to union. The enormity of the task and its urgency are showing the sin of divided forces, and of jealousy and revelry over unimportant details when so much is at stake. Unity on the mission field is already well on the way of accomplishment. A month ago the Cincinnati Conference of Boards working in Mexico decided for one "Evangelical Church for Mexico." In the home land the Y. M. C. A. has shown Christian men the power of fellowship and of co-operative work. The W. C. T. U. and Y. W. C. A. have done the same thing for women. The uniform lessons in Bible Schools have brought all Christians to study and think in unison now for more than a generation. For a full generation the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor has trained a new generation to worship and work together. Their experiences and testimonies, their problems and the solution of them are the same, and they know it. The Christian Student Federation binds together the Christian students of all lands in the one purpose to make Christ supreme in the world. The Federation of Mission Boards, both home and foreign, are uniting all Christian forces for effective service. The Edinburgh Conference, the Laymen's Movement, the Women's Foreign Mission Union, the Men and Religion Movement have successively made clear the essential oneness of our aim. The Federated Council of the Christian Churches of America has organically united twenty million Protestant Christians for meeting the world task intelligently and effectively. The federating of the churches in smaller communities is showing the power of the churches when they act together. The marvelous evangelistic movements of recent years are showing how God honors His churches when they get together in work, with power for the winning of the multitudes to Christ. That power has never been pledged to a divided church.

The movement toward union is progressing with ever increasing momentum. The powers of evil are united, and the forces of righteousness must unite if they win. Whenever they are united, victory is sure. This coming year the United Mission program will for the first time constructively lead the whole church, so far as the individual churches will participate in it, in a united effort to meet the needs both of our home communities and the great world field. The great danger for Friends is, that being largely a rural church and trained for generations in excessive independence, we will fail to co-operate in this great movement. Unless we learn how to work together amongst ourselves, and with other Christian bodies, we will inevitably lose our place in the ranks of God's army that is to take the world for Christ. English Friends are awake to the situation as shown by the remarkable discussion of their last Yearly Meeting and the Conference soon to be held. Can American Friends be aroused to the situation?

This union can only come through fellowship in worship and co-operation in work. The watchword of this present movement is "not compromise, but comprehension." Men of convictions are wanted; but also men who will respect the convictions of others and not allow differences to break fellowship and co-operative service.

There are still some divisive elements among us. God grant us the wisdom and sweetness of love that will quietly and quickly remove them.

Whittier, California.

Important Notice About "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting"

The series of articles about "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which ran through several issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND earlier in the year, appear to have created wide-spread interest. Numerous approving references have been received in letters from time to time, and many have in other ways voiced their interest in the progress made by this remarkable congregation.

A Friends minister said publicly recently that this was the most important contribution that had been made to Friends literature for a good while. There is evidence that the story has been an inspiration to many, and it is felt that it ought to have a wider and more permanent circulation.

In response to this feeling THE AMERICAN FRIEND management is ready to put the entire story in booklet form for general circulation provided it can have orders enough to make it pay.

Another chapter, a final one, will be found in last week's issue, and the story complete will make a booklet of about eighty-four pages, with a paper cover, and can be mailed to any address for fifteen cents single copy. Ten copies can be sold for $1.00 and twenty-five copies for $2.25.

This will be a rare opportunity to put a copy of a work that is full of inspiration and practical suggestions into the hands of Friends generally.

We must have orders for not less than 500 copies by August 20. We ask Friends to drop us a card AT ONCE, stating how many copies they will take. If the required number is ordered, the fact will be stated in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and all orders will be filled as soon as the booklet is out, when the money can be sent. Address, Manager of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Amended Prohibition Resolution

Congressman Richmond P. Hobson has re-introduced the national prohibition resolution in an amended form. An amendment to section two was designed to overcome certain objections that as originally presented might conflict with the laws of some of the states. The new resolution can be referred to as H. J. Res. 277 and is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution.

News From Our Educational Institutions

EARLHAM COLLEGE

President Robert L. Kelly has recently been elected to membership in the National Institute of Social Sciences "in recognition of distinction attained in the field of Education." The Institute was founded in 1912 by the American Social Sciences Association, incorporated by Act of Congress and has a limited membership.

The names of twenty-eight holders of degrees and former students of Earlham College are found in the last issue of "Who's Who in America."

Among city Young Men's Christian Associations which have recently chosen Earlham College graduates as secretaries are Philadelphia, Chicago (Hyde Park and West Side), Buffalo, Indianapolis and South Bend.

Seventy-five students and graduates of Earlham College went from their homes in different parts of the country in most cases at their own expense, to the Young Friends' Conference at Winoona Lake. Many Earlham students also attended the annual assembly of Bible School and Christian Endeavor workers of Western Yearly Meeting, held from the 4th to the 6th of this month at Noblesville, Indiana. Earlham is developing an army of efficient young Friends who are loyal to the church.

PENN COLLEGE

The three members of the Penn faculty, namely, William E. Berry, of the department of Greek; Frederick O. Tostenson, of the department of Modern Languages, and F. C. Stanley, of the department of Chemistry, who have been absent the past year doing graduate work, the first in Harvard, and the two latter in Germany, will return and take charge of their respective departments at the opening of college, September 7th.

Professor Clarence M. Case, of the department of Sociology and Political Science, has been granted a year's leave of absence, which time he will spend in the University of Wisconsin working toward the doctor's degree.

Edgar H. Stranahan, of Wichita, Kansas, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Oskaloosa Friends' Meeting, and will assume his duties September first. Mr. Stranahan has been associated with Friends' work at Wichita, first as pastor, then as professor in the college, and finally as religious secretary of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, in which capacities he was very efficient. He is a graduate of Earlham College.

The prospects for the coming year are most excellent, an extraordinary large number of students having already signified their intention of entering the freshman class. Doubtless the enrollment will be the largest in the history of the school.

Extensive improvements have been made on the Athletic Field which will make it one of the best athletic fields in the state. It has been leveled and a good cinder running track laid, with the intention in the near future of building a stadium which will accommodate the largest crowds that will attend athletic feats.

The College Farm, a forty-nine-acre tract of land north of the college campus, is being plotted and gotten ready to place upon the market as a real estate proposition. There will be about two hundred lots. Some of the best building locations in Oskaloosa will be found here, and a number of the lots have been bought in advance. It has been thought that the entire tract will sell quite rapidly. This affords an excellent opportunity for Friends everywhere to find homes near a good Friends' college.

CLEVELAND BIBLE INSTITUTE

The year 1913-14 was one of exceptional blessing on the work of the Institute. There were enrolled in all departments 139 students from eighteen states and ten religious denominations.

The division of the educational work into three courses of study, viz.: The Bible Course, the Bible Doctrine Course, and the Bible Music Course, as well as additions to the curriculum, is meeting with much favor and filling a long-felt need. These courses will be strengthened as occasion arises by the addition of whatever will develop the highest type of Christian service.

While the new building has done much to increase the efficiency of the work, it does not meet our need. Our dormitory space is inadequate and rooms have to be secured outside. The dining room is not nearly large enough, consequently we feel the need of an additional building to be erected as soon as possible.

The work of the Extension Department will be continued during the next year. Edgar A. Wollam, the secretary, will have associated with him in this work, Merrill M. Coffin, formerly of Oskaloosa, Iowa, who is especially qualified as a leader of Gospel music. They will hold evangelistic services in various yearly meetings, several engagements having already been made.

PACIFIC COLLEGE

Pacific College has just closed the best year it has enjoyed under the present administration, and one of the best years in its history. A fine class of nine, exceptionally strong as students and strong in their influence in the school, were graduated this year from the college, and a class of thirteen from the academy.

The property is being improved further this summer, and prospects are good for a material increase in attendance the coming year. The faculty has been increased and strengthened, and with the splendid spirit of the year just closed, everything points to a still more successful year for 1914-15.

The new members of the faculty are Howard E. McMinn, head of the work in biology and chemistry, and Walter E. Spahr, whose work will be in the departments of history and English. Both are graduates of Earlham College. In addition, Oliver Weesner returns to the head of the mathematics department after two years' of graduate work in the University of Washington, and Miss Mary Eunice Lewis resumes her work at the head of the German department after a full year in graduate work at the University of California.

The spiritual work of the college was especially fruitful during the past year, every man in school except one being a member of the Y. M. C. A., and every young woman except one being a member of the Y. W. C. A.

The campaign for the raising of $100,000.00 of endowment is progressing well, and Friends in Oregon are giving with a liberality which would assure the success of the effort in a few weeks if the number of Friends in the Yearly Meeting were not so limited. The whole of the $100,000.00 must be raised by the end of 1914.

The support that is being given the college by the Yearly Meeting is increasing in enthusiasm and becoming more united year by year. The relation between the college and the church is becoming closer, to the benefit of each. There is manifestly a greater work than any thus far done for the college to do in the future, and those who have for years so heroically supported the institution are determined that it shall not fail of its greater future.

GUILFORD COLLEGE

The year which closed at Guilford College on the 2d of June was for many reasons the best the college has had. The increase in attendance has been in the upper classes, the senior class this year containing thirty-one members, the largest number yet reached.

The beneficial effects of the recently constructed buildings, Cox Hall, the Library and the Yearly Meeting house were apparent in many ways. The Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations were never more flourishing than last year, the series of meetings held under their supervision by William J. Sayers being worthy of special notice.

The various exercises of commencement week were pleasing and helpful to the educational interests of the college. The Bryn Mawr scholarship was awarded to Miss Helen Clare East, of Long Island, New York, and the Haverford scholarship to William Alpheus White, Jr., of Guilford College. On commencement day the Bachelor's degree was conferred on thirty-one young people, sixteen young men and fifteen young women. The address was made by Dr. Harvey W. Cox, of the University of Florida. On Sunday preceding an impressive sermon was preached at the eleven o'clock meeting by Dr. E. M. Poteat, President of Furman University, Greenville, South Carolina.

Noticeable improvements during the latter part of the year were made on the campus. Preparation is being made for the erection of an entrance gate to be the gift to the college of the Class of 1909. This will mark by suitable columns the south entrance to the campus. The spacious grounds belonging to the college and the numerous buildings situated at considerable distance one from another, and the grove of native oaks, combine to give attractiveness and beauty to Guilford's location.

SPICELAND ACADEMY

Professor Homer H. Cooper, Superintendent of Spiceland Academy, is much pleased with the success of his new book, "Right Living." Dr. Edward A. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, wrote of it: "I have never seen a book of this kind so vital, contemporary and charged with inspiration." Mr. John Mitchell, the great labor reformer, wrote of it: "It should prove an inspiration and a help to any reader."

The Chicago Record-Herald commented as follows: "These little essays are good for a variety of purposes, for club and school readings, for declamation, but best of all for a moment's silent counsel to bring discouraged minds back to a more hopeful outlook upon things."

From many sources Professor Cooper has received gratifying expressions as to the permanent value of his book.

THE WINONA CONFERENCE

On account of the Educational number, we are unable to give space for the report of the Winona Conference this week. It will appear next week along with much other valuable material, including the final installment of Thomas J. Battey's analysis of New England Yearly Meeting.

PERSONAL MENTION

J. Edward Ransome, who has been serving the meeting at Plattekill, New York, for more than two years, will begin his work as pastor at Monkton Ridge, Vermont, on August 16.

A note from R. L. Simkin, missionary to China, who with his wife, is at home on a furlough, says that they are enjoying an outing on the Eighth Lake of the Fulton Chain of Lakes in the Adirondacks.

Charles E. Cosand, who has spent the last year in the University of Chicago, expects to return to Wichita, Kansas, the latter part of August to resume his work in the English Department of Friends' University.

Richard Haworth, Chairman of the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, who has served the meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, as pastor for several years, has accepted a call for similar service in the meeting at Earlham, Iowa.

Robert C. Root has been giving a course of thirty lectures on "International Conciliation" at the summer school at the University of Southern California. This work closed August 7, and on August 15 he expects to move with his family to Berkeley, California, which henceforth will be his headquarters as Pacific Coast Director of the American Peace Society.

FRIENDS' TRACT ASSOCIATION

We have received a copy of the report of Friends' Tract Association of English Friends for 1913-14; also copy of one of its recent publications, "Maisie's First Meeting," by Mable Homer Thompson. This is No. 2 of "The Children's Series," and is a true story of a child's first attendance upon a Friends' meeting. Twelve pages, eight cents per dozen or fifty-six cents per 100 copies. The Association has existed for one hundred and one years, and last year issued 80,182 tracts as against 69,600 the previous year.

NEWS ITEMS

On Sunday night, July 26th, the Christian Endeavor Society of New Castle Meeting, Indiana, went to Spiceland as the guests of the Society at that place, and joined in a union meeting with all the other Christian Endeavor societies of the Quarterly Meeting. The occasion was a great source of blessing and inspiration.

On the night of July 30, Friends' Christian Endeavor Society at New Castle, Indiana, had with them R. A. Walker, State Field Secretary of the Indiana Christian Endeavor Union. His message was both inspiring and instructive. Quite a good body of young people greeted him. It is the plan to have him back to address all the societies of the city in a union meeting as guests of Friends' Endeavor Society.

Amos Kenworthy, of Whittier, California, closed a ten days' series of meetings last week at Fairmount, Indiana. His preaching was directed to the church and was of a very plain and practical order. Many of the members appreciated his messages and counsel very much. He went from Fairmount to Elwood, Indiana, for a short visit with a nephew, and then to Knightstown and Spiceland for some religious work. Our correspondent says that he seems strong physically and very bright and keen intellectually and spiritually.

Frank Cornell, pastor of the meeting at Winchester, Indiana, has accepted a unanimous call from the congregation to remain with them the coming year. On the return of himself and family from a thirty days' vacation at their former home in Canada, they found a little surprise awaiting them in the way of some repairs that had been made to the parsonage during their absence. On the evening following their return a reception was given them at the meeting house and there were many expressions of pleasure and gratitude because of their safe return home.

The Friends' Foreign Missionary Association of Philadelphia has sent out a request for gifts for its boxes for the Japan Mission. Articles should be mailed with the donor's name and should be sent to 20 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, before August 31st. It is asked that the value of the articles be stated, for insurance and customs duty. Articles needed are children's books, A B C blocks, pictures of animals and flowers, woolen bags for books, black and white darning cotton, suspenders, men's handkerchiefs, dress goods, outing flannel, table cloths (three yards long), napkins, towels, tea towels, wash cloths and cu-

Van Wert Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, was held August 1st at Van Wert. Representatives were present from all the local meetings. The attendance was good despite the busy season. Reports from the different departments indicated that much work has been done during the past year. All indications point to a very aggressive campaign for the kingdom of Christ the coming year. A very encouraging feature was the conference held on Friday evening to consider many of the problems which the different localities are facing. Plans were introduced which no doubt will help solve some of these difficulties. John Hardwick and wife, from Winchester Quarter, Indiana, were present, and their messages were very acceptable.

For several months the meeting at New Castle, Indiana, has been discussing the possibilities of a new meeting house. A committee was appointed to look for a new site and reported an option on a lot four squares from the old one. On the night of July 28th they had with them Morton C. Pearson, Secretary of the Indianapolis Federation of Churches, who laid the matter of the undertaking before the meeting. A Committee was appointed and instructed to proceed at once to the raising of funds both for the purchasing of a new lot and the erection thereon of an up-to-date meeting house. The future looks bright for New Castle meeting.

Charlotte E. Vickers, of Oak Park, Illinois, President of the Women's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America, ably conducted the Bible study hour at the Okoboji Interdenominational Summer School of Missions held at Arnold's Park, Iowa, from July 25th to August 1st. Her presence was much appreciated and she had a unanimous invitation to take the work next year. Grace M. Elliott, pastor of the Friends' Church at Arnold's Park, was Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements. Elizabeth Keates and Margaret Burtt, of Des Moines; Anna M. T. Kelsey, of Oskaloosa, and Sarah Standing, of Earlham, Iowa, were among the Friends in attendance.

EARLHAM BULLETIN

Vol. II, No. 4, of the Earlham College Bulletin is out, and is full of valuable material relating to that institution. Attention is given to the enlargement of the Department of Education. Professor Lloyd Van Doren takes the head of the Department of Chemistry in place of Professor H. N. Holmes, who goes to Oberlin. Dr. Raymond Binford comes from Guilford to become the head of the Department of Zoology. Professor Laurence becomes the new head of the English Department, while Horace E. Whiteside comes as the new Coach. Miss Louise Rodenbaeck takes the place of Professor Andressohn as assistant German Instructor, Professor Andressohn going to Berlin for two years' study. There are a few other changes in minor departments, but assurance is given that the high standard of Earlham is being strictly maintained.

THE ENGLISH CONFERENCE

"Is not the time at hand," asks the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, "when Friends, acting together, shall set out to do their best?" Some such question as this has been uppermost in the minds of the Executive Committee of the Llandudno Conference to be held in September. An inspiring preparatory Memorandum has now been issued (Woodbrooke, Selly Oak, Birmingham, 2d. each), signed by Dr. H. T. Hodgkin and F. J. Edminson, and we cordially commend its contents and message to the Society as a whole. It deals with the relation of Christianity to the "great aspirations" of humanity as illustrated by the democratic movement, the scientific movement, the women's movement, the demand for a freer and fuller life, nationalism, the international movement, and mysticism, and it urges these world-wide movements as constituting a call to the Society. We trust the Society as a whole will enter into the concern which lies at the back of the Llandudno Conference which is something much more than "merely another conference." In this connection we are glad to reprint the excellent editorial article from the current number of Present Day Papers. It is addressed to Friends on both sides of the Atlantic.—London Friend.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

August 23

Subject—The Wedding Feast.

Lesson—Matthew 22: 1-14.

Golden Text—O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her own brood under her wings, and ye would not! Luke 13: 34.

Time—April 4, A. D. 30.

Place—Courts of the temple at Jerusalem.

The lesson is for the Pharisees. In the light of history they are to see their impending doom. For centuries past God had been speaking to the chosen nation, bidding them to be prepared for the wedding day, when the church should be united with the Son.

Jehovah had spoken face to face with the patriarchs, the law had been given, the prophets had proclaimed their messages, and finally the Son had come with His declaration of gospel truth.

But the Pharisees were rejecting the invitations. They had heard "Come ye to the waters"; "Come unto me, all ye that labor"; "Take my yoke upon you," but they had turned aside. Within forty years a literal destruction was to come to Jerusalem.

Then it was that the Gentile world heard the gospel appeal, and multitudes accepted the invitation. But even here no one could be admitted to the wedding, unless arrayed in the garments of truth. Every one has the power of choice. Which portion will you choose?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

August 23

Topic—Lowly Service. John 13: 1-17.

One has only to study the life and work of Jesus to understand the value of today's topic. He had not where to lay His head, but He was nevertheless the central figure of the world's history.

He humbled Himself that He might serve others.

He who is able to give a cup of cold water in the name of discipleship, will receive a disciple's reward. The widow who gave the two mites gave more than all the rest, because she gave all she had.

Think of Lincoln going from the floorless cabin to the White House, and Garfield going from the tow path to the same position, and learn that it was merit that counted more than position in the case of both.

"The greatest truths are the simplest, so are the greatest men."

He who does the task at hand, lowly and insignificant though it be, has gained strength and courage for the larger tasks.

DAVID SAMPSON AND WIFE

"David and Sarah Sampson came to Brighton yesterday about one o'clock and could only remain until morning. We much regretted and they also, that they could not be here on the Sabbath. Such a visit to our whole meeting might have lifted us up, for the Lord is with them. With a short notice we were able to plan for an hour with my sister a mothers' meeting and their friends. The room was nearly full. It was a glorious meeting. David Sampson spoke on the good Shepherd and the Lord spoke through him. We were together for supper at Fircroft and oh, what a blessed time of waiting and prayer before they left for the evening meeting, and we saw them no more. The dear wife we loved as well as her husband. What a helpmeet she is in all things!"

The Wail of the Mothers

By Frank Emerich

The strife's begun, the thund'ring legions passed,
Their pennons brave in glitt'ring morning light,
The step of youth, firm, eyes with vision bright
Of glory, love of fatherland, its might
Strong to uphold while breath of life may last.
But far behind, in grief and all undone,
A million mothers wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

The foe is reach'd, the hideous battle's on,
Red is the air with bursting shot and shell,
Ruby the ground, as cannon toll the knell
Of youthful life, departed in this hell
Of mutual hate, where man's a common pawn.
The roar of war bids human thought begone,
Drowns out the mothers' wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

The murder's on, as men in bestial hate
Forget their Maker; think not on the cries
Of weak and wounded; all press on where lies
False glory's laurel, for the few who rise
On bloody ladders to be known as "Great."
Their state so high that lowly cries they shun,
Nor hear the mothers' wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

In death travail the man-child to the world
Is born in hut or mansion, and with tears
And toil is rear'd—and the woman's tender fears
Guarding and fending when aught ill appears;
But all's forgot when war's dread flag's unfurl'd—
Forgot their love, the faces blanched and drawn,
As myriad mothers wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

And widow'd wives behind, and babes unborn
The wrath of fate are bearing, while the tread
Of marshal'd millions trampling on the dead
Crush down humanity—these call for bread
Their cries unheeded, for their strength is shorn.
The weak must bear the burden all alone,
And dying mothers wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

The strife is o'er, at eve the broken troops
Return; the hollow victory is gain'd;
Their mighty monarchs' bearing shields deep stain'd
With human blood; pride in their ends attain'd
O'ershadowing grief 'neath which all mankind droops—
Th' unending cry, 'mid peans of victory won—
The mothers' age-long wail—"Oh, give me back my son!"

Important Notice About "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting"

The series of articles about "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which ran through several issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND earlier in the year, appear to have created wide-spread interest. Numerous approving references have been received in letters from time to time, and many have in other ways voiced their interest in the progress made by this remarkable congregation.

A Friends minister said publicly recently that this was the most important contribution that had been made to Friends literature for a good while.

In response to this feeling THE AMERICAN FRIEND management is ready to put the entire story in booklet form for general circulation provided it can have orders enough to make it pay.

The final chapter of this interesting account was in a recent issue. The story complete will make a booklet of about eighty-four pages, with a paper cover, and can be mailed to any address for fifteen cents single copy. Ten copies can be sold for $1.00 and twenty-five copies for $2.25.

This will be a rare opportunity to put a copy of a work that is full of inspiration and practical suggestions into the hands of Friends generally.

We must have orders for not less than 500 copies by September 1. We ask Friends to drop us a card AT ONCE, stating how many copies they will take. If the required number is ordered, the fact will be stated in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and all orders will be filled as soon as the booklet is out, when the money can be sent. Address, Manager of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Death of Mrs. Wilson

The whole nation has felt the touch of sorrow because of the death of the wife of President Wilson. The relationships of the President and his wife appear to have been ideal, and she has been a true helpmeet to him in all of his perplexing problems, both in his educational and in his official life. Mrs. Wilson's practical interest in bringing relief to our American slum life has been an inspiration and up-lift to all, and her example of being more than the head of official social life at Washington will have a beneficent influence for years to come.

Call for Prayer

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America through its administrative committee begs leave to suggest that Christians join in earnest prayer to Almighty God in view of the calamitous war in Europe, that He may guide the embattled nations to an early and lasting peace; that the sufferers, direct and indirect, by this gigantic conflict may have Divine comfort and sustaining grace; that the churches in the hostile countries may in the emergency have strength, wisdom and guidance from above in fulfilling the sublime duties for which they were commissioned by the Master; and that Christians in our own beloved land may be ready for any sympathetic or helpful service to their Christian brethren abroad which Providence may indicate.

It also urges that in addition to prayers in public worship for the mercies and blessing of God, petitions in private be also offered, and that all local federations of churches hold meetings for prayer at noon every Tuesday. Such a service was held at the Bible House, New York, on Tuesday, August 4, and it will be the first of a series of prayer-meetings. Where there are no local federations, let the churches unite in providing for a half-hour prayer service.

No Substitute for the Spiritual Life

In this day when the call for efficiency is coming from every department of the world's work, care should be taken that its application be not misdirected. So far as the life of the church is concerned this popular call may properly apply to church procedure, but it is well to remember that efficient organism can never become a substitute for vital religion. Efficiency committees, better organization, federal co-operation, all have their place in promoting the work of the church and contributing to a larger and richer fruitage as the result of Christian activity, but no one of these nor all of them together can take the place of the operations of the Holy Spirit upon the individual soul.

The alchemy of religion, by which human nature, sordid, selfish and sinful, is transformed into holy relationship with the Divine, is not a mechanical process, governed by the laws of natural philosophy, but operates wholly within the realm of the spiritual, and means the quickening of an organism, dead in trespasses and in sin, by the transfusion of the new and Divine life of the Son of God which He has promised to all those who diligently seek Him.

There is no salvation in theology. Technical discussions about human and Divine relationships create no incentives for men to forsake their sins. One does not have to be a psychologist to be a true follower of Jesus Christ. While God has placed no limitations upon the avenues by which He reaches the souls of men, there is only one way by which humanity can find God. In the consciousness of a great impelling need, it is by repentance and through faith, and by returning to the Lord with a petition to be forgiven, that every soul may find God in holy, satisfying relationship. In such a moment God reveals himself to the consciousness of the new-born soul, and thenceforth they may walk together in joyous fellowship, unaffected by the environments of the physical world.

Whatever the terminology of theological discussion, it all means in the last analysis that the needy soul must seek after God, believing profoundly in the pronouncement that "He that seeketh findeth." Whatever perversions there have been of the so-called doctrine of the "Inner Light," there can be no serious purpose to make it mean more than that man's spiritual nature becomes responsive to the operations of the Holy Spirit, and that when this spiritual side of man thus feels the touch of the Divine power, it is quickened into a new life—the Divine life—and the individual becomes conscious of a living fellowship with God.

This "Inner Light" is not an independent force that exerts itself automatically or under the direction of the will of the individual, but its source is in Jesus Christ. In 1648 George Fox wrote in his journal: "Now the Lord hath opened to me by His invisible Power how that Every Man was Enlightened by the Divine Light of Christ." It is only upon the theory that Jesus is a living Presence in the world, and that by the power of the Holy Spirit as a living, vital personality, He is revealing Himself to everyone who will open the door of his heart to receive the truth, can any plausible doctrine of the "Inner Light" be maintained. This was the interpretation of George Fox. It accords with the practical idea of salvation in this generation.

The religion of Jesus, the Son of God, is a religion for the masses, and we may readily believe with the early Friends that the Holy Spirit is ready to illuminate every human soul with a revelation of Jesus Christ. But this sacred truth must never be hedged about with a bewildering mass of technical pronouncements that obscure it from the understanding of the average man, nor must the religious life be rendered so exclusive as to put it beyond the pale of the unlettered and even the unthinking masses.

The early Friends were intensely democratic in their presentation of spiritual truth, and, as of old, multitudes of the common people heard them gladly. It was not conducive to growth and a fruitful life, that in later years, the Society of Friends developed a sort of denominational aristocracy which seemed adapted only to the few who were able to comprehend the particular variety of truth for which it stood. We of this generation cannot afford to fail in the adaptation of our messages of gospel truth to the needs and understanding of the present age.

Our concern is not that there shall be less efficiency in the operations of the church. On the contrary we believe profoundly in standardizing our methods of activity in harmony with the best that can be devised. We must not be understood as pleading that a low valuation shall be placed upon spiritual experience. On the contrary, we would plead for that standard of Christian perfection set by Jesus himself when He said: "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect." Our plea is that there can be no modernized substitute for a vital religious piety, by which the human soul is brought into fellowship with the Divine Father, and that our theological discussions shall be brought down out of the realm of the mysterious and unknowable and be made to harmonize with the best and most practical standards of actual Christian living.

The best way to make the doctrines of Friends realistic is to proclaim them in terms of applicability to every condition of human life.

Review of New England Yearly Meeting

BY THOMAS J. BATTEY

During the last of the Bible Half-hours on Seventh-day, Alfred Garrett brought to our notice some of the leading qualities of the true mystical religion, which he had been tracing from its origin in Abraham to its culmination in Jesus Christ. Mystical religion requires both the steadying aid of the Scriptures and the ethical work, as is taught so clearly in the closing words of the sermon on the mount—"If any man hear these words of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock."

During the thirty silent years of Jesus' life He was living out in daily toil the lessons He afterwards taught. He achieved sinlessness by obedient effort. And here we learn the use of our will in behalf of conduct. This will strong with the will of God builds of character. We gain the victory not by trying only nor by trusting only, but by both fused together. Two little girls were late in getting to school; one said, "Let us kneel down here and pray." The other, more wisely, said, "No; let us run and pray as we run." These thoughts may help us understand how deeply true were the words spoken of the child Jesus, "He grew in grace and in favor with God and man."

In Him religion and ethics met together and kissed each other. True Christian love is the union of mysticism and ethics. Love is a passion for doing good. The temptations of Jesus were truly real. He might have yielded, might have fallen, else they were no temptations. He was tempted from end to end of His life, but He never yielded and never sinned. Jesus as a young man led a life of progressive triumph over temptation, but the worst temptation of His life came to Him in Gethsemane. "Escape!" it said to Him. "Escape from this gate—escape while there is time and avoid the cross!" But His calm, deliberate answer was, "Thy will be done." He preferred the cross and stayed.

But even on the cross the temptation returned, as the taunting call sounded in His ears, "He is the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross and we will believe on Him." But the tempter had nothing in Him and so He held out true to the end, when He could utter the last triumphant cry, "It is finished!"

Once again, at the closing session on First-day evening, "the last day, the great day of the feast," Alfred C. Garret gave another of these truly remarkable Bible readings, awakening as at other times the same spirit of rapt attention and producing the same sense of spiritual uplift and larger vision. As there was a designed and helpful continuity of thought in the Bible lessons, it seemed altogether best to follow them through to the end before turning aside to consider the other features of the meetings.

Going back to Fourth-day afternoon, we were met at the outset by another new and helpful feature, viz., the introduction of printed reports from the Standing Committees. This had been agreed upon last year, and was pretty generally, though not entirely, carried out. As each one was given a copy of a report before its consideration, the time of reading was saved and the meeting could proceed at once to its discussion and approval or criticism.

The first of these to come before us was that of the Moses Brown School Committee, which was responded to with much warmth of approval. The picture which this report painted for us was something like this: A great school plant almost in the heart of the second city of New England, a product of the far-sighted generosity and persistent self-denying labors of Moses Brown and his associates of a hundred years ago, with large, commodious buildings in good repair, ample grounds adorned with natural forests, and abundant shrubbery, an enrollment during the year of 268 pupils, under the care of a faculty numbering nearly thirty; an expenditure of over $72,000, fully met, with a balance for the year of nearly $4,000; with a reputation increasing from year to year among the various colleges which it feeds, and the clientage from which it draws ranking it high among the best preparatory schools of New England; with a strong and healthful school spirit prevailing throughout; with wholesome and healthful moral and religious influences continuously brought to bear upon the young life in its charge—what a picture it presents! What ground for satisfaction, what responsibility, what opportunity for good or ill lies here! Ought not every member of New England Yearly Meeting, young or old, to have an interest aroused, and highly resolve to cultivate an abiding loyalty to such a trust as this, that it shall continue more and more to fulfill the great designs of those who in prayer and struggle and tears laid its foundation stones, and could find no more fitting words to express their purpose than these—"For the honor of truth."

Following the report of Moses Brown School came that from Oak Grove, another great trust of New England Yearly Meeting—less extensive than Moses Brown, but more than half its age, and this year graduated a larger class; less favored on its material side, but strong in its traditions and in the loyalty of a large band of ardent supporters who point with pride to the work it has accomplished with its slender means, through its long battle for life against great odds. It ought to succeed. Its reports are models of hope and courage, and now that it has nearly three-fourths of its $100,000 endowment fund in sight, it is infused with new courage to continue the struggle.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Conference on Mexican Missions

A most important conference upon missionary work in Mexico was held in Cincinnati, June 30 and July 1 of this year. Sixty-four persons were present representing the Northern Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Disciples of Christ, Friends, Episcopalians, Southern Methodists, Northern Methodists, Northern Presbyterians, Southern Presbyterians, and the Y. M. C. A. Friends were represented by E. Gurney Hill and Edith Tebbetts of Friends' Missionary Board; R. Solomon Tice and Miss Nancy Lee, missionaries to Mexico, and Nina H. Trueblood, of the Mexican Field Committee.

Committees were appointed on Press and Publication; Theological, Educational and Training Schools; General Education; Territorial Occupation, and a General Committee on Mexico to consider all questions not included in the above.

The discussion during these two days covered the entire subject of missionary work in Mexico, the purpose being to devise ways and means by which the entire field can be served in the most effective way and at the least cost. The spirit of unity which prevailed was remarkable and while there were sometimes differences of opinion, there was a general disposition on the part of all to yield whenever necessary for the good of the work as a whole. Robert E. Speer, of the Presbyterian Board, proposed a re-districting of Mexico. A general discussion of the subject followed which was continued the next day, after which the whole matter was referred back to the Committee on Territorial Occupation, because there was evident need that the Northern Baptists and Disciples should have more territory than was suggested by the report.

The following was finally adopted as the recommendation of the conference:

1. That it is deeply impressed with the inadequacy of the missionary force available for the evangelistic, educational and other forms of missionary effort through which we are seeking to help Mexico. There is an average of one foreign missionary, including wives, to 70,000 of the population. Fourteen of the States of Mexico, with a population of over 5,000,000, or one-third of the entire population, have no resident foreign missionaries.
2. The Committee believes that there should be a great increase of the missionary staff to co-operate with the loyal and capable ministers of the Mexican churches and that as soon as possible the force of missionaries should be increased at least fifty percent.
3. The Committee believes also that there might be a more effective distribution of the present missionary forces than that which has come about in the natural development of the work hitherto. In some states there is one missionary to each 12,000 people, and in others there is not one to more than 1,000,000. There are 39 mission high schools in 15 states, while the other 15, with a population of 6,000,000, have no such institutions at work for their people. We would accordingly urge upon each agency at work in Mexico the earnest reconsideration of the location and distribution of its forces so as to avoid duplication and overlapping and to secure the occupation and evangelization of the entire field.

4. It is not within the province or power of the Committee to indicate any withdrawals or transfers which might be made by particular agencies, and we recognize that there are denominations which do not feel free to share in any plan of territorial assignment of responsibility, but we recommend that in the development of the work in Mexico and in the effort to provide for the occupation of the whole country, the following denominations be regarded by this Conference as primarily responsible for the occupation and missionary cultivation of the States indicated:

Congregationalists—

Chihuahua, Sinaloa, as far south as Sinaloa River, Sonora, and Lower California.

Baptists—

Coahuila, Nueva Leon, Zacatecas, Durango, Mexico, Federal District, and Aguascalientes.

Disciples—

Coahuila (from Piedras Negras south along the line of International R. R. to Monterey and to Torreon, whence north to Jimenez including Sierra Mojada), Nueva Leon.

Friends and Southern Presbyterians—

San Luis Potosi, Tamaulipas, Nueva Leon.

Methodists—

San Luis Potosi, Guanajuato, Jalisco, Colima, Mexico, Federal District, Hidalgo, Puebla, Queretaro, Tlaxcala, Michoacan, Tepic and Sinaloa as far north as Sinaloa River.

Associated Reformed Presbyterians—

Tamaulipas, Vera Cruz and Eastern San Luis Potosi.

Presbyterians (North)—

Mexico, Federal District, Morelos, Vera Cruz, Campeche, Guerrero, Oaxaca, Chiapas, Tabasco and Yucatan.

5. The Committee believes that the earnest effort of the denominations named to care for the territory designated will make possible a more efficient development of the work in each part of the country, as well as the occupation of the entire field. Special responsibility for contiguous territory will enable the missions to arrange for regular and frequent conferences and institutes of workers, both preachers and teachers, and will prepare the way for such an intensive development of their work and such harmony of relationships as will best advance the cause which we all seek to serve of the evangelization of the whole land and the moral and spiritual progress of its people.

Other phases of the work of the conference will be given in THE AMERICAN FRIEND later.

The varied and valuable articles in the Homiletic Review for August make a strong appeal to the student and preacher. Besides a number of valuable contributed articles, the selection of sermons fulfills in every respect the high standard maintained by this widely read publication. Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354-365 Fourth Avenue, New York. $3.00 a year.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, recognizing the unusual interest among pastors in real Bible study, will hold brief conferences in any important centers in the United States or Canada for the promotion of Bible study and the deepening of spiritual life. Pastors interested are invited to correspond with the Extension Department of the Moody Bible Institute, 153-163 Institute Place, Chicago, Illinois.

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

The Enlarged Life

BY J. EDGAR WILLIAMS

"He brought me forth also into a large place."—Psalms 18:19.

Our text is a testimony. A testimony springing from a personal experience. David had many personal victories, but was always ready to give God the glory. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory."

"I was brought low and He helped me."

"This poor man cried and the Lord heard him and saved him out of all his troubles."

"He brought me forth also into a large place."

The 55th Psalm is a marked example of his varied experiences. It is a story of spiritual gradation and progression. Near the beginning we find a despondent longing, but the Psalm ends with a note of triumphant, brotherly encouragement, a note made possible because of his conquering through prayer. In verse six he cries out, "Oh, that I had wings like a dove! for then I would fly away, and be at rest." It seems that his enemies were haunting him, the sky had lowered until his horizon was pitifully dark and limited, he was weary with his task and wanted rest.

To him, like many another, distance lent enchantment. Perhaps he was underestimating his present opportunity by dreaming of that larger sphere where if only permitted he would do great things. Or on the other hand he may have forgotten that in that "away" place duty would still be calling and conscience speaking. Not being permitted to flee, for God often holds people where they are, a substitute for flight must be found—not a substitute for rest, for there is none—but a method for finding rest. That he was led to choose the right one is shown clearly in verses 16 and 17, "As for me; I will call upon God; and the Lord shall save me."

"Evening and morning, and at noon, will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice."

What a substitute for flight! What a recipe for rest! The result of his choice and prayer was not only rest, but new strength, vision of opportunity and a desire to extend a helping hand to any who might be in a straight like himself, for he cries out, "Cast thy burden on the Lord and he shall sustain thee" (verse 22).

Had he not found the "Large Place" and that too without the "wings of the dove"? Indeed, was he not standing right in the center of it when he could so forget his enemies and his own trials as to sympathetically give the best advice to a burdened soul that ever fell from human lips or trickled from human pen?

Others there are who could tell of the blessings of the large place and the process by which they came. Moses and Abraham could speak of it in terms of geography and mathematics, but with most of us it is no such proposition, but an ethical and spiritual one. It is a thing of the mind and soul. The large place may have very narrow physical limitations. Bedford jail was such a place to John Bunyan, but his soul had unlimited freedom and his mind traveled far. The Roman cell was everything else to Paul than a large place, but forth from that cell came some of the mighty words of the epistles.

Nazareth was small, yet by no means did it form the boundary line for Jesus' thought, prayer and activities. He was bigger than Nazareth and so dwelt in that larger realm, without limit, that Nazareth put none of its stamp of littleness upon Him. So may we all come into the large place—God's place for us—not by "wire pulling" and place seeking, but through spiritual inheritance and obedient service, for there is a Divine bringing forth and a Heavenly promotion.

The Christian life is not a narrow life, but broad and ever enlarging. Think not that to pledge yourself to the doing of God's will means the killing of all ambition; rather it furnishes a trellis upon which it may climb to the only safe heights. Nor does it mean clipping the wings of the soul, for "They that wait on the Lord mount up with wings as eagles."

But the geographical side of life, the large life, must not be ignored, for the field is the world. And its very bigness is sometimes appalling. So much so that instead of praying for "Tasks equal to our powers we should pray for power equal to our tasks." The world field offers its challenge to every faculty. Its impudence is a challenge to your self-control; its sickness to your sympathy and healing art. Poverty challenges your generosity and the uncivilized world your faith and prayer.

Then say not your life is narrow or that you have nothing to do. While living in a quiet place or a circumscribed territory as to the physical, your heart and mind may reach out to Africa, China or Alaska, for remember, He hath brought you forth, also, into a large place.

Carthage, Indiana.

Jesus and Judas

BY W. IRVING KELSEY

"Love one another even as I have loved you."

It was the scene of the last supper. Judas had just left the little group. Long before Jesus had said, "Love your enemies." That night and for months past Jesus had illustrated this teaching in his conduct towards Judas.

For a year at least Judas had been going wrong. It was at the Passover time the year before, when Jesus had fed the five thousand, and the Galilean peasants in their wild enthusiasm would have taken Him by force to make Him king, but Jesus had refused. On the following day when He explained to them the spiritual nature of His kingdom, many went back and walked no more with Him. Then He turned to the twelve and asked them if they also would go away, and Peter, speaking for the rest, declared their loyalty to the Master.

Jesus must have perceived that Judas did not agree with the others. He may have read in that clouded brow resentment because He had not improved this splendid opportunity to mount to His throne at once. Judas was at least disappointed and Jesus had discovered it. Turning to the twelve Jesus made this startling statement, "Did not I chose you, 'the twelve,' and one of you is a devil?"

But wherein was Judas' sin that he should merit such a rebuke? Doubtless all the twelve entertained the idea that Jesus was intending to set up an earthly kingdom. Probably all of them were ambitious for important positions in the coming kingdom. These were common blunders. But this was a test of loyalty. The multitudes had deserted Him and the question was, "Will ye also go away." Peter replies, "To whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life." The Master's teaching and personality had won the day. The hearts of these men were still loyal to Him, all but one. He had "a devil." Jesus had warned him.

Nearly a year passed and Mary in her gratitude anointed the feet of the Master with precious ointment. Judas objected. "Not because he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and having the bag took away what was put therein." Jesus certainly must have known of this dishonesty. Why did He not make an example of the thief?

Then the last act in the drama came; Judas betrayed the Master. The money was paid over. How did Jesus treat this disloyal disciple, this thief, this traitor, this personal enemy? The group had assembled in the upper room. The disciples had been quarreling for first places in the kingdom. Jesus could not teach them while this spirit prevailed. He rose from the table, took a towel and some water and washed their feet. Did He wash Judas' feet, knowing that he had already betrayed Him? Yes, certainly. Jesus does not treat him as a marked man, but by this act of love and humility He tries to bring him to himself, but the effort failed.

The spiritual atmosphere of the little group was changed by this act. Selfishness was driven out. Only one man was not affected. Jesus saw this and said, "Ye are clean, but not all." Again Jesus did not hold the traitor up as an example, but Judas must have surmised that the Master had discovered the condition of his spirit. The Master made another advance, "I know whom I have chosen; he that eateth my bread lifteth up his heel against me." Judas must have known by this time that the Master was talking to him; but he steeled himself against all advances. Again Jesus perceived and was troubled in spirit. Then He spoke still more plainly, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." Still the traitor was unmoved, and even has the effrontery to ask with the others, "Is it I?" Even then Jesus did not disclose the secret to the rest, but Judas now knew of a certainty that he had been discovered.

Jesus made one more effort to rescue him from his awful fate. He dipped the sop and handed it to Judas. By this act He selects Judas as the honored guest. It was the last appeal, but was of no avail, for the traitor's heart was as adamant. There was only one thing left, and that was to warn the traitor of his impending doom. The solemn words sounded out as a death knell, "Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed; good were it for that man if he had not been born." All the Master's efforts to save Judas had proved fruitless. He turns to him, "That thou doest, do quickly," and only Jesus and Judas understood.

All the Master's attention up to this point seems to have been directed to the rescue of Judas, who had become His personal enemy. But he was the man in need; the one sheep who had gone astray. Why did He not take revenge on him? Why did He not disclose the plot to the eleven? Why did He not at least make an example of Judas? Simply because He loved him and was trying to win him from his awful fate. It was this love of the Master that finally drove Judas to take his own life. He needed no tribunal, no stern judge to condemn him. He had sinned against love and his own conscience pronounced the sentence. Jesus loved his enemy, Judas, and having loved him He loved him unto the end.

Irish Friends on Peace

Edith Webb has sent us the following statement of Leinster Quarterly Meeting, Ireland, held June 29, 1914. In view of the European war, it has an added importance.

"Under a feeling of deep concern in the present unsettled state of our country we desire once more to bring before our members the views which our Society has always held on the subject of War.

"We would remind Friends everywhere of the peaceable nature of Christ's Kingdom. We believe that the whole life and teaching of our Lord and Saviour testify against the spirit of War, and that to oppose violence with violence is in direct opposition to the precepts of our Divine Master. He proclaimed a gospel of love and forgiveness, in which the suspicion and hatred stirred up by strife can have no place.

"We earnestly entreat all our members, in the name of Him who commanded us to love our enemies, to abstain from taking any part in, or encouraging, war-like preparations, and to testify in every way possible to the sinfulness of War for those who profess to be followers of the Prince of Peace.

"May we all endeavour 'to live in the virtue of that life and power that takes away the occasion of all Wars'."

Signed on behalf of Leinster Quarterly Meeting,
CHARLES E. JACOB, Clerk.

The Federal Council of Churches through its Commission on Relations with Japan, proposes to study the whole question of our relations with that country from the standpoint of the teachings of Christ. This action is opportune because the churches and missions of that country have just started on a three-year nationwide union evangelistic campaign.

The New Secretary of Young Friends' Activities

BY A YOUNG FRIEND

There are twenty thousand of us in America who consider ourselves Young Friends. To develop and direct the stir of life that has been felt throughout our number from the Atlantic to the Pacific during the past three years, our Board of Young Friends' Activities has appointed Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Board.

Already he has started on the first big task of his work, that of getting acquainted and thoroughly in touch with Young Friends of America. He has recently been at New York, Nebraska and New England Yearly Meetings and Haverford Summer School. Before the summer is over he will have visited many Friendly gatherings and many hundreds of our number will know him. But those of you who will not have the opportunity to get acquainted will want to know something about him.

Tom Jones is a young man, but a man with experience; he knows Friends of the East, Friends of the West, and English Friends, and he has a vision of and belief in Friends of the future. Not long ago, within the walls of the famous old Hartford Seminary, I had a midnight visit with Tom. For an hour or two we talked over the work into which he is now throwing body and soul.

He told me something which you ought to know, for it shows with what conviction he goes into our work. When in college Tom Jones was an orator. When you hear him you will understand why he twice took the highest oratorical honors of his college and was her intercollegiate representative. With this oratorical ability and love for oratory, it is not strange that he had an ambition to be a great preacher and lecturer. When he went to the theological seminary other denominations welcomed him as a student pastor. He was sought as a speaker. The fact was borne in upon him that Friends do not have great pastors and great orators according to usual standards. The opportunity was offered him by that denomination whose organization, money and effort is bent toward the development of great pastors. He was face to face with this challenge, "If you want to be a great preacher, you will have to go into a denomination which makes great preachers its aim." Should he fulfill his ambition or was the Society of Friends worth the sacrifice? It was on this question that Tom Jones had to make his decision. The fact that in spite of the allurements of greater distinction and greater financial reward, as well as natural inclination, he is in our work shows, to use an old Friendly expression, that he is a Friend by conviction.

He feels that his greatest opportunity for a useful life is as a Friend.

Tom Jones' home is near Fairmount, Indiana. It was there on the farm that he was born in 1888. He went to the country school and then to Fairmount Academy, one of the best Friends' schools in the middle West, where he graduated in 1906. For three years following that he taught school. His summers were spent in farming and as a street car conductor in one of the so-called "Gas Belt" cities of Indiana.

In 1909 he entered Earlham College. About this time the Earlham Y. M. C. A. was making greater effort to be of use to the community about the college, and to the Friends' meetings in the surrounding country. Tom Jones threw himself into this work from the first.

Often I have seen him spend Saturday morning at work by which he was paying part of his college expenses, go in for athletic sports in the afternoon, attend a college social affair in the evening or speak in some public meeting, and the next morning before the college was astir, be off on his bicycle to attend a Friends' meeting ten miles away in the country.

This tremendous energy and strength of purpose is one of his most predominate characteristics. He played center on his college football team and was Earlham's intercollegiate oratorical representative for two years. He was class president, a member of the Glee Club, and on the college Y. M. C. A. cabinet for two years. He graduated from Earlham in 1912 with the degree of A.B. Previously he spent the summer of 1911 studying in Chicago University.

Since the fall of 1912 he has been in Hartford Theological Seminary, of Hartford, Connecticut. During the year just past he has served as student pastor of the Bay State Union Chapel in Northampton, Massachusetts. Last summer he studied in the Woodbrooke school of religious and social service in England, where he took work in the Bible, Sunday-school methods, and Friends' history. He also traveled on the continent and visited Scotland. Next spring he will graduate from Hartford.

As young Friends throughout America come to know Thomas E. Jones, we will find in him a means of getting together that we may more effectively promote the growth in Spirit and perhaps in numbers, of our branch of the Christian Church, to the end that the Society of Friends may come to fill more nearly the place which its true Christian principles entitle it to fill.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

The Yearly Meeting convened on Eighth month 6th this year, one day later than usual. This change was made last year to suit the convenience of Friends coming from remote parts of the Yearly Meeting. The sessions were held in the new, commodious meeting house at Guilford College. The beautiful college campus, enclosed by the many attractive college buildings, furnished a fit setting for the Yearly Meeting.

The attendance, especially of young people, was somewhat larger than usual. The number of persons present on First-day was record breaking and the order exceptionally good. The visiting ministers present with minutes were William M. Smith, Payten Cox, Elizabeth Bunday and Lorena R. Hoskins. Dr. W. O. Mendenhall of Earlham College was present without a minute. Timothy Nicholson and Thomas E. Jones, together with a few other visiting Friends, were also gladly welcomed.

A dominant feature of the Yearly Meeting was an enlarged interest in the work of Friends the world over and a desire to contribute our part in the extension of the Kingdom of Heaven. The London Epistle sounded a keynote in this respect. The terrible conflict in Europe aroused the sympathy of the meeting for those upon whom the burdens of war rest with the greatest severity. The report of the Committee on Peace and Arbitration elicited unusual interest, and the meeting was reminded that at this time Friends should be diligent in bearing testimony against war. The sympathy of the meeting was drawn out toward President Woodrow Wilson in his bereavement, and a message of love and condolence was sent to him.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee presented a very comprehensive and encouraging report. There have been over 600 conversions the past year, 444 of which number joined Friends. Four new meeting houses have been built during the year. There are now 67 congregations, both monthly and particular meetings, within the Yearly Meeting. The subscriptions and appropriations for evangelistic work the coming year were largely increased and it is hoped that an evangelistic superintendent will soon be placed in the field. There has been a substantial increase in membership, the statistical secretary reporting a net gain of 356, the present membership being 7961. This is a gain of 574 over figures given last year.

A concern arose in the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight that all meetings have adequate pastoral care. As a result of this concern a paper commending some form of pastoral system to all monthly meetings was endorsed by the Yearly Meeting. The meeting thus put itself clearly on record as favoring a pastoral system, recognizing, however, the position Friends have ever held as to the "priesthood of believers."

One very encouraging feature of the Yearly Meeting was the fact that all of the Quarterly Meetings have paid up their assessments in full. The financial condition of the Yearly Meeting was never before so good. The treasurer of the Trust Funds reported the total amount of the funds this year as about $20,000, in addition to the Orphanage Fund of $10,000 and the Tripp Fund of $10,000.

The temperance report aroused some interest and a resolution urging Congress to pass a national prohibitory law was unanimously adopted.

The Committee on Foreign Missions reported that in most sections of the Yearly Meeting interest in foreign missions is on the increase. The total amount given for missions this year, through the hands of the American Friends Board and otherwise, is considerably over $2,000. A number of young persons give evidence of a call to foreign mission work.

Considerable interest was aroused in Bible School work and the need of better equipment urged. The Bible School literature now being gotten out by the Friends Publishing Board was commended to all schools in the Yearly Meeting.

The educational interests of the Yearly Meeting were carefully considered. Guilford College has had a very successful year. The number of students was larger than ever before, and the graduating class of 31 the largest in the history of the institution. The college endowment is $180,000 at present. At the suggestion and as a result of the earnest appeal of President Hobbs it is probable that efforts will be put forth at an early date to increase the endowment to $200,000. Blue Ridge Academy, formerly known as Blue Ridge Mission, has done excellent work the past year under the supervision of Cary Branson, principal.

The presence and services of Thomas Jones were very much appreciated, especially by the younger Friends. The Young Friends' Association and the Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union were merged into one organization, the name to be chosen later. Fred Smith was elected president. There is a bright prospect for a more general enlistment of the young people in the work of the Yearly Meeting the coming year.

On the whole, we feel that our annual gathering was the consummation of a very successful year's work and the beginning of still greater achievements in the service of our one Lord and Master.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Loving Word for the Watchmen

As a member of the Friends' Church by birth, and later by deliberate choice; as a careful student of denominational and general church history, and as a soul saved by grace through the faith, "once for all delivered to the saints," I feel the burden of a living, loving message for the church of my choice.

Every generation since the apostles, bears witness to the truth that times of awakening among God's people are times of danger. Not that such times are not necessary for the continued life of the church, but that they are the occasion of the enemy's most subtle temptations.

No one, perhaps, regrets the recent awakening of the different denominations to the obligation of greater activity; but is it not possible that this very awakening may be Satan's opportunity for suggesting forms of activity and means for promoting them which would result in diverting the attention of a large part of the church from the great purpose of the church's existence, and in the needless multiplication of new and untried machinery instead of a revitalizing of that which had proved thoroughly effective in the hands of God?

No one, perhaps, regrets that there is a strong demand for a better qualified ministry of the Word; but who will say that there is not need of watching against ideals of qualification which have no foundation in the letter or the spirit of the Gospel? Or, who will say that the church needs not guard with as great vigilance as in any period of her history, against improper means of realizing or of enforcing her ideals?

Of this last point I wish to speak especially. Friends who are observing the progress of events, know full well that the rationalism of Germany has quite revolutionized the religious thought of many scholars in England and America, and has been popularized under the pretentious name of the New Theology. They know also its arrogant claim of all the world's best scholarship, and its contemptuous treatment of the evangelical faith as an outgrown tradition no longer to be received as truth.

They know something of the havoc it has wrought and the shipwrecks it has made in American universities and colleges, and that it has ensconced itself in a number of theological seminaries and in avowedly orthodox pulpits.

They know, too, that it is radically and irreconcilably opposed to the Christian doctrine of the plenary inspiration and the Divine authority of the Bible; to the miraculous conception of our Lord; to the vicarious atonement as redemptive and propitiatory; to the Bible doctrine of sin and its punishment; to the supernatural and instantaneous character of regeneration; in short, to that splendid and effective system of belief which rests upon acceptance of the Holy Scriptures as the God-given and reliable presentation of religious truth to a fallen world.

Convinced that these statements will not be called in question by any fair-minded Friend who is aware of existing conditions, I earnestly question the readers of this article, Is it not the paramount duty of the Friends' Church, a strongly evangelical body, to guard against the inculcation of these radical errors in our schools and churches? If our college graduates seek to prepare for the ministry in training schools and seminaries of other denominations, is it not our duty to recommend to them such institutions and only such, as adhere firmly to the evangelical faith?

In the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND a few months ago, appeared an unqualified recommendation of a certain eastern seminary, in which fifteen young Friends were last year preparing for Christian work. The equipment of the institution was spoken of in the highest terms. Had the writer assured himself that the teaching in that institution is uncompromisingly evangelical? He is not the only Friend who has recommended that particular school. Have they all assured themselves that those who attend will not have their faith shaken and their ministry made unfruitful by the inculcation of doctrinal error?

I submit these questions in the hope that they will help the counsellors of precious seekers for the highest excellence as religious teachers, to guard them as far as possible against the delusive errors which in our day threaten the very life of the church.

If the several training schools conducted by consecrated members of our own denomination, and in full accord with its doctrinal standards, are not adequate for our membership, and if the church cannot meet the need, there are seminaries which are carefully guarded against the errors here noted. Though these are mostly Calvinistic in doctrine, it is much easier for a young Friend to guard himself against the well defined extremes of Calvinism than against the subtle, insidious, pretentious claims of the disguised infidelity of which I have given a partial description.

Miscellaneous

From the New York Bible Society we learn that 338,000 volumes of Scripture were distributed during the last fiscal year from its various agencies. It reports that here are 1,927,713 foreign born citizens in New York City alone as against 1,260,918 in 1900.

It is announced that the next biennial convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America will be held on the million dollar pier at Atlantic City, July 6-10, 1915. It is thought that this will be the largest gathering of temperance forces in the world's history. Announcement is made that 30,000 delegates are expected.

The Lincoln-Lee Legion Department of the Anti-Saloon League of America, with headquarters at Westerville, Ohio, is offering free supplies to Sabbath Schools for the observance of World's Temperance Sunday, November 8th. Schools are requested to make their order early, as last year more than 1,000 Schools sent in their orders too late to be filled.

The General Conference of Christian Workers, presided over by William R. Moody, is in session this month at Northfield. Hundreds of ministers, Y. M. C. A. men, Social Service Workers and Laymen interested in various fields of Christian activity are in attendance. Some of the most eminent religious instructors and preachers in the world are on the program.

A cablegram from Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, announces that in spite of the European war the Church Peace Conference met at Constance on the border between Germany and Switzerland, August 2. Thirteen nations and thirty-five different denominations were represented. Many delegates were not able to reach the seat of the conference. About fifty American delegates were present. The American delegates left Constance August 3d by the last train to Holland and upon arrival in London on Tuesday night reassembled there in conference. Resolutions were adopted and sent to the European rulers and to President Wilson.

A bird's song may be learned above the home of tears, but not a saint's song. We have to learn to sing by not being able to sing. Sorrow is the saints' singing-master—the large, unselfish sorrow of a heart loyal to God amid the harsh and alien tongues of the world's wickedness and all the strangeness of the land.—Percy C. Ainsworth.

What light and glory ever fall upon the darkest day when the heart is assured of the certainty of the ultimate manifestation and vindication of its beloved Lord! This certainty the apostle shows is based upon a personal relationship to Him.—Campbell Morgan.

THE HIGHER LIFE

"MY LORD AND I"

I have a Friend so precious,
So very dear to me!
He loves me with such tenderness,
He loves so faithfully;
I could not live apart from Him,
I love to feel Him nigh;
And so we dwell together,
My Lord and I.

Helping the Troubled

This world has no remedy for a troubled heart. It has a great deal to offer the strong and well. It lures by a thousand pleasures. When the sun is shining on our way it offers on every hand the things which make life a comfort and desire. But it does not even offer to comfort a troubled heart, or tell us where it may be found. Men have found remedies for physical disease and pain, but not all the herbs by the brooks nor all the minerals of earth can furnish a remedy for the trouble which comes to the human heart. A man may plunge into business or pleasure, or build around him a wall of stoical philosophy, to shut out man and God, but the trouble remains just the same. This world has no balm for the wounded soul, nor refuge for a troubled heart. The weary dove in the time of the Deluge flew north, and it was all water; and south and east and west, and it was all water, in which tossed the carcasses of a dead world, and the first solid thing the dove's feet touched upon was the window of the ark. The soul of man in trouble goes out in one direction and another seeking rest, but never finds it till it comes at last to the Rock which lifts itself above every storm, and there it finds rest.

Heinrich Heine said the Bible is the medicine-chest of suffering humanity. Christ offers a remedy for the troubled heart, so simple that it is within the reach of all, so sure that never once has it failed to put strength and quiet into the heart. Jesus knew what it was to have his heart troubled, and out of his own experience he is able to comfort us. In this remedy which Jesus offers he begins with God—"Ye believe in God, and ye believe in me." He who believes in God really and truly must believe in Jesus. The man who does not believe in Jesus can not believe thoroughly in God. Let there be right conceptions of God and right relations to God, and everything else will be right in a man's life. Let us believe in God as a child believes in his father. He can not analyze the character of his father, but he believes in him, and trusts in him. There is nothing in a child that is grander than its faith. It goes through childhood believing and trusting, and it is when like a child we put our hand by faith in our Father's hand and are led by him that we are free from the troubled heart.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

The Atonement.

Some have thought that the poet Cowper's religion was to blame for his melancholy. Quite the opposite was the case. His first great attack occurred when, by his own account, he was utterly irreligious. The recovery came with his first sight in Scripture of the Divine mercy in Christ. "The happy period," he wrote, "which was to afford me a clear opening of the free mercy of God in Christ Jesus, was now arrived. I flung myself into a chair, near the window, and seeing a Bible there ventured once more to apply to it for comfort and instruction. The first verse I saw was, 'Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood to declare His righteousness.' Immediately I received strength to believe it, and the full beams of the Sun of Righteousness shone upon me. I saw the sufficiency of the atonement He had made, my pardon sealed in His blood, and all the fullness and completeness of His justification. Unless the Almighty arm had been under me I think I should have died with gratitude and joy.

—Friends' Witness.

Christ With Us

Those who have been conscious of the spiritual presence of Christ have received peace and comfort and instruction and strength from that fellowship. Those hours are the rare privileges of our lives when we are our best. His presence is the secret of a noble character. From the lower ranks of society He took men and women and developed in them a beauty of character that has been the marvel of the world. They would have remained ordinary people but for the fact that He came into their lives. His presence will consecrate the common tasks we do. It takes away the fretfulness and monotony, and puts within us a new interest and a new joy in our work. His presence will inspire and strengthen us in Christian service. We shall have no courage and skill to preach or teach or serve unless we are confident that He is near to supply wisdom and tact and energy. The ideal Christian life in this world is to have Christ with us.—United Presbyterian.

DWELL DEEP

Dwell deep! The little things that chafe and fret.

Oh, waste not golden hours to give them heed!

The slight, the thoughtless wrong, do thou forget;

Be self forgot in serving others' need.

Thou faith in God through love for man shalt keep—

Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!

Dwell deep! Forego the pleasure if it bring

Neglect of duty; consecrate each thought;

Believe thou in the good of everything,

And trust that all unto the wisest end is wrought.

Bring thou this comfort unto all who weep;

Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!

The Winona Young Friends' Conference

BY VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

Among the many Friends' Conferences held throughout the world, the most comprehensive in its representation is the annual Conference of Young Friends at Winona Lake, Indiana. The fifth of these was held the last week in July, and in every respect the largest and most influential in its scope and results that has yet been held. In fact, it was one of the most significant gatherings of Young Friends in the history of the Society. Friends from all parts of the United States, and from other countries, representing widely different ideals and problems, met together in a veritable melting pot, where the spirit of Christ fused all into a unity of purpose and consecration. Such a report as this can give but a very inadequate impression since the spirit and influence of such an occasion transcend the limitations of words and phrases. Yet some report should be of interest to all Friends the world over, since here is being brought to a focus those new forces of energy and streams of awakened life that are now growing among the Young Friends of the world.

The Conference enrolled about one hundred and seventy-five delegates, representing every Yearly Meeting in the United States excepting California, Ohio and North Carolina, while representatives were present from Canada, England, Ireland, Australia and Mexico. The leaders and speakers on the arranged program were Charles Woodman, of Portland, Maine; Esther Balderston, of Ridgeway, Pennsylvania; William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie, New York; Ellison R. Purdy, of Wilmington, Ohio; Willard O. Trueblood, W. O. Mendenhall, Thomas E. Jones, Edith Hunt and Vincent Nicholson, of Indiana; Herman Newman, of Chicago, and Robert Davis, Raymond Whitwell, Sylvia Marriage and Ethel Crawshaw, of England.

Each day was brimming over with good things for body, mind and soul. A high level for the day was attained in the several before-breakfast prayer groups. The morning program began with a short devotional period; was continued through three periods of classes and closed with an open forum in which all came together to discuss vital phases of our denominational life and work. In the afternoon, sport, recreation and rest held complete sway, and all came together refreshed for the evening address. Preceding this evening meeting was a short vesper service on the lake shore, when the beauty of the setting sun across the lake brought to us the spirit of the Psalmist who wrote that "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork."

The class work covered in its scope four distinct fields—Bible study, mission study, methods of religious work and studies in Quakerism. Four or five classes were offered in each period, giving a wide selection of both subjects and leaders. The Bible classes were led by Charles Woodman and Robert Davis, and it was felt to be no mere coincidence that each had chosen certain phases of the personality and mission of Christ as the subject matter of his course. Since practically all were enrolled in some Bible class, the whole conference was brought to a more intimate and efficient knowledge of the historic Christ, and into a very real fellowship with Him as a present living Savior and Friend. The reality of this experience of God revealed through Christ was one of the characterizing features of the week.

The mission study included a course in "Immigrant Forces," led by Edith Hunt; a study of "The Light of the World," led by Esther Balderston, and a normal course in methods of mission study under Raymond Whitwell. Under methods of religious work the following courses were given: A class in "Personal Work" and another in "Teacher Training," by Orville Mendenhall; "Work with Adolescents," by William J. Sayers, and "Methods of Work with Young People," with especial reference to Christian Endeavor and Quaker study classes, by Willard O. Trueblood and Thomas Jones. There were two classes in the study of Quakerism, one by Herman Newman on the "Message, Mission and Problems" of Friends; the other by Sylvia Marriage and Ethel Crawshaw on Friends' History.

The open forum was an innovation this year and well justified its introduction. It was a clearing-house for all stray ideas that did not find expression elsewhere, limited however, to the special subjects introduced each day. Thomas E. Jones had charge of this phase of the program. The following subjects were considered: "A Bird's-Eye View of the Society the World Over," opened by Robert Davis, James Douglas, Margaret Thorpe and Thomas E. Jones; "The Essential Message of Quakerism," opened by Vincent D.

Nicholson; "The Place of Silence in Public Worship," opened by James Douglas; "The Best Methods of Performing our Distinctive Mission Through the Pastoral System," opened by Ellison R. Purdy, and "Social Service and Foreign Missions," opened by Herman Newman and Esther Balderston.

The first two evening addresses were given by Ellison R. Purdy and the last two by Charles Woodman. The theme of each one had to do with a more spiritual conception of the whole of life, and with a more definite consecration of all energies to the service of Christ. Each was of unusual inspirational value and contributed much to the spirit of the Conference. Charles Woodman's second address was a magnificent appeal for religious service as a life work. Friday evening was "stunt night," when staid Quakers of all sections threw to the winds all dignity and reserve and let their ingenuity as humorists run wild. After the usual steamer ride around the lake, all climbed to Indian Hill, where each Yearly Meeting delegation in the light of the campfire entertained the others in turn. On Sunday evening the Christian Endeavor meeting was led by Vincent D. Nicholson. The last session on Tuesday evening was the usual purpose meeting when the richness of spiritual life that had been growing with each individual throughout the week found expression in some fresh definite consecration. The spoken expressions in which so many took part were but a slight indication of the depth of spiritual power that dominated the meeting, and that brought every one very close in sympathy with one another and with God.

One of the most noticeable features of the Conference was the unusual harmony of spirit and unity of purpose that prevailed. Friends from many sections with a widely differing heritage of ideals, holding many opposing ideas, and facing many different problems and conditions of life, met on a plane of the warmest mutual sympathy. Out of the interchange of ideals the clash of opposing ideas, the acquisition of broader knowledge and new points of view and above all, the fusion of personality, there was developed the distinctive Winona spirit that tended to bless and broaden and uplift all who came under its influence. There was demonstrated very clearly the fact that there can be a great life-giving, power-developing unity in the Spirit, even with great lack of uniformity in intellectual conceptions.

A report would be incomplete without special mention of the sport and fellowship that contributed so largely to the enjoyment of the week. The mental and spiritual demands of such a week make necessary times of recreation and sport and fun to give proper balance to the Conference. Tennis, boating, bathing, fishing and long walks furnished a variety that appealed to the sporting instincts of every one. Kosciusko Lodge, located on the lake shore in a beautiful grove, somewhat apart from the main section of the grounds, with many exclusive features, is an ideal place for such a gathering. The fact that all lived at this one hotel and all meetings and classes were held there made possible the rarest kind of good fellowship. This fellowship, which found its basis in common purposes and interests and which was nourished by the fellowship of each with Christ as the center of spiritual life, was the one great characterizing feature of the Conference.

"A mountain top experience" was the term so frequently applied to the Conference by those in attendance. It was indeed a time when the din and turmoil of life's duties and the perplexing cloud of life's problems were far away. In a clearer, purer air God's voice could be better heard and His face more clearly seen, and all of life could be better viewed in the light of the eternal perspective. As Charles Woodman expressed it on the closing evening, we had drawn apart from our tasks as a painter draws away from the canvas, and just as the painter in the light of the broader perspective goes back able to put the additional touches where needed, so we return to our tasks able to render more effective service.

A NEW FRIENDS' MISSION

(Tegucigalpa, Honduras, C. A.)

Less than two months ago, wife, babe and I entered this picturesque, but very isolated and Romish Capital City to open a new Mission Center under the auspices of California Friends' Church. Nearly five years' experience in Guatemala prepared us measureably for the strange conditions here. While this city has its National Institute with some thirty professors and about two hundred and fifty male students pursuing its five-years course, and an advanced (?) school for young ladies, and numerous minor schools of all grades, with a compulsory education that hales the urchins from the streets, yet the shadows of Catholicism brood like a nightmare over it, and until the duped and fanatical elderly dames enter finally the "Campo Santo," Rome will be able to keep a loosening grip upon a people reaching and grasping after the straws of literature and science in vain for light and salvation.

This is a double little city, nestled in a desert of mountains, divided by the head-waters of the Rio Grande, or Choluteca, which circles off to the north, north-east, and finally south and south-west into Fonseca Bay, so coveted just now by the United States navy. A handsome stone bridge leads across into Comayaguela, which has had an Evangelical Mission for just one year previous to our coming. Tegucigalpa claims about 20,000, and Comayaguela, 15,000 souls.

Though the city savors and almost smells of Catholicism, the overflowed cemetery appeals to me as the saddest spot of earth that I have ever seen with its hundreds if not thousands of four or five feet black crosses marking the unhappy spots where lie uncounted multitudes who entered there with no better hope than to enter purgatorial pains and flames, until some mercenary priest has compassion enough to pray them out (?). The other day was the burial anniversary of some well-beloved dame, whose relatives placed in the leading daily paper of the city an appeal with forms for three different prayers addressed severally to the Father, and the Son, and to Mary, with the accompanying notices of the customary three hundred days of "Indulgences" for each repetition of said forms, in behalf of the repose of said defunct.

With this as a sample delusion, one is not greatly surprised to find the more intelligent population long incredulous and rebellious against the monstrous and hideous pretensions and impostures of the papacy. Mummeries, tinselry, incense, incantations, the fring of bombs, firecrackers and skyrockets, with the banging of antiquated bells, to express or emphasize prayer, continue to please the Indians and the unlettered masses over whose souls and purses the curas continue to hover like the tropical buzzards watching the tottering and dying beasts of the fields.

With much interest last week the writer attended the first Evangelical funeral of a believer, over whose body were proclaimed in the Comayaguela Mission the comforting and assuring words of the Gospel, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," etc., and "They rest from their labors," etc.

Thanks be unto God, there are here and there some who do not bow to Baal; some simple and hungry hearts who, groping in the darkness, hunger for Him who is the only Light that can dispel such gloom. It is a privilege to seek out these, and a great delight to find them like gems amid priestly rubbish.

Yesterday we received the cut material of white pine for our Mission Room furniture. This morning as usual on Sabbath days, I gave out two cargoes of Evangelical literature, which, as a rule, is received with thanks. A few women and but one man, have refused to receive what the "Instituto's" students almost mobbed me to get. Today five or six young priests have the opportunity to read the greater part of the "Sermon on the Mount," if their preceptor does not deny it to them. From their press we are daily expecting a torrent of misrepresentations and abuse. Since we look for it we shall not be greatly shocked.

It seems passing strange that while Rome seems losing her grip in these lands, she should be getting a new lease of life and influence in the States and in England. To missionaries in Central and South America, it seems almost incredible that the World's Conference on Missions should have taken the apologetic position it did at Edinburgh toward this monstrous and iniquitous religious system.

We thank God there are some who are able to see and proclaim the fact that Romanism is a blasphemous power, having usurped the very throne of God and claimed the attributes and infallibility of heaven. Our lukewarm orthodoxy is no match for its unequalled system of state-craft and priest-craft.

Eleven years ago this coming November, Clark J. Buckley, from our Training School for Christian Workers, then in Boyle Heights, Los Angeles, now in Huntington Park, lay down by a mountain path in the Department of Copan in western Honduras, and died as a Bible colporteur, full of faith, good works and prayers in behalf of this people. We deem it a happy privilege to step into the ranks he died praying for, that this people may be able to find God, "Whom to know aright is life everlasting." May the Lord of the harvest burden hearts for the half million souls of Honduras among whom are but less than a dozen active missionaries.

PERSONAL MENTION

E. J. Carter will terminate his pastorate at Plainfield at the close of the approaching Western Yearly Meeting.

Professor William L. Pearson, of Friends' University at Wichita, Kansas, after attending California Yearly Meeting accompanied by his wife, has been making a protracted stay among Friends in California.

Charles S. Dudley, of Portland, Indiana, has accepted a call to the meeting at Jonesboro, Indiana, to serve as pastor the coming year. He takes the place of Fred Carter, who will probably go to Fairmount, Indiana.

Willis Bond, who has served the meeting at Danville, Indiana, as pastor for several years, has accepted a call to the meeting at Knightstown, Indiana, where he will move with his family some time during September.

Fred H. Tormohlen, pastor Friends' Meeting at Van Wert, Ohio, has been given a unanimous call by the congregation to remain as their pastor for another year with an increase in support of two hundred dollars. This meeting is in good healthy condition.

George H. Moore, clerk of Western Yearly Meeting, who has been serving as pastor of the meeting at Westfield, Indiana, for some years, and who has been ill most of the summer, underwent surgical treatment at a sanitarium recently which has brought him great relief. He has taken up his work again and is regaining his health and strength. His work closes at Westfield with the current pastoral year.

Alexander C. Purdy together with his bride, Jeanette H. Purdy, went to Marburg, Germany, in June, for a year's study. On August 12th, Mr. Purdy's father, Ellison R. Purdy, of Wilmington, Ohio, received a telegram from Secretary of State, W. J. Bryan, as follows: "Consul Hamburg cables Mr. and Mrs. Purdy safe in Hamburg; need money." Inasmuch as Mr. Purdy had taken with him sufficient funds for several months, which were deposited in a bank at Marburg, there is a manifest indication of the disturbing effect of this unholy war upon the financial system of the world. Ellison R. Purdy took steps immediately to supply their wants. It will be a pleasure to their many friends to know that Alexander Purdy and wife are safe.

NEWS ITEMS

We learn from the Winchester, Indiana, Daily News that on August 10, the Friends' baseball club engaged in a game with the Methodist nine, the result being seven to one in favor of the Friends.

The Los Angeles, California, Express of July 25th has a two column width photograph of Absalom Rosenberger, together with a well prepared statement of the principles of the Society of Friends, prepared by Mr. Rosenberger.

During the vacation period of W. O. Trueblood, pastor of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, the pulpit is being ably filled. Edward Woodward, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, preached on August 2, and Vincent D. Nicholson on the 9th. Simon Hester was announced for August 16th. The Thursday evening prayer meetings are in charge of the different Bible classes of the Sunday School, each class conducting a service in its individual way.

The sixth annual reunion of Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held at Celina, Ohio, August 12th. It was an ideal day and the attendance was the largest in the history of the reunion, all meetings being represented. Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, General Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, was present, as were also Tennyson Lewis and family, from Portland, Indiana, and George W. Bird and wife from Pennville, Indiana. An excellent program was rendered and all enjoyed the bountiful dinner together at the noon hour, which was served in the large tabernacle on the Chautauqua grounds. It was unanimously decided to plan for another reunion next year, the time and place to be decided later by the Executive Committee.

AT MT. GILEAD, OHIO

Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Gilead Friends' Church July 25-26, 1914. The Doctors George and Isabelle DeVöl, returned missionaries from Luh Hoh, China, were present. Their messages were much used of the Lord to arouse a greater interest in missionary labors on the home field.

An added feature at this time was the re-dedication of the local church building, which had been remodeled at an expense of a thousand dollars. It has been vastly improved by adding a basement for primary class work in the Bible School, also an inside toilet, furnace, paint, paper, and grading of lawn, which gives Friends at this place one of the finest sites for church property in all the yearly meeting. The dedication service was conducted by the pastor, George E. Kent, the dedicatory sermon and prayer being given by William Kirby, of Columbus, Ohio. The attendance was very large and the Spirit's presence was very manifest in the sweet spirit of unity, in the unction upon the messages and in the salvation of souls at the altar. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Sullivant Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

DEDICATING WESTERN YEARLY MEETING HOUSE

The dedicatory services of the new Western Yearly Meeting House at Plainfield are announced to be held on September 19 and 20, 1914; this will be during the sessions of Yearly Meeting. The personal attendance or greetings of any who may have belonged to or attended Western Yearly Meeting from 1858 to 1868 inclusive, is cordially solicited. Any such correspondence should be addressed to John Kendall, Mooresville, Indiana, Chairman Promotion Committee. An important program is being prepared which will be announced next week. These two days of the coming Yearly Meeting will be of extraordinary interest.

THE EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

As the every member canvass is a new and untried thing to a great many, we thought it might interest the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to hear from Ackworth Monthly Meeting, Iowa, in regard to the work done along this line. To us for some time the financial question has been a problem, so it was decided to see what could be done by this plan. The duplex envelopes were purchased, preparatory to the canvass, and the work was entered into with prayer.

There were ten canvassers chosen who went out by twos on an afternoon. The canvassers were kindly received and the work met with the approval and co-operation of the people. The result was that nearly $600.00 was pledged to be paid weekly or quarterly as the one who pledged it desired. We feel greatly encouraged and are looking forward toward securing a pastor for the coming year and hope to meet our obligations promptly. We believe those who gave so willingly will be blessed by giving into the Lord's treasury, and the canvassers expressed themselves as receiving a blessing in going out and using their time and talent in the Lord's work.

Ask your neighbor to subscribe for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. $1.50 per year.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

August 30

Subject—A Day of Questions.

Lesson—Matthew 22: 15-22.

Golden Text—Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.—Matthew 22: 21.

Time—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 30.

Place—Courts of the Temple at Jerusalem.

This was the last day of Jesus' public teaching, and a considerable part of the book of Mathew is devoted to this one day, so full was it of instruction and remarkable events.

The enmity of the Pharisees had now reached its climax. Being joined by the Herodians, they resorted to despicable tactics to find a basis of accusation against Jesus. Failing by direct means, they resort to indirect methods and send some of their best scholars to Jesus with technical and knotty questions, hoping to trap Him into making statements that would either stir the Jews to fury against Him, or else turn upon Him the wrath of the Romans.

See how skillfully the snare is set. They begin by paying Jesus a compliment. But their reckoning was foolish. They had failed to see and understand the fact that they were dealing with the Son of God.

Their questioning in this particular lesson concerned governmental loyalty. "Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar?" If he answered yes, the Jews would turn upon Him in their fury. If he answered no, then He would be the victim of Roman anger.

Not only did Jesus' answer confound his questioners, but it represented the very essence of truth, and revealed the ideal attitude which all men must sustain to government and to their God. Had Jesus pressed His answer He might easily have confounded the Pharisees and the Jews generally who hoped for freedom from the Roman yoke.

Read Matthew 21: 23-46 and chapters 22 and 23, in order to comprehend the many snares which were laid for Jesus, and how skillfully He met them all.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

August 30

Topic—Why and How to Abolish War. Isa. 65: 17-25.

With nearly all of Europe under arms in a bloody strife, the topic is a live one. The answer will not be readily apparent.

The world's commerce is averse to war, but apparently governments will sacrifice their commerce upon occasions in order to avenge fancied wrongs, or defend themselves against attack.

The commercial world has nothing in common with war, but nations will sacrifice millions of money to the impulse of greedy, bloody conflict.

Home interests demand an end to fighting and butchery on the battlefield, but rulers will sacrifice the joys and comforts of the home life of their people, when their policies are disturbed.

It is pretty nearly certain that there is only one guarantee of permanent peace, and that is when the new earth, described in the lesson, becomes a reality.

When the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, we may rest assured that wars and fightings will cease to be. When God's kingdom is established in the hearts of the men and women of earth, then will there be no desire to take the sword.

The Friends' ideal, which is Christ's ideal, is that the human desire and impulse shall be changed by the presence of Christ in every life. While rulers will sacrifice everything material for war, it is quite certain that they will not sacrifice the Christian standard of right when once it has been fully set up in the hearts of men.

OREGON MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

The Ministerial Association of Oregon Yearly Meeting met at Salem, Oregon, July 31st in its first regular meeting. A temporary organization had been made at the recent Yearly Meeting, and plans laid for this gathering. The meeting was opened by a devotional service in which several took part. The remainder of the forenoon session was devoted to business and discussion of future plans. The following officers were elected:

President—Charles O. Whiteley, Newberg, Oregon.

Vice-President—Walter H. Wilson, Springbrook, Oregon.

Secretary-Treasurer—Myrtle M. Russell, Marion, Oregon.

At the afternoon session Homer L. Cox gave a very interesting and timely address on "The Perils of the Ministry," in which he suggested some needed remedies. Discussion of local questions and problems was led by Charles I. Whitlock, in which some helpful advice was given. Several took part in the discussion.

Lindley A. Wells preached the Conference sermon on Thursday evening from II Timothy 2: 15. The message was full of encouragement and instruction. We believe all present felt that they had been uplifted and strengthened, and many received a larger vision of their work and how to meet it.

AUTHORSHIP OF POEM

In a recent issue, THE AMERICAN FRIEND published a poem on the front page entitled, "The Land of Beginning Again." This was credited to the British Weekly. We are glad to have the information from two sources that the author of this poem is Louise Fletcher Tarkington, of Indianapolis, Indiana, and that it was printed originally in the Indianapolis News something like two years ago. We take pleasure in giving credit where it properly belongs.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Friends desiring entertainment at Western Yearly Meeting should correspond with Earnest Heringlake, Plainfield, Indiana, for same. Arrangements are being made by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Plainfield Friends' Church to serve meals in the basement of the church during Yearly Meeting. They will also conduct a lunch counter at the same place. Meals will be served at twenty-five cents.

GO TO CUBA

According to arrangements made by the Foreign Mission Board, Sarah Lindley, who has spent several years in mission work in Mexico, sailed for Banes, Cuba, last week to enter upon missionary work in that place. She was accompanied by Josefa Sanchez and Luisa Guijarro, the two Mexican girls who were in Earlham College last year. They had previously done teaching work at Matehuala, Mexico.

Married

Pletcher-Snavely—At the home of the bride's parents at Harlingen, Texas, July 8, 1914, Jacob Samuel Pletcher to Muriel Velnette Snavely, daughter of John E. and Flora Dixon Snavely.

Scott-Kelly—At the home of the bride's parents at Richmond, Indiana, on the evening of August 13, 1914, Roderick Scott to Agnes R. Kelly, President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College, father of the bride, officiating. The wedding was one of the important social events of Richmond. Mr. Scott was formerly Professor of English in Earlham College. For the past year he has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. missionary work in St. Petersburg, Russia. The bride, who is a graduate of Earlham College, was a teacher in Oakwood Seminary last year. Mr. and Mrs. Scott hope to go to Russia within a few weeks, where Mr. Scott will resume his missionary work.

Died

Birdsall—Phoebe Birdsall, of Poughkeepsie, New York, died at the home of her niece in Rutherford, New Jersey, February 15, 1914. She was a birthright Friend, and for many years an esteemed member and elder of Poughkeepsie Meeting, New York. She is survived by two sisters.

Moore—Orlando H. Moore, son of Thomas J. and Martha A. Moore, was born August 16, 1857, and died near Elizabethtown, Indiana, July 25, 1914. From his birth his physical development was disturbed and retarded so that he was never able to take a place in the general activities of life. But no life is lived in vain nor without its lesson for others. Patiently he endured and filled up the measure of his life with a message to all. We can but rejoice that now he enjoys the unfettered use of all his powers in the congenial atmosphere of heaven.

1913 RECORD Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, at Chicago, Western Canada carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

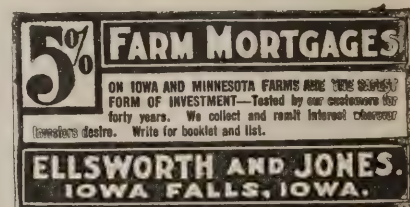

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

Slow Valley Meeting

Quite a number of orders have been received for the proposed booklet of eighty-four pages which would contain the Chronicle of "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which ran through various issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND early in the year. Not enough orders have been secured as yet, however, to justify us in going forward with the publication. We are certain that many Friends are simply neglecting to send in their orders thinking they can purchase later when the booklets are ready. We need to have orders for something like 500 by September 1st, or else the whole project will have to be abandoned.

From the numerous testimonies which have come to this office we are satisfied that the distribution of this booklet among Friends generally will be an inspiration to scores and even hundreds of our meetings. It is an opportunity which Friends should not miss. Please send in your orders at once, indicating how many you will take. Single copy by mail 15 cents, ten copies $1.00, twenty-five copies $2.25.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

The delightful weather contributed not a little to the pleasure of the opening days of the twenty-third annual session of Wilmington Yearly Meeting of Friends.

Gradually new faces appear and new names are written into this chronicle, but so slowly do the changes come that without reflection the Yearly Meeting would seem very much the same from year to year, as it continues in its uplift, an unmistakable uplift that is more readily felt than described.

The foregoing from a local paper announced the opening of what seemed to many to be a Yearly Meeting of unusual power and interest. Convening on the 12th day of August, the earliest possible date, the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight set the pace for the sessions of the week by giving the discussions a practical turn with especial reference to our obligations to the work in Tennessee.

The campaign for a thousand members showed a marked influence upon the meeting. Severe illness and other unavoidable circumstances greatly handicapped the movement as to its leadership, so that fewer than six hundred additions were secured; and yet, the campaign may be regarded as a decided success. There has been a net gain of one hundred and thirty-seven members as against a loss last year. A gain of fifty-five percent. in missionary offerings; forty percent. in offerings for evangelistic work; and thirty-four percent. in total offerings. And our Bible schools have made gains in the following particulars: enrollment, average attendance, money raised, organized classes, teacher training classes; the last named doubling in number.

The special campaign committee was continued for another year.

Owing to impaired health Josephus Hoskins was unable to continue his service as Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral Work, and Amos Cook was appointed to that position. The meeting expressed its appreciation of the long and faithful services of Josephus Hoskins, and also its confidence in his successor.

One of the matters of most interest was the consummation of the transfer of the management of Wilmington College from three Quarterly Meetings to the Yearly Meeting. This transfer, which involved a change from two boards composed in all of twenty-seven members, to a single board of nine trustees, was accomplished in such a spirit of unity and hopefulness that its effect was decidedly felt in all departments of work. The new board of trustees is comprised of the following Friends: John B. Peelle, Rufus Kersey, Laurena Farquhar, Mary E. Bailey, William Hunt, Isaac Johnson, David Dunham, Clayton Terrell and Edwin J. Hiatt.

A large committee was appointed to bring forward to next Yearly Meeting a plan for the special observance of the twenty-fifth session of Wilmington Yearly Meeting in 1916.

The proposal for a Men's conference in the near future was heartily indorsed, and while it was thought that the conference should be free to all men, and composed largely of those who go at their own volition, or who might be sent by subordinate meetings, two representatives, Edgar Stinson and H. Alvin Coate, were appointed by the Yearly Meeting. The matters of reform in our financial methods, and of some plan for providing a home or endowment for needy ministers or other members, were put over for consideration another year.

Jesse Hawkins, Albert J. Brown and Ada Brown were appointed as delegates to the opening of the new yearly meeting house during the sessions of Western Yearly Meeting. A minute to attend London Yearly Meeting was granted to Alexander and Jeannette Purdy, now in Germany. Richard Greene, who has

What Are We to Learn from the Conflict?

It was inevitable perhaps that there should be another violent European strife. The various countries have been expecting it; in fact, have been prophesying it, and the maintenance of their armed camps at tremendous cost is proof of the fact that they have been preparing for it. While professing international friendships and protesting any purpose to engage in war, their distrust of one another has overshadowed all their endeavors for peace, and they are now reaping the harvest. Well may the whole world be asking the question if we have reached the collapse of civilization.

As stated before in these columns, the fact that the warring nations were prepared for war has made it far easier to conclude that there had arisen an occasion for armed conflict. There seems to be no hope of lasting and permanent peace, until by a series of international agreements, the nations of the earth will agree to disband their armies, and in the spirit of common brotherhood, rely upon an international system of jurisprudence to settle their differences.

Possibly the world is yet far from the realization of that ideal. Certainly it is only by the infusion of Divine truth into national life that we may hope for its accomplishment. It will only be by the Christianizing of the social order in every country that each and all will come to recognize the universality of God's law of justice between nations. The world's peace propagandists must needs turn their attention to the doctrines of the Prince of Peace as the only sure hope of world pacification. The pacifists of every land must become wielders of the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

The causes of the present war are not at present so important, except as they indicate that Europe has sown to the wind, and is now reaping the whirlwind. Perhaps responsibility lies with each nation alike. God grant that America be not caught in the maelstrom of world ambitions that must needs lead to bloody strife to gain its ends! And yet we find an American newspaper, already widely quoted, raising the danger signals that call for an increased navy, in order to protect American commerce from the greed of a British and Japanese coalition, whose purpose, in the opinion of the editor, is to control the commerce of both hemispheres.

Thus at a time when America should be exalted as the Apostle of Peace, do we have presented in our own midst the hostile picture of America in competition with Britain and the subjects of the Mikado, and we are warned that henceforth we must guard our interests zealously against these aggressors in the field of international trade. It is the sowing of the dragon's teeth that will insure a crop of discord.

For years Europe has been warned that Emperor William had designs upon the peace of the continent, both for the sake of personal and commercial ambition. Russia has been pictured in the role of the cautious but greedy assassin, lying in wait, watching for the coveted opportunity to add to her domains. France has been described as revengeful, waiting for a chance to strike in behalf of the restoration of her beloved Alsace-Lorraine. England, mistress of the seas, a sort of police patrol among the nations in order that the equilibrium of the continent be not disturbed, at least adversely to her own interests, has been more or less distrusted by all, who have been taught to believe that her every movement has not been altogether of a disinterested sort. Austria has been educated to believe that inevitably the Teuton and Slav must have recourse to arms to determine the problem of supremacy, while Slavs, ambitious and clannish, have had it bred into their beings from childhood that they will never submit to national slavery.

Thus have the seeds of discord been sown for generations. God grant that America shall not become the plowed field of jealous rivalry for the sowing of the seeds of envy! There can only be one sort of harvest from such a cultivation, and that is the harvest of slain sons and devastated homes, wherein a nation must put on the garments of mourning. America is not an enemy to any people. She, as no other can do it, has the opportunity of the ages to bear aloft the torch of human liberty that will call all men to the ideal of universal brotherhood.

It is no time to be giving ourselves to the seeing of bogies or to the following of the red flag of the jingo. America needs to teach and practise the altruis-tic and the ethical in all the manifold life of her social order, as she has never done before. Europe will find no deliverance from her sea of suspicion and discord, except as she is led into a realm of new ideals. America, not as a superior, but as a brother to all, is in position now as never before to command the confidence and trust of every civilized people, and because of this, is able to lead all to a higher destiny. Therein lies our opportunity, both for the sake of our own prosperity and perpetuity and for the sake of civilization everywhere. Let every hand be palsied that would point the way to aught else at this time of crises in the affairs of the world.

Christian Optimism

BY WILLIAM P. TRUEBLOOD

The Christian ought to be an optimist. The man who believes that righteousness shall cover the earth and that swords shall be beaten into plowshares, can not be otherwise. It is difficult not to be swept away with the tide. This is a day for sensational catch words and phrases in religion, politics and social life. We are not content to listen to calm reasoning but must be appealed to by the sensational or the grotesque. Not our emotions but our emotionalism must be stirred.

We forget that we are living in the scientific age. Every thing is subjected to the scientific method. History, philosophy and religion must pass under the microscope of the scientist and be judged by the results of scientific analysis. The intellectual is the great progressive agent of the world. The moral may be the balance wheel of society. The religious may be the gas that furnishes the motive power that impels the onward movements of the world, but the intellectual is the great modifying, analyzing, readjusting progressive agent of society.

That law governs the physical world is now generally accepted, though of recent date. That law governs the religious world is a theory still in its youth. That law governs the social world is a theory in its swaddling clothes. That God had a plan in the beginning there is little doubt. That there has been one continual and continued line of progress there can be no doubt. The stream is occasionally clogged and diverted from a straight line, but it passes by the obstacle and moves on.

Religion seems to be intuitive with man. The kind and form is always adapted to the stage of human progress. With the savage we would expect a crude but a pure and simple one; with the barbarian a more elaborate form mixed with those abominable practices which are in keeping with his stage of progress.

In God's economy the religious nature of man must be developed, so all the various forms of religion have served their purpose in the world. Some type of religion was essential to human progress. The higher the type of civilization the higher the type of religion. Whether the religion produces the civilization or the reverse may be a debatable question. A people must have advanced in civilization before it can appreciate a high type of religion.

The Christian religion is the highest type that has yet been introduced into the world. All preceding religions were forerunners and prepared the way.

Again a high form of civilization must be developed before man could begin to appreciate the ideas and ideals of Christianity. As the world advances in learning and civilization we must expect Christianity to keep pace with those advances, otherwise it would be cast aside as having outlived its usefulness. The ability of Christianity to adapt itself to the growing needs of society is proof of its greatness.

In these days when we do things in decades that formerly occupied thousands of years we wonder why God was so slow in sending His Son. Out of the chaos and corruption of the past it was necessary to develop the beautiful language and religion and philosophy of the Greeks; the language as a receptacle for the New Testament; the religion to prepare him for the still more beautiful in Christianity; and the philosophy to serve as a transition of thought from pagan to a Christian philosophy.

Ever since Christ came great battles have been raging. Conflict seems to be a necessary element in human development. Great conflicts between paganism and Christianity have been fought and won and the best has prevailed. Great battles between science and religion have been fierce, but the best in both have prevailed. There is no longer any thought of conflict between the two by intelligent people. There has been great strife between a selfish and corrupt Christian priesthood and the simple, plain gospel and the latter prevailed.

Battles will still go on and out of the smoke and noise of conflict we will get clearer and better views of Christ's ideas and ideals. Whether engaged in the conflict or looking on from the sidelines we should be happy Christian optimists. A rational religion is in itself a contradiction. The supernatural will always be a dominant feature and principle in Christianity. Let the battles go on. It is a sign of life and vigor. The contests are stimulating. The outcome will be a more intelligent view of things. The "Old Book," fairly interpreted, will outlive the shock of battle. Christ's ideas and ideals will send their roots deeper into the hearts and lives of the people.

Wichita, Kansas.

We cannot look around us without being struck by the surprising variety and multiplicity of the sources of beauty of creation produced by form or by color, or by both united.—MacCulloch.

THE HIGHER LIFE

How oft a gleam of glory sent
Straight through the deepest, darkest night,
Has filled the soul with heavenly light,
With holy peace and sweet content.

The Straightforward Path

DEAR FRIENDS—Count nothing little which even in a small degree hinders your usefulness. There is an old saying, "The straw which broke the camel's back." Cast out from the temple of your soul the seats of them that sell doves as well as the sellers of sheep and oxen. "He will never do much for God who has not integrity of spirit." If all Christians were only guided by straightforwardness in all matters, how grand it would be for the church! We must resolve that though we be poor, though we be despised and oppressed by men, yet we must say I cannot do a crooked thing. Let honesty be our best policy.

If you know how to speak kindly to one's face and shake his hand tenderly, and then can speak evil concerning him behind his back, some day people will compare notes and find you out and you will be despised. Let the measure of what you would say to any one be what you would say to his friend or even his enemy. How much have you said or would you say to his face? You must not allow yourselves a word more of censure of any man living. To steal by slander from any one, is worse than to steal his purse. If you think he has gone wrong, then go to him in the spirit of the Master and seek to restore him. Let him know that he who converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins.—E. Scott.

A Spiritual Heritage

A spiritual heritage; whether it be received through godly parents or friends or the church, see that we do not squander it. I may waste money and stocks or bonds and great investments of wealth or treasure that a kind father has turned over to me, and I am left a financial bankrupt and die in poverty. Yet I may not be eternally ruined and lost. But if by backslidings and prodigality, or through open or secret sins a man throws away his mother's Bible and her counsels, his father's tender advice and the blessed counsels of early years, there may follow an eternal bankruptcy of soul, and the very fact known to God and holy men will make the angels tremble and good men weep over the story of the loss of such a soul: gone, gone forever.—E. Scott.

Enoch walked with God because he was his friend and liked his company, because he was going in the same direction as God and had no desire for anything but what lay in God's path. . . . This walking with God necessarily tells on the whole life and character.—Marcus Dods.

Three Things to be Prized

First, Perpetual Peace. If the "Lord of peace himself gives us peace at all times by all means," if his "peace which passeth all understanding guards our hearts and our thoughts," if we are "kept in perfect peace" so long as our minds are stayed in happy trust on him, if we have "peace like a river," and are brought into a place of "broad streams wherein shall go no galley of war," what else remains? "When he giveth peace who then can make trouble?" It is a component part of the birthright of such as let God have all, make a business of their religion, and love Jesus more every day.

Second, Continual Joy. Yes, "songs even in the night" of affliction and distress, bells ringing, bugles blowing, banners waving, and cheers resounding under all circumstances. This is the spirit that says: "Since God is mine I have all things; since Jesus is with me, and nobody and nothing can take him away, what matters all else, I can still smile on in the face of temporal disaster." It is the spirit of him who declared: "For all that befall me, I will thank the love that promotes the gift."

Third, Constant Victory. When men have contended long, put forth great efforts, and triumph at last has rested on their banners, we do not wonder that they are filled with fierce exultation, and vociferously make it manifest. Jesus has never lost a battle, and those who are in close union with him share all his triumphs. They are "more than conquerors" through him, scarce needing to contend at all, seeing the enemy flee without a conflict, hopelessly outnumbered and put to utter rout. Even death is swallowed up in this victory—death and all that it stands for of sorrow and anguish, separation and desolation. We may have victory all along the line, all the time, "through our Lord Jesus Christ, who giveth us the victory."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Be Content

When a man has nothing more to lose; when his hopes are all beyond the grave; when we listen without terror to the ebbings and flowings of the tide of life, and the rush of its storms—then, and after the night, to us, the day will come back, and after the tempest a great calm. We know then, that all our life is guided by Him, so that we find consolation and contentment. And if we have these two things with us, consolation in all our sorrows and contentment in any loss, we have the richest blessings that God can give us.—Frederick Farrar.

"Oft times the heavy tempests round us blow,
And o'er our souls the waves and billows go;
But when the storm beats loudest, and we cry
Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to our soul, 'Lo it is I.'"

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

Whom We Worship

BY FRANK W. DELL

God is a spirit.—John 4: 24.

God is Love.—I John 4: 8.

Man is by instinct religious. This is evident from a universal effort on the part of men and nations to worship a superior being. In many cases the external expression of such worship has become grotesque and vulgar, but this is no evidence of irreligion and only affords proof of a distorted conception of God.

It is indeed possible to determine the prevailing conception of God amongst individuals and nations from a study of their religions. Thus, when the Hindu mother, as a religious rite, casts her babe into the Ganges, we know that her conception of God may be obtained by projecting this very act of cruelty into the realm of the Infinite; and when the follower of Confucius undertakes a painful and laborious pilgrimage to some sacred shrine, we catch a glimpse of a Being whose favor can alone be secured by hardship and penance; and when the follower of Mahomet finds inspiration for a life of fanaticism and cruelty in the Koran's promise of sensual rewards hereafter, we recognize his thought of God to be that of his own personality upon a larger scale. Thus, whilst religion is the visible expression of a universal human instinct to worship a supreme Being, it can necessarily only assume its highest form when there is a true conception of Deity.

It is our present purpose from the texts quoted to present a conception of God capable of producing acceptable worship. To this end we shall discuss briefly the nature (1) of "spirit"; (2) of "love."

Whilst Scripture nowhere directly defines "spirit," a comparison of two statements in Luke 10: 21, and I Thess. 5: 2 respectively, will lead indirectly to the definition we seek. One of them is the "first and great commandment." The other is the prayer of the apostle Paul for the church at Thessalonica. Each of them is evidently inclusive of the whole duty of man to God in the matter of worship. It is therefore possible to establish a spiritual equation or theological identity between their component parts. Thus: HEART, SOUL, STRENGTH, MIND—SPIRIT, SOUL, BODY.

By an elimination of the identities, "soul" and "soul", and "strength" and "body," there remains "spirit," defined in terms of "heart" and "mind." By a further substitution of "will" for "heart," these being practically synonymous terms, we are enabled to define "spirit" as that mysterious entity produced by the union of Will and Mind. In the case of man, the sphere and operation of the spirit is circumscribed by the limitations of its present tabernacle, the body. Man possesses a limited personality. With God there are no boundaries, no limits. He cannot be circumscribed by time or space. He over-rides human boundaries. He possesses an unlimited Personality.

Moreover, being a Spirit, He has an infinite Mind to devise every plan, and an infinite Will to fulfil every purpose. As to Mind, God is intuitively intelligent. After centuries of thought and labor, man's best efforts have resulted in defective systems of mathematics, science and philosophy. Without effort, God is a perfect mathematician, scientist and philosopher. He knows without learning. In the realm of thought He is supreme, unapproachable. The very hairs of our head are all numbered, not because the divine Mind is concerned with the trivial and unimportant, but because divine intelligence cannot but know all things. As to Will, God is unbending, unswerving, unbreakable. He is morally irresistible. He said: "Let there be light, and there was light." At the divine fiat the worlds were made. He spake and it came to pass.

An application of these principles to the realm of love is by no means difficult. If the statement, "God is a Spirit," reveals Deity to be infinite in personality, with infinite powers of Will and Mind, then surely the statement, "God is Love," reveals Him as a Being who is ever using His moral irresistibility and intuitive intelligence for the best interests of man.

Before the Fall this thought and activity were expressed by the creation of man mid the bliss of Eden. There we see human Mind and Will enlightened and energized by communion with God and finding expression in perfect co-operative activity with the divine plan through the medium of the body. And the continuity of this perfect worship was not marred until human will assumed the responsibility of acting independently of the Will of God. From that time forward the descendants of the "first Adam" were irreverent in attitude toward God, rather than worshipful. And if it had not been for another, the "last Adam," this capacity for worship would never have been restored. This is indeed the reason why Christ "took upon Himself the seed of Abraham." He came to revive amongst a fallen race, the forgotten art, the lost power to worship God, and thereby to restore them to a place of favor and communion with God.

Thus, after the Fall, Calvary becomes the pivot of divine Love for Man. There the moral irresistibility and unerring intelligence of Deity take issue with Sin on behalf of man, and at tremendous cost, places the benefit of victory won at human disposal. Weak-willed, mind-clouded humanity may now have the backing of infinite Mind and Will. If man wills, he may now be swept onward and upward to the heights of eternal knowledge and attainment. I myself, if I will, may have God at the back of me. Tremendous therefore, as may be the diversity and magnitude of the operations of God throughout the universe, most wonderful of all, "He loved me and gave Himself for me." In the eternal plan of an infinite Being, I, a tiny atom of creation, have not been left out. Through Calvary, I, a poor cripple through sin, have become the centre of divine thought and activity, and with a true conception of God thereby restored, I may now enter into a sweeter communion with Him than that enjoyed in Eden before the Fall; and as a humble worshipper, I may thus will to do the Will of God, and think His thoughts after Him in the School of Christ.

New Providence, Iowa.

A National Lesson

[Extracts from a sermon delivered at Winchester, Indiana, August 9, by the pastor, Frank Cornell.]

I Kings 4: 24-25. And Solomon had peace on all sides round about him. And Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and fig tree, from Dan even to Beersheba, all the days of Solomon.

Just how much there may be in heredity, it is hard to say. If you were to believe some psychologists it means very much, while others declare there is very little in it. That there is something in it, I have no doubt; but that there is half as much as many believe, I have yet to be convinced. If, as some assert, it is the ruling principle of action, then we might expect the descendants of the great to be greater still, while the children of the wicked would be worse than their ancestors. But facts fail to bear this out. There has been only one Shakespeare, one Dickens, one Cromwell. Richard Cromwell succeeded his father, but soon retired to his farm, caring more for thoroughbred cattle than for victorious armies.

No man should be elated because of what his ancestors have been, nor should he be discouraged because of an unfortunate family history.

A son of the notorious bandit, Jesse James, carried off the highest honors of the Kansas City Law School a few years ago. He worked in a packing house, supported his widowed mother, and put himself through college. He has, like a true man, overcome the handicap of a fearful inheritance. Thousands of other bright boys and girls have done the same. Take the case before us. David was quick and impulsive; Solomon, cool, calm, deliberate. David jumps into success and fame by a single lead. Solomon, on the other hand, plans like an architect, then builds layer upon layer. David was able to fire the hearts of men by song and extempore addresses. Solomon got down to abstract principles and proved himself a true statesman. David was a man of war. Solomon used other means to make his empire strong and his throne secure.

Never was the British Empire stronger than during the days of Napoleon Bonaparte, but during the past year the Ulsterites and the Suffragettes have taxed the resourceful British politicians to their utmost.

Solomon's plan of statecraft was to keep his people so busy that they would not think of disloyalty. Idleness will ruin any nation, even though its idlers be standing armies. It was just as true in Solomon's day as when Isaac Watts wrote:

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do"

A nation of workers, a nation of money-makers, is always a nation of loyal subjects. Wise Solomon saw that commerce was better than war and one of his first acts on coming to the throne was to make affinity with Pharaoh, king of Egypt. With most men, commerce is a greater factor for peace than principle.

Ask the Middle West if she desires war with England, and the reply will be, "Not so long as we send her our corn and wheat and cattle." Ask the great railway companies if they want war, and they will say, "Not so long as we carry produce to the seaboard." Every intelligent citizen of this country is a guardian of peace as soon as he realizes war will affect his best interests.

Commercially speaking, this trade with Egypt was a great success and brought prosperity to the people of Palestine, and I am sure many a farmer prayed in sentiment as did our own Whittier when he wrote:

"Speed on the ship,
But let her bear no merchandise of sin,
No groaning cargo of despair
Her roomy hold within;
No Lethean drug for Eastern lands,
No poison draught for ours;
But honest fruits of toiling hands
And Nature's sun and showers."

The wine, oil and honey of Palestine found a ready market in Egypt, and on the return voyage, the ships brought back horses and merchandise.

But a land becoming rich by commerce, must have luxuries as well as necessities. The farmers of Indiana must have automobiles now, while they used to be content with lumber wagons.

When our necessities are satisfied, we look for the things that please the eye and rejoice the heart, pictures for the walls and pianos for our homes. And this is right, for it gives employment to many a workman and furnishes many a ship with a cargo. Luxuries are God's extra rewards for extra work.

When you see a nation enjoying the luxuries of life, you have looked upon a prosperous people—yes, and a working people too. Take the luxuries out of life and you have removed the greatest stimulant to work.

But let us look again at this wise ruler, who for forty years sat upon the throne of Israel and maintained peace. Not only did he avoid wars with other nations, but he had peace within his own borders, something that had never been before for any length of time. How did he do it? There are two ways it may be brought about. First, by having a common enemy; secondly, by engaging in a common undertaking. The former method has been too often used by the nations of earth. Too often has domestic peace been purchased by foreign wars.

Wise Solomon used the latter plan. Why did he crown Mount Moriah with that costly temple? To please his father, who had desired to do so? That may have had something to do with it. Did he do it because of his extreme piety? Well, if you study the life of the man closely you will see that he was not always too devout. I think, as a statesman, he wanted some bond of national unity.

Every man in the land of Israel was asked to contribute toward the building of the temple. He might give money, or work, or both. 183,600 men were engaged on the work for seven and one-half years. Two thousand four hundred and fifty million dollars of gold had been collected before the structure was started. Solomon sent out an army of one hundred and eight thousand men to cut down timber on Mount Lebanon. This had to be taken to the sea shore, made into rafts, and floated to Joppa, and again hauled twenty-five miles to Jerusalem.

Solomon's masons and builders came from Hiram of Tyre, for the Jews were neither architects nor mechanics. The genius of Hiram shone forth from the building itself, but the master mind of Solomon is seen in the management of these workmen. The hewers of wood up in Mount Lebanon looked forward to when their wood should form a part of the house of God. Every man in the quarry felt, as he lifted a heavy stone, that the day was coming when his work would have an honored place in the temple.

Sailors of the sea, and tillers of the soil, felt that they had a mutual interest in this house for the worship of Jehovah. Wise Solomon! His wisdom surpassed the statesmanship of Europe today, for he saw that a nation to be happy must be prosperous, and to be great must be religious.

I believe today that this nation is the strongest nation on earth. I have lived in different parts of this Republic, and wherever I have lived have found the people believing that their home was the brightest spot in the Union. This is the sentiment of a prosperous people, but with it you will find coupled the religious sentiment expressed by Solomon when he said, "Righteousness exalteth a nation." Contented as we are with the blessings that Heaven has bestowed upon us, I believe our future is bright and God's promise shall be verified unto us when He said: "If ye obey my voice, then shall ye be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people."

Theological Education for Friends Ministers

BY HOMER J. COPPOCK

The recent tendency of young Friends contemplating service in the ministry to attend Theological Seminaries, brings to our attention a vital question concerning the exercise of the ministry in our denomination. The same movement in an earlier stage and with a little different significance was characterized by a demand for Biblical Departments in our colleges and secondary schools and attendance at Bible Training Schools. This development resulted from a desire for better equipment on the part of those engaging in the ministry or other definite Christian service of somewhat the same nature. Then mingled closely with this has been a very definite movement by the same class of persons toward the obtaining of a good general education of college grade if possible. At present these three elements of the general movement toward an educated ministry are becoming stronger and stronger. Do all these parts of the movement give promise of an outcome which is most salutary?

In this discussion of the question it may be well to differentiate between the three kinds of education here suggested. For want of better terms one may be called general education; another, Biblical; and the third, theological. This is not a scientific classification, but it will serve the purpose. By the first is meant instruction in the more general lines of study; by Biblical education is meant instruction in the history, doctrines and interpretation of the Bible, and this may include the history of the church; by theological education is meant (for this discussion only), technical instruction in preparation for the professional ministry. In the latter there is much more which may have a wide application to religious knowledge and life, but the stronger emphasis is here laid on such instruction as is given in courses in homiletics, or pastoral methods and such things as are most needed as a means of practicing the profession. Taking then these three kinds of education, how are they related to the work of a Friends minister?

The great value of a general education for the ministry seems now to be universally conceded among Friends. It is rapidly coming to pass that it can be said that Friends ministers are college trained. This condition seems to command approval in all circles of Friends. The fact is, whether realized or not, that the Friends minister needs a broader education than the minister of any other denomination, because, if he is to exercise the inspirational ministry he needs the broadest possible background for his inspiration to spring from.

If the minister needs general education, he stands in greater need of a good Biblical education. While his inspiration may come from the broad field of life, it will largely center in the history and doctrines of the Biblical record and in that of the church which was the outgrowth of the New Testament. It is an advantage to make a scientific study of the Bible from different viewpoints, either under the instruction of one qualified to teach it or by personal research. The results of this scientific study, however, are not—except in a small degree and after being fully digested—suited to the needs of the public ministry. They make up a very important element of that background of inspiration, parts of which may through devotional study be brought into the foreground and moulded into a living message by the touch of the Holy Spirit. Let our ministers, then, get a careful Biblical education either in a college, a secondary school, a Theological Seminary, or by private research.

But as to theological education, our thinking may be widely divergent. There seems to many to be in this a threatened undermining of the inspirational ministry. That which has been one of our chief characteristics can not be lightly given up nor should it be. The Friends ministry of the past, in spite of its many imperfections, has been by no means a weak ministry and the real Friends ministry of today, practiced in its highest form, is the strongest ministry any Christian denomination knows. It allows more place for the direct and immediate leadership of the Spirit than any other, and consequently conveys living messages of truth suited to present needs.

However, is the fear of this loss through theological education warranted? What is the tendency and what are the dangers? The first and greatest danger is in the fact that one learns the "mechanics of preaching." He learns a form for producing and delivering literary essays on religious subjects. He has a sort of mechanism for fitting into what ought to be a living organism. There is a temptation to make a man-made substitute a part of that which can develop its own life. Another danger is that of becoming overburdened with theories. The Christian ministry is not something which develops out of theories so much as out of actual life experiences. It is somewhat unique in the particular that among the so-called professions it depends least on theory. The denominations which use such schools for "making their ministers" are sometimes conscious of this weakness.

Not long ago an old minister in such a denomination remarked that they usually allowed about twelve years after leaving the Seminary for the theories to work out of the systems of the young ministers. Then they were ready for good work. One other danger appears. In a school whose business it is to prepare ministers for their vocation it is very easy to place the emphasis on human qualifications, and when such a system is followed it is quite easy to believe that unless one has received this technical preparation he is incapable of efficiently exercising whatever gift he may have received. It would not then be a far step for us to demand, like other denominations, that all our ministers be trained in seminaries adapted to that purpose.

These are real dangers into which we may drift unless we are on our guard, and if we do, it is to the disadvantage of the inspirational ministry. It is well to inquire here what we mean by the inspirational ministry. We mean that in which there is place for the direct and immediate guidance of the Holy Spirit. That which trusts that the message or the manner of expressing the different phases of the message will be momentarily given if they have not been given in the hours preceding the time of worship, and also, that which dares to remain silent or to change the theme according to Divine leading. It is not that which feels the necessity of producing a sermon whatever the circumstances, but that which prayerfully seeks a message and power for presentation both before and during the time of worship. Such ministry has its place in the life of today. As in all the past people go to meeting not to be entertained but to receive the bread of life.

But the question remains,—does this inspirational type of ministry suffer from such education as we have called attention to? Not necessarily so, but the possibility is very evident. If the things of the Spirit have taken a deep hold on the lives of the coming ministers and they are fully aware of these dangers they may all be avoided. It can not by any means be said that the inspirational ministry will not be practiced by one who has closely followed this kind of education. It is possible that this very kind of education may be made a part of the background of inspiration. If held in this relationship it is a decided advantage. It seems also possible that a Friends minister might find in this kind of study valuable suggestions for the performance of ministerial duties. Other advantages might appear, but unless all this is kept secondary it will undoubtedly prove disastrous to that principle of truth which to many seems our warrant for existence.

This discussion takes no account of the call to the ministry. That precedes all and is from Heaven. It is the major part of the equipment. God's call carries with it the gift. We but add to it by means of this education and thus perform the human part. He expects of us. As Friends we simply continue to depend on Him for direct guidance both as to preparation and the actual exercise of the gift.

Review of New England Yearly Meeting

BY THOMAS J. BATTEY

(CONCLUDED)

Without attempting to touch on all the varied interests that claimed the Yearly Meeting's attention during that busy week, let us select a few that seem to be more vitally connected with our very existence as a distinct religious body, or link us more closely with the great world's work of today.

Here may be mentioned first the Yearly Meeting's attitude toward its dearly loved, though somewhat burdensome child, the Ram Allah Mission. For several years a deficit had been augmenting in the running expenses and naturally was causing considerable anxiety. So deeply was this felt a year ago that definite steps were taken to reduce and cancel it, if possible. So successful had these efforts been that the Treasurer this year could report a reduction of over $400.00, but $750.00 still remained. It was felt that this should not hang over us any longer, and in about fifteen minutes pledges were taken in the open meeting that practically wiped it out. This coupled with the fact that A. Edward Kelsey had during his recent campaign in America, collected enough funds to complete and partly furnish the new Boys' Training Home, and the further fact that some who had hitherto been rather lukewarm on the subject, were now fully persuaded that the great work there is entirely worth while, and in that faith will lend a larger influence on its behalf; all these happy omens forecast a brighter future for our contribution to the "Problem of the Orient."

In line with this outlook for Ram Allah and contributing to it, and to every concern of the Yearly Meeting, even to its continued existence, was the report of Rufus M. Jones on the doings of the "Special Commission of Five" appointed a year ago. This commission was to survey the field, devise ways and means for strengthening our finances and extending our influence. The report began with the words: "The time has come for us to be forward-looking. If we look backward it should be for the purpose of learning how to go forward, and that to conquest." Two practical suggestions were emphasized. 1. We must have a Field Secretary to go out and teach every meeting how to join the ranks and move forward. 2. This Field Secretary must be a missionary of the Duplex Envelope System, and see that an every-member canvass is carried out through the length and breadth of our membership. The report further said, "We want every baby trundled in a Quaker baby-carriage, wheeled into line and held fast to the Quaker fold. The best things we have are hope and expectation, and we have lots of them."

"We advocate that all trust funds, and all old meeting houses and other property be held sacred for Friendly uses, as we expect they will be needed. If the Yearly Meeting has got to the place where it cannot afford a live field worker, it has no future. We hope it has not yet reached that point."

The Yearly Meeting approved and accepted this report of the Special Commission, and appointed a "Committee of Direction" to carry out as far as possible its suggestions.

Although the statistical reports showed a total gain in numbers during the year of two, it was explained that this was owing rather to an error in a previous report than to any real gain, so we have to face once more the unwelcome fact, that we are still declining in numbers. Other facts not calculated to cheer us very much were found in the reports of the Superintendent of Bible Schools, and of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work. The former feels compelled to use language like this: "Only a few of the schools are doing effective work. Half of the entire enrollment in the schools of the Yearly Meeting are not Friends, and yet only a few schools report that pupils have joined the meeting. In almost every community there are a number of children who are not members of a Bible School, yet the reports show that no special effort is made to get them into Friends' Bible Schools. It is evident we are not taking the work of the Bible School seriously enough. In a few schools where up-to-date methods are employed to win and hold the children, the result is encouraging."

The Evangelistic Superintendent's report also brings to our notice many disquieting situations along with others more hopeful. Many country meetings are small and widely scattered, and although often forming the only place of worship for large neighborhoods, they fail, through lack of efficient workers, to draw in those who might come and in some cases are declining. But on the other hand, aided by the work of the Superintendent in placing all available help at their disposal, much has really been done to encourage and keep alive an interest in many of these meetings. The coming of a group of helpers from outside our limits to assist through the summer, is another cheering feature.

But by far the most hopeful part of the whole problem is that Friends are slowly but surely getting hold of the situation and learning how to go to work in an intelligent and systematic way; studying methods that have been tried and shown to be effective by other bodies of Christians who have been confronted by the same difficulties. This, combined with the new vision of service which our young people are gaining, places a brighter outlook on the future.

Five years ago at Portland a little group of five young people, one of whom was from our Providence Meeting, met to talk over seriously the work there was for them to do. Some practical results followed, and year by year there has been noticed a growing, deepening and more intelligent interest on the part of younger Friends. One strong reason for this is that there have come in from outside our own limits, earnest leaders more nearly of their own age, who have both won their confidence and shown them how they could make their lives count in lines of service, which they felt that they could undertake. And as they came together in large numbers this year at Vassalboro, and gathered around the great camp fire on the lawn after the evening services, to sing together and listen to many testimonies from those of their own age, as well as veterans in the service, it became evident that the Spirit's power was reaching many hearts and working out His beneficent designs in a quiet but efficient manner. There was no excitement, there was little demonstration, but our hopes will miscarry sadly if blessed results do not develop from the impressions and high resolves made under the inspiration of those surroundings.

One thing more may be mentioned that certainly impressed itself upon some of us as a hopeful sign. It was the harmony and unanimity of sentiment that prevailed and seemed to carry the meetings through from beginning to end, with scarcely a jarring note. This coupled with the deep undertone of seriousness respecting our work, impelling us to believe that we were to be co-workers with our Master in social betterment, in carrying forward in this His world, the great ends for which He laid down His life; in ways like these it seemed as though the words of Joel were in a manner being fulfilled:

"I will pour forth of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."—Joel II: 28.

done most efficient work as statistical secretary, was unable to continue in this office, and Grant Fairly was appointed for the service.

The Clerks, Albert J. Brown, Mary Mills and Clayton Terrell, and the announcing clerk, Reuben B. Peelle, all continue in the service of the meeting. In view of the fact that the interpretation by the Five Years Meeting of one paragraph in the Discipline concerning the appointment of elders, is not in accord with two other paragraphs, the Yearly Meeting directed that subordinate meetings follow the course prescribed in our printed discipline.

The reports of various departments of work were accompanied by addresses as follows: Bible Schools, Ellison R. Purdy; Peace, Elbert Russell; Temperance, T. Alex. Cairns; Home Missions, Elbert Russell; Wilmington College, Rayner W. Kelsey; Evangelistic, Morton Pearson; Christian Endeavor, Thomas E. Jones; Foreign Missions, Solomon Tice and Isabella DeVol.

Appropriate musical selections given from time to time under the direction of the musical committee, elicited many expressions of praise and earnest appreciation. The young people were especially active, and prayer groups and conferences for the study of Quakerism met frequently. Thomas Kelly gave an interesting report of the Winona Conference, and the Yearly Meeting appointed Lewis Moon, Luther Warren and Edith Doan as their representatives next year.

In addition to visiting Friends already mentioned, the Meeting welcomed Mary E. Martin, Ida Allen and Ora Wright. Robert Walter Douglas, who was warmly welcomed back to his old home, though feeble in body, preached the Gospel in clearness and power; and Morton Pearson and Elbert Russell contributed much to the high standard of the exercises by their able addresses and sermons.

The following is an editorial from the Wilmington Journal-Republican:

Not in years has the crowd at Sunday Yearly Meeting been greater than turned out this year. The Campus and surrounding grounds were full of people almost the entire day. The program of the day was very interesting, and those who found it possible to get in hearing distance of the auditorium or the other speaking places, heard splendid sermons, and good musical numbers. The weather was beautiful and, all in all, it was a delightful day for the people at the meeting.

Over six hundred people attended the closing business session on Tuesday afternoon, the last moments of which were spent under the overshadowing of a rich spirit of consecration and fellowship.

The Christ of the Andes

BY FREDERICK LYNCH

(Secretary Peace Commission of Federal Council for Churches.)

The peace movement is simply an attempt to persuade nations to settle their disputes as all respectable men settle theirs—by peaceable methods instead of by war and force.

Several nations have already agreed to do this. Norway and Sweden have a treaty wherein they agree to arbitrate their disputes before The Hague. But the most striking instance of all is the treaty signed several years ago by Argentina and Chile. It is striking because it was signed just when they were on the verge of war, and because of the celebration of its signing.

The two nations were ready to go to war over a boundary-line. Millions of dollars were being spent in preparation. Feeling was running high. Just then the British Ministers to Argentina and Chile, supported by the bishops of the two countries, said to the two governments: "How much better it would be instead of going into a long and cruel war over this question, and wasting all your money and thousands of lives, if you would ask an impartial group of men from other nations to examine into the case, and decide it. War will not determine who is right—only who is strongest."

The two nations were persuaded, the case was arbitrated by a board of jurists appointed by King Edward of England, and the decision was perfectly satisfactory to both nations. The two nations, seeing how much better the way of law was than the way of war, immediately concluded a treaty in which they agreed to submit all controversies arising between them to arbitration.

In celebration of the happy outcome of the arbitration and of the signing of the new treaty, one of the most remarkable statues ever made was placed in one of the most unique places—namely, high up in the Andes, on the road from one country to another.

The statue was carried by rail in huge crates from Buenos Ayres to Mendoza, then on gun-carriages up the mountains, the soldiers and sailors themselves taking the ropes in critical places, where there was danger of the mules stumbling. Hundreds of persons had come up the night before and encamped on the ground, to be present at the ceremony. The Argentines ranged themselves on the soil of Chile, and the Chileans on the Argentine side. There was music and the booming of guns, whose echoes resounded through the mountains. The moment of unveiling, after the parts had been placed in position, was one of solemn silence. The statue was then dedicated to the whole world as a practical lesson of peace and good will. The ceremonies of the day, March 13, 1904, were closed, as the sun went down, with a prayer that love and kindness might penetrate the hearts of men everywhere.

The base of the statue is granite. On this is a granite sphere, weighing some fourteen tons, on which the outlines of the world are sketched, resting upon a granite column twenty-two feet high. The figure of the Christ above, in bronze, is twenty-six feet in height. The cross supported in his left hand is five feet higher. The right hand is stretched out in blessing. On the granite base are two bronze tablets, one of them given by the Workingmen's Union of Buenos Ayres, the other by the working women. One of them gives the record of the creation and erection of the statue; on the other are inscribed the words: "Sooner shall these mountains crumble into dust than Argentines and Chileans break peace to which they have pledged themselves at the feet of Christ the Redeemer." In this way the spirit of peace and good will rests among the mountains.—Churchman.

Smile and the world smiles with you,
Weep and you weep alone,
For the good old earth has need of your mirth,
It has sorrow enough of its own.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

PERSONAL MENTION

A. M. Gibson and wife have accepted a call to remain as pastors another year at Mt. Ayr and Chalk Mound, Kansas.

William and Elizabeth Bundy, of Dunreith, Indiana, are spending a few days since Yearly Meeting at High Point and Greensboro, North Carolina.

Rayner W. Kelsey, of Haverford College, who attended Wilmington Yearly Meeting, called at Richmond, Indiana, on August 17th on his way to Indianapolis.

Fred E. Smith, pastor at Greensboro, North Carolina, has been appointed superintendent of the Young Friends' Activities in North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

J. Edward Ransome has located as pastor at Monkton Ridge, Vermont. His first discourse was on the different marks which God places on men. It was well received.

David Borton, of Bristol, Vermont, who has been serving as a supply pastor of the meeting at Monkton Ridge, Vermont, is now visiting various meetings in New York.

Josa DeVol Sweet, sister of Dr. George F. DeVol of China, attended the Quarterly Meeting at South Starksboro, Vermont, on August 9 and 10. Since that time she has been visiting Friends at various points in the interest of missions.

Enos Harvey, who has so ably served the meeting at Bloomingdale, Indiana, as pastor, has resigned and will probably take up the General Superintendency of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Work in Western Yearly Meeting next year.

Fred E. Smith, of Greensboro, North Carolina, spent his vacation visiting some of the meetings in North Carolina Yearly Meeting. He attended the sessions of Contentnea Quarterly Meeting at Woodland, July 25 and 26, and also attended the meeting at Goldsboro the evening of the 26.

George H. Moore, together with his wife, Jane D. H. Moore, who have been serving the meeting at Westfield, Indiana, as pastors, have accepted a call to the pastorate of the meeting at Bloomingdale, Indiana, and will enter upon the work immediately after Western Yearly Meeting next month.

Meade A. Kelsey, who has served so faithfully as pastor for the past three years at Oskaloosa, Iowa, has accepted a call to serve as pastor of the Friends' Meeting at Spiceland, Indiana. Mr. Kelsey has a broad view of a pastor's responsibilities, and will be greatly missed by both the Oskaloosa Meeting and the city at large.

Timothy Nicholson, of Richmond, Indiana; Thomas E. Jones, General Secretary of Young People's Work of the Five Years Meeting, and Margaret Hackney attended the Friends' meeting at Greensboro, North Carolina, on August 16th. The message of Thomas E. Jones especially was much appreciated.

NEWS ITEMS

Announcement has been made of a home-coming basket meeting to be held at the New London, Indiana, Friends' Church on next Sabbath, August 30th. All old residents of New London and vicinity are asked to be present.

Attention is called in another column to the announcement concerning the dedication of the new Western Yearly Meeting House at Plainfield, Indiana, on August 19th and 20th. A special invitation is given to any who may have belonged to or attended from 1858 to 1868 inclusive. Persons unable to be present are asked to send greetings. Address John Kendall, Mooresville, Indiana, Chairman Promotion Committee.

Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting was held at Bloomingdale, Indiana, August 14-16, with a good degree of interest in all departments of work. No ministers outside the Quarterly Meeting were present, but helpful messages were given by local pastors. Horace E. Coleman and wife, of Japan, gave most interesting and inspiring talks in the different sessions on missionary work and the Sunday School movement in Japan.

The Penn College bulletin for August is devoted to the question of selling the tract of land of forty-nine acres now belonging to the college, the proceeds to be added to the endowment fund. A strong appeal is made to Friends generally to participate in the lot sale and by so doing render valuable assistance to the institution. The same appeal is made to citizens of Oskaloosa. It is planned to have an opening for this sale on educational day during Yearly Meeting next week. Further information can be had by addressing Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

From the Philadelphia Friend we learn that Abington Quarterly Meeting was held at Germantown, Pennsylvania, on August 6th. The sessions were well attended, more men Friends being present perhaps than is usual at the mid-summer session. A committee was appointed to consider the situation of the subordinate meetings and if way opened to nominate Friends to serve as a Visitation Committee. The war situation now existing in Europe was feelingly alluded to with the earnest desire that Friends in those countries may be sustained in loyalty to their principles of peace.

Mount Ayr Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, was held August 13-15. The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight convened on Friday at eleven o'clock, and at two o'clock the Doctrinal Conference was held, the subject being "The Atonement." Francis Stites opened the subject with a paper which was exceedingly good and which was enjoyed by all. Others followed in the general discussion. The pastor did the preaching on both days of Quarterly Meeting, there being no outside help. On Saturday night a temperance program was given which was well rendered, most of the declamations being on the evils of the cigarette. On Sunday evening, Floyd Hester, of Burr Oak, delivered an instructive temperance address.

On First-day afternoon, Eighth month 9th, the second of a series of meetings for worship, to which the public generally are invited, was held at Wilgus Hall, Hatboro. These meetings have been appointed by the General Visitation Committee of Abington Quarterly Meeting, to be held on the afternoon of the second First-day in the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth months. A very real sense of the Divine Presence was felt, by which the company was drawn together with thankfulness in the realization of His love and grace. After the close of the meeting, the feeling was expressed that such gatherings, when all denominations could unite together, resting on the one foundation and with a common aim, were a true blessing and help.—Philadelphia Friend.

It is usual for the mid-summer Quarterly Meeting in Philadelphia to be smaller than at other times of the year owing to the absence of Friends at the seashore or mountains. It was remarked this year that the attendance was unusually large. Thomas and Augusta Battey, of Providence, Rhode Island; Elizabeth Cooper, of West Grove; Benjamin Whitson, of Moylan, and several others from adjoining Quarterly Meetings were acceptable visitors. Three of the above mentioned had vocal service in the ministry. The whole meeting assembled under a chastened feeling due to the outbreak of war in Europe. Thomas Battey was able to voice this feeling by a remarkably favored combination of prophecies of Isaiah leading up to the climax in the exclamation, "The eternal God is our refuge." As awful as the impending calamity may seem in an all-wise over-ruling of the God of the nations, it may yet hasten the day of His Kingdom. The waiting as well as the ministry of the hour of devotion seemed to touch a high chord and to produce a sense of thankfulness in many.—Philadelphia Friend.

The Friends of Elk Monthly Meeting at West Elkton, Ohio, held their Sabbath School picnic on August 8th. A bountiful dinner was served, and the company was treated to ten gallons of ice cream. Hay wagons were provided for the children and young people. Solomon R. Tice, recently returned from Mexico, was with us, and gave a very interesting account of the experience of himself and wife and others connected with the Boys' and Girls' School at Victoria during the recent disturbances in Mexico. He remained over the Sabbath and gave a short talk to the Sabbath School, and at 10:30 he addressed the morning meeting on the "Conditions and Work in Mexico," and at 8:00 in the evening he again addressed a full house on the "Political Situation in Mexico." All of his talks were instructive and interesting.

CHANGES IN IOWA PROGRAM

The attention of Iowa Friends is called to the following changes in the Yearly Meeting program.

The program for Iowa Yearly Meeting, beginning on September 1, 1914, as it has appeared in the printed minutes of 1913, has been changed so that the subjects will be considered as follows:

Temperance Reports, Wednesday morning, September 2; Evangelistic and Church Extension Reports, Thursday afternoon, September 3; Educational Day, Friday, September 4. In other respects the printed program stands subject to change at any time during the sessions of the Yearly Meeting.

S. M. HADLEY, Clerk.

THE HORRORS OF WAR

Under date of August 20th we have an interesting note from our friend, Joshua L. Bailey, of Philadelphia, in which he says:

"I read with painful apprehension the daily reports of the horrors on the European battlefield. It seems to me that the hand on the dial plate of our civilization has been turned backward and that we have relapsed into barbarism." Along with his message, Joshua Bailey has sent an article on "The Suicide of Militarism," which appeared in a recent issue of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and which we will be glad to use next week.

AMONG THE INDIANS

The following account was prepared by William Perry Haworth, of Shawnee, Oklahoma. He and his wife, Abigail Haworth, have direct charge of the mission at Shawnee, besides the general superintendency of the ten missions maintained by Friends in that state. The mission at Shawnee is located in close proximity to a government Indian school, and thus the missionaries have opportunity to come into close association with the group of Indian children attending the school.

The account by W. P. Haworth affords a clear glimpse of the important work for the Kingdom being done by our missionaries among the Indians of Oklahoma. It has been found by experience that one of the best ways of influencing the Indians is to visit them in their homes.

R. W. KELSEY.

A Two Days' Outing Among the Indians

After providing ourselves with lunch and horsefeed, and some other articles to add to our comfort, wife and I left home on the morning of the 24th for a visit among the White Turkey band of the Shawnee Indians, expecting to cover a distance of about thirty-five miles, and occupy about two days of our time.

After visiting a white neighbor, who had been sick, and confined to his room most of the time for four or five years, we drove to the home of Riley Hood. On our arrival we found Riley preparing to go to the alfalfa field to bale hay; his wife was preparing stringed beans and other articles for the noon meal. Riley is a young man of some thirty-five years, having obtained a good education at Hampton, Virginia. He married Rachel Tiner, a beautiful Indian girl, who received her early education at the Friends' Skiatook school. They have two bright children. Riley is farming his own allotment.

After calling on one white family, we next stopped at the home of Grandma Wilson. She always meets us with a smile and gives us a most cordial welcome to her home. She is a very industrious woman, and on this occasion we found her out in the field "chopping cotton," the act of thinning it out to a proper stand.

Several of the Shawnee pupils were assisting her, as they were home from school on their summer vacation. While my wife entertained some of them under the shade of a friendly tree nearby, I went into the field and assisted others at their work.

A neighbor woman was at the house preparing dinner for the company. After some friendly advice as to the future schooling of the children, and other matters, we passed on to the home of Billy Hodgo and family, which by the way, is one of our brightest full-blood Indian families. Billy and oldest son were unloading alfalfa hay in their stable, while his wife had just returned from the cotton field to prepare the noon meal for the family. We were kindly received here, and invited to take dinner with them, but having our dinner with us, we declined their kindly offer, and ate under the shade of an oak near a good well of water nearby. Their oldest daughter, Fannie, had just returned from a three years' course at Chilocco, having formerly been a pupil at Shawnee, and our having kept in touch with her while at Chilocco, gave us a place of interest with the family. A younger daughter has been in the Shawnee school the past year.

We next visited Anna Major Elephant in her home. Her husband, Henry Elephant, was away from home chopping cotton, for which he was receiving $1.25 per day. Anna has been a student at Haskell Indian school at Lawrence, Kansas, for three years, after having attended school here at Shawnee from the time she was a small girl. She seemed to be possessed of high and worthy motives, and took much delight in pointing out their promising crops among which was some ten acres of fine-looking alfalfa grass.

From Anna Elephant's home we drove directly to the home of Reese Alford, some sixteen miles north-east from the mission. Reese is the son of T. W. Alford, his mother being the daughter of Jeremiah A. Grinnell, and is possessed of three-eighth Indian blood. He married Miss Maud Kennedy, a white girl of much mental ability, and with all, a very fine girl. She has taught in the public schools of our state several years and has been teaching in the Civil Service two years. We were most hospitably entertained at their home over night, having known each of them since our stay at Shawnee, and having joined them in marriage about one year ago.

Reese has a most beautiful allotment of forty acres of Canadian bottomland, one-half of which he has already sown to alfalfa grass, while every acre of it is capable of producing this valuable crop.

Here everything indicated much forethought and care both in doors and out. Cannas, sweet peas and other beautiful flowers were in evidence in the yard, while a beautiful bouquet of the peas graced the dining table, and gave off their sweet perfume to all in the room.

After spending the evening and morning in social converse and religious opportunity, we began our trip home, calling at the home of two Indian families as we passed. Pete Washington and family were the first we visited. Here we found all at home except such as are married or away from home attending school. Pete was plowing in the field nearby and on noting our arrival he came to the house at once and under the covering of their summer kitchen, we had a very enjoyable visit. Several children from this family have been in our Shawnee school, and again we found this a door of access for us into the good graces of the family. After a time of scripture reading and prayer, we resumed our journey, stopping next at the home of Aaron Wilson, but finding all away from home, we resumed our journey home, where we arrived about two o'clock p.m., tired and hungry, but glad of the opportunity we had enjoyed of carrying the gospel of good cheer into all these various homes.

W. P. and A. C. Haworth.

Shawnee, Oklahoma, June 26th.

FRIENDS IN DENMARK

In continuation of the reports printed in last week's Current News, E. Harold Marsh sends us the following particulars of his Scandinavian tour:

"After the Danish annual meeting a party of twenty-one Friends, of whom about half were from Norway, England and America, visited some fishing villages and farms in a distant corner of the island of Sjaelland (Zealand). Three public meetings were held, and the visitors had a very much appreciated opportunity for social intercourse and a glimpse of home life and hospitality in rural Denmark. The party left Copenhagen by train at an early hour and finished the journey in a little steamer which took them to the extremity of the island. Lunch was served at a temperance inn and there was then a few hours to spare for rest, bathing or exploration. In the evening a Friends' meeting was held at a mission room and some eighty or more people were present. The meeting lasted nearly two hours, and the vocal ministry was shared by Johan Marcusen, Max I. Reich, Wilhelm Pedersen (from Stavanger, Norway), Joseph Elkinton, John F. Hansen and others. A particularly satisfactory feature of the meeting was the spontaneous public testimony of the local shoemaker who had been admitted into membership the day before. The visitors were much impressed with the way that the villagers entered into the spirit of a form of worship quite new to them. There is no regular Friends' meeting in the district, and never has been, but it is quite possible that Hundested will soon be added to the list of places where meetings are to be found."—London Friend.

FAVOR CONFERENCE OF MEN

In the Minutes of California Yearly Meeting for 1914, on pages 16, 17 and 18, are found the following resolutions which were adopted unanimously at a men's meeting on Social Service held on Tuesday evening, June 23, at 6:30 o'clock. Following an interesting program in the interests of Social Service, Absalom Rosenberger presented these resolutions which are as follows:

"Whereas, THE AMERICAN FRIEND is endeavoring to obtain a consensus of opinion of the Friends in America on the subject of a General Convention of men to be held in the near future to consider matters of the most pressing moment to the Friends' Church,

"Therefore, be it resolved, That the Meeting for Social Service Among Men of California Yearly Meeting, now assembled in its annual conference, hereby give its hearty indorsement to the proposed convention and urge that steps be taken for holding such meeting at an early date upon some equitable basis of representation among the Yearly Meetings.

"Be it resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the time is ripe and the demand imperative for a better qualified and more efficient leadership, and that the most strenuous efforts should be put forth for the development of leaders who can carry on the work of the church in a more efficient manner, and that better provisions should be made whereby the young Friends may be able to qualify themselves for such service of divinely appointed leadership.

"Be it resolved, That greater unity of purpose and activity and a more careful selection of fields of labor are among the vital problems for an immediate solution, both as to the home and foreign work, and that the above proposed convention should provide in its program for a consideration of the same.

"Be it resolved, That our colleges should receive more ample endowments, should provide for larger opportunities for imparting instruction in the Holy Scriptures, and be kept upon a high intellectual, moral and spiritual basis, in order that our youths may have opportunity to qualify themselves fully for the work of the Master in the Society of Friends.

"It is furthermore the sense of this body that the membership of the church should yield the most loyal and faithful support to all the organizations of the church and pray daily for our 'Zion,' that 'her cords may be lengthened and her stakes strengthened,' and that our work may be prospered of the Lord, the condition now confronting the Friends being a challenge to continued faithfulness in work and prayer."

Hearty endorsement of these resolutions were expressed by Robert C. Root, Los Angeles; Andrew F. Mitchell, Long Beach; Levi Gregory, Oakland; Lewis Stout, Wichita, Kansas, and Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana. The resolutions were unanimously approved.

WILMINGTON ENDORSES ALSO

It will be noticed by reading the account of Wilmington Yearly Meeting in this issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that that body endorsed the proposition of holding a Men's Conference such as has been advocated at various times in the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING HOUSE DEDICATION

As announced last week the dedicatory exercises of the new Western Yearly Meeting House at Plainfield, Indiana, will be held on September 19 and 20, at the time of the holding of Western Yearly Meeting. It is announced that Joseph John Mills, of Pasadena, California, General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting; Edmund Stanley, President of Friends' University at Wichita and Clerk of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and Robert L. Kelly, President of Earlham College and Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting, will be the speakers at the dedication services on September 20th. These Friends are "Indiana Boys," Joseph John Mills and Edmund Stanley having spent their young manhood within ten miles of Plainfield; while Robert L. Kelly lived in the vicinity of Bloomingdale, Indiana, and is a former principal of Central Academy located near the Yearly Meeting House grounds at Plainfield. This trio will be the special honored guests of the occasion, but along with them all others will be given a special welcome who may have attended the first Yearly Meeting held in 1858, or who are otherwise prominent in church affairs.

Dalton H. Lewis, pastor of Friends' Church at New Castle, Indiana, has been secured as musical director at the dedication services on both days. The choir will be made up of delegates appointed from the various Sabbath Schools, Young People's Societies and the different congregations of the Yearly Meeting.

These dedicatory services will be one of the leading features of the coming Yearly Meeting, and it is expected by the Promotion Committee that Friends generally will be in attendance from the different Quarterly Meetings, and that there will be numerous visitors from other Yearly Meetings.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING PROGRAM

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

There are several new features in the Yearly Meeting program for this year. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight has two sittings on Second day, Ninth month 21st, and the Yearly Meeting opens at ten o'clock on Third day, the 22d. An entire sitting is given to Temperance, to Foreign Missions, to the Consideration of the State of the Church, and to the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Work. An evening is given to the Young Friends' Movement, one to the Bible School, and one to the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. The committee on Devotional Meeting is asked to provide for at least one eight o'clock morning meeting to be held on the basis of spiritual guidance and without a prearranged program.

By the new schedule one-half day more can be given to business, and there need not be that haste that sometimes has seemed to characterize the dispatch of business. The business sittings will end on Seventh day and the closing minute is to be read at the conclusion of the evening meeting for worship on First day. It is believed that there will be no descending climax in interest or attendance by the new arrangement, and Friends are asked to come to Yearly Meeting this year with that spiritual preparation which is so necessary, that the meeting be of the greatest profit to all. Copies of the program will be sent in advance on application to Charles G. Carpenter, Richmond, Indiana.

Sincerely,

ROBERT L. KELLY,
Clerk, and Chairman of Committee on Program.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

September 6

Subject—The Great Commandments.
Lesson—Mark 12: 28-44.

Golden Text—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. Luke 10: 27.

Time—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 30.

Place—Temple Court, Jerusalem.

The day had been full of questionings of the Master. With malice, and with a purpose to trap Him, the Jews had sent one man after another with catch queries, and Jesus had answered them all with superb tact.

Now comes a scribe, evidently an honest inquirer, who perceiving the aptness of Jesus' answers, puts to Him a question which no doubt had been troubling his own mind as a legalist.

What commandment is first of all? This is not a query about a particular commandment, but the Greek word used indicates a purpose to know the character or the subject matter of the most important commandment.

The Herodians had come to Jesus with questions political. The Jews had come with hair-splitting questions about theology, and now comes a lawyer making inquiry about the more fundamental problems that had to do with the everyday moral and religious life of the people.

See in what masterful way Jesus has met every test. In this lesson His reply is no less masterful. He quotes a command which was upon every faithful Jew's tongue every day, one that was bound upon his forehead and his arms while at prayer.

There is one God, and all are commanded to love Him with their whole being, but as a part of this fundamental relationship, there is another side to the problem. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Man's dual responsibility is thus set forth with startling clearness. Love and obedience to God and love to man, cover the entire scope of human obligations.

This doctrine of human brotherhood was a new one to the Jews, but Jesus means to teach that if one loves God, that love must of necessity beget an interest in humanity. In one supreme, sovereign law, Jesus sums up the ethical duties that belong to all mankind.

The scribe is quick to see the value of the answer. At a glance he comprehends that it is not by outward ceremony and observance that human obligations must be met, but that human conduct springs from the heart experiences of life. "Obedience is better than sacrifice." Read Jeremiah 7: 4-7 and 22, 23.

Jesus gives another lesson in comparatives, a lesson needed today as much as then. The measure of any service or gift lies not in its size, but in the motive which prompts it and in the love and sacrifice which it expresses. No one, however limited in capacity or ability to give or do, is shut out from the field of Christian service. They who give all they have to the Lord are more acceptable than they who give their millions but withhold something which belongs to the Lord.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 6

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. IX. The Prayer Verse. Matthew 21: 22. (Consecration Meeting.)

"Plan to fill this meeting with prayer. Call for sentence prayers early in the evening, naming some one to open them and some one to close them. Before the meeting go to many of the society and obtain their permission to call upon them to offer prayer. In this, try to get hold of a number who are not in the habit of public prayer. Form prayer trios, the inexperienced member being sandwiched in between two experienced members in a planned series of prayers. Have a moment of silent prayer on some subject of common interest. Sing a prayer hymn with bowed heads. Print a prayer Psalm on a large sheet of paper or a blackboard, and have the society read it in concert. Call for prayers on different subjects, as for the society committees, the officers, the work of the month, the church and the pastor. Get some Comrade of the Quiet Hour to talk for five minutes about the blessedness of this observance."—Christian Endeavor World.

Ask some of the members to speak briefly about the value of prayer.

Ask others to read texts in which prayer is commanded.

Ask still others to read texts in which blessings are promised.

Ask others to read texts showing why answers fail and under what circumstances.

NOTICE

The Friends of Iowa Yearly Meeting and other interested Friends may obtain a daily report of the sessions of the current yearly meeting, September 1-6, by sending 15 cents to the Oskaloosa Herald for their special edition covering the entire yearly meeting.

Married

Montgomery-Gregory—At the home of the bride's parents at Alton, Kansas, August 6, 1914, Herbert S. Montgomery, Studley, Kansas, and Leda F. Gregory, A. M. Gibson officiating.

Died

Davis—Stanton Davis, son of David and Caroline Davis, was born in Randolph County, North Carolina, November 22, 1844, and died at his home near Marlboro, North Carolina, July 22, 1914. He was a birthright member of Friends and not only a valuable member of Marlboro Monthly Meeting, but also a prominent citizen of Randolph County. He received his education at New Garden Boarding School. He leaves a wife, one brother, four daughters and two sons. Funeral services were held at Marlboro Meeting House conducted by George Welker, pastor of Friends' Meeting at Archdale. A large congregation was present.

Jewell—Samuel V. Jewell was born in Mercer County, Ohio, February 15, 1841, and died at his home in Palacios, Texas, May 20, 1914, aged seventy-three years. He was married to Lucretia A. Redman in 1866. While in the employ of a railroad company about thirty-five years ago, he was converted on his engine while waiting on a siding for a passing train. He united with Friends and soon after was recorded a minister, in which capacity he labored successfully in different states. He died as he lived, triumphant through Christ.

Myers—Israel Myers was born January 23, 1842, in Mahoning County, Ohio, and died at his home near Weldon, Iowa, August 13, 1914. He moved with his father's family to Iowa at the age of eighteen, and was married to Asenath Cox in 1865. He was converted in early life under the ministry of Amos Kenworthy and became a member of the Friends' Church at Smyrna. He took active interest in the work of the church and was present at the organization of Iowa Yearly Meeting. He also attended the fiftieth anniversary of the Yearly Meeting last year. A wife and seven children survive him. Funeral services were conducted at Smyrna Friends' Church on August 15, by the pastor, LeRoy K. Hawks.

Newby—Herbert Newby, son of Jason W. and Nancy Newby, died at his home near Fowler, Kansas, March 6, 1914, aged forty-three years. He was converted in early life and was useful in the church and community. He leaves a widow and five brothers.

Stanley—Lydia Maria Hawks Stanley, daughter of William and Martha S. Hawks, was born in Portland, Maine, in the year 1827, and died at Cleveland, Ohio, April 28, 1914, in her eighty-seventh year. In 1853 she moved with her parents to Salem, Ohio, and in 1859 married Jehu Stanley, their home being near Damascus. For many years she was a recognized minister in the Friends' Church, and in all the ministrations of her life, her sweet Christian spirit was a benediction. She moved to Cleveland in 1895, where she was devoted to the work of the Lord in all of its phases. For many years she was an efficient superintendent of the Department of Peace in the W. C. T. U. She was deeply interested in both home and foreign missionary work, and was remarkably gifted in visiting families and individuals.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

A Hymn of Peace*

BY W. CARLETON WOOD

Eternal God, the Dwelling-place
Of Saint through ages past,
Who thus were sheltered by Thy grace—
Secure from every blast.

Eternal calms from out Thy throne,
Beside the crystal sea,
On pinions to their souls have flown
To bring them peace from Thee.

So grant us, Lord, Thy saving grace—
In love and mercy giv'n—
And show, in every storm, Thy face,
Lest our frail bark be riv'n.

Impart to us Thy healing balm
To soothe the throbbing pain,
And let Thy canopy of calm
O'er every heart remain.

Our weary souls would, like a dove,
Fly upward unto Thee,
And nestle in Thine arms of love
To rest eternally.

A thousand years are as a day
To Thee, the Changeless One;
So guide our footsteps in the way
Till our short day is done.

Slow Valley Meeting

We want just a final word about the publication of the "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting Chronicle" in booklet form. Orders are still coming in, and up to the time of going to press 233 copies have been ordered. This is not sufficient to justify us in going ahead with the publication. If we fail, it will be a great disappointment to many.

One person has ordered ten copies for use in a practical consideration of the work of the church in one of our leading colleges. Another order has come for copies to be used in connection with the book and tract work of one of our important Yearly Meetings, a copy to be placed in each Monthly Meeting.

This has been referred to as a pamphlet. It is far more than that. It will be a book of 84 pages with paper cover, and the price is insignificant. It is a work which, in the judgment of many, is sure to be an inspiration to hundreds of our meetings, if only it can get into the hands of Friends generally.

As orders are still coming in, we have decided to hold the offer open for a few days longer. Orders will be accepted which are mailed as late as September 12, after which date we will have to decide upon the printing. Send in your order today. Single copies, by mail, 15 cents; ten copies, $1.00; 25 copies, $2.25.

Friends and the War

Members of the Society of Friends, precluded by the traditional testimony of the Society against all war from volunteering for naval or military service, are being urged to recognize the duty of bearing the fullest share of which they are capable in different forms of national service at home.

At all Friends' meetings on Sunday a communication from the central committee of the Society was read, and names of those offering themselves for service were enrolled. The response has been quite unexpectedly encouraging, and an office will be opened to-day (at 58, City-road, E. C.) to deal with the correspondence involved. It is intended that the volunteers offering themselves in this way, some for whole-time and some for part-time work, shall, to promote co-ordination, place themselves at the disposal of the local branches of the committee administering the Prince of Wales's Fund. The Society of Friends has behind it an honourable record of philanthropic service, and the promptness with which the present movement has been organized and the volume of response forthcoming are in full keeping with its traditions.

Applications have been received for nearly a hundred thousand copies of the statement on the war issued by the Society of Friends, and published as an advertisement in our present issue.—London (England) News and Leader.

Miscellaneous

The Scofield Correspondence Course has been purchased by the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, by which it will be conducted hereafter. This Course was founded more than twenty years ago by C. I. Scofield, famous as a Bible teacher, and the author of the Scofield Bible. Thousands of students have been enrolled in the Course all over the world.

The Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches calls attention to the fact that December 14th next will be the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Whitefield, who is described as "one of the mightiest ministers this land or any other has ever known." It is suggested by the Commission that the anniversary of his birth be celebrated by all the various denominations in some appropriate way. Various biographies of Whitefield are cited and also a publication of the Commission, issued by the Glad Tidings Publishing Company, 602 Lakeside Building, Chicago, Illinois. Price, twenty-five cents.

Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Red Cross at Washington City, has sent out an appeal under date of August 18th for funds for war relief work in Europe. The appeal says that there are already thousands of sick and wounded men and there will soon be tens of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of them. The appeal asks that all contributions be sent to the American Red Cross, Washington, D. C. While Friends believe that this is a thoroughly useless war, as all of them are, they have never failed to respond to appeals for the relief of human suffering, no matter how it has been caused.

God has promised forgiveness to those who repent, but he has not promised repentance to those who sin.—Augustine.

Being Workers Together With God

No one who believes in the power of the Omnipotent Jehovah can doubt the ultimate triumph of righteousness in the earth. Human greed and human propensity to wrong may delay the triumphal march of truth, the unworthy ambitions of men may turn back the dial of civilization, the diabolical processes of hate and avarice may transform Eden into a charnel house wherein there appears no gleam of a better day, but God sitteth still upon the circle of the heavens, and the destinies of the universe are in His hands.

In the midst of disobedience and national decay, Jeremiah was enabled to peer into that long future wherein a thousand years are as one day, and behold events in their final reckoning, wherein nations are but fragments in the general plan of God. Israel, self-satisfied, defiant of truth, ignored the element of Omnipotence in human affairs and dared to expect prosperity upon the basis of disobedience to the Divine law. But Israel learned by many sad experiences that it was "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit" that success is guaranteed to national and individual life.

The world today may ignore God's program for its government and control, it may set at naught the Divine element in the affairs of men, it may arrogate to itself the powers of dictatorial supremacy over all things material and spiritual, it may fatten itself upon greed and avarice and lust and forget that the "wages of sin is death," it may overturn the principle of human brotherhood and establish as the law of nations the doctrine that "might makes right," the struggle between man's expediency and God's righteousness may go on for centuries, but in the end the Eternal God will win out, His program will prevail, His law will be supreme.

The Psalmist had "seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green tree in its native soil, but one passed by, and, lo, he was not." "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." In the midst of the turmoil and the wickedness of earth, of bloodshed and fratricidal strife, of tyranny and the oppression of the weak, in the midst of the wreck of systems and orders, we may confidently look beyond the chaos and the distortions of life and see God still standing in the shadow, "keeping watch above His own."

God's program has been builded for the ages and through all of human history may be found the tracings of His great purposes.

But the operations of Jehovah in His world are largely revealed through human instrumentality. We are to be workers together with Him. That is the Divine law of co-operation, without the practical realization of which the world must go limping through ages of its history waiting for the dawning of a better day. Why this bloody scourge of war? Why the reign of evil in the social order? Why the handicaps upon the perfection of a Christian civilization? Largely because Christian ideals have not yet become the ideals of the world, because business and society and government have not yet yielded themselves to the Divine law of right.

What is the matter with the world? Nothing, except that it has not yet been Christianized in any vital sense, that it has not yet been made to feel that a vital piety, manifesting itself in all human affairs, is the embodiment of all that is highest and noblest and best in human life. Not until governments have been transformed by the power of Christian idealism, will they be safe from the call of the battlefield; not until business has felt the Divine touch and is willing that its standards shall be measured by the exact standards of Christian truth, will it merit the confidence of all men; not until society as a whole and in its separate parts feels the inflow of the Divine life will it escape the punishment which sin always inflicts upon its devotees.

But this sets forth only half the problem. It will not be until Christianity has been made the ruling force in the every-day affairs of human life, until conduct is governed by religious ideals, and men are made to feel the binding force of the edicts of Jehovah, that Christianity will have had its severest test or served its highest purpose.

Wherein has Christianity fallen short of its own ideals? Because of the imperfection of human workmanship. Upon the Church is laid the obligation of carrying the gospel unto the ends of the earth, until all men shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest. But the church cannot prevail by dress parade rehearsals, or by formal professions of piety, or by dividing into hostile camps, or by canonizing the technique of procedure, or by establishing aristocracies of religion.

Power does not lie in legalisms, in the vesture or in the observance of ceremonies. Power is the necessary consequence of the application of spiritual life. In spite of its baptisms of fire and blood, the Church of Christ has yet to meet its severest tests. What will it have to offer to Europe, when bleeding and torn and impoverished, she returns to the hearthstones of her fathers to take up again the frayed and tangled ends of a broken civilization? What has it to offer to the toiling millions who feel that there is nothing in common between them and organized Christianity?

What contributions has it to make to the world of trade and commerce, governed now so largely by the laws of grasping avarice and selfishness? What message has it for the millions of young men and women who today have failed to hear the call to the Christian life?

These are gigantic tasks which the church is facing in this generation, and which it must continue to face for generations to come. Workers together with God. Not alone for its own sake, but for the sake of establishing the Kingdom of God in the hearts of all men, and thereby helping to hasten the day of the universal reign of Christ in the earth, must the church hasten to be about the Father's business.

Christian Education in State Universities

ROBERT L. KELLY

Richard C. Hughes, Secretary for University Work of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church, has made a careful investigation of religious conditions in the American State Universities. There are eighty-seven state universities and state colleges in the United States, and during the year the comprehensive survey which Dr. Hughes reports was made of religious conditions of fifty of these institutions. Of the fifty institutions sixteen have no chapel exercises, thirteen conduct chapel only once a week, and twenty-one from two to five times a week. The majority use the chapel exercise for occasional addresses and college announcements without the reading of the Bible or singing of hymns. Twenty-one report some curriculum instruction in the Bible; twenty-nine report no such courses offered. The courses offered are in the Bible as literature and in Biblical languages. Forty-seven of these institutions have a total faculty membership of 7,545, of whom 4,073 are affiliated with local churches while 3,472 are outside all churches. The tendency is for the institution to grow away from the church as the number of students increases. The larger the institution the smaller the number of faculty members associated with the religious life of the community.

I select a few facts of especial interest to Friends since the universities reported upon are in states where Friends colleges are located. Five chapel exercises per week are held at Iowa State College of Agriculture, Iowa State Teachers College, Miami University, Pennsylvania State College and the University of Pennsylvania. Two chapel exercises per week are held at the University of Kansas. One chapel exercise per week is held at Purdue, Ohio University and Ohio State University, while no chapel exercises are held at the University of California, University of Iowa, University of Nebraska and Indiana University.

Of the six hundred seventy-seven faculty members in the University of California ninety-one are affiliated with local churches and five hundred eighty-six are not. In Indiana University ninety-five are affiliated and one hundred fifty-five are not, while at Purdue, also located in the state of Indiana, two hundred seventeen are affiliated and fourteen are not. The number affiliated with churches and not affiliated, respectively, in certain other universities follow: Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, one hundred seventy-two and seventy-eight; Iowa State Teachers College, seventy-seven and thirteen; State University of Iowa, one hundred forty-five and eighteen; University of Kansas, one hundred two and eighty-five; University of Nebraska, one hundred fifty-one and seventy-seven; Ohio University, twenty-eight and twelve; Ohio State University, ninety-seven and one hundred fifty-three; Miami University, fifty-four and two; University of Oregon, thirty-six and forty-five; Pennsylvania State College one hundred thirty and ninety-three.

It appears that Friends are enrolled in state institutions in considerable numbers and this without any perceptible relation to the religious atmosphere of the institutions. In the University of California there are ten Friends, in Indiana University fifty-three, in Purdue thirty-six, Iowa State College ten, Iowa State Teachers College thirteen, University of Kansas sixteen, University of Nebraska nine, Ohio State University nineteen, Miami one, University of Oregon two, Pennsylvania State College twenty-nine, University of Pennsylvania twenty-seven.

It is the purpose of this article merely to state a few significant facts. What can be done to cure the situation no one knows. The universities are not likely to do much or attempt much. A State University President, well known among Friends, recently remarked to the writer that everything he had undertaken along religious lines had been blocked and that he had practically given up trying. The Association of Church Workers in State Universities, backed by leading denominations, and the Council of Church Boards, is giving the situation careful attention, however, and some progress has already been made.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

The Meaning of Christianity

BY CHARLES R. AXTON

Text, I Corinthians 13: 13.

What does Christianity intend, imply, involve? What is it trying to do in this modern world? Does it mean any one thing that can be stated? Or, does it mean everything, and therefore nothing?

All of us could describe the house key we carry in our pockets. We are perfectly familiar with its size, shape and use. We can define the house to which the key admits us, but when we try to define the family that dwells therein, to set forth the nature of the parental affection to describe its full relation to the community and the state, at once we are moving among magnitudes too big for human tongue to fully explain. It is happy for us, however, that we do not have to define Christianity before we can live it, any more than we have to define the X-ray before we can use it. And yet there are some things which may be said in answer to this great question.

What then is Christianity?

(1) It is not simply ritual. Both rational and spiritual religion affirm that no material object carried in the pocket or worn next to the skin can possibly affect the spiritual life of man. Putting on the uniform does not make the soldier. No physical object is of any spiritual value, save as by using it a man enters into new experiences. In the presence of anything that would forever enchain the conscience we must be guided by what St. Paul said about the most sacred ceremony of his race, "Circumcision availeth nothing" (Gal. 6: 15).

Three facts stand out clear: No ritual can change the soul of man; no command to perform a ritual act can ever rank with the command to maintain spiritual attitudes and relations; no ritual can remain in its exact original form since we can never be sure what that form was.

(2) Christianity has a Creed, but is not Simply a Creed.

Religion comes before theology, just as stars come before astronomy, as flowers before botany. Theology is the effect, religion is the cause; theology is simply the religious experience analyzed and traced back to its causes.

(3) Christianity is not Merely History.

The Christian faith entered the world at a definite time and place and took its position in the historic order. It is expressed through a crucifixion, a resurrection, a pentecostal assembly, a series of missionary journeys. The history of Christianity covers the most important section of the world's history, but Christianity is something more than all these.

What are the abiding realities of religion? Note out text. It is of the abiding things I wish to speak. These abiding elements are not stationary, dead like the pyramids, set up as landmarks of a remote antiquity. But they are abiding like the constant river which ever moves toward the sea, or the vigorous oak which rises toward the sky.

(a) Now Abideth Faith.

Faith has an enduring quality. It is no modern virtue. It was present at the birth-hour of Jewish nationality. I know that some tell us that civilization has outgrown the Old Testament, and that the Twentieth Century cannot sit down at the door of Abraham's tent for instruction in righteousness (Gal. 3: 14-29). Faith stands with us today as the representative of that which is fundamental and distinctive in the Christian world. It stands for God as the Creator of the universe, for Christ as the world's Savior and Teacher, for the Holy Spirit as man's Comforter, for the Bible as God's inspired Book and man's sufficient Guide. It stands for the Bible School and the home.

(b) Now Abideth Hope.

Hope is the atmosphere where faith has its life. The Bible is the book of hope. From Genesis to Revelations it means progress, preparation, expectation. There is a sound of events approaching. There are steps in the distance. They draw nearer. Some one is coming. It is the Word of the God of hope. If you have lost confidence in it as the Word of God, you have lost the title deed of hope, for the Bible is the only book that gives you a sure hope.

In Heb. 6: 17-19, the blessed hope is described and illustrated: "A hope set before us"; not uncertain, but confirmed by an oath. "A hope sure and steadfast"; rest on the promise of a God that cannot lie. "It enters within the veil"; the writer of this Epistle never lost sight of the priesthood and the sanctuary. "It is the anchor of the soul"; the folly of going to sea without an anchor. Think of a life that has no anchorage, no sure refuge, no abiding place.

(c) Now Abideth Charity and Love.

That this heaven-inspired charity is a vigorous reality is indicated by the presence of this God-like love in the world today. But, says some one, how do I know there is a God? I have never seen Him. A French philosopher said in the days of the Revolution, "If it could be shown that there was no God, we should have to invent one." He felt that God was a necessity. In Him we can see the adequate Cause and Creator of all things, and in His wisdom and power and goodness the mind finds rest.

Hear Paul on this matter. He was the Apostle of brains, scholarship, high culture. In I Cor. 13: 1-3, he speaks of the things most prized among men: eloquence, knowledge, faith, self-sacrifice.

(1) Eloquence, verse 1: "Though I speak with tongues."

(2) Knowledge, verse 2: "Though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge."

(3) Faith, verse 2: "Though I have all faith and could remove mountains."

(4) Self-sacrifice, verse 3: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and give my body to be burned, and have not love, I am nothing."

Kokomo, Indiana.

The European Conflict from Various Angles

Friends in America cannot fail to enter into deep sympathy with Friends in England and Ireland, and the widely scattered Friends on the Continent of Europe, who are already beginning to realize at close hand something of the horrors of war. Perhaps in most instances their conscientious testimony against war will safeguard them from personal danger, yet universally they have been dipped into sorrow as they see their cherished peace principles trampled under feet, and they are made to realize that the ideals of Christian brotherhood for which the Society of Friends has ever stood are yet far from becoming the ideals of so-called civilization.

We give below two viewpoints of the war from two of our well known American Friends now in Europe. The first is from Allen C. Thomas, Clerk of Baltimore Yearly Meeting and for many years Librarian at Haverford College, who writes us from Kendal, England, under date of August 10th. The second is from John F. Hanson, a well known minister and member of Oregon Yearly Meeting, who is now visiting his native land of Norway.

These letters are followed by a strong statement issued a few days ago by the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting, which we are glad to bring to the attention of American Friends. Our readers will not fail to notice the note of optimism running through this document. Our English Friends are already looking beyond the war, and are seeing the time when the shattered ends of a Christian civilization must again be gathered up. They will not fail to have our earnest prayers as they face their tremendous tasks, now made doubly hard by this cruel war.—THE EDITOR.

England at War

KENDAL, ENGLAND, August 10, 1914.

Editor The American Friend:

As I sit I have only to raise my eyes and see one of nature's very beautiful landscapes. In the foreground is a trim English garden—lawn as we should call it in America—with its unsurpassed turf of brilliant green, its beds of gay flowers, its trellises of roses, its hedges of evergreen laurel, its winding walks, now in the open and now concealed by closely growing shrubbery. Beyond are the fields with cattle and sheep peacefully grazing on abundant verdure. Still further are the hills, and beyond them the mountains, while every now and then in the distance the escaping steam of a locomotive indicates a railway, while the striking of a town clock tells of the existence of a town nearby.

In this almost ideally perfect peaceful scene, it is almost impossible to realize that a terrible war is being waged not many hundred miles away, and that all around us every preparation is being made for offensive and defensive warfare.

We left London on the 31st of July. War had begun on the Continent, but it was hoped and indeed confidently expected that England would not feel forced to join in the conflict. Those hopes have been rudely shattered. War was declared against Germany on August 4th. The speech of Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Minister, that of Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, and finally the publication of the correspondence with Germany, have in the eyes of the vast majority of Englishmen justified the action of the British Government. There seems no doubt that Germany's real object in declaring war was to crush France, and if possible annex Belgium or Holland or any small defenceless country she might choose, and so make Germany the arbiter of Europe, and thus establish still more securely an Empire based upon force and ruling by military authority.

Independently of any understanding with France or treaty obligations to Belgium, England was compelled to meet this issue. The question to decide was, shall England interfere now or later? For, that England, owing to Germany's stand, would be forced to take an active part sooner or later, was felt to be inevitable. Such was the position of the English Government, and taking everything into consideration, from their point of view, it is not to be wondered that war was declared. There can be no question that, so far as our knowledge goes, Germany after breaking deliberately her treaty obligations to Belgium and laying down conditions which she could not expect England to accept, in her pride of military prowess and believing in its efficacy, has begun a war full of ominous possibilities. Germany's unprovoked attack on Belgium at peace and anxious only to keep her neutrality which had been granted by Germany herself, is to be matched only by the selfishness and greed of Napoleon I.

So far as may be judged from the newspapers without regard to party, and from conversations with men of different political opinions, the general feeling almost without exception is that England has been forced into this war. At the same time it is gratifying to see the respect with which the newspapers, even those politically opposed, have spoken of Lord Morley and John Burns, and of Mr. Trevelyan, the former two of whom resigned from the Cabinet and the latter from an important government office, because they could not support the war policy of their colleagues.

This place is a small town in the north of England, but from what can be gathered, the attitude of its inhabitants is that of the rest of the country. During the past few days the town has been full of the signs of warlike preparations. Royal proclamations of various kinds, notices to alien Germans to register at once under pain of severe punishment, calls "To arms," orders to "Territorials" and other military organizations to report to headquarters at once, notices that One Pound and Ten Shilling notes and Postal Orders must be accepted as legal tender, have been posted in prominent places. All sports, games and strictly political meetings have been postponed indefinitely, and religious services for prayer are held. All through one night railway trains were passing continuously, conveying troops to Dundee, a military station in Scotland. There have been many "Territorials" in the town answering the call to arms and hastening to join their regiments, but there have been no bands playing, no shouting, no noise, but all persons looking on with grave, almost solemn faces. Crowds have been in the streets, but all were quiet and subdued.

"What terrible times we be living in," I heard one rough looking man say to another, and the countenances of both and the tone of their voices showed that they felt what was said. In the mill, in the shop, in the home, everywhere, England is feeling what war means in a way that she has not felt it for a century. Already suffering in one way has begun. The neighboring lake region, at this time of year usually crowded with visitors, is almost deserted; railroad trains have been put on the winter schedule, lodging house and hotel engagements have been cancelled, and those who count on the summer visitor as their chief source of income for the year are left with their houses empty. I heard of one hotel with sixteen employees and no guests. The company which carries on the largest coaching business has had fifty of its hundred horses "commandeered."

The railroads estimate that on last Saturday, the 8th, 20,000 summer visitors returned home from Blackpool, the great summer seaside resort of Northern England, leaving the place empty and hundreds deprived of their means of livelihood. Such are some of the baleful effects of war which one hardly takes into account in comparison with the horrible direct loss of life and suffering.

The situation in which Friends find themselves placed is no easy one, but they are earnestly and prayerfully striving to take that part which will help the suffering and make for peace, and which in no way will compromise their belief that Christ is the Prince of Peace. The readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will have seen the admirable paper which the Meeting for Sufferings has issued and published in the great newspapers of England. The true position and duty of Friends in the present crisis could hardly be better stated, and it is needless to add anything except to say that those Friends with whom we have come in contact are quietly and trustfully awaiting whatever may be for them in the future.

No doubt the plight of Americans on the Continent has been fully described in the American newspapers. In England the closing of all banks for several days and the impossibility of getting drafts and travelers' cheques cashed caused great apprehension, aggravated by the fear of not being able to return to America. Though the banks will now cash drafts and cheques, the risks of a homeward passage are by no means removed, as to sail in a British ship may mean capture by a German cruiser. The steamers sailing under the American flag are too few to accommodate those who are eager to go. Those who have sailing dates later on are waiting the course of events in the hope that some reasonably safe means of transit will be available.

Up to the time of writing this letter, the war has been most unfavorable to Germany. The check which she has received in Belgium must have been a great surprise to her. Her selfish and ungenerous treatment of France in 1871 has brought its legitimate result in the revengeful feeling in France, as shown by the proclamation of yesterday, August 9th, to the Alsations by the French general, in which he says: "Children of Alsace: After forty-four years of sad waiting the French soldiers are treading the fresh soil of your noble country—the first workers in the great work of revenge."

Germany with her vast army and great resources may prolong the struggle for months, but in any event suffering and carnage and terrible loss of life seem inevitable.

ALLEN C. THOMAS.

The Beginning of the Struggle

STAVANGER, NORWAY, August 2, 1914.

Editor The American Friend:

Not since the days of Napoleon has Europe been so shaken up as by the events of the last ten days. Like the distant rumbling of a coming storm were the incipient confabs of Austria and Servia, and but few know their import. Events have developed with great rapidity these days. The first peal of the brewing storm broke when Kaiser William of Germany, who was supposed to be rustivating in Hardanger Fjord near here, and whose fleet of war ships was leisurely practicing markmanship just outside the coast of Norway, received a telegram while out on a walk posing as a tourist. Instantly turning back to his steamer, he ordered all on board, and set out with all possible haste for Germany.

By wireless he commanded his fleet to follow with all possible speed. Vessels in port could not even take on their full measure of coal. As he left the landing he said with a wise wink to a friend, "I have been known as a man of peace; now I will be known as a man of war." In a few hours he had declared war on Russia. Rustivating in Norway allayed suspicion while the Kaiser perfected his plans, and worked his wires, until he was ready to strike. By overriding every rule of neutrality, Luxemburg and Belgium were at once invaded. One million men were put on the French frontier, and another great force on the Russian line. One of the first acts of the Kaiser was to put the leading Socialists in prison to forestall their influence. All this is regarded as fine tactics in military circles, stratagems of a high order. Following in quick succession came the closing of ports, the driving out of foreigners, the stopping of the exportation of coal and foodstuffs, the extinguishing of lights on the coast, the demoralization of business and trade, the consternation and pallor upon the strongest faces. It was like the dead calm just as a tornado bursts upon the landscape.

Such is the rule of the despot. The people are bewildered, the priest at the cathedral is destitute of vision and cannot help the people. Paid by the State he must be subject to its military policy. The small states are mobilizing to defend their neutrality. Nobody seems to know what the next move in the game will be. But we know that the whole machinery of European civilization is stopped, a bomb has been thrown in among the fine wheels. The hydra-headed monster, Barbarism, is in the saddle, riding roughshod.

The door knobs of thousands of homes already wear the black crepe. The butcher business is the chief occupation of the nations. Religion, philosophy, literature, education, all are flung aside as so much tinsel. Millions of young men, the flower of the nations, are in the slaughter house. The captain of a vessel is brought up in court to answer the charge of incompetency and neglect for steering his vessel on the rocks and is deposed from his position. When will the nations awake to the need of deposing the human monsters who engineer and execute the war crime on humanity?

JOHN F. HANSON.

Statement by English Friends

To Men and Women of Goodwill in the British Empire:

A MESSAGE FROM THE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF FRIENDS

We find ourselves to-day in the midst of what may prove to be the fiercest conflict in the history of the human race. Whatever may be our view of the processes which have led to its inception, we have now to face the fact that war is proceeding upon a terrific scale and that our own country is involved in it.

We recognise that our Government has made most strenuous efforts to preserve peace, and has entered into the war under a grave sense of duty to a smaller State towards which we had moral and treaty obligations. While, as a Society, we stand firmly to the belief that the method of force is no solution of any question, we hold that the present moment is not one for criticism, but for devoted service to our nation.

What is to be the attitude of Christian men and women and of all who believe in the brotherhood of humanity? In the distress and perplexity of this new situation, many are so stunned as scarcely to be able to discern the path of duty. In the sight of God we should seek to get back to first principles, and to determine on a course of action which shall prove us to be worthy citizens of His Kingdom. In making this effort let us remember those groups of men and women, in all the other nations concerned, who will be animated by a similar spirit, and who believe with us that the fundamental unity of men in the family of God is the one enduring reality, even when we are forced into an apparent denial of it.

Although it would be premature to make any pronouncement upon many aspects of the situation on which we have no sufficient data for a reliable judgment, we can, and do, call ourselves and you to a consideration of certain principles which may safely be enunciated.

1.—The conditions which have made this catastrophe possible must be regarded by us as essentially unchristian. This war spells the bankruptcy of much that we too lightly call Christian. No nation, no Church, no individual can be wholly exonerated.

We have all participated to some extent in these conditions. We have been content, or too little discontented, with them. If we apportion blame, let us not fail first to blame ourselves, and to seek the forgiveness of Almighty God.

2.—In the hour of darkest night it is not for us to lose heart. Never was there greater need for men of faith. To many will come the temptation to deny God, and to turn away with despair from the Christianity which seems to be identified with bloodshed on so gigantic a scale. Christ is crucified afresh to-day. If some forsake Him and flee, let it be more clear that there are others who take their stand with Him, come what may.

3.—This we may do by continuing to show the spirit of love to all. For those whose conscience forbids them to take up arms there are other ways of serving, and definite plans are already being made to enable them to take their full share in helping their country at this crisis. In pity and helpfulness towards the suffering and stricken in our own country we shall all share. If we stop at this, "what do we more than others?" Our Master bids us pray for and love our enemies. May we be saved from forgetting that they too are the children of our Father. May we think of them with love and pity. May we banish thoughts of bitterness, harsh judgments, the revengeful spirit. To do this is in no sense unpatriotic. We may find ourselves the subjects of misunderstanding. But our duty is clear—to be courageous in the cause of love and in the hate of hate. May we prepare ourselves even now for the day when once more we shall stand shoulder to shoulder with those with whom we are now at war, in seeking to bring in the Kingdom of God.

4.—It is not too soon to begin to think out the new situation which will arise at the close of the war. We are being compelled to face the fact that the human race has been guilty of a gigantic folly. We have built up a culture, a civilisation, and even a religious life, surpassing in many respects that of any previous age, and we have been content to rest it all upon a foundation of sand. Such a state of society cannot endure so long as the last word in human affairs is brute force. Sooner or later it was bound to crumble. At the close of this war we shall be faced with a stupendous task of reconstruction. In some ways it will be rendered supremely difficult by the legacy of ill-will; by the destruction of human life, by the tax upon all in meeting the barest wants of the millions who will have suffered through the war. But in other ways it will be easier. We shall be able to make a new start, and to make it all together. From this point of view we may even see a ground of comfort in the fact that our own nation is involved. No country will be in a position which will compel others to struggle again to achieve the inflated standard of military power existing before the war. We shall have an opportunity of reconstructing European culture upon the only possible permanent foundation—mutual trust and goodwill.

Such a reconstruction would not only secure the future of European civilisation, but would save the world from the threatened catastrophe of seeing the great nations of the East building their new social order also upon the sand, and thus turning the thought and wealth needed for their education and development into that which could only be a fetter to themselves and a menace to the West. Is it too much to hope for that we shall, when this time comes, be able as brethren together to lay down far-reaching principles for the future of mankind such as will insure us for ever against a repetition of this gigantic folly? If this is to be accomplished it will need the united and persistent pressure of all who believe in such a future for mankind. There will still be multitudes who can see no good in the culture of other nations, and who are unable to believe in any genuine brotherhood among those of different races. Already those who think otherwise, must begin to think and plan for such a future if the supreme opportunity of the final peace is not to be lost, and if we are to be saved from being again sucked down into the whirlpool of military aggrandisement and rivalry. In time of peace all the nations have been preparing for war. In the time of war let all men of goodwill prepare for peace. The Christian conscience must be awakened to the magnitude of the issues. The great friendly democracies in each country must be ready to make their influence felt.

5.—If this is to happen it seems to us of vital importance that the war should not be carried on in any vindictive spirit, and that it should be brought to a close at the earliest possible moment. We should have it clearly before our minds from the beginning that we are not going into it in order to crush and humiliate any nation. The conduct of negotiations has taught us the necessity of prompt action in international affairs. Should the opportunity offer, we, in this nation, should be ready to act with promptitude in demanding that the terms suggested are of a kind which it will be possible for all parties to accept, and that the negotiations be entered upon in the right spirit.

6.—We believe in God. Human freewill gives us power to hinder the fulfillment of His loving purposes. It also means that we may actively co-operate with Him. If it is given to us to see something of a glorious possible future, after all the desolation and sorrow that lie before us, let us be sure that sight has been given us by Him. No day should close without our putting up our prayer to Him that He will lead His family into a new and better day. At a time when so severe a blow is being struck at the great causes of moral, social, and religious reform for which so many have struggled, we need to look with expectation and confidence to Him, whose cause they are, and find a fresh inspiration in the certainty of His victory.

Love, hope, fear, faith, these make humanity, these are its sign and note and character.—Browning.

Suicide of Militarism

The war lords of Europe are now engaged in proving the necessity for depriving them of their present powers. They are demonstrating as never before the ancient wisdom, which declared that "War is a game which kings could not play at if their subjects were wise," and they are preparing for all nations the greatest opportunity that has ever been provided for the final abolition of war as a means of settling international disputes or promoting personal or national ambitions.

For unnumbered centuries the wisest and best of mankind have been striving to impress upon the minds and hearts of their fellowmen a realizing sense of the horrors and suffering, the sinfulness and uselessness of war. But although there has been a wonderful increase in the number of their followers and co-laborers during the last 20 years, it has seemed until recently that it might be a long period before their propaganda could be so extended as to secure in all the leading countries the majorities necessary to control the policies of their respective governments. These conditions have been totally changed by the events of July and August, 1914.

The educational propaganda, which might otherwise have required another decade, has been unconsciously assumed by a power which cannot be denied or evaded. The rulers who control the most powerful of human agencies are now forcing upon every nation, every class and every individual a practical, personal knowledge or experience of the sufferings, the misery and the losses, which are the inevitable consequence of great armaments and great wars. No peace or arbitration societies could compare with these kings of the earth in the rapidity and thoroughness with which they are now convincing all men everywhere, that such world-ruining conflicts as are now raging must and shall be made impossible for all time to come.

Can any one doubt that when the demons of war and famine, and disease and financial ruin have done their worst, and the surviving combatants can fight no longer, there will be a world-wide demand for some new form of organization that will make another war between civilized nations forever impossible. Whoever and whatever may stand in the way of that demand will be swept aside like straw before a hurricane.

To discuss and agree upon the wisest plans for submission to the war-worn nations is an urgent and imperative duty for those who are best fitted to perform it. Under present conditions no proposition should be rejected because it seems too radical, unless something better can be devised.

Even a plan based upon the abolition of all armies, except one international force, controlled by an international commission and used for the protection of every co-operating nation, may be found worthy of consideration.

The Boards of the Five Years Meeting

WANTED—SUPPORT FOR THE BOARDS OF THE FIVE YEARS MEETING.

The need is urgent at the present time that we, as a denomination, revise our estimate of the relative importance of our various departments of church work. During a recent period in our history the evangelists largely occupied the field of our denominational endeavor in this country. Their chief, not to say exclusive method of work was the revival meeting. The life of the Church, at that time newly awakened, came to express itself predominantly through that one channel. Prominent among the great results of that revival era was the birth of the zeal for foreign missions which occupies so large a place in the interest of our members today. These two elements, revivalism and foreign missionary work, have become established as fundamental and central in our church life. So must they always be held. But it is of vital consequence to the future of them both that the contributions to their success which are now rendered by other departments of our work shall be fully recognized. The evangelist at home and the missionary abroad are no longer the unrelated instrumentalities in the conversion of the world to Christ that they were conceived to be a generation ago. In the promotion of the Kingdom of Heaven the specific preaching of the Gospel must always be the supreme force, "the cutting edge," of all Christian effort.

The evangelist and missionary must always be in the van. But behind them today are certain great contributory agencies that have come into positions of essential importance. The fountain-heads of future Quaker devotion to evangelism, whether in the home or foreign field, are at present to be sought within those agencies. The Bible School, the Young People's Organization, the College and the Academy have become the indispensable allies of the pastor, the evangelist and the missionary. The Bible School is no longer the nursery of our church membership alone; it is the recruiting station of our future evangelistic and missionary forces as well. Every live Christian Endeavor Society is a training school for future preachers and missionaries. The foreign missionary cause cannot say to the denominational college "I have no need of thee"; no more can the cause of evangelism at home. Neglect these springs of life and power in the Church and the channels of evangelistic and missionary effort will soon run dry. From this viewpoint it may almost be said that the fundamental problem of our Church today is to charge our Bible Schools, Endeavor Societies, Colleges and Academies with spiritual life and practical efficiency.

Special attention should be made here of the need of money for the work of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board. Under our present organization it is the Home Mission Board of our denomination in America. In order, in some measure to set forth the seriousness of the prevalent indifference of Friends toward this department of work, a single illustration of the place which it holds the interest of other denominations may be mentioned. The United Presbyterians of this country, as a separate body, have been in existence only a little more than fifty years. Their membership is only seventy-five per cent. greater than our own. The average wealth of their members is probably not greater than that of Friends. Yet in the year 1913 they raised the substantial sum of $189,719 for the support of their Home Mission work alone. Some months ago our own Home Mission Board made a general appeal for funds throughout the Yearly Meetings and the total response was less than $100! From the beginning of its history the sister denomination just referred to has made the work of Home Missions "not only its supreme missionary responsibility and endeavor, but its carrying out of that purpose has always involved sending ministers of Jesus Christ to preach the Gospel, organize churches, nourish and help them until they become helpers of other needy fields."

As a result of this unvarying loyalty to the home field that denomination has planted and aided toward self-support 752 Home Mission churches, more than the total number of our congregations within the limits of the Five Years Meeting. In so doing it has spent over $2,000,000. At the same time it is to be remembered that their liberality toward foreign missions exceeds that of our own Church. It is stated on official authority that the entire church history of that denomination is attributable to its zeal in Home Mission work. Here is abundant food for Quaker reflection, ample room for searchings of our denominational heart. In the light of such facts as the foregoing, is it unreasonable to insist that the claims of the Home Mission Board of the Five Years Meeting for financial support ought to receive like recognition in all our congregations with the claims of the Foreign Mission Board? Shall it not be so in the future?

It is gratifying to record that two Yearly Meetings, Nebraska and California, have this year undertaken systematic measures for enlisting their component meetings in the assistance of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting. The former of these is the youngest among the Yearly Meetings. It is struggling nobly against heavy odds as a pioneer in a difficult field. Yet its General Superintendent in a recent letter states that he is urging the meetings wherever he goes to respond to the Five Years Meeting work and has secured pledges for the same from each meeting thus far visited by him this year. Harmony Church, a meeting of only sixty members in South Dakota, made an offering of five dollars, an exhibition of splendid loyalty to the Boards of the Five Years Meeting. When a like spirit comes to be manifested by the congregations generally throughout our Church a great denominational advance will have been made.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS,

Pasadena, California.

General Secretary.

PERSONAL MENTION

President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College, gave an address before the Marion County, Indiana, Teachers' Association last week.

Walter W. and Mellie M. Brown have accepted the call of the meeting at Paoli, Indiana, to remain as pastors for another year.

J. I. Phillips, of Converse, Indiana, has been secured to serve as pastor of the meeting at New London, Indiana, the coming year.

Fred Harris and Earl Alkire have been recorded ministers of the gospel by Gate Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, within the past year.

Augustus Dwyer, of Philadelphia, was present at Poughkeepsie Monthly Meeting, New York, on August 20th, and spoke very acceptably.

William J. Cleaver, who has been serving as pastor at New London, Indiana, has accepted a call to the meeting at Sugar Plain, Indiana.

J. H. Peele has been appointed editor of the Friends Messenger of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and Clara I. Cox editor of the news department.

Joseph John Mills, the General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting, is expecting to attend the coming sessions of Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings.

George W. Bird, who has been serving the meeting at Pennville, Indiana, as pastor, has accepted a call to the pastorate at Portland, Indiana, the coming year.

Richard R. Newby, pastor of the meeting at Des Moines, Iowa, has joined his wife in a visit at West Liberty. Harry R. Keates will have charge of the Sabbath services in his absence.

Mary C. Lindley, the Intermediate Christian Endeavor Superintendent of Paoli Meeting, Indiana, will leave in the near future to enter the Thomas Training School at Detroit, Michigan.

Fred C. Lebert since leaving Hartford Theological Seminary, has been supplying the pastorate at Elkader, Iowa. He has accepted a call to the pastorate at New Providence, Iowa, for the coming year.

William B. Harvey, of Philadelphia, planned to join William C. Allen in California, on August 30th, and they together were to sail from San Francisco for Asia on the steamer Siberia, on September 5th.

Robert E. Pretlow presided at a public mass meeting held at Seattle, Washington, on the afternoon of August 16th, in the interests of peace. In presenting the resolutions he said that the argument that great armaments are the surest guarantees of peace had been disproved by the present conflict in Europe.

Melissa S. Fellow, of Beaver, Oklahoma, is busy with W. C. T. U. conventions, and piloting the public speaker of that organization, Mrs. Judge Grimstead, over Beaver County in the interest of national prohibition.

Robert W. Douglas was a caller at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND last week on his way to attend Dublin Quarterly Meeting at Rich Square. He is in good health and has some prospect of attending Western Yearly Meeting.

M. L. Swafford, who for the past year has been the pastor of the meeting near Carthage, Missouri, has moved back to Haviland, Kansas, where his children will be in school the coming year. This leaves the meeting at Carthage without a pastor.

Henry C. Fellow, county superintendent of schools in Beaver County, Oklahoma, is expecting in the near future to issue a book of his poems for sale and distribution. He intends to visit his father in Howard County, Indiana, this autumn.

Joseph Elkinton and family, of Philadelphia, who left America last spring for a trip around the world, and who were caught in Norway at the beginning of the war, have crossed over to Norway, and are anticipating an early return home.

J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage, Indiana, preached a strong and inspiring sermon on Sabbath morning, August 23, at the last service in the old First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana. The pastor, Charles E. Hiatt, was ill and unable to be present.

Alexander C. Purdy and wife, who had gone to Europe for a year's study in Germany, sailed for America from Rotterdam on the steamship Ryndam on August 22. They were due to arrive in New York on the 31st. This information came in a cablegram to Mr. Purdy's father, Ellison R. Purdy, of Wilmington, Ohio.

Charles E. Hiatt, pastor of the First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, has been quite ill for the past month, and unable to attend to his duties. The meeting realized his need of a complete rest, and so unknown to him, the members raised a fund of $100.00, which was presented on August 16th, $50.00 being presented to Mr. Hiatt in bills, and $50.00 to Mrs. Hiatt in gold. As soon as he was able to make the trip, he and his wife left for Winona Lake, where it is hoped he will soon grow strong again.

NEWS ITEMS

We have received word that the recent West Branch Quarterly Meeting held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, on August 15th, was unusually good.

On account of the European war, Professor Roderick and Mrs. Scott will not plan to go to Europe for their mission work this autumn, as had been originally intended. Their plans are uncertain for the present.

The meeting at Paoli, Indiana, has been much improved under the pastorate of Walter W. and Mellie M. Brown. The Sabbath School with Eva Millis as Superintendent, has had a fairly good attendance during the warm summer. On a recent Sabbath, John J. Copeland brought in a new class of men from the street with six in attendance.

Prospects are bright for a large attendance at Laurence Academy, Gate, Oklahoma, the coming year. Mabel Salman, of Friends' University, has been chosen as Principal, and Mabel Wright, of Penn College, as Assistant. The latter has been teaching music in Gate the past year. Lora Mendenhall will continue as matron of the hall.

The new recreation grounds on the rear lawn of the Friends' meeting house at Poughkeepsie, New York, are proving a great success. The tennis courts are in great demand. The Sabbath School of the meeting held its annual picnic at Tyrell Lake near Washington Hollow, on August 24th. A basket lunch was enjoyed on the shores of the lake.

The commodious basement of the new Western Yearly Meeting house at Plainfield, Indiana, is being put in order and equipped for Yearly Meeting week. Meals will be served on the lines of economic ideals for those desiring to patronize the service. This department will be a practical asset to the public comfort. The rest room and the check room in the basement will no doubt be welcomed by many.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND desires to acknowledge receipt from Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, of London, England, of the statement on the war situation issued by the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting, and published as an advertisement in all the great English daily newspapers. Demands for nearly 1000,000 copies have already been made. We are glad to be able to present it before AMERICAN FRIEND readers in this issue.

As has been the custom for many years, the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the meeting at Danville, Indiana, held an all-day missionary meeting on August 21, at the home of Charles Hollowell. Thirty-five were present to enjoy the feast spread at the noon hour. Members of the Society, assisted by little Doris Dean Howell, Edith Barker and Helen Parker, gave an interesting program, beginning at two o'clock.

We learn from the Philadelphia Friend that Western Quarterly Meeting was held at Westgrove on August 21st. Several persons not in membership with them were present, also a number of visitors from other meetings. In the business sessions a concern arose that the members should not allow themselves to depend alone upon the spoken word. An impressive appeal was made that "Our meetings should be in the Life, that they may be in the Power"

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, August 22 and 23. There were no ministers from other meetings present. Harry R. Keates, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, preached on Saturday morning. After a noon lunch, the regular business of the Quarterly Meeting was transacted. A resolution was directed to be sent to the President, commending his persistent attitude toward the peace question, and expressing sympathy for him on account of his recent bereavement.

Meade A. Kelsey preached his farewell sermon at Oskaloosa, Iowa, on August 23. On the following evening a farewell reception was held in the meeting house for the Kelseys and also for Elbert and Ida Hill, who leave within a few days to spend a year in California. Meade Kelsey and family left last week for their new field of work at Spiceland, Indiana. Their many friends at Oskaloosa regret to have them leave. Their work the past three years has been very helpful and was much appreciated.

Gate Quarterly Meeting, held at New Point, Texas, was attended by about thirty members who had to travel from thirty-five to sixty miles. The church was strengthened and souls entered into deeper experiences. Some accepted Christ for the first time. Family altars will be erected and the children trained for Christ. Talks for Friends' periodicals were given. Some subscriptions were taken. The missionary study class was urged, with the suggestion that a chapter be read at the time of each monthly meeting if no other time seemed suitable. The church in the west is awakening to its own needs.

The First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, is now holding services in a tabernacle, which has been erected on the rear of the church lot. The tabernacle is about fifty by eighty feet, and was constructed by the volunteer labor of the men of the congregation, the Ladies' Aid Society furnishing free dinner to the workers each day. Services will be held here until the new building is ready for occupancy. The old building is partially torn down; it is being entirely remodeled, and will be utterly changed in its appearance, and will have almost double the seating capacity of the old one. This work was made necessary by the greatly increased membership and attendance the past year.

The series of Sabbath evening union open air meetings held on the courthouse lawn in Paoli, Indiana, closed on August 16th. The sermon was given by Mellie M. Brown, associated with her husband as pastor of the Friends' Church, and was greatly enjoyed by the audience. The song service was unusually fine. Miss Fern York, of French Lick, sang a beautiful solo. The union meetings have been very beneficial to the community. On the morning of August 23, a three weeks' union tent meeting campaign was begun, with C. A. Barrett, an evangelist from Delaware, Ohio, in charge. He is attracting large crowds, and the churches are hoping for great results from this union effort.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

The Committee on Order of Business of the approaching Western Yearly Meeting has announced some changes in the program for Yearly Meeting. On Saturday afternoon, September 19th, the report of the Building Committee will be heard, as will also that of the soliciting committee. Other parts of the program are as follows:

On the 15th, the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight will convene at 2:00 and 7:30 o'clock. In the afternoon, Mellie M. Brown and Thomas C. Brown will lead in the discussion of two important questions. Joseph John Mills will give an address at the evening session.

The Yearly Meeting will hold sessions on Wednesday, the 16th, at 10:00, 2:00 and 7:30 o'clock. At the Social Purity meeting in the evening, Truman C. Kenworthy will give an address. The 10:00 o'clock meeting on Thursday will be Memorial hour, followed by the report of Peace and Literature, with an address by Leanna Hobson. During the afternoon there will be reports on Indian Affairs and on Earlham College. In the evening there will be an address on Prohibition by Elizabeth Stanley.

Friday forenoon will be devoted to the Evangelistic and Church Extension report, while in the afternoon the State of the Church will be considered. In the evening the reports on Bible Schools and Education will be given, with an address by Albert J. Brown. Saturday forenoon will be devoted to the foreign mission reports, with the afternoon given over to matters connected with the new Yearly Meeting house, as above stated. The Christian Endeavor session will be held in the evening, with an address by Thomas E. Jones.

On Sunday as previously announced, Joseph John Mills will give the dedicatory address at 10:00 o'clock. Edmund Stanley will speak at the 2:00 o'clock meeting in connection with the dedication, and Robert L. Kelly at the 7:30 o'clock meeting. All these meetings will be in the house. Other meetings will be held in the tent.

On Monday morning the final session will be held, and will be devoted to the closing business of the Yearly Meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE

Carthage, Missouri,
August 24, 1914.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

I have lately returned from a sojourn in Arkansas, visiting our two sons and doing some gospel service both in meetings and in Bible Schools. We found an open door for service. Our youngest son is superintendent of a school with an average attendance of seventy-five, located in a valley surrounded by the Ozark mountains. I found the people hungry for the gospel. I preached and delivered a Sabbath School talk nearly every Sabbath.

As the different Yearly Meetings are convening this year, I have felt an unusual desire that the leading of the dear Master may control the issues that are forcing themselves upon us as a branch of the church. I would like to send a kind remembrance to the many friends that I have met in these Yearly Meetings. While my body is becoming weak through age, I can say that my interest in the church is not lessened.

PARKER MOON.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING NOTICE

Ministers of other Yearly Meetings with credentials to attend Indiana Yearly Meeting will please inform Timothy Nicholson, Richmond, Indiana, promptly, in order that suitable provision for their board and lodging may be provided. Please give post office address.

All others who desire assistance in finding board and lodging will please write to Robert W. Randle, 1234 Main Street, Richmond, Indiana.

CELEBRATING NINETIETH BIRTHDAY

Sarah B. Woodard, of Fountain City, Indiana, is known far and wide both among Friends and others, formerly as one of the first teachers in Earlham Friends' Boarding School, and later as a minister and active member of Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends. In company with her children who were all present, and other relatives and friends, she celebrated her ninetieth birthday anniversary at her home in Fountain City on August 26.

The day was an ideal one, and the occasion will not soon be forgotten by any one who was privileged to attend. A feature of the day was the presence of all five children: Charles, with his wife, from California; Dr. Thomas R., and daughter, from Knightstown, Indiana; Mary, who lives at home with her mother; Harry, from Boston, and Herbert with his wife and two children, from Chicago. Other grandchildren and great-grandchildren were present from Marion, Indiana, as were also her brother-in-law, Luke Woodard, and his wife, Elvira, from Fountain City. Other relatives were in attendance from Chicago, Ohio, and various places in Indiana, including nephews, nieces, cousins and others.

In all, about fifty persons sat down at one o'clock to a bounteous repast, served in the shade of the lawn. During the afternoon a number of residents of Fountain City called to pay their respects. A splendid but informal program of exercises was rendered on the lawn in honor of the occasion.

Herbert, the youngest son, with an excellent and well trained baritone voice, rendered several selections in song, with his wife presiding at the organ. Dr. Thomas R., the next to the oldest son, read a well prepared account of the life of his mother, which contained a well deserved and touching tribute to her motherly care and her womanly graces as they had been manifested throughout her long life.

Luke Woodard read an appropriate original poem which he had prepared for the occasion, descriptive of the characteristics and progress of civilization during the past ninety years.

Anna Kelly, a granddaughter, who has just returned from a prolonged service in rescue and mission work in China, gave an interesting account of her work and conditions in that country. Several other relatives and friends joined in the general tributes that were being paid to the worth and work of this beloved minister.

A number of presents were given, tokens of love and affection. Sarah B. Woodard, who is still able for many of the active duties of life, expressed her appreciation of the kindness of all who had remembered her with well wishes and other expressions of their love and esteem.

THE PROPOSED MEN'S CONFERENCE

In view of the interest taken in the proposed Men's Conference announcement should be made of the progress of the investigation of the subject which is being carried on by the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting.

From letters received from different parts of the country, it is clear that there is approval of the calling of the Conference by many Friends, and equally clear that many other Friends who are no less enthusiastic in regard to the future of the Friends' church are doubtful as to the wisdom of such a course at this time.

One Yearly Meeting has expressed unanimously the judgment that a Conference such as has been proposed should not be held; other Yearly Meetings are unanimous in approving it. But even in the case of the Yearly Meetings approving it there is much doubt expressed by some members as to the probability of a large or even representative attendance.

In view of these conditions as reported, it therefore seems clear that no action favorable to the calling of the Conference can be taken before the time of the annual meeting of the Executive Committee in October.

ALLEN D. HOLE,

Chairman of the Executive Committee.
August 27, 1914.

PEACE PRIZE ESSAYS

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

In an issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND of a few weeks ago, you gave a notice of the cash prizes amounting to five thousand dollars offered by the Church Peace Union for the best essays on international peace. But an item of information very important to would-be contestants, which was given in The Christian Herald for July 22, was omitted by you,—the address of the Secretary of the Church Peace Union, from whom needed literature can be obtained by those who will compete.

Will you kindly reprint the list of prizes, with this addition, as given below. I think that one or more of these prizes should be won by members of our Society.

"1. A prize of $1,000 for the best monograph of between 1,500 and 2,500 words on any phase of international peace by any pastor of any church in the United States.

"2. Three prizes, one of $500, one of $300, and one of $200, for the three best essays on international peace by students of the theological seminaries in the United States.

"3. One thousand dollars in ten prizes of $100 each to any church member between twenty and thirty years of age.

"4. Twenty prizes of $50 each to Sunday School pupils between fifteen and twenty years of age.

"5. Fifty prizes of $20 each to Sunday School pupils between ten and fifteen years of age.

It is hoped that pastors will make the announcement of these prizes in all of the churches and Sunday Schools of the United States.

All essays must be in by January 1, 1915. Further particulars, as well as literature to be used in the preparation of the essays, and lists of books, can be secured from the Secretary of the Church Peace Union, Rev. Frederick Lynch, D.D., 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City."—(From The Christian Herald, July 22, 1914.)

THE ENGLISH DEPUTATION

The deputation of young English Friends to this country hastened their departure for home on account of the war. Four of them sailed for England on August 6th, the other three having sailed previously. It is to be regretted that they were unable to finish their work in this country. American Friends will retain pleasant memories of their visit here, and will hope that they may be privileged to come again.

FAIRMOUNT EFFICIENCY GATHERING

It was an interested assembly of Friends from the various meetings of Fairmount Quarter that met in the Friends' Church at Fairmount, Indiana, August 19th. A good program had been prepared in charge of the Efficiency Committee. As the program proceeded from session to session, the interest was quickened and deepened into a fire of enthusiasm, leaving a burning desire in the hearts of all present to take a firmer grip upon the vital message of Christianity and make it a moving force in hearts and lives.

The address of the Evangelistic session on Wednesday afternoon with Hiram Harvey presiding, was given by Aaron Napier, of Amboy. He said that though the old time methods of evangelism were strikingly suited to the needs of former days, they could not be fitted to present day needs. The special revival effort so strongly emphasized in this day has failed to give the foundation which would hold the new converts. The follow up work has not sufficed. Special revival efforts should be preceded by intense personal work, so that a real need for Christ shall be felt. Too much stress has been placed upon emotional experience, and not enough upon the fact that salvation calls for the exercise of the noblest in man.

At the Missionary session in the afternoon, Charles Sweet, of Muncie, in discussing "The Call of the Church from Non-Christian Lands," made a most stirring appeal. To the Church has been committed the ministry of reconciliation, and the Church heretofore has not felt sufficiently her responsibility. She must now feel the honor that has been placed upon her, and set about the salvation of the world if she herself would be saved.

In the discussion which followed, Thomas E. Jones said that fifty-two student volunteers who are Friends are now waiting to go to the mission field, but there are no funds with which to send them. Friends pay only an average of seventy-eight cents per member for foreign missions. A most talented young woman Friend went under the Board of another denomination in order to get to go.

One is not often permitted to hear such an address as was given Thursday forenoon at the Bible School session by Wilbur K. Thomas, of Boston, on "The Church of Tomorrow." The church of tomorrow is the product of the church of today. The children of today are the church of tomorrow, and their religious training today determines the status of the church to be. The Bible School is the greatest agent in this training. More time must be given than the present half hour; teachers must be trained and the best helps furnished. Our children must be given a guarded education; they must be made Friends. More attention must be given to the commonplace things of life. Children must be taught a devotional attitude, also our inheritance as Friends which includes the quiet communion of the individual soul with God without the intervention of creed or minister or sacrament. We must teach the child to think for himself, and that in time of trouble he can always reach up his hand and touch God.

There is not the official connection between the Bible School and the church that should exist. The funds should be divided between preachers and teachers to secure the best efficiency in religious training.

At the afternoon session, Garfield Cox, winner of the intercollegiate peace prize, presented in a striking address the necessity for peace and its promised fulfillment. He pointed out the strange inconsistency of science that would use its utmost skill in inventing horribly destructive implements of warfare with which to slay multitudes of the flower of manhood, while at the same time preparing some wonderful serum in order to prolong the life of some old man. The economic life has bound the nations together so sensitively that no one part can suffer without the whole suffering also. The time has come when we should broaden our national patriotism into a world loyalty. Then shall war cease to be a necessity. Labor will not permit it. Such work as is being done by Pasteur, Edison, Jane Addams, will challenge the noblest effort of man, and give outlet to his highest impulses of loyalty and patriotism.

The concluding address of the convention was given by Thomas E. Jones, in an enthusiastic appeal to young Friends to get into the movement which has spontaneously grown up among young Friends all over Quakerdom. Various independent groups need to get into touch with each other, and under the leadership of the Five Years Meeting Board, join in a united effort to bring to the world the distinctive message of Quakerism in all the corresponding lines of social service and missions. The young people's organizations heretofore have been interdenominational. The demand now is for the undenominational, yet each denomination giving its distinctive contribution to the forwarding of Christianity as a whole. The Friends have a message that no other denomination has, and this message is called for by the religious world today as never before.

There was appropriate song service and prayer at each session, and pointed discussions following the addresses helped to make these two days a season of inspiration to all the workers. Among the visitors present were J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage; Gervas Carey, of Wichita, Kansas, and Ina Ratliff, missionary from Cuba.

The prevailing thought of the convention was that the Friends' Church is now stirred as never before to a sense of the world's need of her peculiar message, and that now, largely through the enlistment of her young people, she is better equipped than ever before for bearing the Light to those who sit in darkness.

THE BIBLICAL SCHOOL OF FRIENDS' UNIVERSITY

By WILLIAM L. PEARSON

Biblical instruction was a prominent feature of Friends' University from the opening in 1898. In 1907 the work was reorganized into the present Biblical School, when, by the help of generous friends, the Board of Directors provided for the principal and one other professor. They planned also for other professorships with the further expansion of the department. Some professors in the College of Arts and Sciences also teach collateral subjects in the Biblical School. Thus, while there are only two regular professors, there is a total of six professors who offer the wide range of thirty subjects in this department.

The plan of organization, which will doubtless long obtain, includes a curriculum of many subjects in three courses: The Graduate Biblical, the Classical Biblical, and the English Biblical courses, defining three phases of instruction necessary to meet the demands of the churches of all denominations of Christians. The religious movements of our time and of this territory strongly emphasize the importance of all these lines of biblical instruction.

The marked growth of the work and of the number of students during the past few years has been most encouraging. Some of the students came from distant states and yearly meetings, and from a dozen or more Christian denominations. Last year there were 21 Classical Biblical students, those who, among other subjects, take Greek with the purpose of thorough interpretation of the New Testament; 26 English Biblical students, resolved upon the most thorough biblical instruction upon an English basis. These 47 were the regular biblical students of last year. Sixty-seven others took one or more subjects towards the ten hours of biblical work required of every under-graduate in the College, and some of them elect much more than is required. Thus 114 individual students were in the classes of the Biblical School, and a total by classes of 190. It should be noted here, that the work is never allowed to narrow down to mere Bible classes. Strictly biblical under-graduate students take all the work required of other regular students in the College of Arts and Sciences, but they may also complete before graduation a year to a year and a half of their biblical studies.

The growing interest in the heavier, more fundamental subjects is very impressive. In the History of Israel, five hours weekly, 44 were enrolled, the average being lower of course, yet making a record in this basic subject for number, time and thoroughness, with few if any parallels. In the Life of Christ there were 35; in the Gospel of John 22; in the Minor Prophets 22; in Apostolic history 16; in Missions 11; in the Doctrines of Friends 7; in New Testament Exegesis 7; in Biblical Literature and Canon 7; in Hebrew 6; in Biblical Theology 4; etc. At the re-organization of the Biblical School seven years ago, there were only seven or eight students of Greek in Friends' University, none of them, not even the lone minister, interested in his Greek Testament. Last year ten of the students had taken Greek New Testament Exegesis extensively, the most practical study, as it may now be taught, the properly prepared Christian student may elect.

Until the revival of the ancient classics in the colleges as an essential of the best scholarship in biblical and some other lines, the call for Classical Biblical undergraduate work will necessarily be more insistent. For twenty years Bible study in the colleges has greatly increased. But genuine biblical scholarship has correspondingly decreased, and superficial theories have generally prevailed, the Holy Scriptures being often discredited by professors and students on no better ground than sheer conjecture, and with no better authority than Wellhausen's naturalistic tradition. Over against this educational trend the Biblical School is impelled to more thorough historical, exegetical and sound critical study. Well prepared Christian students generally will strive at least to master the New Covenant of our Lord by the aid of the language in which He was pleased to reveal himself. Thanks to recent scholarship we now know that the New Testament was written in the common Greek of Greek-speaking peoples, not in a single dialect.

The Graduate Biblical courses are coming more into demand for advanced work, as was anticipated in the reorganization of the Biblical School. Graduates from two or three colleges will enter the coming year. Some of them will complete about two years and a half of a comprehensive theological course and receive the degree of Master of Arts at the end of the year. The Graduate department will be extended when there is demand for it. The present demand for theological instruction in the Midland is already met in the Biblical School of Friends' University, and Friend ministers may here find practical training and the most important parts of the ordinary theological education.

Last year there were fourteen active ministers of five Christian denominations in the classes, and more than twenty others will doubtless become ministers or missionaries. The Gospel Band devoted to Christian work in and about Wichita numbered twenty-six, and the Volunteer Missionary Band numbered twenty-three. These three groups are the chief efficient forces for applied Christianity affiliated with the Biblical School. One more fact is very significant, the Edward H. Budds Professorship of New Testament Literature and Exegesis is believed to be the first Biblical chair regularly endowed in a Friends' institution.

Wichita, Kansas.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

September 13

Subject—The Ten Virgins.

Lesson—Matthew 25: 1-13.

Golden Text—Watch, therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour.—Matthew 25: 13.

Time—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 30.

Place—On the way to Bethany.

It was now toward the close of the last day of Jesus' public ministry. He had gone out from the temple and from the city, and, seated upon the Mount of Olives, had addressed His disciples in that remarkable discourse recorded in the 24th of Matthew.

He had failed in the effort to get the Jewish rulers to accept Him as the Messiah, and now He foretells the destruction of the temple and the signs that should precede it.

In today's lesson He emphasizes strongly the need of preparation. This may be applied to any duty of life or to the time of death, or to the day of final destruction of the world.

We have the picture of the bridegroom spending the evening with his comrades, perhaps at his own home. They have gathered to escort him to his bride. At the home of the latter the bride with her virgins await the coming of the bridegroom.

Apparently it is known that the coming will be in the night. Five of the virgins have their vessels filled with oil. Five of them foolishly have omitted this necessary service. While they slept, the cry goes forth of the coming procession. While the foolish virgins go out to buy the needed oil, the bridegroom arrives, and they are shut out from the festivities.

What a true picture of human life! How many there are who are never prepared for any service! While they wait to get ready, the opportunity is gone. How many there are who come to the close of life unprepared! While in their agony they are seeking forgiveness, the chord of life is snapped and they have missed the goal. How many there will be at the end of the world, who have failed to prepare themselves for the great event, and who will be shut out from the presence of the Lord!

This lesson affords a fine opportunity to impress upon the pupils the great need of deciding for Christ.

The wedding, which is the initial step in the founding of a home, typifies the kingdom of heaven, wherein Jesus is head of the household, and love and affection characterize all relationships.

The foolish virgins were the Pharisees and other leaders who in their adherence to formal observances imagined they would have a place in the Kingdom of God. The wise virgins were the disciples and other followers, who had prepared themselves for citizenship in the new kingdom.

Watch therefore. It was the final command which called the attention of the disciples away from their present gloom to the hope of a better day. It is a command no less for us of the present day. Happy and thrice blessed is he who is ready for any emergency.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 13

Topic—What Is a Good Education? Prov. 1: 1-9, 20-33. (School and College Meeting.)

This ought to be a popular meeting. Many schools will have begun and college students will be on the eve of departure for the fall term. The subject will be uppermost in the thought of most young people.

Education is training for life.

Education means the acquirement of knowledge.

Education teaches how to think and to be self reliant.

Education teaches the art of observing.

Assign to various members the preparation of a brief talk on various phases of education, as the value of religion in education, the importance of the church looking after the welfare of the schools, value of education in business, in farming and in the professions.

Married

Clark-Thompson—At the Montgomery Street Friends' Church, Poughkeepsie, New York, August 25, 1914, C. Ralph Clark to Lida T. Thompson, the pastor, William J. Sayers, officiating. The bride is the granddaughter of the late well known Friends minister, William Thomas Willis.

Died

Newlin—Arthur P. Newlin, the eldest son of Harlan B. and Jane H. Newlin, died at the hospital at Niles, Ohio, August 14, 1914, aged thirty-six years. He lived with his parents at Bloomingdale, Indiana, until fourteen years ago when he became a member of the Mahoning Valley Interurban Company, later becoming Division Superintendent. He met with a serious accident on August 14th by slipping and falling under the wheels of a car which he was trying to board. He was hurried to the hospital, but death came within two hours. He leaves a wife, a little son and daughter, together with his parents, two sisters and two brothers.

Townsend—Murray J. Townsend, son of Albert and Amelia Townsend (both deceased), died at Liberal, Kansas, May 10, 1914, aged twenty-four years, six months and ten days. Although life and loved ones were dear to him, yet when he realized he could not recover he smilingly said, "Jesus will take me soon and I am so glad." He leaves a widow and a little daughter.

WANTED—A LIBRARY

Any Sunday School having a Library that has been discarded, and wishes to pass it on for a missionary work, will do well to write for particulars to LESLIE G. SICKLES, Cashmere, Washington.

FARM LANDS

Those interested in Farm lands in Canada, near Friends' Church, should correspond with E. HOWARD, Adanac, Sask., Canada.

Visitors to Washington, D. C., preferring lodgings in a Friend's home near Friends' Church (Orthodox), accommodated. Every convenience; excellent board near. Cars direct from Union Station. C. H. HALL, 1117 Lamont St., N. W.

CITRUS HEIGHTS QUAKER COLONY

Located in Sacramento County, California, within sixteen miles of State Capitol. Adapted to the growing of Citrus and Deciduous Fruits. Irrigated, and an abundance of water. In five to twelve-acre tracts, on easy terms. This will please any Friend desiring a home in California. Reference: John T. Hadley, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, 205 East College Street, Whittier, California; E. H. White, Treasurer Evangelistic and Church Extension Board, 185 East Mountain Street, Pasadena, California; Levi Gregory, Pastor Friends' Church, 831 Fifty-fourth Street, Oakland, California. For further information, write or come to A. W. LEONARD, Agent, Fair Oaks, California.

Florida Citrus Fruit Lands

We can refer to Indiana people, making more money out of ten acres of Oranges and Grapefruit, in the Highlands of Florida, than they formerly did farming 160 acres in Indiana and, at the same time, they are enjoying robust health. Located away above the Ocean. No catarrh, rheumatism, asthma or lung trouble. Superb air, without humidity; warm in winter, cool in summer. Thermometer averaged twenty degrees below Indiana during July. Inexpensive, personally conducted excursions, in our private car, first and third Tuesdays of each month, including two days' free automobile tour through the finest Orange and Grapefruit Groves of Florida, and side trips to most interesting points. For full particulars, address

FLORIDA HIGHLANDS CO.

Disarmament

"Put up the sword!" The voice of Christ once more Speaks, in the pauses of the cannon's roar,
O'er fields of corn by fiery sickles reaped
And left dry ashes; over trenches heaped
With nameless dead; o'er cities starving slow
Under a rain of fire; through wards of woe
Down with a groaning diapason runs
From tortured brothers, husbands, lovers, sons
Of desolate women in their far-off homes,
Waiting to hear the step that never comes!
Oh, men and brothers let that voice be heard.
War fails, try peace; put up the useless sword!

Fear not the end. There is a story told
In Eastern tents, when autumn nights grow cold,
And round the fire the Mongol shepherds sit
With grave responses listening unto it:
Once, on the errands of his mercy bent,
Buddha, the holy and benevolent,
Met a fell monster, huge and fierce of look,
Whose awful voice the hills and forests shook.
"Oh, son of peace!" the giant cried, "thy fate
Is sealed at last, and love shall yield to hate."
The unarmed Buddha looking, with no trace
Of fear or anger, in the monster's face,
In pity said: "Poor fiend, even thee I love."
Lo! as he spake the sky-tall terror sank
To hand-breadth size; the huge abhorrence shrank
Into the form and fashion of a dove;
And where the thunder of its rage was heard,
Circling above him sweetly sang the bird:
"Hate hath no harm for love," so rang the song;
"And peace unweaponed conquers every wrong."

—John G. Whittier.

The Homiletic Review

"War clouds hang over Europe" was a phrase we were accustomed to hear before the outbreak of the present conflict. The clouds have certainly dissipated, and we are face to face with the stern reality. No one is capable of saying anything of a constructive character on this great conflict unless he is familiar with conditions in Europe. David Jayne Hill, LL.D., Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Germany, 1908-11, in his article in The Homiletic Review for September on "The Gospel of Good Will—An Influence for the World's Peace," sheds considerable light on things as they exist in Europe today, and he also suggests what may be done to ameliorate present conditions.

Mankind is split up into two mighty forces—peace and war. War is now having its innings and surely there never were greater reasons for international peace than today. Evidently the editors had this in mind when they gave the first pages of this number to an account of the life and service of "The Uncrowned Queen of the Peace Movement—Baroness von Suttner," by Lyra D. Trueblood, Washington, D. C.

Church Peace Union

Report and Declaration of the American Delegates at the International Conference of the Church Peace Union, held at Constance, Germany, August 2d, and at London August 5th, 1914, to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and its Commission on Peace and Arbitration:

It is significant that this first International Conference of the Churches for the promotion of friendship and peace between the nations of the world occurred at a moment when we were all obliged to witness an amazing development of the war fever, and the widespread misery caused on all sides by the mere preparations for battle; and we have had a unique opportunity to witness the sincere and profound reluctance with which the sober and serious element in every nation concerned has found itself involved in the imminent cataclysm. Whatever the immediate outcome may be, we are more than ever confident and convinced that this sober and serious element of every Christian nation is now, as always, moving under the guidance and blessing of Almighty God Our Father. Our dismay is not despair. No note of pessimism has been heard at any of the four sessions of our Conference. There is a general consciousness that now more than ever we are called to co-operate in the spirit of Jesus Christ, so that no self-will or bitterness or impatience on our part shall cloud our vision, or hinder us from seizing the opportunity which God is giving us to do His will in the world—waiting upon the Lord.

This war, so far from indicating the futility of our plans and endeavors, or the foolishness of Christian idealism, is demonstrating that the methods of brute force, and of inconsiderate egotism, are as unintelligent and inefficient as they are unchristian. We are witnessing the reductio ad absurdum of unchristian civilization; for peace is not to be secured by preparations for war (even if unchristian men compel their brothers in self-defence, and for the sake of sacred treaties, to make ready for war). Not that it is in the interests of peace to belittle the spirit of patriotism, but to Christianize it. Like our laws and our culture, our education and commerce and industrialism, so too our very patriotism must be pervaded by the mind of Christ and be ready for the discipline of the Cross—the sign and symbol, not merely of brotherly love, but of international love, over against the shortsightedness and selfishness of individuals and peoples. As we disperse to our homes and fatherland, that is the message we are bringing from this Conference; and it is first and foremost a call to international humiliation and prayer in the name and confidence of Christ. The time for men to prevent war is not when events are culminating, but far, far back at the springs of human conduct, individual, national and international. Let us see to it that henceforth "all our fresh springs are in God."

Faith is tested by proving God, and we prove God best by working together with Him.

The Unity of Friends—III

In the face of the gigantic tasks which are confronting the forces of righteousness in the world today, it is deplorable that these elements find themselves in divergent if not wholly unsympathetic camps. But when these divergencies are found to characterize bodies of the same generic name, each professing to proclaim the same message of saving grace for lost humanity, the condition is calamitous, and should call for urgent attention.

Without question there is a tendency, theoretically at least, toward federal unity in church life. How far this development has become practical is open to grave question. Something has been gained when the church is willing to talk in terms of Christian brotherhood. But it must be confessed that the church as a whole has a long road to travel before the ideals of Christian unity in practical operation will have become a living reality.

That Friends in common with all other churches have failed to live up to their best ideals must be apparent to all. That they have done a noble work through two and a half centuries of history and have made their impress upon the world will be freely admitted by men and women of every faith. We are frank to confess that it would be far more pleasant to declaim upon the goodly heritage which has been handed down to us as Friends of this generation. We would all delight to spend our time in paying tribute to our honored denominational ancestry.

But every generation has its own problems, and no generation can thrive upon the virtues of the dead. While this age is debtor to every age that is past, our responsibilities as actors upon the present stage are no less binding than were those of our fathers.

When we consider the deplorable discrepancy between the teachings of the Master and the average conditions of life which exist in this so-called Christian age, we are appalled at the magnitude of the tasks which yet confront the Christian church. So long as the business world is governed largely by the rule of selfishness and unholy greed, so long as the social order must suffer from the blighting contamination of the legalized rum curse, so long as the public conscience will sustain systems of graft and governmental corruption, so long as the tragedy of bloody war can be precipitated into the peace of so-called Christian nations, so long as wrong can rule triumphant in any sphere of human life, so long will the church have failed to accomplish its highest purpose, and Christianity must stand defeated in the arenas where it was entitled to realize its greatest conquests.

As Friends we have from the beginning idealized the experience of intensive personal religion, and it is our proud boast that other denominational faiths have been raised to higher planes because of our testimony. But a Christianity that does not transform itself as a vital ruling force into every phase of human conduct both individual and collective has fallen short of its mission. It was William Penn's belief that the faith of the Society of Friends would serve as the successful foundation of a Christian state, and so long as the tenets which he advocated were practiced, his conviction was realized.

In this age there is a loud call that the church shall get away from professionalism and that it shall become an instrument of truth for the regeneration of human society in its varied relationships. The demand that the church shall make good upon its teachings of a gospel that calls for the uplift and betterment of all men, was never greater than it is today. The world itself has gone on in its quest after knowledge, and, through science and philosophy, through culture and æstheticism, by the cultivation of the materialistic spirit, is constantly erecting new standards of civilization. What of the church and its teachings? All too often it has turned aside to quarrel over dogmas and the fine points of theology, and has failed to keep step with the spirit of the generations which it should have been trying to serve. All too often its vision of revealed religion adapted to the demands of the present age has been clouded by traditions and the dreams of ages long ago. All too frequently it has been the trailer of civilization when it should have been its leader and its strongest support.

By no means do we limit the operations of God's spirit in human affairs. The upward trend of civilization is the marking of God's finger upon the affairs of men, but too frequently the church has been wrapped up with conventionalities and so engrossed with its formalisms and ordinances that it has often failed to be an important factor in the upward toiling of the race, when it ought to have been leading the procession. The church is an agency, an instrument to be operated for human regeneration. It is a means and never an end. The purposes of its existence will never have been realized until the transformation of the life of its members shall have become the occasion for the regeneration of human society and the quickening of national and international life by the power of the Divine spirit.

In this transforming process the ideals of the Society of Friends should play a commanding part. Its policy is democratic and should appeal to the masses. In turning aside from the ritualistic, it has appealed for purity of soul and for complete regeneration of life. It has stood for the essence of righteousness. It has preached a pure gospel. It has ignored professionalism and has even repudiated it. Theoretically at least and in the main practically it has stood for the doctrine of applied Christianity. Without the intervention of priest or ritual it has proclaimed the sovereignty of Jesus the Son of God in direct contact with every human soul that will acknowledge Him as Lord and Master. No less interested in every phase of moral reform, it has taught that human conduct in all its varied forms should be governed by the teachings of the Master. Judged by its professions the religion of the Society of Friends ought to be the religion of the masses.

It must be confessed, however, that the outlook is not altogether assuring. From the days of Fox, Friends have proclaimed the doctrine of universal peace. We have lived to see large elements in the church regarding it as an obsolete tenet, looking upon it as a wearisome topic which no longer called for advocacy as a denominational principle. In the minds of many the peace report was considered dull, the peace meeting was poorly attended, and the whole subject was apparently distasteful. Let us hope that the tragedy of Europe will stir our church to its foundations until the membership will rally to the support of its Peace department as one of the most important divisions of the activities of the church.

Friends have ever stood for temperance reform, yet, comparatively speaking, have had little to do in a constructive way toward the formation of the present movements for saloon annihilation. We have stood for political probity and governmental integrity, yet as a body, so far as America is concerned, have had a strange inclination in later years to avoid the intricacies of the political arena. In other directions, in recent decades, we have scarcely lived up to our professions and have fallen short of our ideals.

What other could we expect from a body whose entity has been so badly shattered? Whatever may be the causes, we have been allowed to drift into separate camps, and today we have Eastern Friends and Western Friends, conservative Friends and radical Friends, older Friends and young Friends, liberal Friends and orthodox Friends, Five Year Meeting Friends, Philadelphia Friends, Ohio Yearly Meeting Friends, London Friends and Irish Friends, each body having its special and not always sympathetic characteristics, until it seems as though we had become the church of the broken fragments. Having the profound belief that the message and tenets of the Society of Friends are needed in the world today as virile and quickening agencies in the uplift and Christianization of the race, and believing also that the solidarity of Friends is essential to our usefulness and the fulfillment of our mission, we are forced to the conviction that the unity of Friends is a problem demanding urgent attention.

Perhaps organic union is yet only a dream, but were we united in purpose and in spirit, were we striving for the same definite attainments, were we bound together with chords of love in a common effort to interpret the gospel in terms of human brotherhood, were we all dominated by a consuming purpose to do our full share in helping to make Christianity the ruling power in all human affairs, were we willing to sacrifice the non-essentials of procedure and cultivate the spirit of a broad charity as brethren in Christ Jesus, the Society of Friends would soon stand in the advance line of the forces of righteousness that are bent upon the task of carrying the gospel to every creature.

We can at least afford to cultivate the spirit of sympathetic co-operation and surrender ourselves to the conscious leading of the Spirit of God. We can at least seek to know each other better, and in doing so we will be astonished that we have so much in common. It is a time when self-seeking should be abandoned, when pride of position should be lost to view, when, conscious of a common inheritance, we together should strive for once to do our best. May we not in America make a recent utterance of our English Friends our own utterance as we face the future together?

"In all humility, in all childlike simplicity, as those who know but the outskirts of His ways, who have hitherto but dipped their tiny buckets into the ocean of His love, we are to ask ourselves whether again today our Father is not waiting to do a new thing. If once we put ourselves alongside His purposes of love, if we may but so company with Jesus as to catch the contagion of His faith, if we can be given such a sight of Him upon the Cross as to know our whole souls abandoning themselves in the reckless sacrifice of a self-forgetting love—may we not rightly expect the Divine resources will be put at our disposal for the service of mankind in a measure altogether unprecedented in our meager experience?"

In humbleness before the Lord, and through earnest, prevailing prayer, let us seek to know the Divine will, remembering that we are all brethren in Christ.

THE HIGHER LIFE

The Prayer Life

Prayer is the hand that catcheth hold on peace;—
Nay, 'tis the very heart of nobleness,
Whose pulses are the measure of the stress
Wherewith he doth us, we do him possess.
If these should fail all our true life would cease.

Who live in prayer a friend shall never miss;
If we should slip, a timely staff and kind,
Placed in our grasp by hands unseen shall find;
Sometimes upon our forehead a soft kiss.

—H. S. Sutton.

Earnest Prayer Answered

It was a very cold evening some years since, when a number of young men and women started for a village in one of the Middle States, on a sleighing party, in high glee for the dance and entertainment. A mother sat by the hearth as her beloved daughter and sons jumped with joyous step into the sleigh, and soon the sound of the whip and bells were no longer heard in the distance. She proposed to their father—who was looked upon as a patriarch in Israel—to put the horse to the sleigh, and go to her brother's house, and spend the evening in united prayer with his wife and himself for their children. He denied her not, but took her there at great risk of their lives, between one and two miles, through deep snow-drifts. The evening was spent in prayer and supplication, and this devoted couple returned again to their home at a late hour of the night. A few months after this, their prayers were fully answered, even beyond their highest expectations—nearly every member of these two families became the subjects of Divine grace. It was the commencement of a powerful revival of religion in that region of the country.

These fathers and mothers have gone home to receive the blessed plaudit, "Well done, faithful servants, inherit the kingdom which is prepared for you;" but their children are still living, a number of whom are in the ministry, the others elders in churches or consistent members of the church. What does this lesson teach parents? Be in earnest—ask—wrestle, as did these Christian parents, and ye shall prevail!

The great need of the church is intercessors—men and women who know how to prevail with God in prayer. In Romans 8: 26, 27, we read: "For we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." Too few know anything about the indescribable passion for souls and how to "pray in the Holy Ghost."—Times of Refreshing.

"Christ is risen!" This is good news, and also the old, old story. Believe it! Accept it! Tell it!

The Example of Christ

Christ's own use of prayer is a guide to our understanding of prayer and a sufficient warrant for our practice of prayer. If he needed to pray, found comfort in prayer, received guidance in answer to prayer, how much more do we need such aid, comfort, guidance. We are told, specifically, in connection with the great crises of his life that he went apart at those times to pray. But on one occasion, at least, we find that what he desired—not his supreme desire but, nevertheless, what he asked for in prayer, was not granted. In Gethsemane he asked that "the cup might pass" from him. But greater than this desire was the predominant desire that the will of his Father, whatever that will might be, be done. And he received strength to drink the cup, in all its bitterness. So with us, the thing we ask for may not always be granted. But with every prayer the dominant desire should be, "Father, not my will but thine be done." This is true, humble, childlike, Christlike prayer, when we present our petitions, very earnest they may be, but always with the feeling supreme in heart and mind, "Not my will, but thine, be done."—The Congregationalist.

"Christ Died for You"

There are persons who seem to go through life with comparatively little sense of the weight of sin. It may be only an apparent unconcern, however. Often behind a smiling face there is a heart that is sad and fearful. We can never tell what secrets lurk in each others' souls. A man can laugh sometimes even with the undying worm gnawing at his vitals. We are convinced that in every person's experience there comes sooner or later, that day when the soul stands before God stricken with the dreadful consciousness of sin, bending under the weight of the awful burden. In that day the soul needs Christ and can be satisfied with no one else but Christ. There is no message for that tragic hour but the message of the cross; the message which says, "Christ died for you."—United Presbyterian.

Let me but live my life from year to year,
With forward face and unreluctant soul;
Not hastening to, nor turning from, the goal,
Not mourning for the things that disappear
In the dim past, nor holding back in fear
From what the future veils, but with a whole
And happy heart that pays its toll
To youth and age and travels on with cheer.

So let the way be up the hill or down,
Through rough or smooth, the journey will be joy,
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendships, high adventure, and a crown;
I shall grow old, but never lose life's zest
Because the road's last turn will be the best.

—Henry Van Dyke.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

The Well-Spring of Satisfaction

BY ENOS HARVEY

Text, John 7: 37—If any man thirst let him come unto Me and drink.

Jesus was attending the Feast of Tabernacles at Jerusalem. All Israelites dwelt in booths during this Feast, according to God's direction, "That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt." This would remind them of the early days of their freedom when God was directly known to be their deliverer, the supply of their need and their dwelling place.

This feast was also a national thanksgiving, the Feast of Ingathering, commanded to be held when they had gathered in the fruits of the land. Here all rank of wealth, official or social distinction, was set aside, as rich and poor, high and low dwelt side by side in their fragile booths, thus acknowledging that, apart from God, there was not more than a leaf-covering between them and destitution. And whether He supplied their need miraculously as in the wilderness, or by blessings upon their labors in the fields of Canaan, He was alike the Great Provider, and they all were dependent upon His bounty.

The occasion was one of mingled thanksgiving and social enjoyment. The people came in holiday attire, bearing palm branches and fruit of goodly trees, and rejoiced before the Lord.

This rejoicing reached its climax at the time of the morning oblation, when, accompanied by trumpet blasts and loud hallelujahs from the people, the priest poured upon the altar a pitcher of water from the pool of Siloam, singing the words of Isaiah, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation."

There were those present who saw a deeper meaning in this ceremony than the celebration of the abundant supply of water their fathers had received in the wilderness, or the rains that had rendered fertile their lands from which they had gathered their harvests. With perplexed and longing hearts they were seeing more in Isaiah's words than the drawing of water from the Pool of Siloam. Joel also had prophesied that "A fountain should come forth from the house of Jehovah." But as yet no healing waters had flowed from the temple to give life to their famishing souls. They had come up to this feast hoping almost against hope to see the "consolation of Israel" in the fulfillment of the prophet's words. Were they to return again to their homes disappointed, as oft they had returned before, to await another year before their longings could be satisfied? It was to such expectant thirsty hearts that Jesus made one of the most clear and startling revelations of Himself as the fulfiller of prophecy. With a far-reaching, soul-penetrating voice He cried saying, "If any man thirst let him come unto Me and drink." Many must have refreshed their souls that day as they slaked their thirst at the fountain of living waters. They believed and testified, "This is of a truth the prophet"; "This is the Christ." The text incidentally mentions three essential conditions to soul satisfaction, viz.: Thirst, Come, Drink.

1. Thirst, in the sense of an eager desire after God, is of divine origin. As He who created man to thirst physically also created water to satisfy that thirst, so He who made us to yearn after Himself has given Himself to satisfy that yearning.

The psalmist who prayed, "Bow down thine ear, O Jehovah, and answer me, for I am poor and needy," could later testify, "Jehovah hast helped me and comforted me." The young ruler seeking eternal life, the publican pleading for mercy, the Greeks with their request to see Jesus, the thief on the cross praying to be remembered, must have all been impelled by an unsatisfied craving after God and His righteousness. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness."

2. Come. How full of tender compassion are the Scripture invitations to come. "Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. . . ." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "He that is athirst let him come." Couple with these invitations the assuring words of Jesus, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out," and we have a strong encouragement to any who thirsts to come. What assurance to those who are ready to say with the prodigal, "I will arise and go!" What a welcome home awaits them! What feasting and joy! "If any man thirst let him come unto Me and drink."

3. Drink. Perfect satisfaction awaits those who take this third step. Jesus said to the woman of Samaria, "Whosoever drinketh of the water I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water I shall give him shall become in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." And again, "He that believeth on me . . . from within him shall flow rivers of living water."

The Holy Spirit as the indwelling Spirit of Christ is the explanation of this fountain springing up and flowing forth within us, ever fresh and satisfying.

God is Love

BY GEORGE C. LEVERING

There is nothing more fundamental than the character of God. All our philosophy, all our religion, the very essence of our life, springs naturally from our idea of the character of God. We become like that which we worship. The Greeks worshiped Venus, the personification of sensuous beauty, and they became beautiful but sensuous; the Romans worshiped Jupiter, the personification of irresponsible power, and they developed power untrammelled by conscience; the Christian worships the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the perfect embodiment and practical expression of pure and holy love, and all our philanthropies, all our hospitals and schools, the great enterprises of home and foreign missions, are the legitimate result.

And God is love. This is the final word, the last, the fullest, the deepest revelation of the character of God. Here we have found bed rock. There is no more fundamental word which can ever be spoken than this.

And whence comes this revelation? John, the beloved disciple looked into the loving face of Jesus Christ. He walked and talked with his Master as he went in and out among the villages of Galilee. He saw him feed the multitude, cleanse the leperous, give sight to the blind. He saw the tenderness with which he restored that sweet bud of womanhood to the sorrowing home of Jairus, and the firm hand with which he gave back the strength of young manhood to the heart-broken widow of Nain. He stood in the presence of those matchless eyes when crowned with cruel thorns; he followed out to calvary and saw enacted the supreme tragedy of the ages. He studied the empty tomb and considered the person, the power, the words of authority of the risen Christ; and as he pondered there was borne in upon his quivering soul by the Holy Spirit Himself, this final revelation of the character of God,—God is love.

The love of God is without limit. It is unlimited as to time. The verb is here in the historical present. Love is not a passing characteristic but the fundamental and eternal character of God. With Him there is no change. In the beginning, before ever the morning stars sang together, and throughout the illimitable reaches of eternity, both past and future, God is love. As the sun, by its very nature, constantly sends forth in all directions and under all circumstances, its life-giving rays of light and heat and power, so God sends forth His love. It is unlimited in its scope. He loves the good and the bad, the fortunate and those who are crushed with sorrow. There is never a night so dark but this one star shines clear and bright from out the gloom. He loves the white and the black and the red, the yellow and the brown; the most repulsive as well as the beautiful and attractive. He loves the world and He loves me, even me, with all my sin, my weakness and my woe.

Throughout eternity the mainspring and motive of all God's activity is love. In love He created the heavens and the earth, not for "His own glory" in any selfish sense, but as the expression of His own unselfish love. In love He has formed the earth as a dwelling place for man, adorned with infinite beauty and perfectly suited to our every need as only infinite love could suggest. In love He has established the moral government of the world, making suffering the necessary consequence of sin. In love He spoke from Sinai, warning mankind to avoid the ways of death. And not content with this, the great heart of God moved out for the redemption of sinful men. "God so loved that He gave." In love He created man in His own image, godlike in his capacity for joy and for sorrow, free in his will to choose either good or evil, free to enter into the closest fellowship with God Himself. And when, in his short-sighted folly, man turned his back on life and light and joy, thus plunging himself into hopeless night, it was the love of the Father which gave the Son to follow him out over the mountains of sin, to patiently win him back to heaven and eternal life. And throughout the entire sweep of redemptive activity, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself."

Even in judgment God is still love. No human parent is fit to inflict punishment who acts in anything less than love; no judge is fit to try a criminal case who does not have a tender heart. And shall a human judge surpass God? With infinite pathos then, and with infinite pain, those awful words of doom fall from the lips of infinite love, "Depart from me ye cursed, into the eternal fire." This is the inevitable weakness of omnipotent love. Even God is powerless to make a wicked man happy while still he clings to his wickedness.

Friends, our God is our ideal, our life. We are commanded to be "imitators of God as beloved children." We are begotten into his likeness, and in all things are to "grow up into Him." As love is the fundamental character of God, so the love of God is fundamental in the character of every true man; as God's love is unlimited, so will ours be limited only by our capacity for loving; and as love is the mainspring of all God's activity so, in the heart of every true man, will love be the mainspring of all our activity. And as always, so in our Christian consecration, love will ever inquire, not "How much must I do?" but "How much may I do?" for God and for my fellows.

Missionary Conference on Mexico

At the Conference of the Foreign Missionary Boards of the various denominations operating in Mexico held in Cincinnati, June 30 and July 1, an account of which was given in THE AMERICAN FRIEND recently, the report of the Committee on General Education after some consideration was adopted in the following form:

1. That Domestic and Manual Arts be taught in all schools, as far as practicable.
2. That an Elementary School be carried on, as far as possible, wherever there is an organized congregation, and in the larger places that there be added the fifth and sixth grades, so that pupils may be prepared for admission into the higher institutions.
3. That there be High Schools established, at least one for boys and one for girls, within each Mission territory. The course of study in these schools should include vocational training.
4. That the various Missions working in Mexico appoint a Committee on Education, the committee to be composed of one person representing each Mission, to be appointed as the Mission shall determine. It shall be the duty of this committee to study the question of education and make suggestions for the curriculum, conduct and correlation of our schools.
5. The consolidation of the higher grades of the primary schools in such places as are occupied by two or more denominations.
6. That a union college for men and women be established at some central place, and that in connection with this college there be established Normal, Industrial and Kindergarten training schools. The Committee also recommends the consolidation of Normal schools where two or more exist in one center, and that where only one Normal school exists, the question of its continuance or discontinuance be left to the discretion of the denominations concerned.

7. The Committee recommends the appointment of a Committee on Ways and Means for the founding of the College and affiliated schools, this committee to be composed of two members, representing each denomination, to be appointed as each board or denomination may determine.

8. The Committee recommends the appointment, either by the Committee on Ways and Means or by the Boards, of a financial agent for the Union College and affiliated schools.

The following report of the Committee on Press was adopted:

Present conditions in Mexico make opportune a readjustment of the work of producing an evangelical literature in the Spanish language. Every indication points to a greatly increased demand for such literature in the immediate future. The newly and deeply aroused minds of the people of that country will insist upon something to feed on. The pabulum which is supplied them, the reading matter which is disseminated through the country, will have much to do with the future welfare of that Republic. Here is a wide-open door to the gospel.

In the past our activities in producing Christian literature, conducted as they have been largely along independent lines, have been attended by much duplication of effort and consequent waste of resources. This is not necessary. In perhaps no other department of our work is co-operation so easy as in this.

The production of literature involves two branches of labor, the editorial and the manufacturing. The literature itself also naturally falls into two classes, books and periodicals, the permanent and the temporary, including tracts and leaflets with the periodicals. In no department of this work is co-operation impossible. In some, as for example in manufacturing, it may perhaps be accounted difficult. Yet we believe that the difficulties involved even in the community ownership and direction of publishing plants are by no means insurmountable. Certainly there should be no serious obstacle in the department of editing. Our denominational beliefs are sufficiently near to identity with each other and the taste of Mexican readers so indifferent to the distinctions which may still persist among us, that authorship and supervision by those of one church for readers of another offer no obstacles that need give us pause.

In view of these considerations, your Committee on Literature and the Press offer for your approval the following recommendations:

1. That a Joint Depository and Selling Agency be established at Mexico City.
2. That all the present church papers be united into one.
3. That an illustrated young people's paper be established.
4. That a joint publishing plant be established in Mexico City on the basis of a proportionate sharing of expenses by the denominations. This enterprise we should expect to be under the direction and control of a joint board, the members to be named by the co-operating churches.

The general committee reported upon a number of matters which were adopted; among these it was decided to appoint a committee of five, with Robert E. Speer of New York as chairman, to prepare a paper entitled "A Message to the American People," which shall set forth in brief the fundamentals of the Christian faith and life, laying special emphasis on general principles of Christian living. This message, the report says, should make it very clear "that it is our profound conviction that only through personal discipleship to Jesus Christ are the moral and spiritual problems of Mexico, both individual and national, to be solved and the expectations of every heart satisfied." The committee reported further as follows:

The Mexican Church—Its Life and Growth

(a) The various Evangelical bodies of Christians at work in Mexico, while retaining each its own denominational heritage, yet agree in the great doctrines of their holy faith; and, to set forth this basal unity, they desire that henceforth they may all be known by the common appellation of "The Evangelical Church of Mexico," with the special name of the denomination following this common designation in a bracket, when necessary, e. g.: "The Evangelical Church of Mexico" (Presbyterian), or etc.

When statistics are used, it is advised that whenever possible and convenient, the whole body of the Evangelical church be counted with the number of the special denomination following in a bracket, e. g.: Sunday School Scholars "Evangelical Church of Mexico," 10,000 (Methodist Episcopal 4,000).

Interchange of Membership

(b) In view of the proposed distribution of territory, the probable transfer of membership from one community to another, and the constant moving of the people of Mexico from one province to another, your Committee recommends the following form of letter to be used between the churches making the transfer:

This certifies that _____ is a member in good and regular standing of the Evangelical Church (_____) in _____, and we earnestly commend _____ to the fellowship and Christian watchful care of _____ Church.

_____
Pastor.
_____
Church.

Self-Support

(c) Realizing that the permanence of a congregation and its thorough establishment in the Christian faith is most surely indicated by its becoming entirely self-supporting, and realizing that the future life and growth of the Evangelical Church in Mexico wait upon the time when the native members shall be able to stand by themselves, we recommend that the strongest possible emphasis be placed upon the matter of self-support, that all existing congregations be brought to that standard as soon as possible and that all new congregations be started only upon the basis of a diminishing scale of subsidies.

It was recommended that one month of each year be observed as a simultaneous and nation-wide season of special prayer and evangelistic effort. Some time each year shall also be devoted to the promotion of Christian education. Emphasis was laid upon the necessity of increasing the number of medical missionaries, and upon the importance of sending to Mexico the very best missionaries which the churches have at their command. It was recommended that no missionary be sent without some previous preparation in Spanish language. It was recommended also that there be constituted a permanent field committee, composed of missionaries representing the several denominations and one representative and one alternate from each missionary board.

It was recognized that the action taken is not binding upon any denomination, but it is earnestly hoped and expected that the various missionary boards will at once give favorable consideration to these plans which have been worked out with such care and after the fullest consideration.

Encouragement

BY BERNICE E. HAWKINS

"They that trust in Jehovah are as Mount Zion which cannot be moved, but abideth forever."—Psalms 125: 1.

Faith and trust in biblical parlance are synonyms in the working. Faith is objective, trust subjective—faith is abstract, trust concrete.

Nothing in all our lives is quite so reasonable or practical as trust or faith. We exercise this virtue every day, on the street-car, in the taxi, in our business dealings, even with the milkman at the door. The late J. P. Morgan, when interviewed by a commission of our national congress, stated in unmistakable terms that faith and integrity were the keystones of business. Upon them credit is built and the recent war scare reveals only too plainly how powerful a thing national credit is.

What is our faith any way? That about which our own personal life adjusts itself. We have our idiosyncrasies, our peculiarities, our whims and notions. These serve to distinguish us from our fellowmen and only those who know us intimately learn to know what our faith is, for we consciously keep our true selves in the background, laboring under the mistaken idea which has enthralled the world for centuries that conventionalities count for most, when it is character alone that is truly worth while—its vehicle is unimportant, a shell, merely a conveyance. Truth always has been crippled from time to time by the paraphernalia of personality—carrying as it were ever a taste of the dish, yet ever reasserting itself, reestablishing its ground, rejoicing the heart of its seeker by its redundancy and freshness.

Even if the Psalmist had known of the phrase of the modernists, "The Indestructibility of Truth," he could have used no better symbolism than Mount Zion. The everlasting hills are a constant token even as the rainbow, that the god of chaos is the god of order and fixity, nor will the hills be moved until God gives the word. Wordsworth felt this when he wrote:

"My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky.
So was it when my life began;
So is it now I am a man."

How strong our faith should be to be commensurate with the foundation for our trust! Bryant "To a Water Fowl" says:

"He, who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the dark path that I must tread alone
Will guide my steps aright."

Proof of God's care and guidance comes to us daily. We are slow enough in thanking God for His blessing, but oh, how pitifully dull to realize that He whose hand is so evident in the past is shaping the Future! Who of us a hundred times over has not known, felt or seen God's power and felt his own impotence? Why not then link ourselves up in the very simplest of ways with this great source of strength and infinitude? How puerile it is to try to live without it. Psychologically we need it for our daily life. This conquering faith is the most practical thing in the world. All that is good that has ever been used is found in this application of the psychological principle, but how much more, infinitely more, do we need spiritually faith and trust in the goodness and mercy of God! How satisfying and restful to know our lives are in His hands; how easy and simple, how full of benediction are the lives so open to His working, forming, guiding purpose! For He does have a purpose, a grand, glorious purpose, which expresses itself as the great though simple theme of a symphony or a reverie, played through different keys by different instruments, allegro or dulce, yet none the less true and complete. The great purpose of God must be worked out in your life and in mine. May He grant to us wisdom and strength that we may so order ourselves in accordance with His plan that our tiny notes may ring true in the grand symphony—the music of the spheres!

May we renew our faith like

" . . . The eagle of the crag, that nothing fears,
But still is young after a hundred years."

And in the light of enraptured vision mount on wings; in the fresh glow of enthusiasm, run and not grow weary; in the plodding affairs of every-day existence with the vision in mind, the goal of "Well done" ever before us, let us walk and not faint.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me,
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

And thou, O Lord, by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

North Carolina to the Front

North Carolina Yearly Meeting at its recent session fell into line with Nebraska and California by the adoption of an eminently practical and business-like system for financing its work. Wilmington Yearly Meeting went so far in the same direction as to order a communication from the General Secretary upon the subject to be printed in its minutes with instruction to its delegates to report upon it next year.

The following details of the North Carolina plan are commended to the careful attention of Friends throughout all our Yearly Meetings.

(1) The Financial Year. The Yearly Meeting's financial year runs from August 1st to August 1st and that of the Monthly Meetings from July 1st to July 1st, thus allowing thirty days in which any deficiencies to the Yearly Meeting may be made up.

(2) The Monthly Meeting Finance Committee to be appointed at the first of the financial year, to consist of from five to eight representative Friends, the most capable in the meeting, who are to organize for the year's work by the appointment of a chairman, secretary and treasurer.

(3) A complete list of members, preferably to be arranged alphabetically and by families, to be placed in the hands of the Finance Committee.

(4) The Budget to be arranged by the committee after a discussion by it of the financial needs of the meeting for the year. This should embrace practically all the money that is to be raised during the year. It will cover such items as Yearly Meeting stock, care of house and grounds, fuel, lights, water, pastoral support, care of aged ministers and the poor, fire insurance, repairs of buildings, missions and other purposes (including support of the work of the Five Years Meeting Boards, the General Secretary ventures to suggest).

(5) Classification of the Membership. After the amount to be raised has been determined, the membership roll should be taken up and each member classified according to his or her ability and liberality. For example: List No. 1, five cents per week; No. 2, ten cents; No. 3, twenty cents; No. 4, fifty cents; No. 5, one dollar; No. 6, two dollars. Five cents per week is recommended as the minimum to be asked of any able-bodied man or woman. Avoid making too many lists, as it is confusing.

(6) Pledge Cards. A simple card printed and filled out for each person may be used on which to designate the amount of weekly offerings.

(7) Envelopes. A supply of small envelopes, either plain or printed, should be ordered. If not otherwise available, these can be obtained by parcel post from the Duplex Envelope Company, Richmond, Virginia. It is suggested that the chairman order sample envelopes in advance to submit to the committee at its first meeting. Envelope racks should be placed upon the backs of pews and kept well supplied. The canvassers should leave envelopes in every house and ask that they be used, the name of the contributor always to be written on the envelope so that the treasurer may give proper credit.

(8) The Every-Member Canvass. The list of paying members should be divided up among the finance committee and a house to house canvass made to acquaint the people with the needs of the meeting and the new business-like way of meeting them. Inform each Friend of the amount the committee has thought fitting to place opposite his or her name, insisting on the weekly offering plan and always giving opportunity to increase the amount voluntarily. If serious objection is raised by anybody assure them that it may be reconsidered at the next meeting of the finance committee and ask them to meet with the committee. These visits can also be productive of a good fellowship feeling if the general interests of the church are talked over. The result will be a larger attendance at church services and a stimulation of interest.

(9) Public Announcement. At a Sunday morning service just before the new system is inaugurated let the chairman of the finance committee announce the new plan for raising funds—explaining that the needs of the church cannot be properly met without careful calculation and the application of systematic business principles. The co-operation of Friends should be asked for by the minister or the head of the meeting.

(10) The Sunday Morning Offering, to be taken by the ushers, should be considered just as important a part of the service as song or sermon.

(11) Delinquents, if any, should be notified quarterly either by mail or verbally by some one of the committee as to just how much has been received from them with a courteous request for prompt payment of back dues in order that the church work may not be hindered.

(12) General Suggestions. Do not ask the treasurer to do all the work. Let the committee stand back of him and with united front meet the petty excuses and any possible unpleasant experiences that may arise with a few individuals. No good work out of the ordinary routine of custom can be established without some criticism being made. Get a good man for treasurer and keep him in harness for several years or until the new system is well established. The taking up of the offering each Sunday morning will also give opportunity for the children to contribute with the advice and encouragement of parents, thus inculcating duty and privilege. People of the congregation will appreciate and make use of the opportunity to contribute toward the work of the church in the community.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting gave a splendid exhibition of progressiveness and church enterprise when, with entire unity, it adopted the plan above outlined and commended it to all its component meetings.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS,
General Secretary.

The Westtown Letter

Westtown School opens on Ninth month 8th, and the recitations begin on the morning of the 9th. As each school year proceeds both the need and the opportunity for changes develop. Some of these can be acted upon at once, but many of them have to be undertaken at the beginning of a new year. Westtown opens with various readjustments, one of which, at least, is of vital importance.

The adequate care and oversight of the boys in the building has been for many years one of our most important problems. In earlier days, when a rigid system of discipline was customary and generally approved, a single governor, with a little help, could fairly control the situation. But that system has been condemned for a generation, and more and more the schools depend upon the personal influence of the teachers, who must live in close touch with their boys. The governor therefore, has given way to the house-master, who should really be a house-father; and this generally means that he must be a married man with a home of his own so near to them, that both he and the home exert a steady influence on the current of their daily lives.

Where the cottage system is in vogue the man and wife will preside over the small group committed to their care. Where the boys live in large buildings, as they do in Westtown, convenient quarters are usually made for a few of the married teachers; and these soften, as best they can, the rougher customs and manners which always tend to develop in a region exclusively given to masculine youth.

For many years we have desired to have a real house-master, but a real home was an essential part of the idea, and we had no home to offer. During the past year, however, we have decided that the proper development of the school must not be hindered by any difficulty dependent upon the character of our building; and, therefore, we have fairly faced the problem of providing adequate accommodations, in spite of the fact that they will occupy valuable space and cost considerable money. The class-room, heretofore known as number 9, and the three rooms over it on the second floor were withdrawn from school use, and incorporated with a two-story projection in front giving the apartments side light and air. Architecturally the addition relieves the rather severe lines of the long boys' wing, and its arrangements are such as to furnish a delightful home for a small family.

While this movement does not depend upon any one person for its successful accomplishment, the fact that we had an admirable person, who was ready to undertake the office of house-master, was an important element in determining the improvement at this time. George L. Jones, who has been assistant principal for the boys during the past year, will, with his wife, occupy these quarters; and he will assume such duties as the position naturally implies. We are particularly fortunate in having one in that position who brings years of experience to guide a scholarly mind and a character admirably fitted, both by nature and by grace, to direct and influence boys.

It is our united policy to cultivate in our pupils that frame of mind which tends to prevent disorder and wrong doing. By living close to the students we can foresee much of coming trouble and quietly turn it aside, and when untoward events happen we can detect them in the beginning, before they have become serious, either to the school or to the boys. The preservation of order by the detention and punishment of offenders is a crude and wasteful method, compared with the plan outlined here. It must not be considered, however, that we are adopting a new policy. We are merely putting ourselves in position better to carry out those ideas on which we have long been attempting to conduct the School.

This autumn will see the revival, after many years intermission, of some formal instruction in agriculture. It comes in as a part of the new Department of Orchards and Forests, and will be conducted by the manager of that department, James F. Walker, who is a graduate of the Ohio State University in Agriculture. We do not expect to be able to do much actual teaching of agriculture, which properly belongs to the college and not to the preparatory school, but some instruction can be given and we can do a great deal to keep the agricultural idea alive among our people.

Much more important to my mind than the actual teaching of agriculture, is the exemplification of it which our whole farm gives, and the opportunity to work under skillful and sympathetic direction, which our new department will afford. All through the open weather, but particularly in the spring and early summer, there will be opportunity for the boys to work on the farm. Last spring it would frequently happen that a dozen or fifteen would spend a Seventh-day afternoon setting out strawberry plants, or weeding the rows of vegetables, or otherwise working on the crops which had been planted between the rows of young trees. This work was all paid for at a reasonable rate. One boy has been working all this summer and saving most of his wages to go toward his school bill for the coming year. If the plan is found feasible it is our intention to establish other working scholarships for next year. In these cases the School will grant outright a scholarship of $100, and will guarantee to the young man the opportunity of earning $100 more, over and above his living expenses, by working during the summer vacation and in the shorter vacations during the year and probably some on the holidays; so that $200, out of a total of $275 can thus be provided for. I shall be glad to hear from any farmer's boys who are interested in such a proposition for another year. I can promise nothing definite at the present time, but our expectation is as above outlined. Such an arrangement would begin about Sixth Month 20th of next year and run for twelve months, taking the vacation first and then the following school year. In such an arrangement it is rather essential to have those who are accustomed to farm work and who are able to stand up to some of the heavier parts of it.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

If interested in the School please send for our catalogue.

PERSONAL MENTION

Rufus P. King attended the sessions of Iowa Yearly Meeting last week.

Charles Mesner will serve the meeting at West Branch, Iowa, the coming year.

Willis Beede has been serving the meeting at Maricopa, Arizona, as pastor during the summer.

Leanna Hobson has accepted a call to remain as pastor at Fountain City, Indiana, for another year.

Murray S. Kenworthy, of Richmond, Indiana, attended the sessions of Iowa Yearly Meeting last week.

Charles Haworth has been elected Principal of Pleasant Plain Academy, Iowa, for the coming year.

Andrew F. Mitchell, of Long Beach, California, addressed the W. C. T. U. at Whittier on August 28th.

William I. Kent, of Rhode Island, will do pastoral work in Richland Monthly Meeting, Iowa, for the coming year.

William J. and Flora T. Sayers have resumed their work in the Poughkeepsie Meeting, New York, after a vacation spent in Indiana.

Frederick J. Cope, who has been pastor at Watseka, Illinois, for some time, has accepted a call to the meeting at Emporia, Kansas.

Professor Harlow Lindley of Earlham College has spent the summer in Indianapolis, where he has served as Assistant State Librarian.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Board of Young Friends' Activities, attended Iowa Yearly Meeting last week and rendered efficient service.

Charles E. Tebbetts addressed a Sabbath evening union service at Whittier, California, on August 23d. His subject was "The World That is to Be."

Professor Elbert Russell, of Richmond, Indiana, is conducting a very active campaign in his race for Congress in the sixth Indiana district.

Cyrus H. and Amy B. Hawkins expected to begin their new pastoral work on September 1, in Calvary Monthly Meeting, Sterling Quarter, Kansas.

Herbert McCarthy, who has been serving the meeting at Hughesville, Pennsylvania, will go to South Starksboro, Vermont, for the coming year.

Mary Miars Harold, of Indianapolis, Indiana, who has been serving the meeting at Greenfield, Indiana, as pastor, has accepted a call to the meeting at Danville, Indiana.

Lewis G. and Mary B. Pim, of Adrian, Michigan, have an invitation from the meeting to remain another year. They attended the sessions of Ohio Yearly Meeting, and have been having a short vacation since that time.

E. Howard Brown, who has served the meeting at Earlham, Iowa, for several years, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the meeting at Westfield, Indiana, and will take charge soon.

Homer J. Coppock has accepted a position in the Milbrook Memorial High School which will enable him to continue the excellent work he has been doing in the Milbrook Friends' Meeting.

Miss Bena Knudson, of Minneapolis, President of the Christian Endeavor Union of Iowa Yearly Meeting, is in Norway, and on account of the war, was unable to return for the Yearly Meeting.

Charles E. Tebbetts and wife, who have spent the summer in California, attended the sessions of Iowa Yearly Meeting. They returned immediately afterwards to their home in Richmond, Indiana.

Vincent D. Nicholson expects to continue his law studies as Junior in Harvard University during the coming year. He has just completed a year's service as Endowment Secretary of Earlham College.

Bertha E. Day, the converted catholic of Rockford, Ohio, is engaged in a series of evangelistic services at Barbers Mill, Indiana. The crowds are increasing each evening. Marie Cassell is pastor of the meeting.

Lyra D. Trueblood, daughter of Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Washington City, has a valuable article in the Homiletic Review for September on "The Uncrowned Queen of the Peace Movement, Baroness von Suttner."

Clark Brown and wife, of Cummings, Iowa, have been selected by the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs, to take the superintendency of Friends' Indian work in Oklahoma, succeeding William P. and Abigail C. Haworth, who retire from that work. They will take charge about the first of October.

MESSAGE FROM THE CHILSONS

Port Said, Egypt,
August 12, 1914.

We arrived here from Palestine yesterday to find that boats are tied up here because of the war, and the prospect of our getting away soon is not very bright. It is expensive staying here and we hope to get away soon.

ARTHUR CHILSON.

The above has been received at the office of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Board, and has been handed to us by the Secretary, Edith Tebbetts.

NEWS ITEMS

The union meetings in the new auditorium at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, were times of blessing to the community.

Friends in California are quite active in the campaign to make that state dry, an issue which will be decided at the November election.

The annual picnic of the Whittier, California, Bible School was held at Sandford's bridge, San Gabriel River, on August 13th. There was a good attendance.

From the Pacific Friend we learn that Bunji Kida, the Japanese missionary, is settled at El Modena, California, and that through his ministrations three of his countrymen have already been converted.

The camp meeting at Hughesville, Pennsylvania, was a time of great blessing. Daniel Hodgkin conducted the evangelistic services, and Edward Mott gave Bible lessons each day from the book of Hebrews.

The presence and services of Augustine Dwyer, of Westchester, Pennsylvania, were greatly appreciated by Friends at Poughkeepsie, Milbrook and Stanfordville, New York, which meetings he visited recently.

The Summer School for Bible study at Raisin Valley Seminary, Michigan, followed the Quarterly Meeting the first part of August. The program as published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, July 16th, was mostly carried out, and good interest was manifest.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Raisin Valley, Michigan, August 1 and 2. Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, was in attendance. He also visited several meetings in the Quarter. Isaac Stratton, of Beloit, Ohio, was also present, and both these ministers were favored to preach to the edification of the church.

The meeting at LaHarpe, Kansas, has a good commodious church house in good condition. There is no debt of any kind. There is a good farming community all around the town, and farms can be purchased at reasonable prices. We are not in the real estate business, but will be glad to answer inquiries regarding the community. Address W. H. Wheeler, LaHarpe, Kansas.

Sarah Coffin and Olive Newlin, of Whittier, California, gave a reception in honor of Imelda Tebbetts at the home of the former, on Saturday afternoon, August 22. The affair was largely attended by old friends and neighbors both in this and other states, members of the church, both in our own and other churches, College auxiliary and W. F. M. Society. Mrs. William Pearson, of Wichita, Kansas, was also present to meet old friends and gain new ones.—Pacific Friend.

Western Yearly Meeting will convene at Plainfield, Indiana, next Tuesday. An unusually large number of visitors is expected on account of the dedication program of the new meeting house. There will be several delegates from other yearly meetings. On Sabbath, the 20th, the speakers in the house will be Joseph John Mills, Edmund Stanley and Robert L. Kelly. Dalton Lewis will have charge of the music and a singing choir of three hundred voices is being gathered from the various meetings of the Yearly Meeting.

A unique feature of the Bible School work of Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting, New York, is the annual field day. The plan is to have all the schools of the quarter come together for a picnic dinner which is followed by various contests, racing, jumping, baseball, etc. This year the affair was held August 26th. Each school was present with a large delegation and each participated in the events scheduled with the result that Clinton Corners, New York, secured first place; Milbrook, New York, second. Two of the most obvious benefits from the plan are, (1) the attracting of the indifferent to the picnic itself, which may be the first step toward the church, and (2) the incentive to organize groups in each school which get together to practise for the events.

A reception was tendered to Charles E. and Imelda Tebbetts at the church at Whittier, California, on the evening of the 24th of August. The program was arranged by the Missionary Committee of the Monthly Meeting. H. E. McGrew presided. After singing "Love Divine All Love Excelling," and prayer by A. N. Tomlinson, Thomas Armstrong spoke in behalf of the church, and recalled incidents in the early history of the work of the church on this coast—as did other speakers—with which the Tebbetts were largely concerned. Rhoda M. Hare spoke in behalf of the mission interests and Lydia J. Jackson of that of the College. Imelda Tebbetts referred to early experiences in the work and of continued interest. Charles Tebbetts followed with words of appreciation of old associations and the advantages of those living on the coast, and of his interest in the work in general.—Pacific Friend.

Buffalo Quarterly Meeting was held at LaHarpe, Kansas, August 21-23. All of the local meetings were well represented. The sessions from first to last were deeply spiritual and inspiring. We had the very acceptable company of our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, L. Clarkson Hinshaw, who preached four sermons, which were fraught with that deep spirituality and earnestness that characterize his preaching. The business was conducted in much love and harmony. The reports of the different departments indicate a good degree of earnestness and interest. Dinner was served at the church and a social hour was enjoyed by all. The crowning meeting was on Sabbath morning, when the congregation broke out in song and praise, in which almost all present took part. Brother Hinshaw preached a very searching sermon from the life of Abraham, taking the text: "And I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing." Many were led to desire to live a life of greater devotion to God than in the past.

LYDIA HEALD SHARPLESS COMPLETES HER 104TH YEAR

On the afternoon of the 22d of August an event of more than ordinary interest to Whittier Friends and many others, was the annual celebration of the birthday of Aunt Lydia Sharpless, who has now lived four years past the century mark. While there are times that she longs to leave this earthly career, when the time of her birthday draws near she looks forward to it with keen interest and pleasant anticipation of meeting her many friends and relatives who gather to greet her on her natal day.

This year the home of her grandson, Leonard Sharpless, 229 West Washington Avenue, Whittier, was the scene of a large and happy gathering of her children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, nieces, nephews, and their children and grandchildren. Guests arrived throughout the afternoon from Long Beach, Los Angeles, Pasadena and other places, and many interested friends also called, all to bestow upon Aunt Lydia or Grandmother, as she is affectionately called, their love and best wishes and many tangible gifts were left as well. While she was the center of attraction many happy greetings were exchanged among those who had not met for years.

There was a short, informal program. Grandmother herself repeated a poem, "Waiting, Waiting," which was composed for her by Dr. Benson, of Pasadena, some years ago. Dr. Benson read another short poem composed for this occasion. Charles E. Tebbetts appropriately invoked divine blessing upon the company, and the guest of honor, and also reviewed some of the world's progress during the lifetime of Lydia Sharpless. Thomas Armstrong and Edward Cook also made appropriate remarks. After the guests had departed Grandmother returned to the home of her daughter, Sarah Hiatt. She said she was not tired, and was very happy that so many had come to see her. She has entered upon her 105th year, eager to piece more quilts and in her simple way do all the good she can.—Pacific Friend.

FRIENDS AND THE WAR

Great trouble has come to the Society of Friends in England. By their creed they are opposed to war, and now they find their country plunged into the greatest of all wars. They face that fact in a recent statement of their attitude, in which they say: "We recognize that our government has made most strenuous efforts to preserve peace, and has entered into the war under a grave sense of duty to a smaller state towards which we had moral and treaty obligations." Therefore the present moment is one not for criticism but for co-operation, and ways are shown in which men of peace can help in this crisis, mindful always that in other countries there are men and women of similar faith. So the Friends are called upon not only to help the suffering and stricken in England, but to prepare for extending their services when the opportunity comes. A civilization in some respects surpassing any other has been built up on a foundation of sand, and was bound to crumble because force took the place of reason and humanity. At the close of the war will come a stupendous task of reconstruction, made more difficult by a legacy of hate, and the Friends are called upon to prepare for playing their part when this task of re-civilizing Europe begins. It is a message conceived in an admirable temper.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

***** A TRIP TO THE OREGON COAST *****

The state of Oregon is divided into three parts by two mountain ranges that run north and south across the state. The coast country is moist and cool and the grass grows all the year. This part of the state abounds in milk and honey, the leading products being butter, cheese and honey. The Willamette Valley and eastern Oregon have a long dry summer, and these portions of the state are much warmer than the coast country. As a result of these climatic conditions the shore of the Pacific or the mountain regions become the playground of the state.

Early on the morning of August 11, a party consisting of Charles O. Whitely, his wife and their two children, Esther and Robert, and Henry Wasson and wife, Mrs. Whitely's father and mother, and the writer and his wife, left Newberg for a two weeks' outing, and to hold revival meetings at Oretown on Nestucca Bay (pronounced Neztwek). The road, graveled the most of the way through Yamhill County, leads up the Willamette River till the Yamhill River is reached and follows the river and its tributaries to the summit of the coast range.

The towns passed were Lafayette, the former county seat, McMinnville, the present seat of justice, Sheridan and Willamina. Just before stopping for the night, we passed the buildings of the Grande Ronde Indian Agency. The cross above the church building indicated the influences that have moulded the character of the Indians and these show the evil effects of this influence.

The second morning we climbed the mountain, crossing the summit at an elevation of less than seven hundred feet, this being a very low pass. Two roads lead down the mountain side to the sea, one of them going down three rivers to the big Nestucca, the other down the little Nestucca. The reputation of the road down the little Nestucca was very bad, but a drink from the sulphur spring by the side of the creek renewed our courage, and we were ready for new experiences. The river runs between two mountains, only narrow valleys being found anywhere. In some places the mountains are rock-ribbed and bare; in others they are covered by a growth so dense and the species so numerous that a description is impossible. The road is very hilly and full of rocks of all kinds and sizes. We were pressing on, intending to reach Stella Falls before noon, when passing a peculiarly bad drop in the road one of the rear wheels of the Whitely rig gave way with a crash. A new vehicle was obtained and Stella Falls was reached where the second night was spent instead of at our destination. This picturesque spot compensates for much hardship.

The next morning we finished the trip, reaching our destination before noon. On the way we passed a rotting log, upon which were six or more stumps of trees, the trees having been removed. These were from six inches to a foot in diameter. This is a common sight in this country. The seed falls on the log and germinates and then sends its roots to the earth sometimes on both sides, thus literally sitting on the log.

On Saturday morning we were joined by Albert Benson and Oliver Charles from Newberg. In the afternoon the entire party drove down to Fletcher's beach where a part of the company enjoyed a swim in the surf.

A ride over a steep, rocky hill was necessary in order to reach the fish cannery but the effort was well repaid when the knowledge thus gained is considered. Everything is kept perfectly clean and sanitary. Three of our party were permitted to ride on the gasoline launch on one of their trips to gather up the fish. Two trips are made each day, one up the big Nestucca River, and one up the little Nestucca River. The catch consisted of the Chinook salmon ranging in weight from fifteen to thirty pounds each.

One day our party, in company with some from the neighborhood, went to Neskowin (pronounced Nez-ko-in), one of the most popular beach resorts on this part of the coast. This place used to be known as plain plebian Slab Creek, but it now is known by the esthetic name given above. At this place stands proposal rock, a large rock perhaps more than one hundred feet high, covered on top by vegetation. The name was gained because a young couple scaled its side and reached the top, and then the loving swain, taking advantage of the occasion, obtained the important answer he desired. Here are seen at low tide a large number of spruce stumps encrusted by marine growth. No one knows how long they have been there, as little change has been noticed since the country has been settled.

The meetings were held in the new church building at Oretown, a country hamlet, consisting of a postoffice, cheese factory, Grange hall, and the church, surrounded by farm houses. The congregation is known as the Gospel Church of Oretown, and the declaration of faith is about as follows: "I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as my Savior, and accept the Holy Scriptures consisting of the Old and New Testaments as the only guide for my life and action." The building was nearly completed, so that it was dedicated Sunday afternoon, August 23rd. We began the meetings Thursday evening, August 13th, and held meetings every night till Sunday evening, the 23d. Three meetings were held each Sunday. On the afternoon of the 16th, we held a meeting devoted to Prohibition.

The services were well attended on Sunday, and fairly well attended during the week. A few found joy and peace in believing. One man well advanced in years said when asked to pray, "I do not know how, I have not prayed for forty years," but he did pray and seemed to find peace; he was the son of a minister. One young girl in her early teens found peace the last night. We left the place with regret that so many refused to yield.

We left for home about noon on Monday, the 24th, coming by the big Nestucca and the Three Rivers route to Dolph. We found this road much better than the other one. The rocks known as Castle Rocks are on the south side of this canyon and are situated up near the top of the wall and are so named because of their shape. Our camping ground was in a beautiful grove of alder. Attention was called to the fact that four alder trees, the largest about twelve inches in diameter, were growing within a large fir stump that had been hollowed out by fire, the massive shell and roots entirely surrounding them. Reinforced by the bedding carried along, the fine growth of fern near the camp ground furnished a fine bed for the company. We crossed the summit in a fog carried in from the ocean. The ground under some of the trees was wet, the foliage of the trees having condensed the moisture, which fell in drops to the ground. Sometimes autos were met in narrow places where passing was very difficult. Auto drivers were usually careful, but one reckless one came around a sharp curve so fast that if the brake had failed to work an accident would very likely have resulted. Our second camp on the homeward journey was by the Yamhill and the final drive ended about noon of the 26th.

Mrs. Wasson of the party was sick the last two days, but was able to continue the journey home. Although the writer and his wife have been here over twenty-six years this was our first trip to the coast. We trust the reader will enjoy in some measure the perusal of the story.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

September 20

Subject—The Judgment of the Nations.

Lesson—Matthew 25: 31-46.

Golden Text—Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me. Matthew 25: 45.

Place—Mount of Olives.

Time—Afternoon of April 4, A. D. 30.

Jesus had now completed His general mission and is giving some parting instructions to His disciples. He has gone out from Jerusalem and, seated on the Mount of Olives with the disciples around him, is giving them a picture of the final judgment when all human events will receive their exact reckoning.

Jesus Himself was about to be crucified. So far as outward demonstration went, His mission appeared largely to be a failure, but He looks forward to the end of time when in the last setting of all things material, Jesus is to come with all the holy angels to "sit on the throne of His glory." Now Jesus was to be judged; then He is to judge all men, including His accusers and those who here were to pass judgment upon Him.

Here on earth the wheat and the tares were to grow together until the harvest time, when the tares were to be gathered and burned. Here the sheep and the goats would graze from the same pasture, but the day would come when the inevitable separation must take place. Saint and sinner mingle together here as elements in the same social life, but the needle is not truer to the pole than are the judgments of God which operate with exactness for the future life. The sheep with their white coats were symbols of the pure and good. The goats with their black hair and stubborn disposition typified the sinner.

The destiny of every man for the future life is written by his own decision for himself in this life. "The proof that one belongs to the kingdom of Jesus is in doing the same kind of works that Jesus did on earth."

Those who have been selfish, who have failed to hand a cup of cold water in the name of discipleship, who have failed to serve humanity by useful, sympathetic deeds, who have not served their Lord and Master here, will receive the punishment which their own manner of living has entitled them to receive.

The S. S. World very fittingly quotes from "The Vision of Sir Launfal," in the words of the leper to the knight who was on the quest for the Holy Grail: "Lo, it is I, be not afraid!"

In many climes, without avail,
Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail.

Behold, it is here;—this cup which thou Didst fill at the streamlet for me but now;

This crust is my body broken for thee,
This water his blood that died on the tree;

The Holy Supper is kept, indeed,
In whatso we share with another's need;

Not that we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three,
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 20

Topic—Share your Blessings. Hebrews 13: 16-21.

Most people have blessings without number. Those who feel that they have but few have not really awakened to their opportunities.

There are the blessings of the home, of the community, of the Church, of social life, of the school, the college, the young people's society, blessings of friends, of health, of the farm, of business, of autoing, of camping, of visiting, of sight seeing, of a trip to the mountains or the lakes or the coast; blessings of the Christian life without number.

And why should not all of them be shared with others? We are all social beings, but we should never be satisfied to be always taking from others. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." It was the good Samaritan who won commendation because he shared his blessings with one who needed them.

Wise sharing calls for wise planning. Promiscuous giving is not a blessing. Share with those who need help and who will profit by the assistance.

There is no place for selfishness in the Master's kingdom. We belong to a brotherhood which includes all mankind. To help others, to let them have some of our own blessings is the most Christ-like thing we can do.

Our Lord came to earth to share heaven's blessings with all men. It is our business to pass these blessings on to others as Christ's representatives on earth.

We all ought to be share holders of heaven's bounty, and the shareholders in God's kingdom will never take advantage of others.

We are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, and as such we are bound to scatter our blessings wherever we go.

SPECIAL SERVICES

The first week in September has been designated as the time for special services in the Friends' Church in Whittier. It was hoped by many that when Emma Coffin came as assistant pastor her work might begin with a series of meetings, but the way did not open at that time. But her discourses have been full of the thought and were leading up to such.

Those who have been away on vacation will be home, and teachers and students will be in by that time, and with the church and Bible School, this seems an auspicious time to have special services for the quickening of spiritual life, the renewing of covenants and the consecration of lives for the tasks of the year before us and for the services of life. We are assured that all who love their Lord and are interested in the salvation of both young and old will continue steadfast in prayer for the Spirit's power upon the effort.—Pacific Friend.

Married

Cecil-Hodgin—At the home of friends in Dodge City, Kansas, August 13, 1914, C. Myron Cecil to Esther Bernice Hodgin, the bride's father, Thomas C. Hodgin, officiating. The couple left immediately for High Point, North Carolina. They will be at home at Lexington, North Carolina, after September 1st.

Coffin-Reid—At the home of the bride's mother, Lillian E. Reid, Mankato, Minnesota, August 5, 1914, Roscoe C. Coffin to Isabelle G. Reid. After a trip through Yellowstone National Park, and a visit in Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. Coffin will be at home at 108 West Twenty-seventh Street, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Mrs. Coffin is a graduate of the Mankato State Normal School and has been a very successful teacher. Since graduation from Penn College Mr. Coffin has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work. He is now assistant State Secretary of the Minnesota Association.

Born

Kenworthy—To Osa F. and Edna Kenworthy, at Liberty, Indiana, August 28, 1914, a daughter, Margaret Esther.

Died

Beard—Lucinda Beard, daughter of Jonathan B. and Matilda Macy, was born near Economy, Indiana, April 12, 1839, and died at the same place August 7, 1914, aged seventy-five years four months and twenty-five days. She was the last surviving member of her father's family. Her parents and her ancestors for generations were Friends. Her father was one of the first men identified with the anti-slavery movement in his community. She was married to Henry Beard in 1860. She was a woman of deep religious convictions and had accepted Christ when seven years of age. In her last hours she said, "I am ready"; "I am not afraid"; "It is all right." Five children survive her.

Davis—Samuel Davis was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, November 5, 1823, and died at his home in Cleo, Oklahoma, August 11, 1914, aged ninety years, nine months and six days. He moved to Iowa at an early day and was there married to Barbary Dill. He moved to Kansas in 1880, and then to Colorado, where his wife died. He then married Clara Warren, who died two years later. He moved to Oklahoma at the opening of the Cherokee Strip and lived there until his death. He married Junetta Hackney in 1896. He was a vigorous old man until the time of his last sickness. He was converted in early life and was a member of Friends. Funeral services were conducted by Lodi Bonser.

Sherwood—Malinda H. Sherwood, daughter of Eli and Ann Hale, was born near Clarks-ville, Ohio, February 27, 1825, and died June 24, 1914, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Anna L. Morgan, near Spring Valley, Ohio. She was a birthright Friend and an esteemed member of Caesar's Creek Monthly Meeting, Ohio.

Thompson—Mary Eliza Thompson, widow of Thomas E. Thompson, was born in Harrierson County, Ohio, and died at her home in Chicago, Illinois, August 13, 1914, aged sixty-eight years five months and fifteen days. She was a birthright Friend and lived a happy, joyous Christian life. Even though not confined to her bed very much, she was a quiet sufferer, only few knowing of it. During the last night of her life she repeated over and over, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." She is survived by five adult children and three grandchildren.

President Calls for Peace Prayers

PRESIDENT WILSON on September 8th signed the following proclamation, calling on the people of the United States to pray for peace in Europe.

"By the President of the United States of America.

"A PROCLAMATION

"Whereas, great nations of the world have taken up arms against one another and war now draws millions of men into battle whom the counsel of statesmen have not been able to save from the terrible sacrifice;

"And, whereas, in this, as in all things, it is our privilege and duty to seek counsel and succor of Almighty God, humbling ourselves before Him, confessing our weakness and our lack of any wisdom equal to these things;

"And, whereas, it is the especial wish and longing of the people of the United States, in prayer, in counsel, and all friendliness, to serve the cause of peace;

"Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do designate Sunday, the fourth day of October next, a day of prayer and supplication, and do request all God-fearing persons to repair on that day to their places of worship, there to unite their petitions to Almighty God, that, overruling the counsel of men, setting straight the things they cannot govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict, in His mercy and goodness showing a way where men can see none, He vouchsafe His children, healing peace again and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship nor any wholesome fruit of toil or thought in the world; praying also to this end that He forgive us our sins, our ignorance of His holy will, our willfulness and many errors, and lead us in the paths of obedience to places of vision and to thoughts and counsels that purge and make wise.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and twenty-ninth.

"By the President.

WOODROW WILSON.

"WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, Secretary of State."

Correspondence

SILOAM SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, July 27, 1914.

Editor American Friend:

I have noticed several times that the question has been asked, "Is there a reason for the Friends to continue to exist?" It is plain that they have had a good influence on other churches in the past. As I read the Methodist publications I see how strongly they advocate the peace cause, temperance, the education of the colored man and are opposed to the use of tobacco.

Cannot Friends continue to live a vital, spiritual, every day Christian religion, that thereby all Christians may be drawn more closely together and that the world may see that Christians love one another? I was pleased to read in the proceedings of the recent conference of the M. E. Church South that the young people especially have a strong desire that the two great branches of Methodism should be united. May not the different branches of Friends learn a lesson from this too, and drop their little differences and stand shoulder to shoulder that the world may see that we are Christ's children and that we do not live for self, but for the spreading of the Lord's kingdom?

Although I am now more than three score and ten, and Friends are few and scattered, I am trying to get subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND and other religious papers which will nourish the soul.

E. S. TIMBERLAKE.

The Universal League for Peace

After the largely attended meeting in the Chamber of Commerce at Cincinnati, Sunday, September 6, 1914, a league was formed at a subsidiary meeting by certain of the attenders, entitled The Universal League for Peace in the United States of the Civilized Nations of the World. The meeting was called by a well known cosmopolitan writer, poet and journalist, who writes under the names of O'Connell Saxon and Horace Saxon, Professor Howard Swan, formerly of Imperial College, Japan, whose pen name here is Honorable Sir Horace Saxon-Bart, Quaker poet, an American-Englishman, who lives in College Hill, Cincinnati.

The Chairman was "Sir Horace." No regular president was chosen for the first year. The true president of the union of nations it was urged should be "Justice" (Jesus), aided by his friends and disciples, "Friendship" and "Comradeship". Other members of the league are lecturers, professors and attenders of the Chamber of Commerce peace meeting, of whom a list will be issued in time. It was decided to invite Sir Edwin Grey to act as president of the embryo United States of the world in Europe during the war and pending the formation of the constitution. President Wilson will naturally preside at a peace congress and the league proposes Cincinnati as the place of meeting as being a German-American town. The permanent bases of the league are (1) Clear communication of ideas, preferably in English and French as well as the native tongue. (2) Comradeship, fraternity and friendship between members. (3) Justice. Further meetings will be announced. Resolutions have been sent through the Presbyterian Church at College Hill, Cincinnati, to the Federated Churches of Cincinnati and passed on by them to the national and international committees of Christian Churches in America, urging union of nations as followers of Jesus.

Important Catholics and certain of the Cincinnati Jews of the Hebrew Union College have been asked to join in the plea of "justice, truth and friendship" pure and simple, and have signified their willingness to do so.

The object of the Universal League for Peace is to provide a formal means to investigate and to carry out a practical attempt to frame a constitution or frame work for the union of civilized nations as the United States of the world, during or immediately after the conclusion of this war or at the Peace Congress in America which in all probability cannot be held before the early part of 1916.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

The session of Ohio Yearly Meeting just passed had a strong Evangelistic current running through the entire session. At the opening praise service on Tuesday morning, led by J. Walter Malone, the melting, quickening power of the Holy Spirit's presence was plainly manifest, and this was solidified by the sermon preached by Edward Mott, Clerk, and also Yearly Meeting Superintendent, at the opening session proper at 9:30 o'clock on Tuesday, August 25th.

The same persons were named as Clerks as last year, namely, for Presiding Clerk, Edward Mott; Recording Clerk, Ralph Coppock; Reading Clerk, Merrill M. Coffin; Announcing Clerk, Paul B. Lindley, and Bernard Mott for Page.

The reports of the State of the Church showed a growth of 492, though this report is very hard to secure accurately. The report of the Evangelistic and Pastoral Board showed much marked advance along this line.

Owing to impaired health and heavy labors in con-

A Great Opportunity for Friends

"In the time of war let all men of good-will prepare for peace."

This sentence from the recent statement of English Friends on the war situation ought to sound the call for a new day in the Society of Friends. Traditionally our denomination has been the apostle of peace since the days of Fox and Penn. Practically we have reached the ebb tide of our activities, until apparently multitudes have had little or no concern about the subject of peace as a vital part of our denominational life.

Probably the spirit of optimism which has seemed to possess the world in later years has lessened the interest which many would otherwise have had in the general subject of the pacification of the nations. Few men could believe that our twentieth century civilization had within it any possibility of a gigantic bloody strife. Passively the church of every name stood for peace as a principle, and both commerce and labor supported the doctrine of non-belligerency. To many Friends it seemed that the millenium of the peace propaganda had dawned, with the result that they had ceased to rally to the call of the faithful few, who with a seeing vision caught the gleam of danger signals in the distance.

Now that a rude awakening has come, and the most deadly and awful tragedy in human history is being enacted in the very center of European civilization, the problems of peace, of arbitration, of disarmament, of international agreements become issues of the first magnitude. It is practically certain that before the present strife has ended, great economic and religious forces will be at work to safeguard the future peace of the world. Whether or not the nations can be led to adopt the policy of disarmament and agree to the settlement of all differences by the arbitrament of an international judicial tribunal is a question which time alone can answer. Probably it is too much to hope that such a desirable change can be speedily realized.

This war will close, however, at a time when the pacifists of the world will be rallying with greater strength and determination than have yet characterized the peace movement, and it will be passing strange if all the nations are not made to feel the force of the peace propaganda, leading them to take advanced ground in their plans for settling international differences. The hope of some such accomplishment as this is the only gleam that lies across the pathway of the struggling nations at this time.

What part shall Friends have in the reconstruction of world policies following the present conflagration across the seas? It is a question of no small moment, and even now our members should be rallying to the support of our Peace Department as they have not done before. It will not suffice to conclude that other and greater forces will apply themselves to the problems of world peace. By the memory of our forefathers who suffered persecutions and death for the sake of their beloved testimony against war, Friends in justice should take a commanding place in the ranks of those who in the face of these changed conditions will attempt constructively to build a new civilization for the peoples of the world.

But it seems to us in this crisis that Friends face a more fundamental question than that which relates itself to the methods of international procedure. Out of the multiplicity of arguments for the pacification of the world, Friends have chosen to proclaim the gospel of love and the brotherhood of men as basic principles for the conduct alike of individuals, communities and nations. Our testimony has harmonized with the teachings of the Bible that in the last analysis peace between men must rest upon the peace of God, that Divine love is the only lasting curative for hatred and bloody strife.

The Uniform Discipline declares: "The Lord Jesus makes love to God and to man the guiding principle of action. * * * We, therefore, as a Christian body, believe that we should live justly and peaceably with all men, and refrain from any participation in military service in peace or war. No danger or emergency, or even the command of our nations, can justify us in departing from this principle. * * * Let us seek to conduct ourselves during times of excitement or of war, in all respects consistently with the gospel of love, endeavoring to encourage everything that makes for peace, and to do what we can to bring about the just settlement of disputes through conciliatory methods or arbitration."

Friends have now a masterly opportunity to help to raise the peace movement to a high plane. Peace is not a question of expediency or economics alone. It is fundamentally a question of right, and the world must be made to see that war will not be an impossibility until Christianity has been incorporated as a vital, controlling force into the mechanism of international life. Questions of expediency, of economics, of the effect upon trade and commerce, are all important in relation to the practical solution of the problems of war, but until the ruling elements of the nations are governed themselves by the principles of the Prince of Peace, we cannot hope for a cessation of war.

May this not be the occasion of a revival in the Society of Friends, through which the impress of our testimony may be visited upon the church universal and upon human society as the voice of God speaking to the Nations? Great is our responsibility, but with it all is a great opportunity to speak to the world with prophetic voice, calling all men to higher conceptions of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all peoples.

Symbols

BY AUGUSTINE JONES

A symbol is a sign by which one infers a thing; anything which suggests an idea or thing. "Symbols instruct the ignorant" (Plutarch). They are index fingers in the search for truth. "There are a good many symbols that are more expressive than words" (Holmes). But words also are symbols.

The Rainbow (Gen. 9: 13, 14) is an early notable symbol, the sign in the cloud, of the majestic Covenant. The sun shines on drops of water, like diamonds; our point of view catches the reflection from the sun. It is made a symbol at once of an everlasting promise in the sight of God and men.

The ancient "Ark of God" was a symbol in the Holy of Holies, in the Temple, and gathered within and without a coterie of symbols. The mercy seat and cherubim were above it, while beneath was the traditional stone upon which Jacob rested his head at Bethel, "The House of God," and dreamed of the ladder and open door to Heaven with angels attendant.

The Ark earlier suggested the thought, which has since haunted the minds of men, that the presence of Jehovah dwelt within it, guiding Israel in the wilderness, across Jordan to the Promised Land, and resting at Shiloh, from B. C. 1444 to B. C. 1116. The prophet Samuel was instructed before it here.

Solomon, "the wisest man the world e'er saw," built a house remote for his wife, the daughter of Pharaoh, because she was an idolatress, and he regarded the vicinity of the Temple too holy for her, by the presence of the Ark of God (II Chron. 8: 11). He was not always thus thoughtful. This dream and sacred stone at Bethel drew forth from the pen of Sarah F. Adams "Nearer my God to Thee."

Early Christian art is replete with symbols of Christ and the apostles. Their names were not required in the catacombs or elsewhere. Symbols still cherish their memory and Divine power from age to age. Life of Christ in Art (F. W. Farar). "As we go back in history," says Emerson, "language becomes more picturesque, until its infancy, when it is all poetry, and all spiritual facts are represented by natural symbols."

The Society of Friends has had little use for symbols or ritualism fitted to the childhood of the race. Like St. Paul, they had once thought as children, but they had now put away childish things. There is thought to be an occult peril in cleaving habitually to ceremonies and symbols, until they draw to themselves a share of that worship which belongs to God only.

"Friends have striven with Divine help,
To raise the soul above all earthly storms;
For in it lies that purest harmony;
Which lifts us over self and up to God."

Nevertheless they have had symbols: plainness of speech, behavior and apparel. The hat with extended brim, the bonnet of blessed memory, radiant within and sometimes without. All these and more have been outward symbols of inward grace. It is probable that this pure livery has sometimes covered false prophets. Symbols are easily imitated, but the record proves such to have been rare.

An honest record of fair dealing for centuries has entered the byways of trade. Efforts to imitate the clothing and merchandise of honest men is vigorous testimony to righteous character. Nobody counterfeits anything but genuine coin, or its real equivalent. Let us continue in individual faithfulness. Remember, we have entered into the labors of other men.

"All things are symbols: the external shows
Of Nature have their image in the mind,
As flowers and fruits and falling leaves."

—H. W. Longfellow.

War is upon the world, wild and furious. Wealth has been worshipped and made the symbol of law and might. The hour of reckoning is at hand, and some will certainly discover that God reigns.

There are revered footprints of scientists, scholars, authors, poets, teachers, benefactors and ministers of grace the world over. Their homes, hearth-stones, haunts, possessions dear to them, with every personal association are symbols and reminders of their life-work for humanity, to be cherished forever.

We may visit today with glowing enthusiasm, the venerable crypt under the ancient church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Eisleben, where Martin Luther, an unconscious infant, was baptized in 1483. We may not regard this baptism as a symbol of salvation, but we cannot forget that we stand on the threshold of the Reformation. How it vitalizes our reading.

"The letter fails, and systems fall,
And every symbol wanes:
The Spirit over-brooding all,
Eternal love remains." —J. G. Whittier.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

The Friend That Stands By

BY JAMES E. C. SAWYER

The friend that always stands by us is God. He has said: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." In his Second Epistle to Timothy Paul says: "At my first answer, no man stood with me, but all men forsook me. . . . Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me." In his Epistle to the Philippians he says: "The Lord is at hand"—that is, near—and he adds: "In nothing be anxious."

God is always near; he never forsakes us; he always stands by us. He does not desert us when we are discouraged. He does not give us up when we have failed to realize our ideals and are tempted to discouragement. His sympathy is unfailing even when our nearest friends do not perfectly understand us, and accordingly can not adequately sympathize.

"Each in his hidden sphere of joy or woe,
Our hermit spirits dwell and range apart."

God always understands us. According to our need he sympathizes with us, comforts and cheers us. In one of the Psalms in which David gives deep and intense expression to his trials and sorrows, we find also most hearty and beautiful expressions of his trust and confidence. He knows that God will stand by him. His "tears have been his meat day and night," "waves and billows have gone over him," but he has not lost the comfort of his assurance of Divine protection—he "will yet praise God for the help of his countenance." According to his changing needs will be the manifestation of infinite interest in his welfare: "Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life." The changes in our life are for our discipline and education. Those who have no changes fear not God. But there is more light than darkness in every Christian life. For the daytime we have his "loving-kindness," and for the darkest night his "song." In our deepest sorrow and loneliness God gives us the sweet melody of perfect peace. In prison God's saints sing praises at midnight. The night is light for those who have the comfort of the Divine presence. "When he giveth quiet, who then can make trouble?"

David says: "I showed before him my trouble." He realized the presence of God, and was comforted by the heart of God when he took to him his cares and sorrows. When other refuge failed him and no man cared for his soul, he cried unto the Lord: "Thou art my refuge, my portion in the land of the living." "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him." Prayer is a human instinct, because humanity is the child of God, and naturally seeks refuge in his arms. We are God's "own bairns," and in one way or another we all fall down before him and pray. There are times when the most intimate friendship, the most devoted and tender human love, the sweetest, most sympathetic and unselfish, can not suffice; times when if we have not the consciousness and the companionship of God we are alone. We are an infinite mystery to ourselves, and only God can make social our solitude. Without him we must be alone with our own spirit. That we can not endure.

Job's wife loved him, his friends loved him; but neither could get near him in the abysses of his agony. His consciousness of God carried him through. He could not have endured without it. Without God we must be forever lonely. His is the only love that answers our infinite need. The eternity in our heart he alone can satisfy. In his companionship is all comfort. So Job could say: "He knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold." He was sure of God's interest in him. He was sure of his own soul, and that helped him to be sure of God. Because he had kept God's way and not turned aside from it, he could trust the Almighty, although he was so sorely troubled. He could understand, but he could say: "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in him." He that lives the life of the spirit, who is faithful to his best vision, is not thereby saved from mysteries that he can not fathom or from storms of trouble that almost break his heart; but he is not likely to abandon himself to the darkness of infidelity.

God is the constant and tender friend of the humble. He stands by the weak and the obscure. There are countless souls who are lights in dark places through their manifestation of the peace and joy which Christ gives them in sordid surroundings and severe afflictions. The same gospel that heroic heralds preach in far-off heathen lands they silently but effectually proclaim in lonely hamlets and in the slums of great cities by their patience, their peace, their unselfishness. We would have been awed to behold the face of Stephen when it was "like that of an angel," but are grateful that we have been permitted more than once to see the faces of men and women transfigured by angelic sunshine when they were wholly destitute of material comforts. The poor of this world who are "rich in faith," are everywhere. "The light shineth in darkness." The sunshine of the Divine love illuminates hovels and hospitals and prisons. God stands by the weak, the lowly, the obscure.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Unforgettable Things

BY J. W. DORLAND

There are occurrences in our lives that are unforgettable. They stand out like beacon lights along the shore line of life. In the early days of childhood, in that hazy indefinite period, when memory can scarcely attach itself to any one incident, things have happened that have helped much to shape our future lives, and these things are remembered when others have been forgotten.

How bright and golden are those early care-free days. Father and mother, brothers and sisters, have mingled happily together, and life seemed like a jolly game. Then came perhaps the tragedy of the broken toy, when the small heart thought it would break, and words of comfort seemed of no avail. It seems infantile now, but was real enough then.

There may be a difference between the lives of small children, but they have their milestones. Children that have traveled with their parents, and lived in many places, receive early impressions that remain always; impressions of strange lands and stranger faces—the great ocean liner forging her way through blinding spray and mountainous seas—the railroad train speeding its way, mile after mile, along the glittering metals—great cities full of noise and confusion, and quiet country places, where the cows graze in the broad green fields, and not far away the spire of the village church points heavenward.

Religion, the greatest force in the world today, should be a means of early and lasting impressions, an impression first, and afterwards a conviction. How much many of us owe to the lives of devoted Christian parents, how their prayers have arisen on our behalf oftener than the morning, and yet early religious impressions are sometimes strangely due to lack of proper teaching.

One little fellow as he lay in bed Sunday evenings, when all the house was still, listening to the church bells ringing for vesper service, used to think that it was Jesus coming to earth again, for the especial benefit of frightened little boys. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," said the Master, giving the thought that all children naturally wanted to come to Him, but that they were being held back and hindered by the older ones, and, sad to say, often by the parents themselves.

Then came perhaps the first death in the family, when the curtains were drawn and the house was dark and still, and they told us that the loved one had gone away to a far country, and perhaps we were permitted to see that one, lying there in a long black box so pale and still, and wondered how they could be there, and in a far country at the same time.

The birth of a little brother or sister, always a marvelous thing to the child, whose question "Where did it come from?" is usually answered by "Oh, the Doctor brought it in his grip," or "A stork flew through the window with it," or some such foolish reply. It is time that the great vital questions of religion, birth, sex, death, etc., be intelligently explained to the child. Mother Goose stories and fairy tales are all right in their place, for the cultivation of imagination, but let the early impressions, the unforgettable things, be based on truth.

The finding of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior should be the great unforgotten event. Some one has said, "Most of us are only half Christian; we divide our lives into two compartments, the secular and the religious, and are always perplexed how to adjust their conflicting claims. When we realize that this is a false distinction, that Jesus was as religious when He was feeding the multitude, as when He was teaching them; that He was as religious when He was cooking breakfast for the disciples to eat after their night's fishing on the sea of Galilee as He was in His after-breakfast talk with Peter; that it is religious to give a cup of cold water to a disciple,—in the name of a disciple; that we are sent into the world as Jesus was sent into the world, not to be ministered unto but to minister; and when we give ourselves to that ministering with the same singleness of purpose with which Jesus Christ gave Himself, we get rid of all that perplexity which comes from trying to serve two masters, and come into that peace of God which passeth all understanding. Some attain this simplicity by a sudden experience; some by a gradual development, and some never attain it."

In this day when the world has gone crazy over society, when selfishness is rampant, Christ needs as never before to be brought to the remembrance of the believer through the witness of the Holy Spirit, and the testimony of the Scriptures. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon His name."—Mal. 3: 16.

All the unforgettable things from early childhood up till now are for a purpose; they are stepping stones to the building of a life and a character. May the pages of the book of our remembrance be white and fair to be presented to Him after a while, without spot and without blemish.

Escaping From the War Zone

It is well known to many Friends that Alex C. Purdy, son of Ellison R. Purdy of Wilmington, Ohio, together with his bride, were in Germany at the outbreak of the recent war, Mr. Purdy having gone there for a year's study at Marburg. Having escaped from the war zone, and having returned to this country, Mr. Purdy has prepared an interesting statement of their experiences for the Journal-Republican of Wilmington. We are glad to reproduce this in THE AMERICAN FRIEND as a most interesting recital of the experiences of two Friends. In the second installment of the article, a pronounced German sympathy will be noted, which will be in contra-distinction to two letters recently published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, written more from the English viewpoint.—THE EDITOR.

"America for me,

My heart is turning home again to God's country."

This sentiment of Van Dyke's poem never found such a hearty and genuine response as it did in the hearts of the thousands of Americans who found themselves temporarily shut away from their native land at the beginning of the war. I venture to say that many an American who was comparing his own country unfavorably with Europe on the day before the war was declared, would have cheerfully given his bottom dollar for the privilege of enjoying those same imperfections on the day after war was declared. It was a great lesson in patriotism for all of us who passed through those anxious days. I suppose our personal experiences were tamer than those endured by many, but they were plenty wild enough for us, and we feel very thankful to be out of the war territory. Our beautiful year of study in Germany is now a shattered air castle, but our troubles seem so insignificant compared with the real woes of the lands we have left that we can not complain.

There was scarcely a rumor of war in the quiet little university town of Marburg until a week before the actual declaration. The Austrian-Servian trouble was aired in the local paper, but who would have supposed that their quarrel would involve all Europe! The diplomats may have realized the seriousness of the situation, but the thousands of American tourists certainly did not. Until Friday, July 31, we did not even consider leaving Marburg. That evening the local garrison began to show signs of unusual activity, but there was no actual mobilizing. Saturday afternoon we went on a long walk into the country. We forgot all about wars and rumors of war in the beauty of the country. War seemed unthinkable with Nature so charming and peaceful. But as we came into town through the poorer quarters, we saw groups of women standing red-eyed and silent, or talking in low tones. It was as though some calamity, against which no man could or would lift a hand, had struck the village. To be sure the younger element were eager and almost joyous, but those who had lived through the war of 1870-71 and who had seen death and privation, who knew war as a reality, on these the blow fell heaviest.

Posted in the center of the town we saw the reason, the Kaiser's order for general mobilization. That night we held our own little council of war and decided to leave for England Monday morning. We planned to wait there until the war scare blew over, or if war actually came to spend the winter in England or Scotland. The next morning, Sunday, just as we were starting to church we were met by our landlady's son, who had just returned from Hamburg. As a soldier he had information that war with Russia had actually been declared. We abandoned our pious intentions and instead of going to church I went to police headquarters while Mrs. Purdy packed the trunks. I learned from the police that after 12 o'clock that night all regular trains would be used for the mobilization of troops. It was up to us to get out at once. We left with all our goods and chattels at 2:30 p.m. for Hamburg, since the escape by way of Holland was already closed. The next day we visited the American Consulate and were advised to leave at once on an English boat sailing for Grimssy. The Consulate deemed it wise to leave the country at once so we took passage on the S. S. "Bury." We had to abandon our trunks since they were buried somewhere in a mountainous pile of luggage in a railroad warehouse and there was no getting at them in a hurry. But two trunks seemed of small importance in these perilous times.

Just before the boat sailed I made a wild sprint to a nearby bank and succeeded very luckily in changing my German paper money for English gold. About 2:30, the officials of the port of Hamburg came aboard. They examined the passenger list with great care and took off a German, who lacked one month of being exempt from army service and who was just making a short visit in Germany with his wife and child after having been away for twenty years or more. They then gave us our clearance papers and we sailed peacefully away from the Hamburg docks into the river Elbe, leaving behind us as we supposed all the uncertainty and depression and excitement of war-wracked Germany. It didn't matter that there were about one hundred more passengers on the little "Bury" than she had stateroom accommodations for, or food and water for, and that we were among the unaccommodated. We were too glad to get away to trouble about little things like sleeping and eating.

That night we anchored by the famous Kiel Canal, since no ships could leave the mined harbor at night. We did not feel at all worried over the night's delay. Just at sunset a whole line of torpedo boats steamed out of the Kiel Canal in the direction of Cuxhaven. Next day bright and early we set out for Cuxhaven, the open sea and England. Before we had gone far, however, a fussy little tugboat with a disgustingly important whistle turned us back and told us to wait. Well, to make a long story short, we spent three days moving back and forth between the Kiel Canal and Cuxhaven. Once we moved out past eight German cruisers and battleships. At the mouth of the river we saw an object that caused us to doubt whether we really wanted to go out or not. It was the wreck of an English oil steamer with her nose pointing to the heavens. The pilot who was bringing her in forgot the location of one mine. In the back of our minds we couldn't help wondering if that was to be our fate. Meanwhile we were reduced to two meals a day and the water began to give out.

At the end of the third day we were conducted back to Hamburg where we learned the true cause of our tribulations. While we were having our little pleasure cruise on the Elbe, England had declared war on Germany. Having returned to Hamburg, we were ready for the next move in the game. The more sedate and elderly among us refused to attempt any more wild flights, but a half dozen Americans, Mrs. Purdy and I being among them, and practically all the English, acting on the Consul's suggestion, tried to escape by way of Denmark. We left Hamburg that night at 12:34, and after traveling all night in a third class compartment we arrived in Flensburg, a town about an hour's ride from the border. After consulting the police there and learning that the escape by way of Denmark was not feasible, we decided to turn back once more to Hamburg. But the poor English were not allowed to turn back with us. On the steamship "Bury," the English had acted decidedly snobbish. They seemed to have gotten that curious notion that the boat was being detained because of the presence of Americans on her and they proceeded to petition the Captain that the Americans be put off the boat. Our revenge was ample at Flensburg, for while we hobnobbed with all the soldiers in sight the English were shut in a small room with a guard over them, really for their own protection. When we last heard from them, ten days later, they were still on the Danish border.

A perfect specimen of physical manhood is good; a perfect specimen of intellectual manhood is better; a perfect specimen of spiritual manhood is best.

Helper's Bible School Class, Friends' Church, Wilmington, Ohio.

The Helper's Bible School Class, a class of young mothers, started about six and one-half years ago, was one year later organized in regular form as an "Adult Class" with twenty-five charter members.

Its first teacher, M. Emma Newby, now of Des Moines, Iowa, taught the class for two and one-half years, leaving it with a membership of forty-seven.

Its present teacher, Harriet Purdy, has been teaching for the past four years. The present enrollment is eighty-eight active, and sixteen associate members, with an average attendance for the last two quarters of forty-seven.

As its name would indicate, its members try in different ways to be helpful in Bible School and Church work. For instance, they endeavor to have each Sunday two supply teachers prepared, one to teach in the adult department, and the other in the elementary, in nection with the Cleveland Bible Institute, Edward Mott was released from the full duties as Superintendent of the Evangelistic work, and the work was divided into three districts, with a member of the board over each district. William Kirby, John Pennington and Edward Mott were appointed for these positions. A good collection was taken for this work in the face of the meeting.

The work of the Rescue Home at Columbus, Ohio, is outgrowing its plant, and calls were made for money to help in this needy field. The sum of $258.00 was received. C. V. Williams of the State Board of Charities was present and spoke along the line of Rescue work and Child welfare institutions. He gives much helpful encouragement to the Children's Country Home at Amherst, Ohio.

D. C. Yoder, Bible School Secretary, of Cleveland, Ohio, gave a splendid address on Bible School work, and had many kind words about the work done at the Friends' School at that place in the course offered for Teacher Training Courses.

The advisability of continuing the publication of the Evangelical Friend was considered this year, and it was thought inadvisable for several reasons. First, the continued over-work of the editor made a change necessary and the financial burden was very heavy. It was also felt that the work which it had undertaken to do was about completed, viz., to bring to the attention of Friends of America the dangers which attend the promulgation of false doctrines within the ranks of the church and church schools. This has been done:

a faithful warning has been sounded and there are some evidences that the warning has been heeded. The promoters of the paper are ready to let the responsibility rest with those whose duty it is to take such action as will guarantee to our children a "guarded Christian education."

Ohio Yearly Meeting has a wide awake set of young people and they were much in evidence again this year. A strong feature of their part in this yearly meeting was the early morning hour's meeting, which took the form of a symposium on "The Christian Life." Speakers came from several different walks of life. The medical profession, the business man, the teacher and the minister were ably handled by prominent men from each vocation named. Charles Haworth was elected President, with Merrill M. Coffin, Vice-President, and Charles Mott, Secretary-Treasurer, of the Christian Endeavor Union.

The Cleveland Bible Institute gave an excellent report of the work done the past year, showing a year of growth in all departments. The courses offered are suited to college graduates or high school students, and take but two years to complete them, which will meet the need of persons who wish to obtain a thorough working knowledge of the Bible, and secure training in actual service in the missions in the city.

Foreign Missions have always claimed a large share of the attention of Ohio Yearly Meeting, and this year was given a prominent place in the sessions. The report showed a small deficit from last year, and on Saturday the meeting pledged $3,421.00, over twice as much as last year's offering, for this department. The Yearly Meeting directed the Board to adopt the policy this case the superintendent finds himself short of teachers. Also, they try to visit not only members of their own class, but anyone in the Church or neighborhood who can be helped in that way. Their largest visiting record for a year is 1,237. All work is under the direct charge of the president, committees and superintendents of the class. During the two quarters just passed they had four superintendents, each with one-fourth of the class under her care, to promote the attendance.

year of advancing the work just as the funds came in, without going in debt, instead of accepting the estimates, and the Board assuming any remaining deficit as a debt at the end of the year. A personal canvass for funds will be made in all the meetings in the yearly meeting on the third Sunday in October.

The officers of the Board were elected as follows: President, George E. Kent, Mt. Gilead, Ohio; Treasurer, E. L. Benedict, Marengo, Ohio; Recording Secretary, Carrie L. Chambers, Damascus, Ohio, and Corresponding Secretary, Rachel Pim, Alliance, Ohio.

The officers of the Evangelistic and Pastoral Board were: President, John Pennington; Secretary, Eliz. W. Ward; Treasurer, S. J. Santee; other members, Emma B. Malone, William Kirby and Edward Mott.

The services each evening and on the Sabbath day were of a deep and strong evangelistic nature. Many were blessed by the able ministry of the Word, which came with unction and with power. Several went forward to the altar of prayer.

The news from the seat of the war each day produced a spirit of serious solemnity, which aroused a spirit of deep intercession which will never be forgotten. Many felt deeply exercised for the spread of the Gospel of peace as the solution of the world's need at this time. The meeting adjourned to meet at Damascus, Ohio, in 1915.

GEORGE E. KENT.

Half the difficulty of fighting any severe battle or accomplishing any hard task vanishes when a man feels that he has comrades at his side fighting in the same cause, or that the eyes of those he loves are upon him, and their hearts praying for his victory:

Last Christmas they gave through the Home Mission Committee of the Church, to the poor of the town, thirteen comforts which had been made during the year.

Ten members of the class were received into membership by the Church during the past year. Two by request, four by certificate, and four by letter.

It may be interesting to note that the members of the class are the mothers of one hundred and forty-nine children.

Dickie Richmond and Martha's Feast

By RUWONE *

"Say, mamma, I don't think it was one bit fair!"

"What wasn't fair, Dickie?"

"You know papa read this morning about Martha and Mary giving a feast to Jesus, and how Mary just sat down and listened to Him talk and left Martha to do all the work. I don't think it was fair, and I'm s'prised at Jesus too. Mamma, I just can't help being a little s'prised at Him."

"You are not the only person who has been surprised at Jesus," said Mrs. Richmond thoughtfully. And she slowly repeated the text, "And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me." Presently she asked, "Dickie, have you seen the Lane sisters lately?"

"Oh, yes, mamma, I was going to tell you. Billy Jones and I were up there this morning. We went round the back way, and O my! how good it did smell when Miss Sadie opened the door. 'Boys,' she said, 'you're just in the nick of time. Phemie's been grumbling about her cookies being a failure, and threatening to dump the whole lot out to the chickens. But that savors too much of waste for her thrifty soul. So you see, if you'll just sit down here and eat as many of them as you can, you'll be doing her a real favor. And she can bake some more with a clear conscience.'

"She put a great big plate piled full on the table before us and said, 'Now begin, boys.'

"I put one in my mouth and it just melted. Bill said, 'Let's don't count, let's just eat.' And I said, 'All right.'

* The writer is a member of Western Yearly Meeting.

"You needn't look so shocked, mamma, we did leave a few on the plate, but 'twas mighty hard work to do it, I tell you.

"Do you really think Miss Phemie thought those cookies weren't good?"

"Dickie boy, Miss Euphemia is very particular, and very proud of her skill, and if the edges of the cookies were not smooth, or they failed to rise evenly, she would consider them a failure."

"What was Miss Sadie doing?" asked Mrs. Richmond.

"She was mounting her pressed plants and her bugs. She has a great book full of plants and flowers, and she has, I don't know how many kinds of butterflies and beetles and other things. You must just go up and see them, mamma, they're pretty as pictures. And would you believe it! Miss Phemie was helping her and seemed to enjoy it. We may have looked astonished. Anyhow she said, 'Sadie hadn't neglected her work a bit, nor mussed things up as she expected, so she thought she'd help her.' You know she did her best to keep Miss Sadie from joining the class when they started to study and collect plants and insects."

"Mamma, Bill and I think Miss Phemie is just finicky."

"Be careful, my boy, I'm afraid the bridle is off your tongue."

"Well— In the early summer, Bill and I went up there to report some class work to Miss Sadie. It had rained that morning and was some muddy. We cleaned our shoes outside the gate, and kind of scraped them as we went up the walk. Miss Sadie was in the living room.

"We finished our work and started home, and when about half way to the gate we happened to look back, and there was Miss Phemie with a whisk broom and dust pan sweeping up the floor where we sat. We heard Miss Sadie say, 'Phemie, you're just sweeping the nap off the carpet. I noticed that the boys' shoes were especially clean.' And she said, 'Oh, they were very nice for boys, but it is better not to let any dirt get ground into the carpet.'"

"Now mamma, honestly, don't you think that's just a little too persnickity?"

Mrs. Richmond didn't express her opinion, but she couldn't help smiling. And Dickie continued:

"We went up this morning to tell Miss Sadie about Pat Nolan. He's one of the boys down at the mill. Bill says he thinks Miss Sadie does probably like her plant and bug work; but he thinks it's mostly to give her a chance to find out about people who are sick or poor or in trouble.

"She asks the mill children to tell her if they find a new plant or a strange insect. And she knows all their families and when any of them are sick or get hurt or anything. So when Pat Nolan got his leg broke, she told her Sunday School Class she'd just give him over to us. We were boys and we'd know better how to amuse him than she would.

"So we've been going, two together, to take him toys and books and to play with him awhile, when we had time. Bill and I showed him how to make a bi-plane out of paper, like the Christian Herald told about. And he got so he could sail it clear across the room.

"And, mamma, we saw a lot of the children down there. And you never in this world could guess what they propose to do.

"Miss Sadie has been taking poultices and bandages and broths and all kinds of nice and necessary things down there. And she tells them her sister sends them. And they think her sister must just be a saint. And they propose forming a procession of the children and marching up to thank her.

"When they told us, we both said, 'Oh! o-o-o,' before we thought. Then we began to tell them they must be awfully clean and keep on the walks and—, but Bill stopped and said, 'Hadn't they better ask Miss Sadie?' and I said, 'That would be best.' And they said they would."

"Dickie," said Mrs. Richmond, "they came last week when you and Willie were out of town on your visit."

"Gee! What happened?" said Dickie.

"Miss Sadie marched them into the dining room. And every chick of them was clean as a pin. And when Euphemia came in, Sadie said, 'This is my sister who has sent you so many nice things.' The boy they had selected as foreman came forward, and said, 'Miss Lane, we all wants to thank you for all the good things you's sent us. You a sendin' 'em and Miss Sadie a bringin' and usin' of 'em on us, has just saved some of the lives of us. And we all thought—'

"Miss Euphemia didn't wait to hear any more. Her eyes were full of tears and she just caught up the scrawniest little girl in the line and kissed her."

"Mamma! I believe that because you are telling it," said Dickie.

"Well, she did. And then she said, as soon as she could talk, 'You children must all of you be hungry.' And she took them into the kitchen and gave them more bread and butter and jam than they had ever seen before in all their lives."

Dickie just shouted with laughter. "Took them to the kitchen, did she? I supposed 'twould be a line outside the back door. She's not translated yet, I see. But I'll vouch for the quantity and the quality of the bread and jam. There's not a streak of stinginess in Miss Phemie Lane. We all say that."

"And Dickie, Miss Euphemia proposes to have them come one afternoon each week while it is warm, to play in the grove south of the house. And she and Sadie will give them lunch before they start home."

"Now dat takes 'de ribbon, sho as you's bo'n," exclaimed Dickie. And my name isn't Richard Richmond if we boys don't help the ladies entertain the little ragamuf—, I mean the precious little children," said Dickie looking up at his mother with a roguish smile.

PERSONAL MENTION

Francis C. Anscombe and wife, of Richmond, Indiana, spent three weeks recently at their old home in Newmarket, Canada.

Professor Elbert Russell of Earlham College, had charge of the services of Friends Meeting, New Castle, Indiana, on last Sabbath.

J. P. Hadley and wife have charge of the Oriente mission of Friends in Wichita, Kansas. Mr. Hadley is taking some work at Friends' University.

Leroy A. Hawks has just closed a successful three years' pastorate at Symrna, Iowa, and has accepted a call to Motor, Iowa, for the coming year.

Martha P. Beede, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, has had THE AMERICAN FRIEND and its predecessor, The Friends' Review, in her family continuously since 1858. She still enjoys the paper very much.

Esther A. Balderston sailed for Honolulu and Japan on September 5, in company with William C. Allen and wife and William B. Harvey of Philadelphia.

John R. Webb, of Newmarket, Canada, recently spent ten days at his old home at Sunbury and conducted the anniversary services of the opening of the meeting house.

Fred W. Emerson, who has been Superintendent of Christian Endeavor work of Western Yearly Meeting the past year, and who was an instructor at Earlham College, has taken a position at Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas.

"Joseph Elkinton writes from South England that they hope to return to Philadelphia early next month. Two of the party will remain here but Joseph himself, and his daughter Mary, still plan to reach China before the winter season."—Philadelphia Friend.

William C. Allen, Secretary of the Interdenominational Peace Committee of the Pacific Coast Churches, has started on a trip around the world, having sailed early in September. Some members of California Yearly Meeting have been active on this committee.

Zenas L. Martin and family, who nearly twelve years ago left their home at Hubbard, Iowa, for missionary work in Cuba, have returned to this country on a furlough. They attended the recent Yearly Meeting. They are at home for the present at 1918 Second Avenue, S., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

George C. Levering, pastor of the meeting at Selma, Ohio, has taken charge of the prohibition campaign in Green County until after the election in November. He will spend the Sabbaths at Selma, where his family is now located, but for six days in each week, he will be in charge of county headquarters in the Y. M. C. A. building at Xenia, Ohio.

David E. Sampson and wife, of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, have returned safely from their religious visit to England. Immediately after their return and while visiting their son in Lynn, Massachusetts, they attended the meetings at East Lynn, Lynn and Salem, on August 30 and September 6. The ministry of David Sampson was helpful and fully appreciated by the meetings.

Henry W. Wilbur, of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, one of the ablest and best known Hicksite Friends, died suddenly on the evening of September 5, at Saratoga, New York, while attending a national conference of Hicksite Friends. He was the General Secretary of the General Conference of that body, was a prominent author of denominational and other books, and was active in the prohibition movement. For a time he was connected editorially with the New York Voice when published by Funk and Wagnalls.

NEWS ITEMS

From the Canadian Friend we learn that on August 15th and 16th, ten young Friends from Toronto, Canada, went to Rockwood for a week-end tramp. At both the Sabbath School and the meeting, these young Friends found opportunity for services and a sense of mutual encouragement came to all Friends.

Plans have been completed for the holding of a union evangelistic campaign at Central City, Nebraska, in September and October. The same communication says twelve young men have expressed their desire to become members of a gospel team and several of them have been out in the country holding meetings.

Through a letter from H. D. Lane of Iowa Yearly Meeting, who has been visiting this summer in the limits of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, several young Friends of the latter body sent their greetings to the young people of Iowa Yearly Meeting, which were read at the Christian Endeavor session on Friday night.

Friends of Vancouver, British Columbia have adopted strong resolutions, emphasizing the obligation of all Christian men to treat the Hindus, who have been locating in Canada, with kindness and good will. In closing, the resolutions state "That if we are Christian people and if Christianity means anything, it is our duty to prove in our actions toward the Hindu the superiority of our faith."

From the Missionary Advocate we learn that the school at Matehuala is going on under the care of two native teachers. The Federalists withdrew from there on June 24, after which the Constitutionalists came in and took possession. The mission property has remained unmolested. More than a hundred pupils have been in school and the religious services have been maintained on Sabbath and the prayer meeting on Thursday evening.

MESSAGE FROM THE FORDS

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has received the following message from Jefferson W. Ford, who with his family and the Chilsons, are on their way to take charge of Friends' mission work in British East Africa:

Port Said, Egypt, August 18, 1914.
Editor American Friend—In spite of war and conditions it produces, we expect to sail today on an Italian ship for Mombasa. We have had a precious eight days in Palestine, and during that time all shipping in the Mediterranean was tied up by the war. Now ships are moving again.

God has blessedly and clearly led and protected us and we believe has used us in His service. We are all well and glad to be able to go forward again. We know our friends are praying.

Sincerely,

J. W. FORD.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Allen D. Hole, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, has announced that the Committee will meet in its annual session at South Eighth Street Meeting House, Richmond, Indiana, Thursday morning, October 1st, at nine o'clock. There will be important business to transact and sessions will probably continue throughout the day and possibly on Friday. Arrangements have been made for the meeting of the American Friend Board of Foreign Missions at the same place on Friday afternoon, October 2d. It is possible that other boards will meet on September 30th, but no arrangements to this effect have been concluded as yet.

SIXTIETH MARRIAGE ANNIVERSARY

Thomas B. and Mary Elliott Pearson, members of White Water Quarterly Meeting of Friends, Richmond, Indiana, celebrated their sixtieth marriage anniversary at their home in Archer, Florida, August 30, 1914. They were called upon by friends and neighbors, and received many letters of congratulations and good wishes. They are both enjoying good health.

FALMOUTH QUARTERLY MEETING

Falmouth Quarterly Meeting was held at South Durham, Maine, August 29th and 30th. Interesting features of the session for business on Seventh-day forenoon were a report of the Winona Lake, Indiana, Conference of young people, given by Charles M. Woodman, and a discussion on the topic, "Is the Quaker Message as Much Needed by the World Now as in Former Years? If So, Why?" The discussion was opened by a paper written by Harriet O. Cox, of South Durham, and was followed by a verbal discussion which occupied about an hour of the meeting, and was both interesting and profitable.

Falmouth Quarterly Meeting has recently adopted the plan of having a small committee to present from quarter to quarter topics for discussion in the business sessions, as time for them may permit, that will increase the interest in our Quarterly Meetings and make them more attractive and profitable to all who attend.

SALEM QUARTERLY MEETING

Salem Quarterly Meeting, held at Lynn, Massachusetts, in August each year, is an especially important session, owing to the fact that the Permanent Board and several of the Yearly Meeting Committees meet in connection with it. This year it was held on the 19th and 20th, and as an added feature, the Yearly Meeting's Committee on Efficiency arranged for a Young People's Conference on the evening of each of those days.

The first meeting was addressed by Rufus M. Jones on "Some Problems of Present-Day Quakerism." The second was to have been a campfire gathering on the beach, to be addressed by four visiting English young Friends. But the expected visitors found it needful, owing to the war, to sail on the 20th, and the weather was not suitable for a campfire. As a substitute, about one hundred persons gathered in the basement of the meeting house around an artificial campfire constructed with the help of electric lights and red paper, and after luncheon, were addressed by several persons already on the ground.

The invitation had been extended to all young people of New England Yearly Meeting, and there were in addition representatives from North Carolina, Wilmington, and Ohio Yearly Meetings, besides Baltimore of the Hicksite branch, and possibly others. The season of worship was entered into heartily, and the outlook for advancement received one more brightening ray.

HAVILAND QUARTERLY MEETING

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Haviland, Kansas, August 7, 8 and 9. Visiting ministers present were, Edmund Stanley, President of Friends' University, Wichita; R. C. Smith, from Stella Quarterly Meeting, and Professor E. E. Hadley. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight was held Friday afternoon at 2:30 and was addressed by R. C. Smith and others. An educational rally was held Friday evening, at which Edmund Stanley and Professor E. E. Hadley made addresses.

R. C. Smith brought the message on Saturday morning. After a splendid dinner served in the basement of the church by the ladies of Haviland, the Quarterly Meeting gathered for the regular business session, all meetings being represented. The new Monthly Meeting at Glendale was represented for the first time. All reports indicated growth of interest in all lines of work. Charles and Lenna Lescault were granted a minute liberating them for service in the evangelistic work.

On Saturday evening a missionary rally was held, Edmund Stanley giving the address of the evening. On Sunday morning at the ten o'clock meeting for worship, Charles Lescault brought the message from Acts 17: 11. His subject was "The Book." President Edmund Stanley preached a strong sermon at the evening service.

SPRINGFIELD MONTHLY MEETING, NORTH CAROLINA

A roll call monthly meeting and the annual meeting of the Memorial Association were held at this place on the 15th of August.

We were much gratified to have with us: Timothy Nicholson, Richmond, Indiana; Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Young People's Activities of the Five Years Meeting; Lorena R. Hoskins, Whittier, California; Fred E. Smith, pastor of Friends' Meeting, Greensboro, North Carolina; William and Elizabeth Bundy, Spiceland, Indiana; R. C. Hood, Greensboro, and Lewis W. McFarland, pastor of Friends' Meeting at High Point.

The morning session was devoted to monthly meeting. During the devotional season Fred E. Smith presented an earnest message on the importance of taking Christ into our daily lives. After a short business session, the roll of members was called by the assistant clerk. The company then adjourned to the yard, where a table picnic was spread and two hours were spent in social reunion.

At 2:30 p. m. the eighth annual meeting of the Memorial Association was called. Following the devotional exercises, the minutes and reports from committees were read. Reports showed that records of burials were carefully kept and that all fees had been paid in; that the new part had been plotted and planted in peas; that a substantial iron fence had been placed around the front yard, also on the south side of the graveyard; that two new brick pillars had been placed on corners and that a neat tool and storage house had been erected and painted.

The custom of reading a memorial of someone who had been active in the service of the church and neighborhood in its early days was carried out, William Hill being the subject for memorial this year.

Thomas E. Jones then gave an excellent talk on Young People's Activities in church and community work. He was followed by R. C. Hood, who spoke helpfully on Community Co-operation. Lewis W. McFarland then gave encouraging thoughts on the value of starting movements in a community that will tend to the development of its people. Lorena R. Hoskins and others made appreciated remarks. The meeting was then dismissed by G. J. Welker, pastor of Springfield Monthly Meeting.

We shall be pleased to enroll as members of our Memorial Association any Friends in distant states who have relatives interred in the old burying ground at Springfield.

EMMA BLAIR, Secretary.
High Point, North Carolina.

SUCCESSFUL FINANCIAL PLAN

It has been the experience of the meeting at Watseka, Illinois, that the plan of depending upon free-will offerings and the use of the duplex envelope are the best methods of securing adequate financial support.

Two years ago when F. J. Cope accepted the pastorate, it was with the understanding that no money should be raised by any department in any other way. Last year the total receipts for current expenses and for home and foreign missions were more than in any previous year, and this year the amount is larger still.

The number of those who tithe has increased, and there has not been the hard work in getting church funds that is necessary in having bazaars, suppers, etc. Instead, the people have had the time that would have been used in preparing for these to give to the direct needs of the people, and to spiritual things.

THE OHIO CENTENNIAL

Friends will remember that in October, 1913, Ohio Yearly Meeting celebrated with appropriate exercises her one hundredth anniversary. It was an occasion of unusual interest, so much so that the committee having it in charge was instructed "to publish the proceedings and such other matter as seemed advisable to them, provided advance subscriptions warranted them in so doing."

The committee at once began the preparation of some very valuable materials but later found that they were not warranted in proceeding with the publication. A report to this effect was made at the recent Yearly Meeting. Many were loathe to lose so much valuable history and the meeting directed the committee to continue its effort to have the book published.

Five hundred additional subscriptions will be necessary to warrant the committee in going forward. These must be forthcoming at once, not later than October 15th, if the committee is to continue its labors. The proposed contents include fifteen chapters. The committee is making a last appeal to Friends and announces that the price of the book will not be above $1.50. Orders may be sent to the Chairman, John Pennington, Damascus, or the Secretary, William Kirby, 136 Highland Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING AND THE INDIANS

As Indiana Yearly Meeting approaches the one hundredth anniversary of its founding, it is interesting to notice that it is still engaged in a line of missionary activity that was entered upon at the first Yearly Meeting in 1821. At that time Baltimore and Ohio Yearly Meetings were conducting a mission station among the Shawnee Indians at Wapakoneta, in western Ohio.

When Indiana Yearly Meeting was set up in 1821, it appointed at once a large committee to co-operate in the care of this mission. This large committee met in December, 1821, and appointed the following for its members as an active committee to have charge of the work: Isaac Harvey, Aaron Brown, Jonathan Wright, Caleb Harvey, Robert Furnas, William Stanton, Caleb Wickersham, Thomas Frazier, Henry Pickeral, William Hadley, Patience Whitacre, Jane Smith, Agatha Harvey.

The writer wonders whether any members of Indiana Yearly Meeting today can remember any of the above named Friends.

When the Indians at Wapakoneta removed in 1832 west of the Mississippi River, the Indiana Committee sent a deputation of three Friends to visit them in their new location, and soon another mission was established among them in eastern Kansas near Kansas City. This mission was maintained until 1869, at which time practically all the Shawnee Indians in that section had removed southward to the present state of Oklahoma.

In 1869 President Grant called upon Friends to take charge of two Indian superintendencies in the west and Indiana Yearly Meeting had an important part in the organization of the Associated Executive Committee which undertook the work assigned to Friends by the government.

When this work for the government was discontinued under the administration of President Hayes, the Associated Executive Committee turned its attention to the missionary efforts that have resulted in the ten mission stations now maintained by Friends in Oklahoma.

It is interesting and inspiring to know that from the first year of its existence Indiana Yearly Meeting has had such a large part in this great missionary effort.

RAYNER W. KELSEY.

AT ROCKFORD, OHIO

O. H. Trader, who has been serving the meeting as pastor at Rockford, resigned June 27th and has accepted a call to the meeting at Greenfield, Indiana. We all regret very much to have him go, but he feels that his work is done at Rockford. It is felt that the meeting has been greatly benefited by his labors. The membership has been reminded of their duty to the Lord and to one another in a most stirring way. His Gospel messages at all times have been sound in doctrine and spiritual. As he goes from us our prayers go with him that he may be a blessing to others as he has been to us at Rockford.

A COMMENDABLE PASTORATE

The Daily Courier of New Castle, Indiana, under date of September 5th, has a commendable account of the work of Dalton H. Lewis, pastor of the Friends' Church in that city. It is stated that fifty new members have been received during the past year, and that the Bible School has more than doubled in attendance. Arrangements are now being made to build a modern church, an option having been secured on one of the best pieces of property in the city. The Courier says that "The church year just ending has been the most prosperous ever enjoyed by any pastor of the church."

RETIRES FROM PASTORATE

From the Morning Star of Muncie, Indiana, we learn that Daisy Barr preached her farewell sermon at the Friends' Memorial Church on Sabbath evening, August 30. On the following evening a final farewell reception was given her in the church auditorium. Joseph A. Goddard presided and an interesting program was rendered including an address by Dr. Edward J. Mason on behalf of the Ministerial Association of the city, an address by Mrs. Elmer Whiteley, on behalf of the women of the city, and an address by Mrs. R. V. Hinshaw, on behalf of the Friends' Memorial Church. Daisy Barr responded in a fitting manner. A feature of the evening was a strong musical program.

Mrs. Barr leaves the pastorate to accept a position with the evangelistic party of Dr. Lyon. She begins her new work about the middle of September.

AT WATSEKA, ILLINOIS

Frederick J. Cope, who has served as pastor at Watseka, Illinois, the past two years, has resigned, and will go to Emporia, Kansas, to serve that meeting. During his pastorate at Watseka there have been a number of accessions to the church. The missionary interest of the church has greatly increased, the people feeling in closer touch with the missionaries and those with whom they labor than ever before. This is largely due to the fact of the close relationship sustained by the pastor and his family to many of the missionaries, and to the letters received directly from the field.

His resignation at Watseka was received with genuine regret by the church and the people of that community. Arthur W. Hammond, of Carmel, Indiana, will be his successor, and will move to Watseka directly after Yearly Meeting.

YEARLY MEETINGS, 1914

Kansas—At Lawrence, Kansas, October 7. Clerk, Edmund Stanley, Wichita, Kansas.

Baltimore—At Baltimore, Maryland, November 13. Clerk, Allen C. Thomas, Haverford, Pennsylvania.

The Denver Friends' Meeting extends a cordial welcome to all Friends, who may visit Denver, to attend meeting whenever possible. Meeting house is at 4100 Shoshone Street. Sabbath School is at 10:00; meeting at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Pastor, George D. Weeks. Address Walter W. Weesner, Clerk, 4023 Umatilla Street, Denver, Colorado.

WAR RELIEF FUND

English Friends have convened an Emergency Committee to assist innocent "alien enemies," Germans, Austrians and Hungarians, in Great Britain, who are rendered destitute by the war. Anna B. Thomas, of Baltimore, who, with her daughter, is residing in England this year, has been made Hon. Secretary of this Committee, and at her request we print the following appeal which the Committee has sent out. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will receive and forward any funds contributed by Friends in this country for this purpose. Any remittance for this fund should be marked "Alien's Relief Fund."

169, St. Stephen's House,
Westminster Bridge, S. W.

21st August, 1914.

As an outcome of official action by the Religious Society of Friends a special Emergency Committee has been formed to assist Germans, Austrians and Hungarians in Great Britain who may, through no fault of their own, have fallen into acute distress owing to the outbreak of war. These are now cut off from their country and, in most cases, from all means of securing ready money. There are many families in which the father or other bread-winner has either been forced to return home before the interruption of communications or is detained in this country as a prisoner-of-war. Many cultivated and educated men are also in an especially helpless condition. It is recognised that there are countless British families whom the war is reducing to the depths of distress; but national measures are being taken to relieve those of our own race, while these foreigners, being legally in the position of "alien enemies," are, in almost every way, in a peculiarly unhappy position and have not the protection of their own Embassy or Consulate.

Generous offers are already being received from English families who wish to afford hospitality to destitute foreign women. Many more such offers are immediately required. Other homes could be found if funds were available to make payments towards the cost of board and lodging; it will probably also be necessary to open hostels, under proper supervision, for those who cannot be accommodated in private families; and direct help must be given in other cases. Great care is being taken in the selection of recipients of assistance; and the Committee have in this matter the advantage of co-operation with German ladies of recognised integrity and wisdom, who have for many years been engaged in religious and advisory work among German girls and women in this country. Arrangements will be made to find work, if possible, for those assisted, in any tasks for which they are qualified.

The Committee have consulted with the Home Office and have ascertained that it is in full sympathy with the object at which they are aiming. They also have the sympathy of the American Consul-General, who has oversight of the interests of Germans, Austrians and Hungarians in this country, and they expect to co-operate with the International Women's Relief Committee, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Salvation Army, and other bodies interested in helping distressed foreigners, irrespective of nationality. The Committee also hope to keep a careful watch over future developments and to render material and moral assistance to both men and women, as opportunity may arise.

Funds are urgently required for immediate use and the Committee venture to appeal for such assistance to all those who have this cause at heart. Cheques and postal orders should be made payable to the Hon. Treasurer, W. Hanbury Aggs, at Barclay's Bank, 1, Pall Mall East, S. W., and crossed "Aliens' Relief Fund."

All communications to be addressed to the Secretary, Anna Braithwaite Thomas, at 169, St. Stephen's House, Westminster Bridge, S. W.

A PEACE DECLARATION

The following statement was adopted by Iowa Yearly Meeting at its recent session:

"Under some sense of the indescribable horror and of the wickedness of the war now being waged in Europe, of the woe and misery it is inflicting upon humanity, of its destructiveness that already far exceeds the imagination, and being appalled by the seeming suddenness of its beginning and the magnitude of its proportions, Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends, now in session in Oskaloosa, Iowa, are constrained to give fresh emphasis to their well-known condemnation of war as being unwise, un-Christian and barbarous, and to declare their firm advocacy of peaceful methods of settlement of all differences between nations as between individuals.

"They are united in denouncing the specious doctrine that seems to have obsessed some nations, viz., that the proper way to preserve peace between nations is to be prepared for war. It is false in principle and disastrous in practice.

"We denounce it as fostering the spirit of militarism, which inevitably leads on to war, as is now made manifestly apparent in the conduct of the nations now engaged in war with one another.

"We note with much satisfaction and with great thankfulness, in our own nation, an apparently wide-spread and growing feeling of opposition to a resort to arms, and in favor of universal peace.

"We commend our own government for the efforts made by it to restore peace in Mexico, and on account of its endeavors to foster the establishment of a peace pact in the whole Western hemisphere.

"We declare our firm and unshaken loyalty to our own beloved country and our devotion to its welfare in all the ways of peace and righteousness; and we earnestly pray that these may ever be the watch words of our nation."

GOING TO JAPAN

William C. Allen, a Friends minister, has set sail for Asia from California, and is bearing the following message to the people of Japan:

"Greeting—The Interdenominational Peace Committee of the Pacific Coast Churches of the United States, representing many of the Christian organizations on the Pacific Coast of the United States of America, desires through the person of its authorized representative, the bearer, Mr. William C. Allen, a minister of religion, of San Jose, California, to send our heartiest Greetings to the people of Japan.

"We are thankful for our traditional friendship and for the commercial and international ties that bind us together as two nations. We rejoice to know of the prosperity of your great country. We pray God that His peace may rule more and more in your hearts and in our own. We sincerely hope and trust that neither you nor we shall be in the least wrongly influenced by the efforts sometimes made to sow discord between us. We hope that all possible may be done by means of treaties of arbitration and in every other way to hasten the era of good will and peace among the nations.

"As Christians and as believers in the religion founded on Divine love, we desire to do all we can to draw your country and ours closer together in the feelings of mutual friendship, sympathy and good will, until together we may more and more help forward universal peace.

"Respectfully submitted,
"ROBERT DOLLAR,
"President."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

September 27.

Subject—Jesus the Judge of Men.

Lesson—Review. Reading Lesson, John 3: 14-21.

Golden Text—I come quickly: hold fast that which thou hast, that no one take thy crown.

When the quarter's lessons began, Jesus is still in southern Perea, but is gradually working His way toward Jerusalem. The quarter closes with the very busy day of Jesus, three days before the Crucifixion. Altogether the twelve lessons cover a period of about two weeks.

These two weeks are crowded full of teaching such as the world has never known, before or after. Whether addressing His disciples, the multitudes or the Pharisees, His lessons are fundamental to right human conduct in all the ages.

I. Laborers in the Vineyard. Every one who serves God is sure of a reward in this life and in the life to come. No man can earn the kingdom of God, but he can partake of it as part of the blessings which come to those who have harmonized their lives with the life of Christ.

II. Greatness Through Service. Rewards are not given as a matter of right. They are the natural fruition of those who can labor and suffer with Christ. Favoritism has no place in God's kingdom. All who can be baptized with Christ into His suffering will triumph with Him in glory.

III. Blind Bartimaeus. The persistence of the blind man, added to his faith, brought healing. As a result, he became a follower of Jesus, having been made whole both in body and in spirit. The spiritually blind can be healed, for Jesus, the Light of the World, is passing by today.

IV. Pounds and Talents. Every Christian must be a fruitful Christian. God has given talents and the ability for service and He expects that we shall bear much fruit. So shall we be His disciples. He who will not perform his mission in the world will lose the right to discipleship, and some other faithful soul will reap the reward.

V. Triumphal Entry. Jesus was now coming into His own, and was offering a great opportunity to the multitudes to accept His kingship. But in the midst of the hosannas, Jesus weeps over Jerusalem. His thought is not upon the spectacular, but upon the conditions of the people.

VI. Barren Fig Tree and Defiled Temple. Here is a testimony against false and alluring professions, as well as a direct call to cleanse not only the church but the temples of government from all that defiles. By faith we may do all things through Christ.

VII. The Wicked Husbandmen. Herein is a pen picture of the Jewish nation, in which the faithlessness of the Pharisees is set out with startling boldness. We of today are no less stewards of this present age. They who reject Christ are the wicked husbandmen, but He is the corner-stone of the religion of God for all the ages.

VIII. Wedding Feast. Again Jesus is showing the Pharisees how wicked they are in rejecting the Son of God. At the same time He opens the door of hope to the Gentile world, and forever sets His seal upon the doctrine that the grace of God is for all men.

IX. Day of Questions. Stung by the truthfulness of Jesus' teaching, the Pharisees begin to resort to desperate means. Strangely blind to His real nature, they seek to trap Him and call to their aid the most learned of their sect. But Jesus answers them tactfully and as ever confounds them by His logic. The most reasonable doctrine in all the world is the religion of Jesus Christ.

X. The Great Commandments. Jesus sums up man's obligation Godward and manward. Love to God begets love to our fellowman.

XI. The Ten Virgins. Here is a lesson on the importance of preparation. Things cannot always remain as they are. Changes are bound to come, and happy is he who has prepared himself for any emergency. The conduct of the wise and foolish virgins is the lesson of life over again.

XII. Judgment of the Nations. A day of final reckoning will come to everyone. We fix our destiny by the manner of our living here. True religion is religion in action that is directed for the good of humanity.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 27.

Topic—How Every Christian Can Be a Missionary.—Gal. 6: 6-10.

The topic recalls the story of the good Samaritan. It raises questions of obligations and of opportunity. It makes us think of our neighbors on the one hand and of our brothers across the seas on the other.

One cannot be a missionary without having the missionary spirit, and the missionary spirit is the spirit of helpfulness and unselfish effort for others, begotten by the spirit of Christ.

Personal work for the benefit of others is missionary work. In every local church, perhaps, operating in connection with the Christian Endeavor Society, there ought to be a Personal Worker's League to promote interest in the welfare of the community, and to provide a definite means for reaching every family in the neighborhood with an invitation to lead the Christian life and to co-operate with the church.

No less important is the need for an increased host of workers in the foreign field. For this work there must be preparation suited to the needs of the particular field visited.

Mission work is varied. It needs the preacher, the teacher, the doctor, the nurse, the farmer. Consecrated talents along all these lines are in demand by all the denominational boards.

We can do mission work by giving, no less than by going to the mission field. Christians should be taught to give with proper discrimination, no less than with liberality.

Business men can contribute to missionary interest on the part of other business men; the farmer can best interest those of his own class in the subject; young people can induce other young people to study the question of missions; everyone can do something in helping to attract others to the general cause of carrying the gospel to all peoples.

What a change would be wrought in the mission fields at home and abroad if every Christian were alive to his opportunities and determined to do his utmost in the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom!

Let this particular session of the Society be utilized by the leader in a special manner to develop the feeling of responsibility toward the missionary cause on the part of all the members.

Married

Bishop-Gay—At the home of Henry C. Aydelott, Fall River, Massachusetts, September 5, 1914, according to the custom of Friends, Harold W. Bishop, son of the late Charles E. and Jennie T. Bishop, to Stella A. Gay. Their future home will be in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Green-Binford—At the home of the bride's parents at Haviland, Kansas, August 20, 1914, in the presence of about one hundred and twenty-five guests, Stacy E. Green to Henrietta M. Binford, Charles Lescault, the pastor, officiating.

McCracken-Ratliff—At the home of the bride's parents, Ancil E. and Mrs. Ratliff, Fairmount, Indiana, September 3, 1914, J. Raymond McCracken, of Cuba, to Ina Mary Ratliff. The bride has been a teacher in Friends' mission at Gibara, Cuba, for the past three years. They will be at home at Holguin, Cuba.

Tankhouser-Gause—At the Friends' parsonage at Haviland, Kansas, August 23, 1914, Clarence Tankhouser to Flossie Gause, Charles Lescault, the pastor, officiating.

Died

Diggs—Mary A. Diggs, wife of William C. Diggs, was born in North Carolina, and died at her home in Winchester, Indiana, on May 8, 1914, aged seventy-two years. She was a birthright member of Friends and served as elder for more than thirty years. She held the position of Clerk of the select meeting until ill health compelled her to resign. She was a cheerful, happy Christian and was useful in all the departments of the church work.

Timberlake—Martha B. Timberlake, daughter of Benjamin and Mary Ann Brown, and wife of Edward Timberlake, died at their home near Richmond, Indiana, August 4, 1914, in the eighty-second year of her age. She was an elder and member of Whitewater Monthly Meeting, and had been a continuous member of Orange particular meeting for seventy-eight years. She occupied many positions of trust and usefulness in the church. She will be greatly missed not only by the church which she loved so dearly, but also by a host of friends and neighbors.

Thorne—William Thorne died at his home in Selma, Ohio, June 29, 1914, aged ninety-one years three months and twenty-five days. He was a birthright Friend. He was thoroughly convinced that nothing but a belief in the cleansing blood of Christ could save a soul from death. In early manhood he was an active worker for the abolition of slavery, and later was active in temperance work. The poor and needy found in him a helping friend. The widow and one son survive him.

Watters—Daniel Watters was born in Liverpool, England, September 3, 1844, and died from an accident at Watseka, Illinois, July 30, 1914, aged sixty-nine years ten months and twenty-seven days. He was known as an unbeliever until about five years ago, when he was wonderfully converted and joined Friends at Watseka. He rapidly grew in grace, and developed into a most tender and earnest Christian. For three years he has been an elder in Watseka meeting and was always faithful to his duty.

Williams—Jacob Williams, son of Daniel and Margaret Williams, was born March 3, 1827, and died March 25, 1914, aged eighty-seven years and twenty-two days. He was a member of New Garden Monthly Meeting, Indiana, and had served as an elder for a number of years. It may be said of him, "He has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he has kept the faith."

No other Friends' paper has so much news about the movements of Friends and the work of their meetings as does THE AMERICAN FRIEND. $1.50 per year.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

MORAL, EDUCATIONAL AND PHYSICAL LIFE

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

WAR

Oh, Lords and Rulers, near and far,
Let your endeavors never cease
To guard for us the joys of peace.
Protect us from the crime of war.

War only stirs up greater wrath;
Refers the question, what is right,
To brutal and insensate might,
And leaves but misery in its path.

It means a thousand children left
Without a father's needed care;
Unnumbered mothers in despair,
And widows stricken and bereft.

A thousand homes struck desolate,
The weak and innocent oppressed,
And woe and bitterness unguessed,
And friendship turned to poisonous hate.

It means, perhaps, our darling one,
Who marched away so brave and young,
Receives a bullet in his lung
And dies, thirst-tortured, in the sun.

It means the fever camps, accursed,
Where lads in hot delirium cry
For mother's cooling hands, and die
Unloved, uncared for and unnursed.

For blood and pestilence and pain,
And fever, lockjaw and gangrene
Are all that war to soldiers mean.
These ever follow in its train.

Our neighbors that we call our foes
Must bear the same inhuman fate.
Their sons are sacrificed to hate.
Their woes are even as our woes.

And what are all these wars about?
Some vain political dispute.
Some talk of national repute.
Some politicians fallen out.

Oh, Lords and Rulers, near and far,
If you would rule your people well,
Remember this, that "war is hell!"
And save them from the crime of war.

Bulletin From Ram Allah

RAM ALLAH, August 20, 1914.

Dear Friends in the Homeland—We had not expected to write to you again until after the opening of the school year and the dedication of the new building, but fearing that the disturbed conditions in this part of the world are causing anxiety about us, we decided to inform you that thus far all is well with us. Until now this country has kept out of the great international struggle that is disgracing our twentieth century Christianity. As usual Turkey is quietly sitting on the fence and waiting to see which side is going to have the advantage before she commits herself. Of course her sympathies are with Germany, but with such heavy odds against her, Turkey dares not take sides with her lest her fate be settled before Thanksgiving day.

With so much disturbance in the world it gives the government here an added opportunity to oppress the people and she is drafting every male between twenty and forty-five years of age. Yesterday my one-eyed mason had to report for service. When I exclaimed to our architect about their taking a man with only one eye, he said, "Oh, that is nothing; they would take a man with one leg." It is the general idea that the government does not want men but money and is taking advantage of this opportunity to take thousands of dollars from this poor people in bounties. For two hundred dollars a man can buy himself off and the needed money is often borrowed at twenty-five percent. interest. You can hardly imagine what suffering this is entailing upon the people of this poverty-stricken land.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." The other morning I was at the new building when a large number of our Ram Allah men were being driven off to enlist. The women of the families were wailing and with tears in my own eyes I stepped up to where some of our Moslem work-women were watching the proceedings. I found that the tears were coursing down their cheeks in sympathy for their Christian sisters who were strangers to them.

Business of all kinds is at a standstill. Banks have suspended payment, commerce on the Syrian coast is all but annihilated and the mails have all but ceased. We have no idea when this letter will reach you. Jerusalem has been under martial law for about two weeks and the soldiers are looting the stores of both natives and foreigners. The officials seem to proceed upon the principle "After us the deluge." If in times of peace a government does not respect the rights of private property, what may we expect if war comes?

We cannot realize money on our London drafts in Jerusalem and are doing without money. If present conditions continue none of the boarding schools of the country can open this fall. In some instances the prices of provisions have doubled but we have enough provisions on hand for the mission family for a long time so we shall not suffer for the necessities of life.

The country is quiet and we feel safe in the keeping of our Heavenly Father who will never leave us nor forsake us.

The work on the new building has been hindered, as many of the workmen have been taken for military service, and it would have stopped entirely if the men had refused to take mission due-bills with which I am paying them. The work progresses slowly and the building approaches completion but there now seems to be little prospect of dedication this fall.

Let us pray that this baptism of suffering and hardship may help this poor and down-trodden people to look to the One who fed the multitudes in this land and who is ever the friend of the oppressed.

Sincerely your friend,

A. EDWARD KELSEY.

"Get Under the Load"

Dr. Moses Hoge, of Richmond, Va., tells of two Christian men who "fell out." One heard that the other was talking against him, and he went to him and said, "Will you be kind enough to tell me my faults to my face, that I may profit by your Christian candor and try to get rid of them?"

"Yes, sir," replied the other, "I will do it."

They went aside, and the former said:

"Before you commence telling what you think wrong in me, will you please bow down with me and let us pray over it, that my eyes may be opened to see my faults as you will tell them? You lead in prayer."

It was done, and when the prayer was over, the man who had sought the interview said:

"Now proceed with what you have to complain of in me."

But the other replied: "After praying over it, it looks so little that it is not worth talking about. The truth is, I feel now that in going around talking against you I have been serving the devil myself, and have need that you pray for me, and forgive me the wrong I have done you."

The quarrel was settled from that hour, and there are several other difficulties that might be settled in the same way. Try it.—Boston Christian.

The Fall Campaign

We are upon the threshold of another fall campaign in the religious world. To be sure it is deplorable that the church must take a rest at any season of the year. But such is the power of custom. Apparently Friends have the vacation fever less marked than many of our sister denominations, but, regardless of conditions, the fall campaign as a prelude to the religious activities of the winter season has come to be a well defined characteristic of our church life.

What shall be the program of the campaign; what spirit shall dominate its activities; what shall be the aim of its constructive endeavors, are questions that confront every wide-awake meeting on the continent. In all too many instances the tragic answer will probably be that the congregation will try to hold its own. No vision, no well defined purpose, no inspiration, no spirit of progress, a sort of hopeless contentment, satisfied to "hang on" year in and year out with only the prospect of a bare existence.

There is no pleasure in having to bring to the light such a picture as this, but the picture is there without question, and perhaps a glimpse of it now and then will provoke the stirrings of new life in many a congregation, and prove to be the irritant that will shock some meetings into a genuine awakening. But while some meetings will continue to be content with an ordinary program, others will be reaching out for better things. Happy is any meeting that has some broad visioned men and women bent upon attaining the best in spiritual life and anxious to appropriate methods of efficiency in church organization!

We have a concern to recommend that Friends' activities shall be emphasized in at least three definite directions. It is by no means necessary that a new program shall include untried endeavors. The attempt to do old things better is just as praiseworthy and perhaps more so than the efforts to launch out upon unsailed seas. The spiritual life is too delicate and too important to be made the object of new-fangled and showy experiments. We are not concerned that the church shall become venturesome and enter upon the realm of the spectacular. The freak church and the freak pastor are not wholesome elements in the religious world. The feverish endeavors of the novelty mongers should forever be eschewed by any congregation that has a genuine desire to go "from strength to strength."

Our concern lies in quite another direction and includes the program of planning to do bigger and better things with the machinery already at hand; includes the vision of the doors of opportunity opening upon every side; includes the purpose to set every man and every woman, every youth and every child to some task suited to his tastes and capacities that will help to more firmly establish the kingdom of God in the neighborhood life of every Friends' community. An exchange says: "Great achievements are accomplished under the thrill of great ideals; to see ahead results abundantly worth working for is the one condition that keeps men working abundantly. Mighty purposes make mighty toilers." It is the doing of old things better, the fuller realization of old purposes and ideals that will bring new hope and quickened aspirations to many a meeting that has fallen into the rut. This is the measure of our concern for the fall religious campaign.

1. First of all, every meeting should be planning for a revival of religion in the community. Evangelism, however conducted, if conducted wisely and legitimately, is the very soul of the gospel purpose. When the multitudes failed to come to hear the Master, He with His disciples went out into the highways of life hunting out men and women in order to proclaim to them the glad tidings of redemption. Nobody has ever been able to improve upon the plan. Too frequently the welfare of the meeting is made the chief objective. But the organized church is an agency, a means to be used for the propagation of the truth and the winning of sinful men and women for the kingdom.

The message of Friends is essentially an evangelistic message. It concerns man's relationship to Jesus Christ and bids humanity recognize the voice of Jehovah speaking to every lost son and daughter of the race. The Friends' message is a message for the masses, to be proclaimed, not alone from the gallery or the modern Friends' pulpit, but to be carried into every home, into the tenements, out upon the highways where men and women are toiling and bowed under the heavy burdens of sinful life. If only our Quaker quietism could be directed into well developed channels of evangelism that would quietly transfuse the Quaker spirit into the life of the masses all about us, we would witness such an awakening of spiritual life as the world has not yet known.

2. Every meeting ought to be laying plans to enlarge its borders by bringing in the families of the neighborhood that are careless and indifferent and that never darken the doors of the meeting house from one year's end to another. How many such families there are in almost every Friends' community! We have waited long enough for them to come to the meeting house. It is time to go out after them with a loving sympathetic invitation to associate themselves with the people of God. Oh, to be sure, the cold, formal invitations that are so frequently extended, are of no avail. They lack the essentials of sincerity that bring conviction. No one is ever won to Jesus Christ through formalism.

It is the association of kindred spirits that begets confidence and fellowship. Let the church utilize its social talent for soul winning. Turn loose upon these indifferent families those glowing, sympathetic characters to be found in almost every meeting, that scatter sunshine everywhere they go. Let them be set to the cultivation of the careless until these are made to feel that the church has a mother's heart for every family in the neighborhood. In secular affairs, it is not difficult to sweep an entire community into the channel of interest for a given cause. By multitudinous ways, every family is reached until the community interest has become universal. Is the cause of our Christ any less worthy, and is the church any less potent in its powers of fellowship and human brotherhood? By organizing for it, and by the exercise of personal methods that make every family feel the sympathetic heart-throb of the meeting, we are convinced that hundreds of our meetings can double their membership within the next decade. Is it not worth the effort?

3. Every meeting should strive to hold what it gets. The lack of paternal care over the new-born convert so often witnessed is tragic. The church is spending thousands of dollars every year in evangelistic efforts to get men and women converted, but according to our observation, it is only the occasional meeting that has given intelligent attention to the task of nourishing and developing them after they have once been brought into the church. The new convert needs a special kind of attention. He needs particular nourishment; he needs instruction and training; he needs to be assimilated into the life of the congregation, and this generally requires time and patience; he needs to be incorporated into the working force of the meeting gradually and with a skill that requires special care. It is one of the most practical, yet vital problems with which the church has to deal.

These are our concerns. The coming year can be a year crowned with mighty achievements if we are only determined to make it so. The door of opportunity is before us. Shall not the fall campaign be the prelude to the most successful year which the Society of Friends in America has yet known? Let's develop a masterly team work for the glory of God, and the supreme objectives of our denominational purposes will be directed in a way to be triumphantly accomplished.

The Importance of Teaching Peace in the Bible Schools

BY P. W. RAIDABAUGH

The Bible School is a child of the Church, and should be considered as the Church assembled for Bible study; its highest usefulness is reached when the youth are taught the principles of the Gospel of Christ in such a way as to lead them to accept Christ as a personal Savior and to dedicate their lives to His service.

The majority of those enrolled in our Bible Schools have not reached maturity and need the help of mature minds in their study of the Scriptures. They are largely passive beings, mere receivers of influence, and are in the period of preparation for the active responsibilities of life. Their pupilage will soon end, and they will enter upon the activities of life, and give to the next generation the influence the Bible School has thrown around them in this period of development. During this time the child must be assisted by wise and pious leadership, that a correct foundation for the future building be laid.

The whole creed of a child may be summed up in a single sentence, "I believe in God, my parents and my teacher." He cannot get beyond this and untangle the theories of learned theologians; but he does believe what is taught him by parent or teacher, because he believes in them. The truths taught in the Bible School class are to him the whole of the Gospel. The whole compass of truth is in what his teacher says. It is a well-known fact that a child seldom wanders from the path in which he starts in childhood.

One who would use an intricate machine needs to understand what it is designed for and how to use it. The mind of the child is such a machine. It cannot be expected to work accurately except for the purpose and in the manner its Maker has designed. The work of the Bible School teacher has so much to do with the child's mind that it is necessary that he should have some understanding of its nature and modes of operation. He must not only study the Scriptures so as to teach them correctly, but he must study the child so as to impress the truth taught. He should know that the action of all the faculties, except the will, is mechanical and acts on the suggestions of others, and that there can be no choice or freedom only as it exists in the will. The order in which the child-mind operates is, first, to perceive, to grasp the truth; second, to judge; third, to feel; and fourth, to choose. The faculties thus brought into exercise are perception, judgment, the sensibilities and the will.

Success or failure in teaching and impressing the truth so as to reach the will depend on whether we do or do not follow this order. All the ideas or truths which are presented to the child-mind are taken up and passed through the process of thinking, and from the thought, or truth presented, is turned out the actions of life, much like a machine taking in the raw material and turning out the finished product. The mind grows only by receiving. Some minds receive more slowly than others; some think slower than others; some cannot be hurried beyond their own speed without great danger; some minds demand greater care as to statement of truths than others; some demand greater care as to explanation and illustration than others; and some depend more on repetition than others, but all reach the same end.

The child begins the development of a good or bad character in thoughts, and these are followed by acts which develop into habits that become fixed and unchanging. Mohammed says a mountain may change its base, but not a man his disposition. No one can be better than his best thoughts. High ideals are incentives to high living.

False standards are raised; brute force is often held up as heroic. "The man behind the gun" is lauded, and he who can practice the greatest deceit or slay the most is considered patriotic and worthy of homage from his fellows. The newspapers are full of commendation for acts of heroism on the battlefield. The pulpit joins in the praise of war and calls for a manifestation of patriotism on fields of blood. The air is full of this thought. There is a glamour thrown around the soldier's life. The young man in uniform and brass buttons is the envy of other young men, and admired by the ladies. He walks the street with a sense of superiority. If he is killed in battle, no matter how sinful his life has been, he is looked upon as a crowned hero. This thought has descended to us from barbarous tribes whose greatest warriors gained the highest heaven. The trend of thought is along the line of this false standard of heroism and patriotism. The literature for our children is filled with it. Books in our Bible School libraries have for their heroes a blood-stained villain. The comments in lesson helps associate heroism and patriotism with deeds of warfare. Our children are taught, in the period of early and lasting impressions, that heroism and patriotism are only found in deeds of valor on battlefields, and that it is honorable to slay an enemy of one's country.

The remedy for this evil is to teach the child the true spirit of Christianity as seen in the teachings of Christ and throughout the New Testament. We must teach that impurity of thought is back of impure language, that falsehood in the heart is back of the untrue word, that character is the hidden life known to our conscience and open before God; that reputation is not the real life of the man, that reputation is what men say we are, character what we are; that reputation is in the hands of our fellow men, character in our own hands. Teach the child that a true hero is one not ashamed of honest toil; that labor, whether of hand or brain, is heaven's ordinance for human improvement; that the hand of the son of toil is made hard in a service a thousand times more honorable than war; that heroism is found bending in the fields under heavy burdens; sweating in the workshops of the land; that heroines are found in the factories, clothed in calico, blanching brow and cheek to preserve the whiteness of soul; that a true heroic character is that which does right.

There can be but one logical course for all writers for the young and all teachers in our Bible Schools to take, and that is to present the true spirit of the Gospel of Christ, and impress on the young mind the brotherhood of man, that right thinking may beget right acts and lead to right habits, working in them a pure character. Impress the sacredness of human life, that murder is murder, whether in times of peace or war. Teach the spirit of the Master in dealing with enemies; that love is to be the controlling spirit of the Christian's life; that the new birth means the implanting of a new force in the life, a power contrary to the flesh.

Instead of presenting a picture of Napoleon or Wellington or Grant leading armies on to victory, make Florence Nightingale, Clara Barton, Grace Darling, John Howard, Elizabeth Fry or Livingstone the central thought for illustration, or give a picture of that great and godly man as he sailed up Delaware Bay, and for the first time stepped on the American soil, with his heart beating immortal with its pulsations of love for man and God. Tell how he planted the seed of a mighty nation on the shores of the Delaware, and never wronged the Indian. So that to this day the story of William Penn is told in legend to the Indian children of the West, and all who belong to the "Broad Brims" are hailed as friends of the despised children of the plains.

By so doing the army of bright boys and girls in our Bible Schools will have the advantage of a right start in life, and the principle of peace and good will toward men will be so impressed on the coming generation that there will be a great forward movement resulting in all differences between nations, between capital and labor, between man and man, being settled on the broad principle of human brotherhood.

Plainfield, Indiana.

Christ upon the cross is the pledge of the fellowship of all mankind—of men as men. We say commonly that all men are brethren as descended from a common father—brethren as heirs of a common nature—brethren as condemned to a common death.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

The Spirit of Christ

BY HARRY R. HOLE

"But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His."—Romans 8: 9.

Judging a man like Shakespeare by his life and works, we reach the conclusion that his spirit was broadly and profoundly human; judging Jesus by the same standard, we find His spirit uniquely divine. From the statements of Holy Writ we learn that He partook of our human nature in order that we might be enabled to partake of His divine nature. The same apostle who wrote the words of the above text, in slightly different phrase, pled with the Philippian brethren to have this mind in them which was also in Christ Jesus; and assured the Corinthian wise men that the messengers of the gospel actually had the mind of Christ. This, he also remarked, was not proven by plausible reasonings, but by the plain fruits. We may well therefore, return to an examination of our own lives and works to discover whether or not we have the spirit and the mind of our Redeemer. And we must know what manner of spirit is the Spirit of Christ.

To say that the spirit of Christ is a loving spirit is correctly all-inclusive. But do we know love when we see it? For love has many necessary manifestations, not all of which are universally recognized.

Probably the most frequently noted characteristic of Jesus is His "meekness and gentleness." When He was reviled, that is, made vile, He reviled not again. He revealed rather, a heavenly Father who is kind even to the unthankful and the evil, who giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not. He went about doing good, healing the sick, comforting the mourners, assuring the faint hearted, cheering the down-trodden, forgiving the sinful, while in the end He even prayed for His murderers. This is the well-known spirit of Christ, a spirit that is manifested in the lives of His true disciples. And yet too often we learn of this character of Christ by reading it in a book rather than seeing it in real life. Non-Christian nations are learning at last what Christianity is, but in surveying their neighbors' dogs of war, the query naturally arises in their minds, "Where may Christianity be found?" The exploited laborer is learning to doff his hat at the name of Jesus, but does not choose for his teacher a man who has grown rich by the poorly paid services of child workers. We need to hear more and heed more of this phase of Jesus' spirit.

But it is also true that Jesus could be severe. Love of a principle always involves hatred of its opposite. Interest in a person necessitates the repulsion of any force that would undermine his welfare. Whittier's peaceful, elderly portraits and his humanitarian verses have covered from our view the scathing utterances of a fiery soul fighting for the deliverance of the captive. Jesus has likewise been misrepresented as being made of the same stuff as the spineless, bloodless saints that adorn historic churches. He who could suffer the deepest humiliation or the most excruciating torture for Himself without a word of complaint, was capable of a tremendous indignation against the sin that takes away the lives of men and causes the little ones to stumble. Perhaps we have failed to note that it was under this holy indignation of love that He uttered those well-known words, "Suffer the little children to come unto me; forbid them not: for to such belongeth the kingdom of God." The only time when it is said of Jesus that He looked on men with anger, that anger is defined as grief, and is attributed, not to personal unkindness, but to the hardness of heart that placed the sanctity of a day before the sanctity of human life. When He spoke of Herod as a fox, called the scribes and Pharisees children of serpents, compared high religious professors to whited sepulchers, and warned hypocrites of the damnation of hell, or when with a scourge of small cords He drove a herd of shrewd business men out of the house of prayer, He was manifesting a love for men by His hatred for wickedness, selfishness and insincerity, entirely in harmony with His character as a perfect man made in the very image of God.

After all, the gentleness and the severity of Jesus were only phases of the central dominating purpose of His life. Paul entered deeply into the spirit of his Master when he could say, "Yea, and if I am poured out as a drink-offering upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all." The sacrifice and service of faith, love and humility constituted the great thought in His mind. Being in the form of God He thought it not a thing to be grasped to be equal with God, but took on Him the form of a servant. Not to be served but to serve, and to give His life as a ransom, was the declared object of His coming into the world. The sacrifice of Himself in the manner prescribed in the counsels of eternity, was a thing not to be endured but to be accomplished. It is neither necessary nor possible that others should offer themselves in the same manner and to the same end; but it is both possible and necessary that every one who names His name should emulate His example of devotion in the service to which he is called of God.

It is extremely important that we should have practical methods and successful organizations; that we should "conserve our resources" and "reach the masses." But true success can never be finally measured with a census rule: in religion, figures may lie. The preacher who makes converts may himself need conversion; the proselyte brought in by much labor may be still a child of hell. Faith and works and preaching, necessary as they are, may all fail. The only thing that never fails is love: the final test of ourselves, workers, and of those for whom we work is whether or not we possess and are possessed by the Spirit of Christ.

Lynn, Massachusetts.

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

The Message of Quakerism

BY E. THOMAS

It is only a few weeks ago that most of the churches were celebrating Easter, but probably few who celebrated the day knew what the day really was. If they had looked into an encyclopedia they would have found a definition something like this: "Easter is the feast of the new moon at the vernal equinox. It is not, however, governed by the true new moon, but is computed according to a certain ecclesiastical calendar."

This definition of Easter is probably the truest one that was ever devised, and it was over the computation of that ecclesiastical calendar that some of the fiercest controversies of Christendom were waged. Now probably all of us would agree that the Quaker message would not allow questions like the definition of Easter to be made vital parts of Christianity. Perhaps, however, by studying that definition of Easter we will find something which will show us from what limitations the Quaker message is freed.

Let us now repeat the definition; "Easter is the feast of the full moon at the vernal equinox. It is not, however, governed by the true full moon, but is computed according to a certain ecclesiastical calendar." Let us now ask if we are governing our message of Christianity by the Master who should be the author and the finisher of our faith, or are we computing it according to a certain ecclesiastical calendar. The founders of Quakerism did not seek to establish an ecclesiastical calendar in any sense of the word. We remember how William Penn was uncertain whether it was right for him to wear his sword, and George Fox told him to wear it as long as he could. We know that many of the early Quakers continued for a time in Cromwell's army after they accepted the new "truth" of Quakerism. We know that the Queries which form part of our ecclesiastical calendar were not officially adopted in most yearly meetings till about 1750, almost a hundred years after Fox began to preach. We know that as late as 1765, in some yearly meetings, there were no rules or regulations for admitting members. We know that what George Fox and his associates preached was not a new theology, but a new vision of the adequacy of the Spirit of Christ to be the guide of man. In effect George Fox said, "compute thy calendar by Christ" when he said "there is One even Christ Jesus who can speak to thy condition."

This confident feeling that Christ can speak to anyone's condition is often called mysticism. Now mysticism is a rather fearsome word to many. Most people seem to feel that a mystic is one who has at times an ecstatic lifting beyond things temporal, and who comes into such an intimacy with the Unseen as is granted to very few. That, to be sure, is one meaning of the word mystic, but there is another meaning which is more practical though very difficult to make clear. The mystics of this other kind are those who are sure of their right to trust in the Unseen; and having this trust, they can walk their paths of life with a sureness of step, and a steadiness of purpose unknown to the rest of the world. It is this kind of mysticism which is the burden of the Quaker message, it is this latter kind of mysticism which I hope to make clearer, and prove to be the spirit of the time today.

This mysticism of trust is the same kind of trust that we have in walking along a familiar country footpath at night. We could not make a map of the footpath, but as we walk along it, even in the darkness, we know whether we are in the right path or not merely because it feels like the right path. We are in darkness, but we have an inner light which shows us how our footsteps may be placed in safety even though the darkness hides the path from our outward eyes.

I suppose few of us could tell how many steps lead from the street to our front door, or how many steps lead from the first to the second floor at home, yet most of us daily go up and down these steps confident of our safety, without looking at them or counting them. The power that gives us this confidence we call this sub-consciousness in every day life. In religion this power or this confidence we call mysticism. This confidence is the inner light which the early Quakers unfolded to the world.

This confidence we find in many persons today, who though deeply religious by nature never go to any church service. But such people are not fully Quakers, because one vital part of the early Quaker message was the belief that believers should not forsake the assembling of themselves together for worship. The early Quakers felt that creeds, and forms of worship, and sacraments, and church buildings, were only outward forms, so these early Quakers met together in silence. If the silence led to the spoken word in exhortation or prayer that spoken word was part of their worship, but if the silence was merely a meeting together with a sense of the presence of God, such silence was to them no less helpful. We may define their position in scientific terms and say that they lived in an environment of the Spirit of Christ, and their meetings were a coming together of people living in that environment, thus making a complete environment of the Spirit. No wonder they found such meetings helpful. If they did not need sacraments, or beautiful church buildings, or carved altars, or creeds to speak to their condition, why should they need music, or set prayers, or hired priests to speak to their condition? The environment of fellow communers with God was enough.

Many people do not go to church today because they are not interested in creeds, or sacraments, or theology. To such we should carry this message of the helpfulness of living in the environment of those who are interested in the deeper things of the Spirit, and who realize the inadequacy of outward creeds, forms and beliefs. To the Quaker and to a great part of the world today, religion is not a form or a belief. It is a life. It is a life which is helped by the environment of other similar lives. This helpfulness of environment is an integral part of the Quaker message.

The truth of the fact that religion is a life is recognized by Boyd Carpenter, who points out that every religion which is worthy of the name, teaches its followers to have in some degree a sense of dependence on the Unseen, a sense of fellowship with man, and a sense of progress toward something better.

The true Quaker message is above all insistent on these three elements of dependence, of fellowship and of progress. If you will think a moment, I am sure you will agree that Fox had these three elements of Quakerism well defined in his mind when he told Penn to wear his sword as long as he could.

Perhaps you will say that this is a materialistic and scientific age, and that such an age demands something more real and more exact than the feeling, or sense that something is true, or helpful or fundamental. But just as many people are dissatisfied with creeds, because they are not vital, so our doctors are finding out that scientific exactness is not everything. Perhaps you all believe that the home rather than the hospital is the place for an infant, but I wonder if you realize that even in the best managed hospitals with the best foods, and with sterilized equipments, less than four infants out of every ten will live to the end of their first year. On the other hand, even in the poorer tenement districts of our great cities, nearly nine out of ten infants will live if they have a loving mother to watch over them, and the mother will carefully follow the directions of a good physician or nurse. Is not the church built on theological doctrines like a hospital? The theological definition and reasoning are like the carefully sterilized equipment and food of the hospitals,—theoretically they may be perfect, but they fail to give a growing life the love and kind of nourishment that it needs. Only the church that is built on the spirit of love like a mother's, and that looks to the great Physician, can develop its members into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

The pivot of religion is the interest of the individual in his private personal destiny, either on earth or in the hereafter. Science has repudiated the personal point of view. Science catalogs and records laws, and seeks to make all observations independent of the personal equation. This definition of a science is just as true of theology and psychology as it is true of any science. Religion, on the other hand, points out that so long as we deal with the cosmic and the general, we deal with the symbols of reality only. As soon as we deal with private and personal phenomena, we deal with our own realities in the completest sense of the word. This dealing with private and personal phenomena is mysticism, of which Quakerism is the highest form, and that mysticism is truest which stirs up in others the greatest sense of dependence on the Unseen, the greatest sense of fellowship with men, and the greatest sense of progress.

Escaping From the War Zone

(Written by Alex. C. Purdy for the Journal-Republican, Wilmington, Ohio.)

(CONCLUDED)

We arrived in Hamburg Thursday night, having traveled eighteen hours under the most trying conditions. The compartments were crowded with soldiers moving to their mobilization points. All of them smoked strong cigars and the windows of the compartments could not be opened because the Germans feared that bombs would be thrown from the windows to destroy tracks, bridges, etc. At the Kiel Canal we were obliged to get out of the train, leaving our luggage in the cars, and walk across the bridge, a distance of about a quarter mile. We heard continually of French and Russian spies being taken from trains in all sorts of disguises. We deemed it best to remain as inconspicuous as possible.

Once more we were in Hamburg and destined to stay for ten days. We were very fortunate in locating a splendid pension where our material welfare was most generously cared for. Hamburg was as quiet as any American city of the same size. Prices were absolutely normal. The Government insured that they would remain so by closing any shop which ventured to attempt even the slightest raise. Most of the department stores were "manned" by women and all the women were knitting socks for the soldiers at the front. When we left, the city was by no means emptied of men although most of the young men were gone. The public parks were utilized as drill grounds and at almost any time of day one might see hundreds of fine looking troops being put through their paces to the accompaniment of sharp, barking commands from German officers. These troops constituted the "Landsturm" and were to be used in the defense of German cities or in the occupation of captured cities such as Liege. Fine appearing as they were, they were really composed of men who for reasons of age or slight physical defects were not to be sent to the front. There were opportunities for practically all the population to help. Hundreds of women and children went into the harvest fields to help gather in the crops. If war had held off two weeks all the crops would have been safely harvested. Then there was abundant opportunity to help in the work of the Red Cross.

The German newspapers gave out a minimum of news. For example, the taking of Liege was published as a fact with scarcely any descriptive details. The German censorship is very rigid. The German people seemed to take the war with wonderful stoicism. Not a household which was not vitally concerned. The son of the household, in which we lived, was a lad of seventeen years and not required to go to the war but every member of the family seemed to take it for granted that he would go. But underneath this apparent stoicism the real sorrow of the people could be felt. We attended a church service on the Sunday following England's declaration of war and it was the saddest sight I have ever seen. The whole congregation was bathed in tears. The German confidence in the face of the tremendous odds they are facing is truly remarkable. They believe that their marvelous army simply can not be defeated and again and again we talked with people who said the war would be over in three months or before Christmas at the latest.

The American Consul in Hamburg, Mr. Morgan, was about the busiest man in the city for ten days. All the Americans in Hamburg, numbering about eight hundred to a thousand, visited him daily. In addition, the English and French were under his charge. There were probably a thousand English seamen in Hamburg practically without money. The Consul had very little information to act upon but he did the best he could and conducted himself like a gentlemen throughout. After five days of hard work, Mr. Morgan succeeded in arranging for a special train to take all Americans to the Holland border. We hardly knew whether to go or not now that the opportunity was at hand. It had been reported in Germany that the United States was sending boats to take all Americans home. The Consulate published this news and registered us in various classes for the trip home, incidentally charging us a dollar apiece for having passports vised. These charges for passports have been rather severely criticized. The passports had to be vised twice and many people could ill afford the money. Nothing had been heard from the American boats. Moreover it was solemnly reported that thousands of Americans were roaming the streets of Rotterdam and other Dutch cities, unable to secure hotel accommodations and that prices had leaped sky high. In spite of these wild rumors we decided to leave Hamburg on the American special. With about two hundred compatriots we pulled out of the station Monday evening, August 17, loaded down with German newspapers and with the cheers and songs of the people ringing in our ears. After twenty-four hours of very slow traveling we arrived in Rotterdam. The only memorable incident in the journey was a very sad sight as we passed through Bremen. There we saw several carloads of Belgian prisoners, civilians caught with arms, who were to be shot at sunrise because they had violated the "laws" of warfare. We will never forget the faces of those poor fellows and the horrors of war were borne in upon us as never before.

We found Holland full of refugees and the hotels crowded to their capacity but everyone succeeded in getting some sort of accommodations. Prices were strictly normal so far as we observed. We planned to go to England, and make our way home from that country but by great good luck we succeeded in securing makeshift accommodations on the S. S. "Ryndam," of the Holland American line, sailing August 22. We were held up in the channel by an English torpedo boat and sent in to Dover to report, but the examination by British officials was quickly accomplished and we breathed a sigh of relief when we reached the open sea. We had heard nothing but war news for more than a month. Imagine our joy when one day there appeared on the Marconi bulletin-board the following announcement: "New York Yankees 9, St. Louis Browns 5." Civilization again, thought I.

Dr. Van Dyke, our Ambassador to Holland, in an address made to us as we were about to sail, advised us not to talk about the war for two reasons: First, because we would be sure to quarrel, and, second, because we didn't know anything about it. But of course that did not prevent us from talking continuously about the war. The passengers who came from France were just as decided in their French sympathies as we were in our German sympathies. They had just as fearful tales to tell of German atrocities as we could tell of Belgian and French atrocities. We could draw no other conclusion than that the common people in each land believe they are in the right. From our own experience we know that the mass of the German people believe that they have been forced into this war and that Russia alone is responsible. They believe that they are fighting in a just and even holy cause. They think of the Russian as a wild beast and many a German soldier carries an extra revolver with which to take his own life rather than fall into the hands of the Russian. We know from personal observation that not a German soldier or a German horse was mobilized, at least in our part of the country, until after war was actually declared. And we appreciate to the full the splendid patriotism of the German citizen and the fine courtesy and consideration which they showed us in the hour of their own distress and trouble.

Dickie Richmond and Martha's Feast

BY RUWONE

(CONCLUDED)

"Dickie, you knew that Miss Euphemia opposed Sadie's plant and insect work, but you didn't know she came to me and asked me to persuade her to give it up.

"She said Sadie would clutter up the whole house, neglect her work and very likely get poisoned poking round among strange plants.

"She said she just couldn't do all the work herself and their house would look like Mrs. Slatternly's down on Smoky Row!"

"And what did you say, mamma?"

"I said, 'Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.'"

"Mamma Richmond! Did you say that? Do you mean Martha was like Miss Phemia and Mary like Sadie? Do you?"

"Well, Dickie, was Martha's family very poor?"

"Why,—how can I know? Oh, yes! now I remember, papa said they must have been fairly well to do, or Mary could not have possessed that costly ointment with which she anointed Jesus."

"And, Dickie, was the family large so as to make a great deal of work?"

"Why, no, mamma; I never heard of but just the three, Mary and Martha and Lazarus."

"Dickie, let me tell you what I think it was like; I mean the giving of that feast to Jesus. I shall not attempt to give the Oriental setting to the scene.

"Jesus loved the family and they Him. I can just feel what a restful place Martha's clean, fragrant, quiet rooms would be to Jesus after a day with the great crowds and the fault-finding Pharisees. It has been said that Lazarus was a scribe, and after Jesus had washed off the dust of the road, I can imagine them sitting down together, talking about the Law and the Prophets, and reading here and there from the poets of the Bible. Jesus would bring out meanings in the familiar passages Lazarus had never before been able to grasp, and oftentimes the sisters would sit and listen to the conversation, until the three marveled at the teachings of the Master.

"But they did not always talk of such lofty themes. Martha felt free to indulge her quaint humor, and Mary to be merry as fitted the occasion, knowing that Jesus would understand and enjoy it, for He was ever a close observer of common things and of the common life."

Dickie almost held his breath at the thought of Jesus mingling thus familiarly in an earthly home.

"Since Jesus raised Lazarus," Mrs. Richmond continued, "they loved Him more than ever and wanted to do something to show how they loved and honored Him.

"So Martha proposed that they give Him a feast, and Mary gladly seconded her suggestion. Thus the thing to do was decided upon.

"Martha said to herself, 'I'll show these Bethany ladies what a feast should be like. Mrs. Moses' last one was a success, but I feel sure I can do even better, and Mrs. Solomon has a way of seeing whatever is to be seen in all parts of the house, but she'll find no dust nor disorder here unless I lose my usual strength.'

"Mary thought in her heart, 'I do so long to hear Jesus talk. I hope we may get through with our work so that I can. What He says makes life seem altogether a different thing; makes it so much more worth the living.'

"Martha was in her element. During the days preceding the feast, there was a bustle and stir throughout the house. Every room was gone over. There was sweeping and dusting, cleaning of windows and wiping of woodwork, laundering draperies and polishing trimmings, until the house fairly glistened in its cleanliness.

"All the cooking was done the day before, that Martha thought could be prepared that long beforehand. Then, that nothing might be forgotten or time wasted, she sat down and made a list of the things to be done on the day of the feast itself, a list for herself and one for Mary, that there might be no confusion.

"Mary read hers over and sighed to think how nearly all the time it would take her to accomplish the work laid out, but she resolved to gain some time by getting up earlier.

"So when morning came she was up before the dawn. And it seemed her great longing gave deftness to her hands and swiftness to her feet. Everything turned out like magic.

"Martha was surprised, as the day wore on, to see that Mary would very soon have her list of work completed.

"At last she said, 'Mary, you have somehow, done wonders today, and I am so glad, for now you'll have time to decorate the table with olive leaves. I wanted it done all the time, but thought we just couldn't reach it.

"For a moment Mary was filled with consternation. Was she to lose her privilege after all, but no; her earnest desire gave her courage. Martha, she said, 'I have worked early and quickly, that I might have time to listen to the words of the Master. I am sure He would rather we would hear His teaching than to prepare so much for Him to eat. You know yourself, He never over-eats like many others do. He very much enjoys what satisfies His hunger and then He stops. I just must hear more of that wisdom which is so unlike the teaching of other men.'

"Martha was amazed. Was this the gentle sister who always had followed her lead almost like a child? She surely yet would obey her.

"But Mary, having finished her tasks, sat at the Master's feet drinking in His words of love and truth as the hart drinketh at the water brooks. Martha's annoyance grew; that she knew that Mary has said was true only added to her worry. She began to feel tired. Things did not turn out quite so easily and perfectly as before. So she went to the Master and made her complaint, 'Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me.'

"Jesus loved Martha, and for her sake as well as Mary's, He gave her that gentle rebuke which would, when she came to understand it, release her from the unnecessary worry and work of life."

Dickie had listened eagerly until his mamma had finished. Then he exclaimed, "Mamma, I see now and I don't blame Mary one bit, and Jesus was just right too."

"Dickie, wouldn't Jesus have been right, whether you understood or not?"

"Why, yes, mamma," said Dickie hesitatingly. "My coming to see how things were didn't change them from what they had been before. It's strange how a thing can be all right when you can't see it so, isn't it?"

"It's a blessed truth, Dickie, that our lack of seeing doesn't affect the wisdom of God's words or acts. And Dickie, remember, there will be times in all our lives when things will seem all wrong. We will be surprised at God's dealings with us, but whenever they come to you, Dickie, remember Martha's Feast."

There is contagion in a sweet and beautiful character, for health is contagious as well as disease. We are all the time giving to others either wholesome or unwholesome moods—poisoning their atmosphere with doubt and suspicion, or clearing it with helpfulness and good cheer.—Phillips Brooks.

"The power of God's Holy Spirit means a hopeful ministry and a joyful, peaceful life."

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

The first annual gathering to be held in the new Yearly Meeting House was in session September first to sixth. The following ministers and workers were present from other yearly meetings: Rufus P. King, North Carolina; Murray S. Kenworthy, Indiana; S. Edgar Nicholson, Indiana; Thomas Jones, Indiana; Charles E. Tebbetts, Indiana; Imelda Tebbetts, Indiana; Rebecca W. Flagler, Western; Arthur Jones, Kansas; William Alpheus Reece, Nebraska; Charles W. Mesner, Nebraska.

The missionaries present were: Zenas L. Martin, Cuba; Susie J. Martin, Cuba; Solomon Tice, Mexico; Wendell G. Farr, Jamaica. Fay Fry Farr, a bride of a few days, was also present, and will return with Wendell Farr to the field.

The statistical report was unusually complete this year, the valuation of meeting houses and parsonages being given for the first time. The former amounted to $213,000, and the latter to $53,900. The total amount raised for all purposes during the past year was $105,440.61. Of this amount, $45,466.00 went for church buildings and $8,377.00 for parsonages. This has been an unusual year in expenditures for new buildings on account of the new meeting house in Oskaloosa and the new parsonage and meeting house in Des Moines. But notwithstanding this, there was a good increase for running expenses over former years. The total amount raised was more than double that of two years ago. If the associate and non-resident members are deducted, the adult resident membership gave an average of about $20.00 apiece for church purposes. Of this amount $1.33 per member was raised for foreign missions.

There was a net loss in membership of 449, but there are certain extenuating circumstances. One monthly meeting of 51 members was transferred to Nebraska Yearly Meeting. There was a net loss by error of 260. There were net losses by certificate of 103 and by letters to other denominations of 101. What has been our loss in the most of these cases has been gain for others. There have been 675 additions during the year and were it not for errors and the drift of our population away from us there would have been a net gain of 66. So after all, the Kingdom has been advanced, although we ourselves were losers.

Several matters of more than passing interest came up in the business meetings. All funds of the various boards and committees were centralized in the hands of one treasurer. J. Milo Hockett, of Colfax, was chosen to fill this position. The finance committee also brought in a report intended to improve the finances of the local meetings. Report was referred back to committee for further consideration and consultation with the General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting. The final act of recording ministers was taken from the monthly meeting and vested in the yearly meeting. Instructions were sent down to subordinate meetings that they should consult the evangelistic board before securing pastors or evangelists.

A committee of young Friends was appointed to see what could be done to increase the attendance at next yearly meeting. A committee was appointed by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight to make a thorough investigation of conditions in the yearly meeting. Each year there are those who feel optimistic about the work, but there are others who are just as sure that something is wrong. The purpose of the meeting in appointing this committee was to find out as nearly as possible just what the actual conditions are.

One of the unique features of the yearly meeting was the sale of lots on the new addition to Oskaloosa, made by the platting of the college farm. This beautiful tract of forty-nine acres lies north of the college and east of the old yearly meeting house. An avenue running east of the college campus and the auditorium is to connect it with the rest of the city. This tract had been divided into 176 lots, the lines of each being plainly marked by white stakes, with a stake in the middle giving dimensions and price. All this preliminary work had been completed days in advance, and many had already selected their lots before the day of the sale. But no sales were made before Thursday afternoon. A large crowd gathered at the sales tent erected on the tract for the purpose, and the conditions of sale were explained. Then time was given for the crowd to disperse and examine the property.

At the ringing of the college bell at three o'clock sharp the sale began. Purchasers tore the sales tag from the lot desired and brought it to the tent, where a contract of sale was made out. Where two or more desired the same lot, it was sold to the highest bidder. Fifty lots were disposed of at an average price of about $400.00. Many Friends from a distance invested with the intention of making this their future home on account of the educational and church privileges. Thus will be built up a new Friends' community which will be a decided asset to the college. The proceeds of the sale will increase the endowment fund. The names of the streets in the new addition have a very Friendly sound. Penn Boulevard divides the tract from north to south, being flanked by Barclay and Gurney Streets. The cross streets will commemorate the names of former presidents of the college, namely: Woody, Morgan, Trueblood and Rosenberger.

Announcement was also made of the deeding of a valuable farm of 160 acres to the college. The donor, Lydia Newlin Jones, retains the use of the property during life.

The reports of standing committees and boards were of unusual interest. The war conditions in Europe lent interest to the report of the Peace Committee. It was felt that the present was a golden opportunity to press forward in our peace work with renewed vigor. In the session devoted to the Evangelistic Committee, Edgar Stranahan gave a stirring address on the new evangelism which started in Wichita and vicinity and has already spread to several states. It was an outgrowth of the Billy Sunday meetings and the Men and Religion Forward Movement. Gospel teams made up of laymen have already won thousands to the Christian life. This session was one of the most marked in interest during the yearly meeting.

The Bible School Committee had an exhibit of Sunday School supplies and equipment, as well as certain devices and work from various schools. The Mission Committee reported the completion of the boys' dormitory in Jamaica, and the sending out of two new missionaries, Jennie Hoover and Mrs. Wendell Farr. The presence of our General Secretary, Charles Tebbetts, who gave a stirring address on missions, gave prominence to this department of work. What is being done towards the abolition of the liquor traffic was vividly presented by Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, President of the State W. C. T. U.

S. Edgar Nicholson came all the way from Richmond, Indiana, upon invitation, to address a men's meeting. One hundred thirty-eight men sat down to a supper after which the speaker of the evening presented in a forceful way the need of men in the church work of today. The proposed men's conference was also discussed, and later the plan was approved by the yearly meeting. Charles Tebbetts also addressed a men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, at which time he told of what is being done by the men of other denominations. The yearly meeting, as a whole, was one of unusual interest, no session lagging behind another. W. IRVING KELSEY.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING AND PENN COLLEGE

Oskaloosa, Iowa, the home of Iowa Yearly Meeting and also of Penn College, has always been a place of interest to Friends, and especially to those Friends who are located far from it and have been unable to attend its annual meetings. It is to such Friends that I shall give a description of the meeting house and the college.

The stately stone structure with the inscription on the side front "Friends Meeting House," stands just diagonally across the street from the beautiful Penn College campus.

Come with me and we will make a tour of inspection over this magnificent, yet simple temple of worship. Let us enter the large auditorium, a room finished in straight lines and seating perhaps fifteen hundred people. The feature attracting the most attention is the lighting system, which consists of marble chandeliers, so hung from the ceiling by chains that the light is reflected downward in a soft, mellow glow. But we must not tarry here too long or we will not get over the building before the meeting begins. Just back of the main auditorium are the Sunday School rooms, separated from it by huge sliding doors. The rooms are numbered and each class has a room to itself.

From the auditorium there are three entrances to the basement, a nicely finished place with a dining room capable of seating two hundred and fifty people at once. The kitchen is modern in every way and it is here that the hungry multitudes are fed, cafeteria style, by the energetic ladies of the meeting. One year ago these ladies fed seven hundred people at one dinner. Their worthy ambition now is to earn enough money to buy a parsonage.

Just off the dining room is a large rest room cozily furnished with bookcases, library table, cot and comfortable chairs, all purchased by the Christian Endeavor of Oskaloosa Meeting.

I heard some one say today that the meeting is going to raise money for missionary work. I have always had a curiosity to see how Friends who have so long held to the belief that God will in some unforeseen way put the money in the hands of those actively engaged in carrying the gospel to lost souls, would proceed, so let us slip quietly into a back seat and observe.

Would you believe me if I told you that they had a regular jollification meeting and that with smiling faces men and women pledged $5.00, $10.00, $25.00 and $50.00 toward mission work. R. R. Newby, pastor of Des Moines, had charge of the offering and with his inexhaustable fund of humor kept everyone laughing until it seemed second-nature to give. Before leaving that meeting I came to the conclusion that Friends are fast waking up to their responsibility along financial lines.

We have an hour before the next service, so let us go across the street and inspect Penn College. The huge brick building partially covered with the English ivy creeper and surrounded by beds of foliage in its most vivid coloring, has the stamp of age upon it. It is this mark of age that gives every student a feeling of awe as he pictures the many brave men and women who have passed through its halls.

The chapel, seating five hundred, has been remodeled. This room is unique in that it contains the finest art collection of any college west of Chicago. The walls are covered with original paintings and copies of the world famous artists. It is known as the Buyers' art collection, and is Mrs. Buyers' private art collection donated to Penn.

Another feature of Penn College often overlooked by the public is the museum, which, for lack of room, is housed in the city library. Here one finds as complete a small museum as one would anywhere. The Commercial Department of Penn is also found down town for lack of facilities on the campus.

Now, after this side-light on the down town offices of the college, we must step across the street and visit the gymnasium. It is here that crooked spines are made straight and tangled brains are cleared up.

The two college literary societies, Argonaut and Studentien, have their nobby little rooms in this building. From either room one can get a view of the athletic park which has been put in splendid shape for this year's work.

We must not consider our inspection tour complete until we have taken a stroll past the President's home, situated on the southwest corner of the campus, and on through the natural timber, to a depression in the ground, where a large auditorium has been built in order to accommodate the large gatherings.

The chautauqua holds its annual meeting here and, as Dr. Edwards, president of Penn, said, "Perhaps there is no other feature about Penn that brings it more attention than this auditorium." I am sure that you are wishing, as I am, the largest registration ever for Penn this year and a record attendance at the Iowa Yearly Meeting in 1915.

NEW GARDEN QUARTERLY MEETING

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held in Greensboro, North Carolina, September 12. At this time we gladly welcomed David and Sarah Sampson, who have just returned from their six months' absence in England. There was a note of thanksgiving throughout the whole session not only for the service which has been theirs but also that they are again with us with renewed inspiration and spiritual uplift.

David Sampson's message on "And of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end" was full of faith. Coming as he has so recently from the scenes of warlike preparations and hostile unrest the message was unusually earnest and appealing.

The Quarterly Meeting considered sympathetically the present struggle for prohibition in Virginia and were given some idea of how much must be overcome to gain the same, by W. E. Blair, a Baptist minister closely connected with Friends, and who was just from the thick of the conflict. While there was little unusual in the way of reports, there was a spirit pervading the meeting which made one feel that it was good to be there.

The meeting instructed the Clerk to inform President Wilson of its high appreciation of the proclamation of his request for prayer throughout the United States for peace in Europe. The Chairman of the Yearly Meeting Peace Committee called attention to peace work, and read the following sentence from the Yearly Meeting Minutes: "We recommend that incessant, earnest peace work be done in all the Quarterly Meetings." A lunch in the Bible School room, at the noon hour, was enjoyed by many in connection with a social occasion.

At the afternoon session the returning minute for David and Sarah Sampson, issued by London Yearly Meeting, was read. Testimony was given that their visit was timely and very satisfactory. They gave a running outline of their trip. They were received cordially, and opportunities for service were given wherever they went, both at London and Dublin Yearly Meetings and at subordinate meetings in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

YEARLY MEETINGS, 1914

Kansas—At Lawrence, Kansas, October 7. Clerk, Edmund Stanley, Wichita, Kansas.

Baltimore—At Baltimore, Maryland, November 13. Clerk, Allen C. Thomas, Haverford, Pennsylvania.

STELLA QUARTERLY MEETING

Stella Quarterly Meeting was held at Stella Academy, Alfalfa County, Oklahoma, September 4, 5 and 6. While the Meeting for Ministry and Oversight on Friday morning was rather small, all of the other sessions were well attended. Our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, L. Clarkson Hinshaw, was present, and was wonderfully favored in preaching the Word. William L. George, accompanied by his wife, was also in acceptable attendance. The Monthly Meetings were well represented, some of their representatives having to travel over one hundred miles to get to Quarterly Meeting. As our Quarterly Meeting covers a scope of country about sixty-five miles wide, and one hundred and twenty-five miles long, some have to travel quite a distance. The writer had to travel one hundred and twenty miles by rail, and twenty-two miles by wagon to attend one quarterly meeting. But everyone seems to enjoy the meetings the more, and nearly everyone from a distance gets in on Thursday and remains until Monday morning. Our people are prospering in this part of the country, and whereas they used to come to Quarterly in prairie schooners, on horseback, and by almost any mode of conveyance, now they come by train, autos, carriages and motorcycles. In their prosperity they have not forgotten their obligations to the Church, as they are loyal with their presence and with their money. Among former Indiana people in attendance at last Quarterly Meeting were John C. Griffin and family, Lucius T. Cox and wife, W. L. George and wife, Robert C. Smith and family, Absalom Knight and wife, C. W. Straughan and wife, and others. We are disappointed at the few who take THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and intend to try and get more to take it, as it should be in every Friends' family.

AT WICHITA, KANSAS

University Friends' Church, Wichita, Kansas, gave over the regular hours for service Sunday, September 13, to the consideration of the subject of education. At eleven o'clock Professor W. J. Reagan made an appeal for a better support of the schools by the church, and urged parents to second the work of teachers in all efforts to promote the moral and intellectual welfare of students. He declared that he had no fear of too much education so long as the heart burned with the knowledge and inspiration of Jesus Christ. At the evening meeting the speakers were W. C. Kemp, President of the City Board of Education and a member of University Church; L. W. Mayberry, City Superintendent of Schools, and President Edmund Stanley. Superintendent Mayberry declared that inasmuch as the public school found its origin in the church, it and the church ought to be found working together always for the betterment of the community. He said that without the church and the school there would be nothing left worth striving for.

On Sunday evening, September 6, at Wichita Quarterly Meeting, the subject of peace was considered. Judge J. N. Haymaker, a prominent lawyer and citizen of Wichita, gave a fine address. He said that if proof were needed to refute the argument that standing armies and big navies made for peace, that proof is to be seen in the war among the nations of Europe today. Other special subjects considered at the quarterly meeting were Christian Endeavor Friday night, and Bible Schools Saturday night. Thomas E. Jones was present at part of the sessions.

AT CALVARY MEETING, KANSAS

Our pastor, O. A. Winslow and wife, feeling the time had come to make a change and being called of God to other fields of labor, gave their farewell message the last Sabbath in August. They have now gone to their home at Alton, Kansas, for a few days' rest. From there they intend to go to Los Angeles, California, for a few weeks' visit. They will return some time in November to take charge of the Oak Creek Church at Burr Oak, Kansas. We wish to express our regrets in losing from among us a family of such faithful Christian workers, but cheerfully unite in saying, "Thy will O God, be done." We fully realize and appreciate the great good they have done during their three years with us, in building up the moral standing of our community, and in strengthening our faith in bringing souls to God. Twenty-nine members have been added to our list during their three years' work here, which is almost one-third of the total membership of the church. Many times when we were burdened with the cares and worries of life, they have been in our homes and offered a prayer in our behalf, and given encouraging words which lightened our burdens and encouraged us to press onward and upward.

We unite in praying for their success in their new field of labor and that God will bless them in the salvation of many souls at that place.

This meeting has secured Amy B. Hawkins and husband as pastors for the coming year. WILLIAM MOSS.

GUILFORD COLLEGE

Guilford College opened this year's work with a larger number of students than ever before with more to come. On First-day, the 13th, Walter Grabbs, a minister in the Moravian Church, who graduated at Guilford College twenty years ago, preached in Friends' meeting to the college faculty and students and the people of the community. His text was "This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad." One of the two pertinent allusions he made to his time spent in college here up to his graduation day was when Dr. Benjamin Trueblood preached and gave the baccalaureate address and in the course of it said, "I do not expect you to remember all I have said but I want you to retain the spirit of it." So said Brother Grabbs I desire to pass on to you in this audience the spirit of what was said to me and of what I say today in my discourse, though I can not hope that it will help you as much as the spirit of Dr. Trueblood's address helps me yet.

AT STAFFORD, KANSAS

Those that attended Quarterly Meeting at Haviland last month report a good meeting. The next one will be held at Pleasant Plain on November 2. Our Sabbath School is growing in interest and numbers. We have over one hundred enrolled, and Edwin West has organized a gospel team of young and old to be known as the Friends' Gospel Team. Brother West is the president. The team was at Antioch last Thursday evening.

CORRESPONDENCE

Manchester, Maine,
September 11, 1914.

Editor The American Friend:

I was much interested in the article by Robert L. Kelly on the subject of "Christian Education in State Universities" (AMERICAN FRIEND, September 3). It brought to my remembrance the baccalaureate address delivered at the Maine State University in 1913. The following extract from that address is worth remembering and repeating:

"God has been missing from the education of youth too long. It will be your problem to find some way to make Him welcome in the school-room. Youth must be taught to know God and moral laws, and youth must be trained to exercise his conscience in observing them."

Sincerely thy friend,
I. WARREN HAWKES.

PERSONAL MENTION

* Amos Kenworthy, of California, was a visitor at Western Yearly Meeting.

Hannah Hubbard, of Wichita, Kansas, attended Western Yearly Meeting last week.

John B. Stipp will remain as pastor of the meeting at West Indianapolis for another year.

Jehu Reagan will remain another year as pastor of the meeting at Poplar Ridge near Carmel, Indiana.

Orley Smith, who has been pastor at Amo, Indiana, has accepted a call to the meeting at Kingman, Indiana.

Zeno Doan and Nereus M. Hodgins of Iowa Yearly Meeting, attended Western Yearly Meeting last week.

Gertrude Reinier has accepted a call to remain as pastor of the meeting at Noblesville, Indiana, another year.

Eliza Armstrong Cox has been retained as pastor of Sand Creek and Azalia meetings, Indiana, for another year.

Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, stopped over at Plainfield a couple of days to look in upon Western Yearly Meeting.

Mary E. Chapman leaves her pastorate at Blue River Meeting near Salem, Indiana, with the close of Western Yearly Meeting.

Joseph John Mills gave an address at Western Yearly Meeting on Tuesday evening, on the subject "The Education of Our Pastors." He also preached the dedicatory service on Sabbath morning.

John Pennington, of Damascus, Ohio, attended Western Yearly Meeting, and gave the Sabbath afternoon address in connection with the dedicatory services, in place of Edmund Stanley, who was unable to attend.

Ross Hadley, who had planned before this to return to his Y. M. C. A. work in India, and who has been hindered because of the war, is in New York City for a few weeks, awaiting the opportunity to get away.

Francis Anscombe, a student in Earlham College, and who has served the South Eighth Street Friends Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, acceptably the past year, has been given a unanimous call to remain as pastor for another year.

Luke Woodard, Leannah Hobson, Levi F. Cox, Charles E. Tebbetts, Robert L. Kelly, Professor W. O. Mendenhall, Thomas E. Jones, A. J. Furstenberger and wife, Truman C. Kenworthy, Richard Haworth, E. E. Hartley and wife, Leora Bogue, Robert W. Douglas, Austice M. Harvey, Robert Pretlow, Chas.

G. Carpenter, Esther Cook, Emma Hedges, Orlando Hobson, Mercer Brown, Isaac Elliott, Leola King, Dalton Lewis and J. F. Propst and others of Indiana Yearly Meeting, attended the sessions of Western Yearly Meeting.

Professor Roderick Scott, who recently married Agnes, daughter of President and Mrs. Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, and who on account of the war is prevented from returning to Petrograd, Russia, to continue his Y. M. C. A. mission work, has accepted the Y. M. C. A. Secretaryship at Vincennes, Indiana.

Leora Bogue, the talented evangelistic singer, of Fairmount, Indiana, whose gospel service in song has been a blessing to so many Friends' neighborhoods, has accepted service with an evangelistic party for the coming year. While her work will be mostly away from Friends, she will still remain a loyal member of the church.

Enos Harvey gave his closing sermon in the pastoral year at Bloomingdale, Indiana, on September 13th, taking as his theme, "Fitness for Fellowship and Service." He has resigned the pastorate to take up the superintendency of Evangelistic work in Western Yearly Meeting. George H. Moore, of Westfield, will succeed him in the pastorate at Bloomingdale for the coming year.

R. Solomon Tice, who left the mission station some months ago at Victoria, Mexico, and who has since been raising money for the boys' school at that place under the direction of the missionary board, expects to return to that station some time during the early part of October. It is felt that conditions have settled sufficiently to warrant the resumption of work there.

Hiram Hadley, well known to older Friends all over the country, and who has resided in New Mexico for many years, engaged in educational work, attended the sessions of Western Yearly Meeting last week. Several years ago he was Clerk of this Yearly Meeting. He attended Indiana Yearly Meeting this week for a day or two on his way to visit relatives in Boston.

W. C. Pidgeon, who since starting to school at six years of age, has not missed a year or a term from the school room, and has taught for forty years, is now located at Muncie, Indiana, and with his son-in-law, George B. Carter, is engaged in market gardening. He is a graduate of Spiceland Academy, Eastman's Business College and the State University, holding a Master's Degree from the latter. He was principal of Hiawatha Academy two years, Washington Academy, Kansas, four years, and superintendent of various public schools for thirty years. He has been a recorded minister for twenty-four years, doing double duty much of that time. He is expecting to do pastoral or supply work within reach of Muncie.

William J. Sayres has resigned from a five years' pastorate of the meeting at Poughkeepsie, New York, much to the surprise of the congregation. His plans for the future are not yet developed. His work will close not later than October 25th. During his stay the meeting has developed greatly in all of its departments. The Poughkeepsie Star says he will be greatly missed in the city.

Arthur W. Hammond, who has served as pastor at Carmel Meeting, Indiana, for the past two years, will leave there after attending Western Yearly Meeting, to accept a call from the Friends at Watseka, Illinois. He is a sound, strong minister of the gospel, and has exerted a lasting influence on the lives of many of the young people at Carmel. Lewis E. Stout, of Wichita, Kansas, will succeed him.

Roy H. Woolam, who has served the meeting at Spiceland, Indiana, as pastor for several months, concluded his work on the 13th, that he might return to his studies in McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. During their stay in Spiceland, Roy Woolam and his mother, Emma Woolam, have greatly endeared themselves to the people, and both the meeting and the community were loath to part with them. For the coming year Emma Woolam will reside at Georgetown, Illinois, and Roy Woolam will spend his week-ends there in the service of the meeting as pastor.

FRIENDS IN NEED

Long Run Preparative Meeting, Ohio, has been blessed of the Lord in many ways this year. There have been requests for membership each month except one this year. The interior of the church has been painted and two class rooms built in the basement of the church. Louis Murie has built up a class of thirty young men, mostly of foreign, Catholic parentage, that are a revelation of what a consecrated loving heart can do.

The coal miners strike causes us much concern just now. There is already much suffering, as the men have had no work since April 1st last.

There are a number of our members that were converted at our revival last winter that are reduced to almost starvation now, and our resources have been drained to the utmost already. If anyone reading this should be touched to help us a little in our trouble, it may be sent to James Galloway, Ramsey, Ohio, or to the pastor, A. H. Reynolds, Adina, Ohio.

RESOLUTIONS OF REGARD

Whereas, E. James Carter has served Plainfield congregation faithfully and efficiently for the past two years, as a growing and appreciative congregation evidences, and

Whereas, He has been faithful and untiring in his labors of love among us, winning the good-will and appreciation of the public generally,

Be It Resolved, That we tender him this preamble and resolution as an expression of our love and esteem, deeming him entirely worthy of pastoral relations with any congregation that may seek his services.

Be It Resolved Further, That we extend to him our hands in loving farewell as our pastor, bidding him God-speed as a qualified minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

By order of Pastoral Committee.

ERNEST HERINGLAKE,

Chairman.

JANE T. DOAN, Secretary.

Plainfield, Indiana.

JOURNAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Journal of Friends' Historical Society (July, 1914), published by Headley Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C., England, (price 50 cents) is replete with historical interest. Four missing letters from George Fox to his wife, which have been recently found, are among the articles. A Journey of Margaret Fox into Yorkshire in 1672 is recited, taken from her memorandum. The address of the President of the Society is full of interesting information and covers a variety of matters. Eight pages are devoted to "Friends in Current Literature," and there are many extremely valuable references, including several of Joseph S. Elkinton's writings and other American productions. "The Quakers of Iowa," a book by Louis Thomas Jones, is given considerable attention, a work already reviewed in the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Reference is also made to Luke Woodard's new book "Autumn Gleanings"; to Professor Allen Thomas' new work, "A History of England"; to an article in The Homiletic Review and one in Present Day Papers; to the Bulletin of Friends' Historical Society of Philadelphia; to published letters of Hannah Whitall Smith; and to the issuance recently of a Register of Haverford College, 1833-1913. This journal should be in the hands of many American Friends; $1.25 per year. American

From the Literature Department of W. F. M. Union

WE ARE planning to add new literature and new interest to this department. We want the co-operation of the missionary women of all Yearly Meetings in this movement; especially must we have the help of the Secretaries of Literature of Yearly Meetings. Kindly write us of your needs in literature.

On account of the new postal rates the publishers of the Mission Study books advise Boards to change the prices to 40 and 60 cents, postpaid, for the books that formerly sold for 36 and 58 cents, postpaid. By using the Express Co., for sending books to points at great distances, we believe we can continue selling at the old price without losing postage for the department.

Please remember always to enclose the postage with order for books.

We have a new pamphlet, "The Call of the Hour to Our Women," by Eliza Armstrong Cox, for five cents. We will send with this a leaflet entitled, "The Efficient Auxiliary," free. "The Call of the Hour" was read at the Muncie, Indiana, Conference of the W. F. M. Union. The Conference recommended that it be read to meetings and to auxiliaries. Every woman should be in possession of this address.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

October 4.

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. X. The Trust Verse. Isaiah 12: 2. (Consecration Meeting.)

How frequently we find the injunction in the Scriptures "Trust in the Lord." Christianity finds its bed rock in this elemental principle of trust in Jehovah.

Knowledge or experience begets trust in God. David was ready to meet the giant because God had delivered him at other times. Joseph could dare to do great and unusual things because he had put God to the test and found him faithful.

If we would do exploits for the cause of righteousness we must be ready to put our whole reliance in God the Father. Think of Him as our Father, and a new feeling of confidence will be begotten in our lives.

But the element of trust is not all on one side. We need to live lives which God can trust. The best thing that can be said about a boy or a young man is "He can be trusted."

The Christian life is a life of co-operation between God and man. How beautiful it is to see two friends linked together in love and confidence. They trust each other not only because they have proved themselves, but because the elements of love and affection have driven out every feeling of distrust and suspicion. So it is that we trust God and He trusts us.

Ask each member to repeat his favorite trust text and explain the element in it which has most appealed to him.

No other Friends' paper has so much news about the movements of Friends and the work of their meetings as does THE AMERICAN FRIEND. $1.50 per year.

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

of the children. This gives the School an atmosphere of religious feeling, and of culture and earnestness of purpose quite common in our Friends' Colleges, but almost unique among Boarding Schools.

Wanted

We are short of the issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND of July 2, 9, 16, 23, 30 and August 27, 1914. We will greatly appreciate it if some of our readers who do not care to keep the file will send us any of the above numbers which they have on hand.

Slow Valley Meeting

Under the title of "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle," the record of Slow Valley Meeting has been put into booklet form, seventy-nine pages with cover, and is now ready for sale and distribution. Orders will be filled next week, and we are ready to fill other orders.

One Yearly Meeting's Book and Tract Committee has ordered a copy for each Monthly Meeting in the Yearly Meeting. A Professor in the Biblical Department of one of our colleges has ordered copies for use in his class to emphasize the need of practical, vigorous work in meeting activities.

Many have ordered ten copies for use in the local meetings, while others have ordered single copies for their own library.

Single copy, 15 cents; ten copies, $1.00; twenty-five copies, $2.25. Order today. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

United Missionary Campaign

Conferences in connection with this movement will be held as follows: Huntington, Indiana, October 22-23, accessible to Wabash Friends; at Muncie, Indiana, October 25-26, accessible to the meetings of Winchester, Portland and Fairmount Quarterly Meetings. It is important that Friends' meetings be represented at these conferences.

The United Missionary Program

The most advanced movement for making the work of the churches more efficient in reaching thoroughly the needs of the communities about them is the United Missionary Program, issued under the authority of a committee representing all the Protestant churches of America, appointed out of their Home and Foreign Mission Boards. They have prepared six books for use during the year as follows:

1st. "Social Aspects of Foreign Missions" (60 cents), by President Faunce, of Brown University, dealing with the task of the foreign missionary in reaching the overwhelming social needs of a heathen community, and the way he is doing it. 2d. "The New Home Missions" (60 cents), by Harlan Paul Douglas, dealing in a most practical way with the changing conditions of the communities in our own country, and the way in which the Home Boards are endeavoring to meet them effectively. 3d. "The Individual and the Social Gospel" (25 cents), by Dean Shailer Mathews, President of the Federated Churches of America, an appeal to men to bear their responsibility for church work. 4th. "The Church a Community Force" (50 cents), an account of the social awakening of a church in Cleveland, and the remarkable way in which it has become a power in solving the problems of a city. 5th. "The Church at the Center" (50 cents), by Warren H. Wilson, head of the Presbyterian bureau of rural churches, a country church program, giving concrete illustrations of socialized country churches, that have become effective in solving country problems. 6th. "The Making of a Country Parish" (50 cents), the story of a country church in Michigan, that assumed responsibility for about half a county, and the way its work developed.

Besides these there are "Services for Worship in S. S." (10 cents), with missionary exercises at frequent intervals; programs for S. S., consisting of songs and recitations, for Thanksgiving and Easter (25 cents per dozen); a Thanksgiving cantata, "Our Country for All" (25 cents); popular programs for public meetings based on the books mentioned above; a 24-page pamphlet for pastors with data and references for five sermons during year, and outlines for five prayer meetings to develop the prayer life of the church behind the whole world task for which the church is responsible. These are sent free with the books.

All this literature is for developing the efficiency of the home congregations. These books can be ordered through our office at Richmond, Indiana. We have most of them now on hand, and will have all soon. They will be of very great value in increasing the power of our meetings in effective service, and they should be in every meeting. The watchword of the program is "Christ for Every Life and for All of Life." The Home Mission side is to culminate at Thanksgiving, and if the best results are to be reached the literature should be obtained at once.

We have tried to get the announcements into every meeting. If any have not received them, send a two-cent stamp and they will be sent.

The Day of Opportunity for the Society of Friends

Our Christian civilization is on trial as it has not been in any other age. Perhaps it is a crisis for our Christian faith. Institutional religion is being weighed in the balances of popular judgment. The time has come when vital religion must be brought face to face with the age long skepticism of the reality of Christian experience, and each be judged by its appeal to the consciousness of sober-minded, needy humanity.

The devil was let loose in the world and his name spelled skepticism. Men were loth to believe because they dared not face the test of a religion that knows. The devil was let loose again and his name spelled materialism. Religion was meant for credulous folks, but the social order, in government, in commerce, in national life, in international relationships, was left to the godless control of a liberalistic spirit that established mammon and selfishness as the guardians of its destinies. The devil has been let loose again in Europe and his name spells militarism. The pagan doctrine of rivalry and hate has shaken its mailed fist in the face of human brotherhood and established itself as the law of nations.

But this riot of the devil of unrighteousness has proved his undoing and the thinking, conscientious masses are beginning to look the verities of life squarely in the face with a determination that bodes ill to any agency of evil that has no program of hope for a suffering people.

The world, therefore, is due to witness a renaissance of vital religion. Conventional Christianity has had its day and must yield the stage to the Christianity of the heart and life. There can no longer be a double standard of religion which sets one ideal for the individual and another for society and the nations. The world will continue in the danger zone so long as the second great commandment of our Lord is nullified at the tribunal of international relationships.

The day is at hand when the world must appeal from the siege guns of the battle field to the law of Christian and universal brotherhood as the rule of conduct for the nations; from the modernism of philosophical speculations and destructive critical research to the verities of conscious spiritual experience and personal communion between the soul and its creator; from conventional and traditional Christianity to what the German philosopher, Eucken, terms essential Christianity.

Out from the ruins of a broken civilization must come a more triumphant faith, interpreted in terms of universal human need and visualized in faithful ministrations as an answer to unbelievers in all lands. The coming generation will have no ear for a sham Christianity. It is only Christianity on dress parade that has failed; a professional Christianity that made religion a cloak for hate and rivalry and selfishness while serving as a badge for personal respectability. What Christianity needs is a chance, and the chance will come when the world is open minded enough to distinguish between the genuine and the spurious.

It is safe to say that when the world begins to recover from its present staggering blow, it will turn to the problems of experimental religion with new interest and with a hunger that will not be satisfied short of an abiding spiritual experience. Amid these changing conditions, the church that is best able to interpret the program which Jesus has for the amelioration of human needs and the salvation of men, is the church which the masses will follow as it leads the way to a higher life.

What the world has needed throughout all the centuries is a gospel of universal love and sympathy which would not only be interpreted in terms of a message, but would be incarnated in a living, visible organism, that proved its sincerity and its essential purity by its example of Godly living and its ministrations of sympathy and good will in behalf of humanity everywhere. "Today the only love which counts is the love which answers when God calls." It may be added that the only love which counts is the love that eliminates the spirit of unholy rivalry in the daily life of trade, in the world of society and in the field of international relationships.

If the Christian business man cannot love his rival and fellowship with his competitor, if Christian patriotism makes enemies out of Christian men in rival nations, if the social order cannot succeed when governed by the law of Christian brotherhood, then the world will look for a new religion, or will give itself over altogether to the demon of unbelief. Christianity has not yet met its severest test because it has not yet had its best chance. If the sequel to the crisis that is upon the world shall be the deepening of spiritual life, the victory of a more triumphant faith, and the realization of a transcendent love, this baptism of sorrow will not have been in vain. The program which Jesus has for the world calls for an undefiled religion and a redemption that saves to the uttermost.

It has been agreed by many students of religious history, that for two hundred and fifty years the Society of Friends has had the purest type of a religious message which the world has known since the days of the Apostles. It has stood almost alone in proclaiming a gospel that repudiated the doctrine of armaments as the ruling polity of the nations. While loving their country with a zeal that was unsurpassed, Friends have presented the anomalous spectacle of loving their national enemies, and praying for those against whom the national arms were being turned, and this too without being suspected of treachery or disloyalty. The marvel of the present tragedy beyond the seas is that our English Friends are organizing for the amelioration of the dire sufferings of innocent Germans and Austrians and Hungarians now within their borders.

More even than this are they doing. Listen to their proclamation spread throughout the British Empire: "In pity and helpfulness towards the suffering and stricken in our own country we shall all share. If we stop at this, 'what do we more than others?' Our Master bids us pray for and love our enemies. May we be saved from forgetting that they too are the children of our Father. May we think of them with love and pity. * * * Our duty is clear—to be courageous in the cause of love and in the hate of hate. May we prepare ourselves even now for the day when once more we shall stand shoulder to shoulder with those with whom we are now at war, in seeking to bring in the Kingdom of God." Even now our English Friends are organizing to care for the suffering of both sides on the battlefield, thus demonstrating afresh that their opposition to war is not because of fear, but because of their conviction that all war is wrong.

This is Christianity in realism. It is the standard about which the world must rally before the program of Jesus can be carried to completeness. There can be no bankruptcy of religion in the midst of such a program. This standard of idealistic Christianity will win the world to Jesus Christ. From the beginning until now, Friends have stood for a whole gospel that would save society and business and government no less than the individual. At a time when human diplomacy is being weighed in the balances, when the resources of civilization are being tried to the utmost, the world is more ready to consider a Christian faith that will stand every test than it has ever been before.

What an opportunity for the Society of Friends, at home and abroad! "Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" There is a world wide call for a more convincing expression in daily life of a Christianity that has no taint of insincerity and personal self-interest upon it. What is needed is road makers, those who will blaze a path out of the chaos which has come upon the world. On questions of moral and social reform no less than in the proclamation of a realistic gospel, Friends have been playing the role of road makers through two and a half centuries of history. In this dark hour their place is in the vanguard of a reconstructed civilization, bidding the church and all men into the path that is called straight.

The church needs to be a leader in the march of empire toward a higher destiny, but it can have no agreement with the spirit of militarism if it be true to its divine commission. It must be the guiding star for the tread of the universal brotherhood of man, but it cannot lead with one hand pointed to the Cross and the other dripping with the blood of the slain. The church must help every movement to a successful fruition that would reveal the mighty love of the Son of God to the consciousness of needy men.

The Society of Friends is at the cross roads of its history, because it has reached the open gateway to a new opportunity. The sign board points to the revival of our ancient precepts as the solution of the reconstruction of our broken civilization. In all our borders fresh support should be given the cause of peace, until our President feels the undergirding of power from a body whose record is consistent and whose testimony is constructive. In every Yearly Meeting there should be a revival in evangelism, in home missionary endeavor, for in meeting the needs of our own communities, we are setting standards for the redemption of the world. Prostrate before the Lord we should pour out our souls in supplication, invoking the divine anointing and praying for the divine leading.

This is the time for the rebirth of Quakerism, wherein American Friends and English Friends together shall put the stamp of their conceptions of divine truth indelibly upon the church and our coming civilization. It is time for our men and women of courage, of vision and of consecration to come to the front with a constructive Quakerly program of operation, that will not only strengthen the chords of our own habitation, but that will put new life into the cause of Zion everywhere. Our departments of Foreign Missions, of Evangelization and Church Extension, of Social Service and of Peace should feel the thrill of a new inspiration as they face the changing conditions of the coming year. Our ministry should take on new life amid the hunger of men and women who are seeking for a pure gospel and who ought to be at peace with God. It is time for us to get near the heart of things.

Can we not catch the spirit of our English Friends as set forth in a recent announcement about the Llandudno conference?

"Do we really see the Dawn of a new Day of Faith? Are we going forth to welcome it? * * * Our age looks for prophetic spirits and for a prophetic church. Our Society was cradled in the spirit of prophecy. We have to ask ourselves whether we can enter into the spirit of the past, so that we, like our forefathers, may take the Kingdom by storm, and know within ourselves the manifestation of the power and love of the Living God. Still more, can we enter into the spirit of the present, finding our message, not in what was given to our fathers, but in what we have ourselves discovered, and finding our driving power not in the inspiration of a great spiritual heritage, but in the endowment of power given direct to our own souls by the Holy Spirit? The utmost resources of divine love are meant to be exerted on behalf of men. They must be mediated through men, and through the church in her corporate life. * * * We want to be seized with a new conviction of the possibilities of the life of faith. We need to enter into that life in a new and larger way. We need to go forth as men and women possessed by the Spirit, and with greater spiritual resources than we have ever known before."

The Religious Significance of the War

BY HENRY J. CADBURY

It is a striking fact that with all that has been written in the public press concerning the war in Europe so little has been said of its religious significance. Much has been said of its racial causes, and of its political and commercial results, but few writers have commented on its meaning for religion. The war is not of course a religious war, the opposing countries do not represent opposing creeds. Indeed the Triple Alliance has made strange bed-fellows religiously as well as politically. Even the Roman church is scarcely more on one side than the other, and the forces of Islam, if Turkey becomes involved, will be found fighting on both sides. This cannot become in any sense of the term a "holy war." Yet there can be no doubt that these days are "big with destiny" for the churches as well as the nations of Europe. Says a writer in Christian Work, "War in Europe will not do injury in any quarter to greater extent than it will to organized Christianity there."

In the first place, it is revealing the weakness of European Christianity. It shows how little there is in it of the spirit of Christ. Just as a man who leads a virtuous life but harbors secretly one besetting sin, when brought to the crisis fails and falls, so the so-called Christian civilization which has omitted from the gospel the spirit of peace, now in time of stress reveals its weakness. "Jesus Christ has nothing to do with a civilization that cannot keep the peace." This is not the bankruptcy of Christianity, nor even the bankruptcy of civilization, but it is a time of testing for a civilization that claims the name of Christ without adapting His principles to all the social and international relations of the modern age. And so it may be expected that the present war will disgust many persons with the Christianity of the Church. "What's the good of Christianity if it can't stop this sort of thing?" is the constant complaint. It is probable that churches that have been closely allied with defeated governments will share their unpopularity.

Many in despair of the church will crowd to the ranks of socialism. There will be need for devout Christian leaders who can show that Christianity is better and greater than the church, that it is more permanent than any institution of civilization, that socialism is not a religion. Out of the wreck of cathedrals and of ecclesiastical polities must be constructed a church suited to the day.

The war will deal even more severely with Christianity in the mission fields. It will not recommend European religion to the heathen. The withdrawal of financial support by the missionary boards of belligerent countries will be a serious menace to the progress of evangelization. The English members of the Edinburgh Conference Continuation Committee have most magnanimously urged their friends in England to take up the additional burden of maintaining stations formerly supported and manned by continental countries.

It is certain that over-ruling Providence will bring some permanent good out of this catastrophe. Never in modern times has there been greater need of a satisfying religion. In the confusion and chaos, in the overthrow of public and personal relations, in the misfortune and sorrow, every soul is brought so close home that it longs for a light to see by, a faith to live by, a hope to die by. And there can be no doubt that the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is a God who can supply all these needs. The greater the need, the greater is the opportunity of true religion to give men bread, not stones, true solace and living faith. Yet the church with its unholy alliance with militarism has been hampered and blinded. Strange as it may seem I believe no church has issued at this war crisis any official statement that could match in definite statesmanship, in confidence and hope, the message of the Society of Friends in England,—a church absolutely committed to the doctrine of peace.

There are already signs of a truer religious spirit.

Public opinion is more critical than ever before of the familiar appropriation of God's favor by emperor or czar. Even combatants recognize that both sides are praying to the same God, and the consideration makes them pause. And public opinion more than ever requires moral explanation for the war. The authorities on both sides are constrained to prove that they are not aggressive but defensive; that they aimed at peace, and that they deplore war. Surely such professions, no matter how insincere, are signs of the beginning of the end.

Above all this war will be of religious value as it succeeds in making permanent its lesson of peace. Never in history was there a war which was so universally deplored, never in history was there a time when men appreciated more keenly the blessings of peace. The American press was never more pacific in tone. At least one of the great nations of the modern world is standing outside the conflict and learning its lesson. May we learn it well enough for ourselves, for our children, and if possible, for other nations besides, that we may preach peace to those that are near and peace to those that are far off.

To many persons it may seem that this is the very Waterloo of peacemakers. They had expected much of international conferences and tribunals, of the influence of finance and socialism to prevent war. But these things did not prevent it. Something more than unofficial conferences and economic and political theories was required,—a widespread and convinced public opinion is necessary. If peace principles are to have force they must be held intensely and that means they must be a religion. And so the Christian Church has every reason now to preach and teach the gospel of peace on earth among men of good will. "Now," says Professor Steiner, "is the most auspicious moment to begin a holy war against war, and this is the one country in which may be forged the strongest weapon against it—a consciousness of our common likeness—a realization of our brotherhood."

And our warfare must be urgent and vigorous. There is an insidious danger lest Christian men adopt a passive fatalistic attitude. Already have been heard the voices of those who look upon the war as a divine necessity of the last days. Such persons say it is only God's business. He will slay the dragon Himself. And so these apocalyptic dreamers would stop all human endeavors. Millennial hopes always have this unfortunate effect. But peace requires effort and the beatitude still remains "Blessed are the peace makers."

Other good Christians seem to have abandoned the Christian task of peace making to the non-religious forces. They talk a lot about democracy and socialism and finance as the final victors over war. It is even suggested that war will kill itself if allowed to run its course. Such a hope is the last resort of despair; it is like leaving a mad man at large because one supposes he will ultimately commit suicide. Like slavery war can be blotted out by the dedicated efforts of men and women to the cause of peace, which is the cause of God Himself.

The Bertha Ballard Home

BY ANNA HIATT, SUPERINTENDENT

In these days, when there seems to be a universal movement toward Social Service, it may not be generally known that belonging to the Friends' Church, and within the limits of Western Yearly Meeting, there has long been an institution embodying the fundamentals of that much talked of subject. This institution was founded and was in active operation years before thought along these social lines was given so prominent a place in the minds of thinking people.

The same underlying revolution of ideas that is thrusting itself into shape in the great movements of the present day, was in the mind of Rose E. Brown, a Friend, and a member of Indianapolis Meeting, when she arose in Western Yearly Meeting in 1888, and told of the need of a Home for the girls who were coming to Indianapolis for employment or to fit themselves for self-support. She realized that the girl who came to the city for either of these purposes is homeless but for the bare walls of a boarding house.

She understood too, that existence in a cheerless rooming house, with its bareness of beauty and its lack of right companionship, is the logical start towards wrong living. She felt that prevention is better than rescue, and that a wall around the precipice is much better than a hospital at the foot of the hill.

She laid before the Yearly Meeting a plan which had been in her mind for years to establish a Home, such as she thought was needed. Western Yearly Meeting approved her plan, promised financial support and appointed a committee to take charge of the matter. A location was secured, and a home, called "The Friends' Boarding Home for Girls," was opened.

From this small beginning has grown the larger institution known as "The Bertha Ballard Home." The story of the inspiration of this larger Home is known to but few people except those who have been closely in touch with its management. Near thirty years ago, William Hadley Ballard, a resident of Indianapolis, and a Friend, was married to Addie Hodson, a charming Quaker girl, daughter of Jennie Hodson Pray, who still lives near Knightstown, Indiana. A daughter, named Bertha Esther Ballard, was born to them. When this young girl was nearing her teens, the mother died, leaving a small fortune to her child. The heartbroken father kept up his home for his little girl until two years after the mother's death, when she too, was taken.

While returning from the cemetery, after the burial of his child, he remarked to Albert J. Brown, then pastor of Indianapolis Meeting, that he believed he would take the money left by his wife to their daughter, and which had now reverted to him, and build a beautiful monument to his loved ones. Albert J. Brown suggested that if such a sum was to be put into a memorial, it should be put into something which would not only honor the dead, but help the living.

Mrs. Brown, having heard of this conversation, went at once to see Mr. Ballard, taking with her two friends who were interested in the same subject. They came away from this interview with the assurance that Mr. Ballard would give to the Friends' Church this beautiful memorial. She had for years been praying that God would put it into the heart of someone to give to the church this much needed building, and this magnificent gift came as a direct answer to her prayer.

The new building, which was to cost $40,000.00, was soon under way, and in July 1900 was ready to be occupied. It was furnished memorially, many friends giving sums sufficient for the furnishing of a room in memory of some loved one. It was incorporated, and turned over to the control of a Board of Directors appointed by Western Yearly Meeting. The location is ideal, situated as it is, at 411 North Delaware Street, within easy walking distance from the business section.

It is a beautiful cream brick structure with trimmings and porch of stone, and is three stories high. In it, sixty-five girls can be comfortably cared for. Many business girls living out of the Home, come in for meals, oftentimes filling the large dining room in which one hundred and twenty-five can be seated. These girls have every privilege, every convenience, and the affectionate interest of those in charge. A library and reading room, a piano, and large parlors with good pictures appeal to the artistic sense, while regular habits, and nourishing meals make for bodily comfort.

Certain regulations must be observed, but there are none that will in any way interfere with the happiness of the girls. In the large parlor, they may entertain their friends, and on all festival occasions there are gayeties such as are dear to the feminine heart. The Home is absolutely non-sectarian, receiving all creeds and all nationalities. A brief vesper service is held each evening in the parlor lasting ten minutes. While attendance upon this service is not required, the average attendance is good; many times the capacity of the parlor is taxed. This institution which stands as a loving memorial to the little girl whose name it bears, and which grew out of the sorrow of a good man's heart, has given joy to thousands of girls who have called it home.

Each year, when making her annual report to Western Yearly Meeting, the Superintendent gives some concrete illustrations of the good the Home is doing, by relating some of the stories of the girls who have come under the influence of the Home during the year. The stories of these two girls were told this year:

Early last spring there came to the door of the Bertha Ballard Home a little crippled girl, short of stature because of a hunch upon her back, with a sweet but homely face. She came to the city that she might learn sewing and dressmaking, thinking it would be easier upon her frail body and would bring better returns than the housework she had been trying to do, and for which she was receiving one dollar a week. Her parents were dead, and with the small amount of money obtained from the sale of a little property, she was trying to fit herself to be self-supporting. Her health had prevented her from going to school regularly, but she had picked up a general knowledge of affairs, which was sometimes surprising. As we watched her, and saw the difficulties under which she worked with no complaint, it was a lesson to those of us who are strong in body. She told very little of her home life, but it was very evident that The Bertha Ballard was infinitely better than anything to which she had been accustomed. In her innocent way, she told of her first impression of the Home: "I had never seen so beautiful a place before," she said, "and I shall never forget the first Sunday dinner. The beautiful dining room, the girls in their pretty bright summer clothes, the good dinner, so nicely served, it was all like Heaven to me, and I felt like a little brown wren amid the brightness of the place, but some day, when I have learned to sew, I will have pretty things like the other girls." She only recently left us for a nearby city, where she has friends who may be able to secure work for her.

During the last week of her stay, she drooped, and had little to say. She had two things to sadden her. She was ready to go out into the world to try to support herself, and was so handicapped; and she was leaving the place where she had been so happy and comfortable. Had she expressed the deepest wish of her heart, it would have been: "If I might only stay here always."

Another girl, whose life and work are interesting, has been in the Home a year. Left without a home in babyhood, because of the separation of her parents, she had lived with her grandparents until the death of her grandfather, when that home too was broken up, and she was compelled to do something to support herself. With no business training, she went to the telephone exchange for employment, and came to The Bertha Ballard for a home. After having worked until she became proficient, she said one day, "I don't want always to be just a telephone girl, I want to fit myself for something better, and I am going to be a night operator now, so that I can have time for study, and can take a business course."

Since that time she has gone to work at 10:00 p. m., working until 7:00 a. m. She comes home to her breakfast, sleeps until four in the afternoon, studies for two hours, and goes to night school three evenings in the week. While working under these conditions, which to most of us would be unbearable, she is happy, and seems not to dread the long winter nights when the world is asleep all about her, because she is looking forward to the time when she will be able to do something better.

Not many young girls would sacrifice both comfort and pleasure as does she. Only recently she said: "I think I will stay at The Bertha Ballard as long as you will let me, for it is the only home I have." There are other girls whose stories would be just as interesting, and to whom The Bertha Ballard has been a rare blessing. Is not such work as this Social Service of the highest type? Friends are very fortunate in having this wonderful opportunity, already organized and made possible by the generosity of our dear Friend, William Hadley Ballard.

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

Buried Talents or Talents in Napkins

BY MILO S. HINCKLE

Text: Matt. 25: 15-25.

Most of us are quite familiar with the details of the parable of the Talents, in which three servants, typical of the three great bodies of servants, viz.: those of small ability, those of medium, and those of large ability and capacity for service, are chosen to demonstrate the truth which the Master wished to teach. This parable should not be confused with that of the Pounds, in which men of varying abilities receive the same working capital and reach rewards commensurate with each one's capacity to occupy. In the parable before us, the gifts are commensurate with the ability and the rewards equal to the faithfulness of effort.

The love and justice of God are clearly revealed in the distribution of talents to His people. Not to three, nor seven, nor ten, nor a multitude of His chosen servants, has He given talents to occupy till He comes, but to all of us He has committed all the interests of His whole kingdom, and to each one personally He has given a place to work and a talent to use. "God is no respecter of persons"; not even the poorest or least capable has been slighted. Every Christian is a servant. Every Christian cannot do everything, but every Christian can do something, and the man of one talent will be called to account as surely as he of larger responsibilities.

Witness God's fairness in giving to every one "according to his several ability," and may we add that the gift is according to the ability TO USE and not to receive, for the least worthy is often able and willing to receive quite as much as the more capable. If all were given the same talent, the same service, the same responsibility, it would work hardship on the less capable. But God is good, and just and kind. In Romans 12 and I. Cor. 12 Paul mentions many of the gifts, talents, services, opportunities, that are bestowed upon us, for the use of which there will be a reckoning.

In consideration of the rewards for service, it is quite noticeable that they are not measured by that which was received in the beginning, but by the use of it. In Luke 12:48, we read, "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." In the reception of larger talent, there is a corresponding larger responsibility. There is too much a disposition to depreciate our ability; in some cases it doubtless is the expression of honest humility, in others merely an attempt to find an excuse for doing less than one's share. Many are wasting time wishing, saying, "If I only had his gift or her disposition, I would gladly do their work." No, we wouldn't. Very few, if any of us, are filling full the measure of our ability. He that is neglecting opportunities, failing to use his talent, whatever it may be, would not do more if his capacity were doubled. To wish honestly for greater talent is to pledge larger service. It is much nobler to improve what we have. The significant truth that so many seem to fail to see is that one talent will double as easily as two or five, and in the doubling will win as great a reward. The thing we need is not more talent, but (and the world needs the same thing) more faithful service, more honest effort.

Lastly, as to the USE and ABUSE of talents: The Master, the giver, has a perfect right to expect an increase over that bestowed, or loaned. All the servants in the parable knew well that the lord would return and demand a reckoning. They knew that it was his right to expect his own "with usury." It was not ignorance but indolence that brought sorrow to both servant and lord. No parable is more truly applicable to present conditions. All that we have, life, opportunity, means, property, advantage, equipment, ability, talent, we hold in stewardship for God, the Owner and Creator of all. "In stewardship it is required that a man be found faithful," and render an account. To neglect is just the same as to refuse to use. In religion or finance, the same interest accrues. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

One's right to a thing is determined by the effect of his holding on society. Many of the things we prize so highly are gifts from society, and society has a right to demand its own with usury. I am firmly convinced that no man has a moral right to any holding, whether in realty, citizenship, or what not, who does not make society better by his holding. Selfishness is the outstanding sin of the age. To hoard a possession and deny the wants of the needy is a crime against society. How one can hold great wealth in this day, when to lift the eyes in any direction is to see a world of want and sorrow and to hear the cry for help, is a problem that seems to puzzle divinity. "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" Not to put our talent, whatever it may be, to the best possible use or service, is to bury it or to wrap it in a napkin.

It is said of Cromwell that upon seeing twelve statues of the twelve Apostles, he said to an officer, "Take them down and send them about doing good." There were too many needy people in England to allow so much gold to be wrapped in needless statues. Much needed philanthropy is buried in needless monuments. Many missionaries are locked up in jewel-boxes and bank-vaults; singers, preachers, workers, buried beneath the cover of over-much business, society, rubbish. It is folly to wish for greater talents while those we have are unused.

Oh, the buried talents! And all to be accounted for! Better dig them up and use them before the Lord comes in judgment and reckoning. How comforting are these promises: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much"; "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Richmond, Indiana:

An Ideal Christian

BY E. HOWARD BROWN

(Extract of sermon preached at Western Yearly Meeting.)

In Ephesians 4 there is the picture of a full grown man, or to me, the ideal Christian. Read verses 11 to 16.

To many of us we think of a Christian as simply one converted. We ask the question, "Are you a Christian?" meaning have you been converted. Sometimes we ask further about sanctification, "Have you received the baptism of the Spirit?" We are largely inquiring about the experiences. We ask the man we meet, "Are you well?" He does not reply, "Oh, yes, I was born in 1865." In his reply he speaks of present health. By the Word of God we understand that we must all be born of God to be a Christian.

It takes experience as well as profession. Repentance and faith bring life. It is not the form of godliness, but the fact. But we cannot conclude that all the question has been settled by accepting Christ and being converted. We are urged to present our bodies as a living sacrifice, to dedicate our new life to God. We love Him; we desire to serve Him; we expect to make it our life business to serve the Lord.

So we consecrate, dedicate, yield our all to Him. It is a giving up of all, and an accepting of all. The altar sanctifies. We are cleansed and filled with the Spirit and rejoice in a new experience. But being saved and sanctified is not all of the Christian life. There now comes to us a vision. It may come with conversion; it may come with sanctification; it may come later in our walk with God. But we are awakened to the great fact that Jesus came to save the lost world, the whole wide world.

Church membership only is a very small thing. Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies may all be only drudgery to us unless we have the vision of a lost world to be saved and a salvation for the whole wide world.

We begin to see our part in it. The uplifting of Christ brings joy to our service. Service is no longer duty. We no longer serve from fear. We no longer drag and loiter in our service, but with love and zeal we delight to serve anywhere and with anyone for the great cause of our great Savior.

Now we find that the ideal Christian is a busy one; one who lives on the Word, walks with God constantly, steadily, faithfully and trustworthily. He is one who grows day by day, develops and matures in Christ's service. Such a one does not need renewing or reviving. Then as the dawn of Christian duty becomes plain, and we see how much the Lord has done for us, we begin to feel that an ideal Christian must support the cause of Christ. With money? Yes, as the Lord has prospered us. But we must also support the cause of Christ with our time. There must be time to go to church, time for Sunday School, time for service, time to serve, time to sing, to speak, to pray, to visit, to meet on committees.

All these are a part of the joy of living a Christian life. All this means loyalty to Christ, through sunshine and shadow, through joy and through sorrow, when we have friends and when we stand alone.

We must be loyal to the church, no matter who is pastor; loyal, no matter whether we are clerk or usher; loyal to the church on rainy days, cold days, when sermons are long or short; loyal when slighted, loyal always, loyal in our place, for the pastor is depending on us, and the Lord is counting on us; loyal to the prayer meeting when others fail; loyal when the interest seems to drag and others grow careless. Our loyalty may save the day.

We must be loyal in whatever department we are serving. The church is depending on us. If we fail we are not ideal Christians. This brings us to the house of God, the place of feeding, regularly, the place of service daily. We can now recognize that by the aid of the evangelist we were converted and perhaps sanctified. Through the teacher we have learned the truth and been indoctrinated. The pastor and others have helped us take up special lines of service, and we know and others know, that we are on the way to full grown men and women.

God's ideal is that every convert should become a full grown man in Christ. It is too bad that so many fail and go back before they ever know anything about the Christian life.

In conclusion then we believe the ideal Christian must:

1. Be converted.
2. Be sanctified.
3. Have a vision of world salvation.
4. Learn and love to serve.
5. Live and walk in the Light.
6. Become a supporter.
7. Be loyal.

The Westtown Letter

The Religious Life at Westtown

As the Westtown Letter for this month I present part of an article written last Spring for the Westonian, by George L. Jones, who is now beginning his fourth year as a teacher at Westtown. He has been here long enough to know of what he is writing, but not too long for a certain freshness of impression which gives special value to his opinions.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

This subject, The Religious Life at Westtown, shapes itself in my mind under three aspects: first, our religious life as an outsider might gather it observationally from a visit of a few days; second, the real underlying current of life, which one can gather and interpret only feebly at best; third our duty to the Society at large.

First, the external aspect, briefly summarized. Our imaginary visitor would, at the end of the week's stay among us, label us as a fairly religious community. He would have listened thrice daily to the reading of the Bible, followed by a longer or shorter period of silence, a silence almost invariably genuinely reverent. He might discover that a fair proportion of our boys and girls have a short period of devotion of their own. Twice a week he would find the whole school, in sections of fifteen or twenty, engaged in Bible study,—on Fifth-day in oral recitation of memorized selections; on First-day in regular Bible classes for study and discussion. On First and Fifth-days also he would attend our regular meetings for worship, and on First-day evenings the half-hour collections addressed, by prearrangement by some outside speaker or one of the officers of the school. He would discover two groups of boys, fifteen or more in each, meeting for mutual spiritual development. The officers of the school gather occasionally in devotional meetings of their own, which are open for concerns which any may have for our spiritual welfare. Several of our number are connected with various outside religious interests and movements, a fact which has a very definite reflex influence on the school at large. Thus would our visitor judge us,—a fairly religious community.

Second, a closer view. A longer and more intimate knowledge of our religious life does not weaken this judgment. Compared with many schools as to religious activities, we do not, it is admitted, exhibit much of the emotional and demonstrative. But beneath the undemonstrative exterior there is, as I see it, a life that is solid and substantial. That two hundred young people still under twenty years of age, should gather twice a week in our meeting-room, and, with few of the outward allurements to worship, should sit for an hour in reverence and quietness, not a quietness due to disciplinary compulsion but to a native sense of appreciation of the purpose of worship, indicates a pretty satisfactory basic conception, either inherited or acquired; and that there should envelop us at times a very sensible covering of Divine power, due in no little measure to a receptive and responsive attitude of soul on the part of the boys and girls themselves, shows a spiritual capability that is full of promise. One potent reason for this rather gratifying condition is that those who render service in our meetings do so almost invariably under weight of concern, felt by the speaker and recognized by the listeners; visiting ministers come to us because they have a message for Westtown; our teachers who speak do so out of a living concern for our spiritual growth; and we can easily believe that no pupil's voice is heard in our meetings except as a result of a long wrestling of spirit, out of which he is emerging with a very definite sense of a drawing to service.

In no spirit of boasting, then, but rather of gratitude, it can truthfully be said that our student body has a good intuitive conception of the measuring of the spiritual life, and a well-defined appreciation of the reality of the voice of God.

That there also is a strong spirit of mutual helpfulness among our students impresses me. A goodly number of our boys interest themselves in some younger pupil, or one who finds it hard to "fit in," or one who is going wrong. I have been surprised at the number of boys who come to various teachers with a concern for some other boy or with some proposition in mind which bears on the welfare of the school. The evidence of a genuine interest in one's fellows and of a conception of the spirit of Christ, working itself out, it may be unconsciously, in practical Christian service, is most gratifying.

I am not sure but that, in this connection, we suffer from isolation, and from a somewhat self-centered and self-contained life. There is, of course, ample opportunity for helpful service within the school; but so nearly do we constitute one large family that after all it savors of service spent by ourselves on ourselves. The broader, altruistic, self-sacrificing motive is not always in evidence. Young people are by nature hero worshipers; they admire the man who has "done things"; the lecturer who comes to us with a reputation of having accomplished some noteworthy achievement in the world is always sure of close attention. I am not sure, then, but that we should place greater emphasis on activity, encouraging outward expression of the inward life, idealizing those who, in self-sacrificing devotion to their Master, have accomplished and achieved.

GEORGE L. JONES.

(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

—Adv't.

Life is a daily worship, tremulous with reverence, beautiful with prayer and song, and fragrant with the incense-perfume of holy thoughts and good deeds. So do nature and providence lean down lovingly into the good man's life, mingling earth with heaven, linking it all with God, moving it all to the orderly music of his great purpose.—Selected.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

The ninety-fourth session of Indiana Yearly Meeting convened at Richmond, Indiana, September 22. In many respects it was considered one of the best yearly meetings held in recent years. The high water mark was reached on Friday afternoon at the session devoted to the interests of the Foreign Missionary Board when Bishop Oldham, of the M. E. Church, delivered the address.

This address was a comprehensive review of the status of foreign missions and a strong exposition of the spirit and methods by which missionary work should be carried on. Referring to the present European war, he paid an extraordinary tribute to the Society of Friends, which had always stood for a gospel without any taint of militarism upon it. There were other special features of interest during the week. The sessions on peace, on the report of Earlham College and the men's supper deserve special mention.

The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight convened at ten and two o'clock on the 21st. The afternoon session was devoted wholly to a consideration of the state of the church. A goodly number participated in the discussion and it was a session of unusual inspiration.

Fewer visiting ministers were present than usual. Among these were the following: Joseph John Mills, of California, General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting; Amos Kenworthy, of California; Zeno H. Doane, of Iowa; Hannah Hubbard, of Kansas; Robert Pelt, James M. Swander and E. James Carter, of Western Yearly Meeting; Evangeline Reams, of Ohio; Solomon R. Tice, of Mexico, and Jesse H. Hawkins, of Wilmington. Alfred C. Garrett, a well-known Friend of Philadelphia, and Josiah Binford, of Kansas, were also present.

The concern of Charles E. Tebbetts, wife and daughter, to make a trip around the world in the near future, visiting the various mission stations under the care of Friends, was brought before the meeting through the favorable action of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting. Much sympathy was expressed in the concern of these Friends, and the Clerk was instructed to prepare a proper minute liberating them for this service. It is not expected, however, that they will attempt the trip for the present and will await development of the European war.

The clerks of last year were re-elected, viz.: President Robert L. Kelly, Presiding Clerk; Winifred H. Milligan, Recording Clerk; Professor Edwin P. Trueblood and Edith J. Hunt, Reading Clerks, and Milo S. Hinckle, Announcing Clerk. The reading of the London

General Epistle evoked many expressions of appreciation, and the meeting was brought into deep sympathy with English Friends because of the trials which they are now undergoing on account of the war.

Commendatory references were made to the recent statement on the war situation issued by the London Yearly Meeting for Sufferings. Later in the session a statement was read concerning the organization of a relief committee among Friends in England to care for Germans, Austrians and Hungarians who are now innocent sufferers in the British Empire because of war. Attention was called to the fact that this action of English Friends was an example of Christian brotherhood which would not fail to make its impression upon other people. By action of the Yearly Meeting, THE AMERICAN FRIEND, which is receiving funds to help this committee, was directed to be the agency to receive funds for this purpose from members of Indiana Yearly Meeting. It was further stated during the Yearly Meeting that English Friends are now enlisting to relieve suffering on the battle fields of Europe. The Clerk was directed to send a special message to Isaac Sharp, Secretary of London Yearly Meeting, expressing the sympathy of Indiana Yearly Meeting in the situation in which English Friends find themselves.

On Tuesday afternoon the report of the new Efficiency Committee and Secretary was given. Special attention has been given during the past year by the Secretary, Ancil E. Ratliff, to the financial situation and a number of meetings have adopted the every-member canvass plan together with the use of the duplex envelope system. Some discussion arose as to the formation of the Efficiency Committee, but after consideration it was agreed that it should be made up from the Chairmen of seven standing committees of the Yearly Meeting, which include Evangelistic, Foreign Missions, Bible School, Christian Endeavor, Home Missions, Temperance and Peace. Ancil E. Ratliff was continued Efficiency Secretary the coming year.

The report on Indian affairs came on Wednesday morning, showing that the missionary work among the Indians is progressing satisfactorily. Some stations have been abandoned owing to the work of the government, but new stations have been built in other places. George N. Hartley pointed out the fact that there is a great call for young people to engage in mission work among the Indians. The report on Southland College was encouraging, and it was decided to purchase forty acres of land lying to the west of the college and to sell forty acres lying south of the college grounds. A memorial of Seth Stafford was read and kindly mention was made of a large number of others who have died during the past year.

The reports of the trustees of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League and of the Temperance Committee of the Yearly Meeting were given on Wednesday afternoon. Special emphasis was laid upon the importance of voting for the proposed constitutional convention at the November election in Indiana as an aid to the prohibition movement in the state. Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, President of the Indiana W. C. T. U., gave an excellent address along practical lines. The meeting gave its endorsement unanimously to the principle of prohibition, local, state and national, and the clerks were directed to furnish this information to the legislators in congress and other officials. A resolution was adopted protesting against an increase in taxation upon liquors on the ground that the government should not derive its revenue from such a traffic.

An interesting report of the Home Mission Committee showed a good degree of interest in this subject and profitable addresses were made by Murray S. Kenworthy and Robert E. Pretlow.

The state of society was given a full session on Thursday morning. Joseph John Mills and others participated in the discussion. Special emphasis was laid on the need of maintaining the country meetings, which means not only the betterment of the communities, but the teaching and training of the future ministers of the church. Dr. Mills announced that in three of the largest yearly meetings the average salary of Friends pastors is $430.00 a year. Church attendance and family devotion were reported on the increase in a number of Quarterly Meetings, although others reported a decrease. Considerable emphasis was laid upon the value of prayer. The total membership of the Yearly Meeting was reported to be 21,081, a gain of 777 over last year.

The report of the Peace Committee on Thursday afternoon was followed by addresses by William C. Dennis of Washington City, and William Dudley Foulke, of Richmond, Indiana, who had just returned from Europe. Mr. Dennis analyzed the causes of the present European conflict, and closed by saying that in the end the nations of the earth must be organized on a basis of humanities rather than on a false and self-destroying patriotism. Both speakers emphasized the fact that if the European nations had not had their standing armies the war would probably have not occurred. The meeting adopted strong resolutions declaring its policy and endorsing the course of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan.

The men's supper at the South Eighth Street Meeting House on Thursday evening was one of the features of Yearly Meeting week. About one hundred and thirty men gathered around the supper tables, following which addresses were given by Joseph John Mills, President Robert L. Kelly, Zeno H. Doane and Professor Elbert Russell. The latter suggested that Indiana Yearly Meeting should set its goal for three thousand new members the coming year. This proposition was heartily and unanimously endorsed, following which the proposition to hold a Men's Conference of all the Yearly Meetings in the near future was given endorsement. Later the Yearly Meeting gave its endorsement to the proposition. A number of the men participated in the discussion.

The report of the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board was given on Friday morning. Strong expressions of confidence in the work of Ira C. Johnson, the retiring superintendent, were given and the meeting by unanimous vote voiced its approval of his work and its well wishes for the future. The report showed that there are one hundred and forty-two congregations in Indiana Yearly Meeting with seventy-five pastors. At a subsequent session Truman C. Kenworthy was elected General Superintendent for the coming year.

The report of the Foreign Missionary Board was given at the afternoon session together with the report of the American Friends' Board. About $10,000 had been spent for missionary work during the past year. Charles E. Tebbetts gave a brief impressive address, and was followed by Bishop Oldham of the M. E. Church, who gave one of the strongest addresses during Yearly Meeting week.

The Bible School Board made its report at the session on Friday evening. Sixteen front line Bible Schools were reported to the Yearly Meeting and certificates were granted each of these. An inspiring address was given by Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia.

The Saturday morning session was devoted largely to miscellaneous and routine business. The report of the trustees and the treasurer was read while a number of other committees made their reports. The afternoon was devoted to educational purposes. A report of Fairmount Academy was followed by the report of Earlham College. Earlham is now given a high rating in the educational world. It was reported that it is one of five colleges in the United States that has made conspicuous progress in the last few years. Approximately $250,000 has been given to Earlham within the last five years and mention was made of subsequent increases in the endowment fund during the past year. The present freshman class is the largest in the history of the college. On account of advancing years Timothy Nicholson voluntarily resigned from the Board of Trustees and the meeting by a rising vote expressed its appreciation of his forty-nine years of service in that position. Benjamin Johnson was re-elected Trustee, and John E. Parker was elected to succeed Timothy Nicholson.

Saturday evening was devoted to the work of the Christian Endeavor Union. Paul Brown was elected President for the coming year, and E. E. Davis, a local pastor in the city, gave an instructive address. A meeting in the interest of Young Friends' Activities was held on Wednesday evening with Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of Young People's work, in charge. A profitable address was given by Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia.

Sunday was the closing day of the Yearly Meeting and brought a large attendance, especially in the afternoon. Joseph John Mills and Elbert Russell preached in the morning, and Zeno H. Doane and Leanah Hobson in the afternoon. A children's meeting was held in the south room at two o'clock in charge of Alice Woodard Hunt. Several speakers addressed the crowds at different stands on the grounds during the day. President Robert L. Kelly preached the closing sermon at night, in which he set forth something of the history, the work and future prospects of the Society of Friends.

ERRATUM

In the issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND of October 1st, on page 635, middle of third column, in the account of Western Yearly Meeting, the name of Mary Miars Harold as Treasurer of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, should have been Ella S. Harold. Her address is 1703 College Avenue, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The Christian Endeavor Union and the Young Friends Association of North Carolina Yearly Meeting have decided to unite the work of these two organizations under one head. Fred E. Smith of Greensboro has been chosen president.

NEWS NOTES

Plans are well in hand for a Yearly Meeting wide special effort in the lines of evangelism and mission work in California.

The meeting at Indianola, Iowa, is holding a three weeks' revival service under the able leadership of Elgie McCarger.

A new Christian Endeavor Society was organized in August at Casa Grande, Arizona, with Jesse White as president.

Word comes to us from Pasadena, California, that the temperance campaign in that state looks encouraging for a dry victory.

Whittier College in California has opened with a better prospect than ever before. The gain in enrollment is more than twenty per cent. and the quality is equally good.

We learn from the Pacific Friend that Rebecca H. Smiley died on August 21st at the Glendale Sanitarium, Los Angeles, California. The body was shipped to Poughkeepsie, New York, for interment.

The pastors of California Yearly Meeting were recently entertained at a chicken dinner at the home of Wallace Gill and wife of Bell, California. The day was one of profit and real Christian fellowship.

Encouraging reports have been received from Wilson and Lucy Cox, Martha Hunnicut and Elizabeth Stratton and Milton and Margaret White, who have been recent recruits from California to the mission field in Alaska.

Deep River Quarterly Meeting was held at Springfield, North Carolina, on September 5th. Following a discussion on the subject, the meeting endorsed the recommendation of the Yearly Meeting relative to the adoption of a pastoral system in the various Monthly Meetings.

The Pacific Friend prints an interesting letter from Arthur Chilson under date of August 13th. The party spent some days in Palestine and visited the mission at Ram Allah. They attended the Sabbath morning services and Arthur Chilson and Jefferson Ford both gave short messages.

In answer to the query of Raynor W. Kelsey in a recent issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, M. C. Wilson of Dublin, Indiana, writes as follows: "It was my privilege to be acquainted with Caleb Wickersham and Jonathan Wright, members of the first committee on Indian affairs appointed by Indiana Yearly Meeting."

It is reported that since the returning of Edward Kelsey to the Ram Allah mission, the work on the new building for the boys' school has been going steadily on. The building is splendid and the pride of all the people in Ram Allah. It is going to be as a light on a hill to uplift and educate the future men of Syria. The dedication was to have occurred on October 2.

A communication from Salem, Indiana, announces that Mary E. Chapman, who has served Blue River meeting as pastor for three years will go to her home at Bloomingdale, Indiana. The letter states that the members fully appreciate the great good she has done during her pastorate. It is felt that the meeting has been greatly benefited by her labors. Her gospel messages have been sound in doctrine and spiritual.

A movement is on foot in California, in which Friends are generally interested, to secure the exemption of college property from taxation, under the referendum law. A vote will be had this fall on this proposition which is number 43 on the ballot on the series of articles to be voted upon. Every state in the union except California is said to exempt college property from taxation. Friends and patrons of Whittier College are greatly interested in the success of the proposition. It is hoped that all Friends will give this article their support in November.

The Bible School Committee of Whittier Monthly Meeting, California, gave a banquet recently in the society rooms of the church to the Bible School teachers and other workers. The attendance was about one hundred, and the occasion was one of great interest and pleasure to those attending. Milo Hunt, Superintendent, presided, while President Thomas E. Newlin of Whittier College, was toastmaster. Various toasts were responded to by Miss Retta Cook, Mrs. Leonard B. Sharpless, Mrs. Louis Williams and Robert Hamilton. Dr. M. V. Coffin, superintendent of the junior work, reported that there are eight classes in the department, five for boys and three for girls, with an enrollment of eighty. Brief remarks were made by the pastor, H. C. McGrew.

Sunday, September 27th, was the Bible School rally day for the Friends at Indianola, Iowa. This day was a fitting climax to one year's work. The attendance in the Bible School has been doubled, being increased from fifty or sixty to one hundred and thirty and, sometimes one hundred and fifty. The standard for rally day was two hundred and it was a glad surprise to find that two hundred and forty were present. A splendid program was rendered by the children, followed by a short talk upon "The Advantage of Teaching Young Children to Speak in Public," by Charles Moore. The class of high school boys, under the supervision of J. O. Eno and their teacher, Charles Clark, built a lighthouse of two hundred bricks from which was flashed a light over the church. Each boy had brought a brick and as the last one was put in its place there was great enthusiasm. This was the day for the school to receive their gold pins. Twenty-two were given out, which means that that number of students have been neither tardy or absent for one year.

PERSONAL MENTION

H. Elmer Pemberton is serving the South Salem Meeting, at Salem, Oregon, as pastor.

Asa E. Woodard entered upon his new pastorate at Russiaville, Indiana, on September 27th.

J. Robert Parker of Graham, North Carolina, recently conducted a series of meetings at Edward's Hall, North Carolina.

Marjorie Baker is conducting a very successful kindergarten in the new bungalow of the First Friends' Church at Pasadena, California.

John Henry and Miriam Douglas were able to attend services on "All the Family at Church" day at Whittier, California, on September 13th.

Lenora N. Hobbs, of Bloomingdale, Indiana, Treasurer of the Home Mission Council of Friends in America, has been made corresponding secretary of this organization.

Absalom Rosenberger, pastor of the meeting at Los Angeles, California, delivered an address on "The Better Education for the Minister" before the Pastors' Association of California Yearly Meeting at Bell, California, on September 15th.

Willis Beede of Casa Grande, Arizona, has entered the Kennedy school of missions at Hartford, Connecticut, for a year's work. He expects to enter the mission field.

Martilia and Mary Cox have accepted a call to the pastorate at Hadley, Indiana. They will also engage in some evangelistic work during the year. Martilia Cox has charge of the work of the Purity Department of Western Yearly Meeting.

George H. Moore entered upon his service as pastor at Bloomingdale, Indiana, on September 27th. Enos Harvey, the retiring pastor, has resigned to accept the superintendency of the Evangelistic Department of Western Yearly Meeting.

Earl J. Harold and wife, of Greensboro, North Carolina, who spent the greater part of the summer at Richmond, Indiana, where Earl Harold underwent a serious operation, have returned to their home in Greensboro. Mr. Harold is Secretary of the Federation of Churches in that city.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting was held at Richmond, Indiana, on Thursday of last week. Eleven of the members were present and a large amount of business was transacted.

Considerable attention was given to the proposition of holding a Conference for the men Friends of America. After a lengthy discussion the Committee approved the idea of holding such a Conference, but decided to create a Promoting Committee which shall itself pass judgment upon the propriety of holding such a Conference. If the proposition is approved, the Committee is given power to act and will then proceed to set a time and place, and make all arrangements for the holding of such a conference.

The Committee is as follows: S. Edgar Nicholson, Chairman, Robert L. Kelly, E. Gurney Hill and Folger P. Wilson, all of Richmond, Indiana; Ancil Ratliff, Fairmount, Indiana; Evan H. Ferree, Marion, Indiana; Morton C. Pearson and Willard O. Trueblood, Indianapolis, Indiana; Edward M. Woodward, Montezuma, Indiana; Murray S. Barker, Thorntown, Indiana; M. J. Farquar and Albert J. Brown, Wilmington, Ohio; Isaac T. Johnson, Urbana, Ohio; Joseph John Mills, Pasadena, California; Dr. W. V. Coffin, Whittier, California; Charles O. Whiteley, Newberg, Oregon; Frank A. Elliott, Portland, Oregon; Seth K. Gifford, Providence, Rhode Island; Charles M. Woodman, Portland, Maine; Paul J. Furnas, New York City; Albert G. Shepard, Glens Falls, New York; John R. Cary, Baltimore; J. Elwood Cox, High Point, North Carolina; Earl J. Harold, Greensboro, North Carolina; A. S. Rogers, Toronto, Canada; Arthur Dorland, Wellington, Canada; David M. Edwards and I. W. Cook, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Claude Stanley, Wichita, Kansas; Francis Wright, Jr., Kansas City, Missouri; George D. Weeks, Denver, Colorado, and Theodore Foxworthy, Plainview, Nebraska. Isaac Sharpless, Haverford, Pennsylvania, and Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, together with J. Walter Malone, Jr., Cleveland, Ohio, and Ralph J. Coppock, Damascus, Ohio, representing Yearly Meetings not in the Five Years Meeting, will be asked to accept places on the committee.

The committee appointed a year ago to look after the needs of aged and disabled ministers, reported that it is now ready to receive funds by bequest and direct contributions and that public announcement of the same will be made in the near future.

Robert L. Kelly, reporting for the Educational Board in reference to the proposition to make some arrangements with the management of Hartford Theological Seminary for graduate biblical instruction, reported that the Board had no definite recommendation in this direction. Joseph John Mills, the General Secretary, made a most interesting report of his work during the past year. He has attended six Yearly Meetings and has collected a vast amount of information which will be valuable as a survey of conditions among Friends in America. He was re-elected as General Secretary for the coming year.

Reports were had from most of the Boards which indicated commendatory progress, and considerable routine business was transacted.

There were meetings of the Executive Committees of the Social Service Board and of the Evangelistic Board on Wednesday. The Foreign Missionary Board held busy sessions on Friday afternoon and evening and all day Saturday.

CORRESPONDENCE

SPICELAND, IND., Sept. 20, 1914.

Editor American Friend:

In the last issue of THE AMERICAN

FRIEND, Raynor W. Kelsey raises the question whether anyone in Indiana Yearly Meeting remembers any of a certain committee on Indian Affairs, appointed at the first session of Indiana Yearly Meeting, held in 1821. I am writing to say that two sons of Caleb Wickersham, Jethro Wickersham of Spiceland, and David Wickersham of New Castle, are still living; the former 91 and the latter 89 years old. Several grandchildren are still living also. W. B. Wickersham, so long connected with the Chicago Public Library, was a grandson. Caleb Wickersham lived to be nearly 93 years old and died in 1872.

American Friend:

I want to commend your articles on the Unity of Friends, especially that in the issue of September 10. Unpalatable as it is, I believe it to be the exact truth. Now that the case has been diagnosed, it is to be hoped that the patient will submit to the necessary operation that can alone result in ultimate recovery.

O. C. EMERY.

Never Questioned

Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure and wholesome. It is made from highly refined, pure, cream of tartar, an ingredient of grapes. Not an atom of unwholesomeness goes into it; not an unwholesome influence comes from it. It perfectly leavens the food, makes it finer in appearance, more delicious to the taste, more healthful.

Its superiority in all the qualities that make the perfect baking powder is never questioned.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

October 18

Subject—In the Garden of Gethsemane.

Lesson—Mark 14: 32-42.

Golden Text—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

Place—Outside of Jerusalem, Mount of Olives.

Time—After midnight, morning of April 7, the day of the Crucifixion.

The supper had ended and Jesus and the disciples had gone out into the night beyond the city walls.

Jesus says with plain directness that all of them before the day is over will be scattered and distracted by occurrences which they will not understand.

Impulsive Peter renews his allegiance, but even he will be so confused that he will deny his Master thrice before daylight.

Who of us can imagine the darkness of that hour, when the whole fabric of their hopes was tumbling down? Like sheep afraid, the disciples were about to scatter.

But even they could not keep awake while the Master goes apart to agonize and to pray that the cup might pass from Him. Oh, the awfulness and the sacredness of that hour! But with what resignation Jesus utters, "not what I will, but what thou wilt!" How He throws Himself upon the Father in this hour of supreme suffering!

Note the custom of Jesus to pray before any time of crisis in His life. Jesus had reached a point where no one could share His agony, not merely the agony of facing physical death, but the agony of the weight of the world's sin upon Him, but it would have helped to have known that the disciples understood Him and were agonizing in prayer with Him.

The golden text should be our motto, lest we crucify our Lord afresh. Lincoln said, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

October 18

Topic—A Saloonless Nation. Why Not? How? Hab. 2: 1-14.

It needs little argument to convince Christian Endeavorers that the liquor traffic is wrong, judged from any standpoint, and that it ought to be abolished.

Physicians have denounced alcohol, labor is largely against it, business and commerce are increasingly antagonistic, religion has put its ban upon it, and new statesmanship is beginning to hurl its anathemas.

But for its protection under our systems of politics, the liquor traffic would have died long ago.

The how of the problem is more complex. Primarily we must continue to educate, and above all we should cultivate the spirit of getting together. The traffic cannot be destroyed by warring factions.

Christian Endeavorers can help to educate; they can make sentiment; they can distribute literature; they can participate in citizens' organizations that are at war with the saloon; they can cultivate the spirit of fraternity between enemies of alcohol; they can do personal work with their fellows; they can vote ever and always for candidates who stand for a sober nation.

FIRST CHURCH, INDIANAPOLIS

At our request, H. W. Carey, Superintendent of the Bible School of First Church at Indianapolis, has submitted the following interesting statements:

Our Bible School Committee and teachers have met and organized for the coming year as follows:

For Rally Day on October 4th we have a committee, and we are sending special postal cards to all the membership and those who are allied or friendly to us. Besides these Mr. Trueblood and the pastoral committee has sent out an equal number of letters giving an outline of the purposes of the church for the coming winter in all its departments, Delitha Harvey Missionary Circle, Quaker Round Table, Boys' Club, Gymnasium class, etc.

On last Sunday we had two hundred and eleven at Sunday School, and I will write you the number for Rally Day. We appointed Ella Barrett to confer with the Superintendents of all the Bible Schools in our Quarterly Meeting and if possible arrange a joint picnic and field day for all our Sunday Schools. She is meeting with encouragement.

Fermor S. Cannon has been appointed to arrange for our Christmas entertainment with power to appoint his assistants and his own program.

Mrs. Edwin A. Hunt has donated $95.00 worth of gymnasium supplies, such as indian clubs, wands, dumb bells, etc., to the church; Edgar Reitsel is chairman of a committee to organize boys' classes, and Anna Evans, chairman of a committee to organize girls' classes to meet weekly. The boys' club added $20.00 worth of supplies.

The Choral Society is organizing for the coming year with about twenty-four members. Jessie D. Lewis is chorister. The Quaker Round Table has organized for the coming year, and the subject for study will be the life of William Penn and other early Quaker pioneers of the church. The Delitha Harvey Circle held its first fall meeting at the home of Linton A. Cox, with a splendid program and large attendance. The Ladies' Aid Society held a meeting and luncheon at the church Tuesday, September 29th, with a large attendance.

MARLBOROUGH MEETING, NEW YORK

Marlborough Monthly Meeting was held at Clintondale, New York, August 29th. There was a large attendance, the four meetings, Tillson, Milton, Plattekill and Clintondale, being well represented. The local congregation was glad to welcome again their pastor, John D. Piper, after an absence of three weeks.

George Jones and wife of Westtown, Pennsylvania, were with us. His ministry with others added to the interest and profit of the meeting. Death has recently entered our midst and taken Sarah H. Heaton. She will be greatly missed. Edward Ransome, who for three years has served the meeting at Plattekill as pastor, has accepted a charge at Monkton Ridge, Vermont.

Married

Presnall-Ridgway—At the east side Friends' Church, Tacoma, Washington, September 20, 1914, at the morning service according to the custom of Friends, Lindley M. Presnall to A. Jennie Ridgway, of Berkeley, California. They will be at home at Seattle.

Swindell-Chandler—At the home of the bride's parents near Dunreith, Indiana, September 10, 1914, Daniel Swindell and Ethel May Chandler.

Born

Mills—On September 20, 1914, to Leland S. and Elizabeth Lucretia Mills, a son, L. Kenneth.

Moody—On September 22, 1914, to Chester A. and Mabel Cartland Moody, of Poughkeepsie, New York, a daughter, Winifred Cartland.

Died

Bogue—Rebecca Bogue, wife of Eli Bogue, died at her home in Bloomingdale, Indiana, September 18, 1914, aged sixty-six years. She was a loyal member of the Friends' Church. She leaves a husband, two daughters and four sons. The funeral services were held on the morning of the 21st, Enos Harvey officiating.

Greenfield—Rachel Greenfield, daughter of Harrison and Jemima Gray, was born near Gilmore, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, in 1850, and died September 9, 1914, aged sixty-four years. She was married to Miller Greenfield in 1871. At the age of nine years she was converted and joined the Methodist Church. After her marriage, she, with her husband, united with Friends at Guernsey, Ohio. She was a zealous worker for the ministry, having marked talent in song, prayer and exhortation. She was an elder for many years.

Ianson—Sarah R. Ianson, widow of the late Dr. William Ianson, and eldest daughter of the late Samuel Rogers, died at her residence, 3 May Square, Rosedale, Toronto, Canada, September 3, 1914.

Perry—William Henry Perry, son of Restore and Nancy Perry, was born in Perquimans County, North Carolina, February 24, 1847, and died at the home of his brother near Des Moines, New Mexico, July 21, 1914. He was converted when a young man and was recorded a minister a few years later. He remained a faithful servant of the ministry as far as his health would permit, doing religious work in Kansas, Iowa and North Carolina Yearly Meetings. He leaves three brothers and two sisters.

Lindsey—Mary Patrick Lindsey, oldest daughter of Martin and Ruth Patrick, was born near Cayuga, Indiana, April 9, 1834, and died at her home August 29, 1914, aged 80 years 4 months and 20 days. She was married to Jones Lindsey in 1852. She was converted in 1892 and united with the Friends' Church to which she remained true and faithful. As the result of her activities and the help which she and others rendered financially, a meeting house was erected and named Lindsey Chapel in her honor. She was noted for her liberality and gave largely and freely to all benevolent purposes, and responded regularly to the needs of the church. She was a woman of strong Christian character and was always ready to testify for her Master. She is survived by four daughters, two sisters, one brother, ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Lindsey Chapel conducted by J. D. Newlin of Ridge Farm, Illinois, assisted by Samuel Talbert of Russiaville and Noah Dixon of Cayuga.

Wilson—Timothy Wilson, of Richmond, Indiana, was born in eastern North Carolina, June 20, 1832, and died at Indianapolis, Indiana, June 25, 1914, aged 82 years and 5 months. He spent his young manhood at Spiceland, Dublin and Dunreith, Indiana, and for many years was a very successful principal of Friends' academy at Spiceland. On removing to Richmond about 1888 he entered the services of Benjamin Johnson and son, with whom he remained over twenty-two years. He was twice married; to Elizabeth Ann Terrell in 1852, and after her death to Elmina Foster Coffin, who survives him. He was a staunch Friend from early years and for many years an elder and an effective Bible School teacher. He was a man of superior ability. He leaves a son, Terrill Wilson, of Pasadena, California, and a daughter, Olive B. Newlin, of Whittier, California.

The Recessional

BY RUDYARD KIPLING

God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine,
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thy ancient sacrifice,
A humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

Far called, our navies melt away,
O'er dune and headland sinks the fire;
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

If drunk with sight of power, we lose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
Such boastings as the Gentiles use—
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard,
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding, calls not Thee to guard,
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord! Amen.

The Homiletic Review

A very readable and illuminating article on "The Future of Turkish Arabia," by Dr. Samuel Marinus Zwemer of Cairo, Egypt, is the first of a number of able and well selected articles for students and preachers in the October number of The Homiletic Review. There is a suggestion for the times through which we are passing in Dr. Thomas Arthur Smoot's article on "Jesus and His Philosophy of Love." He points out that "The efficacy of love to meet every possible social, economic and political condition is clearly indicated by the claims of Jesus." ## The Danger Was Imminent Attention is being called to the declaration quoted below from Dr. John R. Mott's address delivered last spring in Toronto. He was speaking on "An Unprecedented World Situation," and in the words quoted was a truer prophet than he or any other person imagined him to be at the time. He said: "Not only is this age unprecedented in opportunity, but also in danger. We are living in the most dangerous time in the history of the world. This is due to the shrinkage of the world through greatly improved means of communication, which has piled the races in upon one another, and they are acting and reacting on one another with startling directness, power and virulence."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Abstinence in the Army

It has been announced that the Czar of Russia has put a stop to the sale of liquor to the soldiers in the field and this has been followed by stopping the sale throughout the empire. One of the first acts of the Russians in East Prussia was to close the drinking places. Lord Kitchener has forbidden the forwarding of liquor to the British army, while no alcohol is included in the French scheme of rations. Nothing could more surely establish the character of alcohol than this situation in Europe.

A Paraphrase

BY GEORGE B. CLASS, LL.M.

"There's so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,"
That it best becomes the best of us
To praise the best in the worst of us,
And ill becomes the worst of us
To mock at the faults in the best of us.
Then let the best and the worst of us
Extol the good in the both of us,
And hide the fault in the lot of us. —Ex.

New Sunday School Course

The late Convention of the International Sunday School Association held in Chicago has stimulated The Moody Bible Institute in projecting a new course for Sunday School workers, covering every phase of the pupil, the teacher, and the school as well as the organization of towns, counties and states for the development of better methods for Sunday School work. This course is in addition to those already offered in the Bible, Music and Practical Methods of Work, and like them is entirely without cost to those wishing to avail themselves of it.

Full information and a prospectus will be sent free on application to The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, 153-163 Institute Place.

A Call to Arms!

BY FRANCINE J. STANLEY

The slogan of our opponents is "In times of peace prepare for war." Shall we not have the slogan "In times of war prepare for peace." There is need for volunteers in the "War against war." Let him that hath clean hands and a pure heart offer himself. The King of Kings goeth forth to fight against that great Beast. Only the bravest and strongest can be accepted as soldiers. Our Leader wants only men who are brave enough to give Him instant obedience and who have proven themselves strong by mastering their own spirits. He can use no soldier "too cowardly to fight error, and too timid to embrace truth." God could use only three hundred men out of Gideon's army; twenty-two thousand were rejected. He who considers joining our army, let him up and sanctify himself. Let there be no citadel in his own heart untaken for Christ our King. Particular emphasis should be felt that property be held and used for God and not for self; then only can Matthew 5: 38-48 be interpreted literally. God has no use for the soldier in the war against war who has not taken this stronghold of the enemy in his own heart.

The Kaiser of Germany is storming and taking the greatest strongholds in the world, so we for Christ, can take the greatest strongholds of the soul. Greater is He that is for us than He that is against us.

Is your optimism dead? Then let it be reborn. Though the present be confusion there may be caught a tiny glimpse of the reign of peace, which is as certainly coming as God is true. "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Our Mission Is Not Yet Ended

The Christian religion is predicated primarily upon the supreme doctrine of brotherhood. It recognizes humanity as a social organism and that the interdependence of every part makes every man his brother's keeper. No man liveth to himself.

Fellowship has no place for the doctrine of strife. The fullest meaning of the parable of the good Samaritan will not have been sensed until the world recognizes that the application of the same principle of love and fraternal solicitude to the robbers themselves, had they been found, would have made the recorded act of mercy to the victim unnecessary. True Christianity not only has an alleviating hand for the succor of the unfortunate sufferer, but it has a cure for the wickedness that is the primal cause of the suffering. Until the Christian religion is able to adjust itself to the world in this relationship, it will have failed of its highest mission.

Too long has religion been withheld as the curative of the causes of all tyranny and oppression, while content in the main to apply itself to the care of those who have been bruised by the heavy hand of wrong. Generally speaking the church has ever been ready to pour out its soul in mercy for the help of the wounded and dying on the field of battle, while strangely silent and indifferent about the problems, which, if solved in the same spirit of sympathetic brotherhood, would have rendered the war itself impossible. Christ's church itself will be put in jeopardy if it does not apply itself to the greater task of curing the wickedness of the world according to the fundamental doctrines of Him who is declared to be the Prince of Peace.

For these principles and primal doctrines the Society of Friends has ever stood, and there are grounds for the belief that the effect of their teachings in this direction has not been wasted. Unquestionably the trend of the Christian church as a body is in this direction. But the world will not be satisfied henceforth with glittering generalities. Humanity cannot be saved by the passing of resolutions. The religion of the heart and life must take the place of the formal and ritualistic. The world is waiting for the genuine incorporation of the Christian faith and belief into the every-day life of humanity, until every problem will feel the quickening of the divine truth. The church must be preparing itself to speak as the oracle of Jehovah in the expression of His will to man and in the manifestation of His purposes to save the whole of humanity in its multiplex relationships as it has never spoken before, and the Society of Friends with its uncorrupted message of a gospel, upon which there is no taint of unholy strife that would mar the doctrine of human brotherhood, must necessarily play an important part in this reconstruction of the purposes and mission of our Christian civilization.

It must be confessed, however, that the prospect of a speedy realization of these ideals is not altogether reassuring. At a time when the international mind has seemed ready to turn from the unspeakable carnage in Europe to the doctrines of universal brotherhood as presaging a reign of universal peace, and when the voice of the church seemed about to be lifted in unison against the wickedness of war and in behalf of a constructive basis for the perpetual pacification of the world, we find already some strangely distressing discordant notes in high religious circles, apologetic for war and defending the principle of war.

The press reports a St. Louis bishop declaring on the day set apart for national prayer in behalf of peace that war itself is not wicked, although deplorable and horrifying. And now we find from a more unexpected source a generally splendid religious journal expressing itself editorially under the title, "The Righteous Soldier," as follows:

In particular, when truth and right and fidelity and honor are embodied in a great national cause, Christianity may lift for their vindication an arm of might in the fear of God, not merely without blame but with the highest sanction of a dutiful religion. This is war not for self, but in sacrifice of self—war for the protection of those ultimate foundations of right on which the welfare of all humanity must rest. So it is war that unselfishness sanctifies.

While denouncing war for selfish gain, or for racial self-preservation, or for any purpose wherein selfishness plays a commanding part, this journal again declares: "But resistance to such a spirit—blows struck to break down, in the name of humanity and God, such presumption and arrogance—constitute a holy crusade." The article concludes by saying that war must cease.

But war must not cease through the paralysis of men's courage in a craven spirit that dares not crush the head of the bloody and deceitful man lifting his hand against the well being of humanity. War instead shall cease at last when deceit and tyranny and the towering vanities of puffed-up lust for power have been trampled down forever, and a pacified world has come to wish and choose a life where each conforms his own deed and purpose to the welfare of all.

But can deceit and tyranny and lust for power be stamped out by war? Will they not be fostered while the war god stalks the earth? Can these iniquities be conquered except through the love of the conquering Christ? By what right shall Christianity take the sword to avenge wrong and establish the principles of peace, and at the same time rebuke the Mohammedan for entering upon his horrifying holy war with equal sincerity and conscientious devotion to his faith? The religion that must establish itself by bloody war, even in the name of human rights, can make no appeal to suffering humanity on the basis of brotherhood and the family relationship of a common Father.

Apparently the mission of the Society of Friends has not yet ended. Our future civilization will need the impress of its doctrine and the purity of its message. The ideals of world pacification, based upon the teaching that not only is all war wrong, but that there is a better way for the solution of all international differences, must still be kept to the fore. The old order of the armed truce of the nations must yield to the democracy of human brotherhood, wherein an International Court of Arbitral Justice renders its decisions upon the basis of humanitarian principles and the universal rights of man.

English Friends have spoken in a document that within two months has been read around the world. Shall American Friends be tardy in a pronouncement that will command the attention of all civilization and that will raise a standard about which the pacifists of America and the neutral nations may rally in a mighty effort for world-wide and permanent peace?

The Right Relation of the Individual to the Collective Conscience

BY FRANCIS A. WRIGHT, SR.

(A paper read before the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight of Hesper Quarterly Meeting, Kansas.)

Conscience is defined by Webster as "The faculty, power or principle which decides on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of our actions and affections, and approves or condemns them." It might also be described as a restraining or impelling force—when Paul said "Brethren, I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day" (Acts 23: 1). We understand him to mean that he has in sincerity done that which he believed to be God's will throughout his life. This, then, we may use as an illustration of the individual conscience.

But conscience is not an infallible guide. It is, in part at least, the result of habit and training. Paul, referring to the time when he persecuted the Christians, says, "I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" (Acts 26: 9). This is an illustration of the fact that the individual conscience cannot always be depended on as the correct guide for action. This, however, is hardly an illustration of the problem we are considering. Paul was, so far as we are informed, acting in conformity with the collective conscience of his associates and teachers at that time. It is hardly our province to say whether he was condemned by God for doing that which he "verily thought" right, but God did for him, and we believe always does for all others who are sincere in their desires to serve Him, give light to show where he was misunderstanding God's will. The message to him as he stated it to King Agrippa, "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad" (Acts 26: 14), seems to imply that he had had intimations of conscience, prior to his miraculous vision, that he was not doing exactly right.

The peculiar circumstances in Paul's case seem to have required a special revelation to him, and such revelations have undoubtedly come to many of the great leaders of the religious thought, such as Martin Luther, George Fox, and others. But we believe, and this belief is the reason for our writing this paper, that for the majority of mankind, the restraining influence to correctly guide their individual consciences, is the collective conscience of their fellows.

Man is essentially a social being; all his progress has been along the lines of working in harmony with his fellows. The condition described in the last verse of the book of Judges, "In those days there was no King in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes" was one of anarchy, a state leading from bad to worse. I do not think the passage is intended to describe a state of things where every man actually did that which his conscience told him was right, but rather a state of lawlessness where every man did that which he pleased. Certainly some of the occurrences described in Judges cannot, even by giving wide latitude to the customs and knowledge of the times, be considered as right for the actors. But the fact remains that man cannot effectively accomplish much, either physically, commercially, socially or religiously, except by co-operation with his fellows. There has always been a tendency for some men to separate themselves more or less from their fellows; the apostle wrote the warning, not forsaking our own assembling together as the custom of some is (Heb. 10: 25). Those who yield to this tendency very largely lose their influence for good, if they do not do actual harm to themselves and others.

In the 12th Chapter of 1st Corinthians, the 4th of Ephesians, and other passages, the apostle describes the church as one body with many members, with varying duties which must be fulfilled harmoniously to produce the results desired by God when He "set" them in their respective places, "that we may attain unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

The early church recognized the fact of collective guidance. In Acts 6: 5 we find the whole multitude choosing the seven deacons. In Acts 13: 2 we find at least five men to whom "The Holy Spirit" said "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Are we reading too much into that passage to interpret it as showing that Barnabas and Saul had felt individually called to undertake a missionary journey, but before doing so, asked the counsel of their fellow "prophets and teachers," and that after they all had fasted and prayed, they were united in believing that they had a revelation through the Holy Spirit that it was God's will that Barnabas and Saul should fulfill that duty? Would it have been right for Barnabas and Saul to have started out if the answer had been different? We think not. The revelation may come to one, but must be approved by others; it should be, but unfortunately is not always, the unanimous judgment of the entire church.

The description of the manner of leading the missionaries to Europe is a remarkable instance of guiding and harmony. There were at least three, Paul, Silas and Timothy, and probably others, traveling together. They were "forbidden of the Holy Spirit to speak the word in Asia," on the left hand, and when they assayed to go to Bithynia, on the right hand, "the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not" so they came to the jumping off place, Troas, where they appear to have been joined by Luke. We do not know how long they stayed there, but when Paul had a vision in the night, they all accepted it as God's direction and concluded "that God had called us to preach the gospel unto them" across the Aegean Sea.

In Acts 15th we have the account of the first church council, where after a varied discussion, James, apparently the presiding officer, said "My judgment is." That this was a judgment for the whole church appears from the context and that it was recognized as the leading of the Holy Spirit is shown by the words in the letter, "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us." This is a good illustration of the guidance of the collective conscience.

The method adopted by the Friends Church for the recognition of the gift of the ministry and for releasing ministers or others for special service, was based on what they believed had been the practice in the instances above referred to. As to its effects, it must have been a very great encouragement to those individuals, who in some instances had felt some special duty laid on their hearts for years, to have the endorsement of their friends. On the other hand, what was the effect when the result was the opposite? We believe that where this was accepted in the right spirit, it also worked for the ultimate good of all parties.

One instance was often told to me in my childhood. A young girl in Clonmel Meeting, Ireland, felt called to speak in meeting, in the days when this was looked upon as a much more serious step than it usually is now. She was very eloquent and soon became a general favorite. The elders were afraid of the effect of this on such a young girl, so they appointed an old friend named John Able to caution her; her reply to him was "I will throw my burden on thee." For nearly a year she did not open her mouth in meeting. Then John Able came to her and said, "Sally, take thy burden, I can't carry it any longer." She spoke the next Sunday and was soon afterwards acknowledged as a minister and traveled, I believe, in the ministry while still in her teens. I do not doubt that this experience, met in the right spirit, deepened her in her trust in God. She became Sarah Lynes Grubb, one of Ireland's most famous women preachers; her son Jonathan Grubb was also a prominent minister, who frequently visited my home meeting when I was a boy, and her granddaughter, Sarah Grubb, married Stanley Pumphrey in 1877, and was my guest during yearly meeting at Lawrence in that year. Were they not all blessed by her faithfulness when a girl?

These were very different results from a contrary course of action at Lawrence meeting a few years later. It was the practice of one minister, no matter what his subject, always to get round to a particular subject which was his hobby. We have been informed that another Friend made it a practice to kneel down and pray that the people would not believe what the minister had said on that subject. The effect of this action on the meeting could not but be harmful. Why did they so act? Why were they permitted to continue to do so? We think it was because of an over-exaltation of the value of individual guidance, and an unwillingness on the part of either of the two Friends and their friends, to submit to the judgment of the collective conscience of the meeting.

There are circumstances under which it is the duty of an individual to stand up for what he believes to be right, no matter though the majority of his friends think differently. The founders of most Protestant religions have had to do this, and had they not done so, important reforms might have failed. But even in this matter there have been many divisions in the church which we believe were more the result of the obstinacy, pride or self-will of prominent individuals, than of a close following of, and willingness to surrender to, the will of God.

How can we then know when to follow the dictates of our own conscience and when to submit to the judgment of the conscience of others which is opposed to our own? Where we belong to a religious body, from which we have the privilege of withdrawal, it seems to us that after we have given expression to our views clearly and in a Christian spirit, it is our duty to submit to the judgment of the collective conscience of the church. If, after a suitable time has elapsed, we believe our conscience still calls on us to act contrary to the rules of the church, or the judgment of our own meetings, then it may become our duty to withdraw from the body, so as to be free to carry out the dictates of our own consciences.

This, however, we believe will only happen in rare instances. There is a great deal more of selfishness, self-will and pride, where persons set up their own judgment against that of their friends, even under the guise of direct guidance, than most of us trained to think as Friends, realize.

We would recommend to anyone feeling a call to do something not united with by their friends, to follow the course of Sarah Lynes and throw the burden on them in humble dependence that God will bring about the right result in His own time and way. All of us should pray for this result, in faith nothing wavering. In my own case it seems hardest to do this when I think the judgment, contrary to what I believed to be right and wise, has been arrived at apparently without any real deep spiritual exercise on the part of those so deciding. But even in such a case, must I not believe that such a decision has been permitted by the Lord, and that it is His message to me to submit and pray that my friends may be guided aright, rather than to set myself up as superior to them in spiritual insight?

That dear old man Isaac Sharp was a wonderful instance of perfect faith in God, and submission to His will as revealed to and through his fellow members. While his journal shows his full faith for years, that he would live to go round the world once more in his Master's service, when considerably over 80 years of age, everything else seemed to point against it. When about to start he was taken with spasms, and for ten days his companion, Captain Pim, took care of him without undressing; then after they got to Paris, he became ill again, and had a bad fall, so they had to call in one of the foremost surgeons who said, "You will never be able to take the long journey."

When he was sufficiently restored to health, he was taken back to England. During the remainder of the year he was ill in bed much of the time; his committee did not feel warranted to say "go or give up," so it had to be brought up to the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight again to either "confirm or cancel." Isaac Sharp reached London ill with influenza, under the care of a nurse, but after absolute rest for a few days, was able to go to the Meeting. He told friends he "was loyally ready to hand back the certificate he held in his pocket if the meeting chose to withdraw it, but voluntarily he could not surrender it." Though a letter had been read from an English doctor agreeing with the French one adverse to his starting, the meeting unanimously decided not to cancel the certificate.

That aged man was given strength to go through hardships and trials which some of us scarcely realize, including a journey alone from San Francisco to China and 3,000 miles up the Yang-tse-Kiang River, and back to San Francisco, and from there, after visiting across the United States, home to England in safety.

We quote from his journal as our ideal of the right frame of mind to hold as to our individual sense of duty from a letter written by Isaac Sharp shortly before the Yearly Meeting of 1890:

"I am favored to feel calm, quiet, and peaceful, not without a sense of reliant trust in looking forward to the 20th." Then with characteristic fairness he adds, "I find it difficult to realize what I might have felt had it been anyone else; so it behooves me to feel tenderly for the views of any who may not see eye to eye with me in this matter. My sheet anchor is, The Lord reigneth; he is over all, now and forever."

And again the closing words of his appeal in 1891: "You are about to enter the presence chamber of the King. May He give you a judgment there, and, whatever the outcome, it is my earnest desire the decision may be to the honour of the Father and to the glory of Christ."

Tension Between Races

BY CAROLINA M. WOOD

In these modern days when transportation and travel and newspapers have brought all the ends of the earth so close together that we feel a real internationalism, we must see, if we look beneath the surface, a serious tension continuing between some races, and we may well ask ourselves the question whether or no this is an increasing tension. Some believe that the present war is a race war between the Slav and the Teuton; but the reasons underlying this present horror are so complicated that such a view is only partially true, if at all.

In almost every part of the world, however, we find places of serious stress and strain. Wherever races which have been weak are growing in strength, we find them unwilling to be in subjection to others who have held themselves apart and superior. The Chinese will not be governed by the Manchus. India aspires that "India shall be for the Indians." The Philippinos clamor for independence. In many parts this cry is not yet articulate. The "wild blacks" do not yet demand that they shall have back some of the more livable parts of Australia, but already the South Africans want a larger opportunity than they have under the Boer and English power.

Europe shows us a wonderful blending of races, but even there we find groups which are not yet assimilated. The Hungarians and Bohemians in Austria, the Poles in Austria, Germany and Russia, and the Finns in Russia, and the Irish, all feel keenly the race tension which prevents a normal and happy existence. Different temperaments express this strain differently. We have the agitator with his blatant language and his friend the yellow journal. We have the poet who pours out his plaintive soul, as Dr. Dubois, among us. We have the great statesmen, like Count Okuma and Booker Washington, striving to bridge the chasm by diplomacy; but everywhere we are conscious of a place of weakness where the strain is felt.

The superficial observer says, "Let us divide the world according to races and avoid friction by keeping each to his own place." To such an one it seems strange that our Heavenly Father should have made the world round and given us such powers to walk, to run, to swim and now to fly!—It is too late to go back. Indeed we do not want to. “The best is yet to be”—but the future needs all our best to make it glorious.

Science tells us that it cannot yet classify races even theoretically. If they go on a basis of language, we should have one line of division; if on the basis of physical traits, another; if on psychology or religion, yet another. But we can at least analyze some of the reasons which keep us apart. First among these, we must put language. It is hard for us to understand each other because of the outward form of speech. Then, too, we may be repulsed by difference in physical characteristics, being especially devoted to that form of beauty which we see in the looking glass, or we may be kept back by not understanding the customs by which another expresses his life. By any of these details we may fail to meet the man who is within. We have not taken the trouble to struggle past the outward.

As Americans and as Friends, this question of race tension is to us of vital importance. With joy and hope the whole world looks to the United States as a haven which is above race tension—an example of human brotherhood. And yet we must admit that even here there are clouds on the horizon. Our American Indians still look out through eyes of isolated dignity at the new-comer who has pushed him to the wall and in whose life he has no part. The Negroes are pushing against the hand that would hold them down. The Japanese ask, with sensitive souls, whether they will be welcome to learn of us, and in these last days the Germans in our midst are asking whether there is a heart of sympathy in us for those who suffer. Can we turn away from any or all of these? Shall language or customs be too hard for us to understand who hear with the inward ear and realize that God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth and given to each that inward light which is a part of Himself?

As Friends I believe we have especial advantages and gifts in this needed service. We have been trained to recognize gifts in others. Jealousy has no place amongst us. Our whole thought must be to develop and appreciate the gifts of others and to fit in all our various gifts to make a perfect and efficient whole, because “There are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit, and the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee, for those members which seem more feeble are necessary that the members should have the same care one of another.” (I Cor. 12.)

Cannot we dedicate ourselves through the “more excellent way” of love to a fuller appreciation of the high qualities of those among us who now feel the tension between races. If we cannot learn their language, can we not help them to learn ours and thus make themselves understood? If we have not a large enough sympathy and intuition to understand their customs, can we at least show them what we mean by our customs? If we do think white skins with freckles are more beautiful than red or yellow or brown or black skins, can we make the man understand that we can see the soul inside? So shall we be “the body of Christ and members each in his own part.”

Is there one in thy neighborhood that feels that race makes him unwelcome in the meeting house, in the store, in the school, in thy home? Pass not by on the other side of the road. “I was a stranger and ye took me in.”

“Move On!” Where?

BY L. M. ZIMMERMAN

“Move on,” is a common command from the officer of the law to the offender. As a result, those who are guilty keep shy of the policeman. The urchin waits until he has gone by, and the vagrant breathes just a bit easier when the officer is out of sight.

“Move no!” Where? Where, for example, shall the boy go? He must not play on the street. He is driven from the commons. Poor boy! Is it much wonder that some are bad? Isn’t it a wonder that there are not more bad boys than there really are?

And the wayward girl! “Move on!” Yes, “move on.” “Move on” along the street. “Move on” from dens of iniquity. “Move on” in poverty and shame! “Move on” in weakness and homelessness! But, “move on,” where? We drive the boy from the street when he is a bit noisy in his play. The “scarlet woman” is told to “move on” from her boarding-house or lodging-place. But, where? Where shall they go? Who has a kind word for them? Who is willing to lend a helping-hand? Who stands ready to seek and save the lost? Who has for such, a place in God’s house? Alas! I fear that there are fewer “cities of refuge” today for the unfortunate than there were in the days of Joshua, for then God saw the importance of giving everyone a chance, even though he had done wrong.

Many are ready to condemn sinners and order them to “move on,” but few, comparatively, are ready to point them to a refuge, and still fewer are willing to personally aid in their rescue. What is the use to compel the wicked to “move on” unless we are willing and ready to provide for them a decent and safe place in which to move to and secure for them such employment as will enable them to make an honest living?

Homes should be made so sweet and attractive that the young would always find them a refuge where they long to be sheltered.

The church should be more concerned about the young, that instead of finding pleasure in the outside world, they would be drawn to God’s house because of the attractions of worship and the religious services. Both parents and the church should impress upon the minds of the young the profitableness of godliness, the pleasures of doing good, the honor and dignity of living clean lives, at the same time pointing out the snares and pitfalls of the unsuspecting. Above all, save the young for God, for the Church and for heaven.—Lutheran Observer.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

"His Name Is Called the Word of God"

BY S. ADELBERT WOOD

Rev. 19: 13

Language is the expression of thought and feeling. We say of the man who has spoken, "He has expressed himself."

Jesus Christ being the "Word of God" is the expression of God's thought and feeling. God has expressed himself in that He has "spoken unto us in His Son."

Christ so accurately expressed God that He spoke God's word, did God's will and was the "effulgence of His glory, and the very image of His substance."

Where the word of a king is, there is power, and that because a king's word is as kingly as the king that utters it. Christ as "The Word of God" is one with the Father, having His power. Jesus said, "For I came forth and am come from God." Words come from their author. God's Word is as divine as God, and is one with Him in His deity. "And the Word was God." "For how many soever be the promises of God, in Him is the yea; wherefore also through Him is the Amen, unto the glory of God through us."

As with God there "can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning," Christ is not an expression, on God's part, of a new thought or feeling. "The same was in the beginning with God." "God said, Let there be," and creation took place: "and it was so." For without God's Word "was not anything made that was made."

The idea of Christ being the Word of God did not originate with John. "The Messiah was called the Word of God by the Jews. The Chaldee Paraphrasts, the most ancient Jewish writer extant, generally made use of the word MEMRA, which signifies the Word, in those places where Moses puts the name Jehova." (Cruden's Concordance.)

As words when spoken become the servants of those to whom they are addressed, so the Word when He became flesh, "took upon Him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men, that He might serve us." In this service He became obedient to our need, "even unto death, yea, the death of the cross."

We must remember that the "Word of God" expressed God in all that He said, did and was, so that in Christ we have a perfect revelation of God in His thought, feeling and character toward the world, which He so loved as to give us this most marvelous message.

His act of turning water into wine at a wedding says that God would bless, by His presence and blessing, every truly social function; that He takes no pleasure in an ascetic life.

All of His miracles show God's compassion toward us, and his ability to save. By eating and drinking with publicans and sinners, and withholding condemnation from one taken in sin, He proclaimed to the ends of the world that He would not condemn the world, but that the world through Christ might be saved. We may all feel, as we did at times when children, that we deserve to be punished, for we are really guilty. But forgiveness is seen everywhere in God's message. Yes, more than forgiveness, for it is apparent that He takes our wounds, bruises and chastisement upon Himself; and "with His stripes we are healed." He justifies the ungodly by dying the just for the unjust. Oh, the glory that is and will be ours as we accept of this divine message from God! "And the witness is this, that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son."

As Jesus is the "Word of God," to believe in Him is to believe God, as Abraham did, and with the same results. To reject God's Word is to reject God. Jesus said, "He that receiveth me receiveth Him that sent me." God "gave His Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish."

Someone has said, "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." Jesus, the "truth," was crushed to earth but has risen and ever liveth, the unchanging Word of God that abideth forever. For our Jesus is "the Alpha and the Omega, saith the Lord, which is, and which was and which is to come, the Almighty." "Whose sovereignty extends over wind, sea and demons; he is also the ruler of the kings of the earth."

For the Word of God being one with God and the expression of His power, is omnipotent, having all power in heaven and earth.

Such is the Christ of Christianity, "The Word of God," who had glory with the Father before the world began; whose praise shall be sung in heaven by those who have washed their robes and made them white in His blood; who will give, unto those who believe in Him, His glory. "To Him be the glory and the dominion, for ever and ever. Amen."

Sprays From the Sea

BY HARRIET F. BROOKS

There have been many poems and narratives dedicated to the sea, but fresh lessons may be learned each time one pauses by Neptune's side. The nucleus for this article is the result of a few hours spent at Shore Acres, on the rock-bound coast of Maine.

Sitting on a cliff looking at the blue waters with the white foam of the surf showing here and there as it dashed against some rock, the thought came to me, how like the petty desires and aims of man which beat upon the boulders of the Creator's plan for the universe. In the present European conflict it is hard to believe "God stands within the shadow keeping watch above His own," and, that the fulfillment of His plans for the coming of His kingdom may be hastened through this appalling medium.

The surf as it touches the rock breaks into feathery sprays, only to fall back into the ocean. How like individuals! When meeting the cliffs of failure, discouragement or even poverty, our spirits often break and we too fall into life's unrelenting sea to mingle with others like ourselves. Some endeavor to outrun their fellows in the eager rush towards the golden shore of success, but only a few polished individuals whom the world calls great, realize their ambitions; the greater number never wear the victor's chaplet.

Two ships passed slowly yet serenely by, headed for port. When our daily tasks become tiresome or the waves of discord and popular sentiment roll about our little boat, do we not often chafe because we move so slowly, forgetting perhaps our Pilot who directs our course for the best results?

More than two and a half centuries have passed since the Quaker movement was launched upon the religious world. During this period this vessel (the Friends' Church) has been making remarkable voyages, although disaster has frequently threatened the faithful crew who have stood by the ship these many years.

These loyal Friends are the product of sincere consecration to their captain, Jesus Christ, for only by earnest toil and never ebbing enthusiasm and by the in-dwelling of His Spirit in each heart can God accomplish His work through human instrumentality. It is only by such a life that the message of Quakerism will be brought to the world of today.

Are we as young Friends doing all we can to achieve this end? Will we be the pilots and captains of the church for the present hour? In these times of religious disquiet it is for us as young Friends to stand loyal to those colors nailed to our mast-head by Jesus Christ, thus showing to the world we are not ashamed to be known as young Friends, remembering Him who quieted the Galilean storm and who is able to steer us to our desired haven, for

"Like unto ships far off at sea,
Outward or homeward bound are we.
Ah! if our souls but poise and swing
Like the compass in its brazen ring;
Ever level, and ever true.
We shall sail securely and safely reach
Those Fortunate Isles, on whose shining beach
The sights we see and the sounds we hear
Will be those of joy and not of fear."

Portland, Maine.

Quakerism and Agriculture

BY MORRIS N. DILLON*

Friends have always been fundamentally an agricultural people. The "city forward" movement of the last two decades has cost Quakerism dearly. Friends generally have failed to appreciate this fact and have been too free to encourage the youth to leave the farm for the city for the "more genteel professions." Another very potent influence in this direction is the educational system. Great credit is due to early Friends for the magnificent educational institutions which they founded. These institutions filled the needs of their times well. The industries including agriculture were then simple and could be learned by doing or by a short apprenticeship and the academic was all that was left for the schools to teach. Today it is different. The industries including agriculture are complex and vocational training must come between the young man and inefficiency. The man of classical education finds himself qualified for nothing but to teach his own limited field of knowledge to others and he finds great competition in that. He has eliminated himself from the farm because he has neither a practical or scientific knowledge of agriculture. If he had been taught scientific agriculture in the schools and college he might have his choice of going back to the farm and making it pay better than ever before, or a great variety of positions as agricultural experiment teacher or demonstrator at good salaries.

The position of the young woman is much the same. Generally she has been too busy with theorems and conjugations to learn practical housekeeping. She has two alternatives—the teaching profession, with little compensation and no future; or becoming an inefficient housekeeper. She usually adds her name to the long list of applicants for both positions and takes the first one which presents itself, while if her school had trained her in home economics she might have been a much more useful and happy teacher or housekeeper.

The Friends' educational system has made little progress along the line of translating education into terms of daily life. Friends' mission schools, both at home and abroad, have done better. Friends' communities, most of which are in the country, have for years been sending out their best blood—their choicest young men and women—to solve the problems of the city, but there are problems of the country, problems of our own Quaker rural communities, just as great as those of the city, problems of poorer schools, weaker churches, problems of better farming and home making, which have been left unsolved. There is a call for volunteers.

Washington, D. C.

Planning for Permanent Peace

The suggestion has been made to President Wilson that when opportunity is offered for practical mediation in the European war, he shall endeavor to secure an agreement on the part of the belligerent nations that they will bring about disarmament as speedily as possible and agree to submit further difficulties to an international court of arbitration. This is a proposition which ought to find great favor among all the neutral nations. The pacifists of the world can well afford to turn their energies in this direction and give earnest support in a constructive way to President Wilson if opportunity is offered to press the question upon the European nations.

We gain power out of every duty done. We miss power by every duty left undone. The faithful soul, by doing one duty after another, thus comes at length to have reserves of power that are simply inexplicable to the shirker, who has steadily lost power with every duty shirked.—Great Thoughts.

THE HIGHER LIFE

THE TOUCH DIVINE

In the beauty of the morning!
In the glory of the noon;
In the gloaming of the evening;
By the silv'ry light of moon;
Stands a Presence ever near us;
Reaches forth a hand Divine,
And the touch, the touch of Jesus,
Yearns to thrill your heart and mine.

As He Went Along the Way

Much of the work that Jesus did he did as he met men and women along the way. It was incidental work, but it was work full of divine compassion. As he went along the way a woman touched him and was healed. Meeting a funeral procession as he entered the gates of a city, he raised the dead boy and restored him to the arms of his mother. As he passed through Jericho he restored sight to a pair of sightless eyes. As the two disconsolate disciples went their hopeless way to Emmaus the risen Jesus met them on the way and filled their saddened hearts with gladness. The work was done not at stated hours of worship, not in the synagogue, not surrounded by the formalism of ritualistic worship, but along the highways, wherever there was need and a mind willing to receive.

It is not in the meeting house, my brother, that you and I have the largest opportunities for service. It is not while sitting under the ministrations of the Word, not while listening to encouraging songs of Zion, that you and I have the largest opportunities to witness for Christ. But it is out there on the highway, where we mix and mingle with our fellowmen. It is out there where hunger stalks by with sunken cheeks and hollow eyes, and we have an opportunity to relieve it. It is out there where skepticism stalks by with sardonic grin, pointing the finger of scorn, that we are able to silence him with a righteous life. It is out there where sin slips up arrayed in all the allurements which it knows so well how to assume, that we can turn our backs and say "No!" As we seek to follow in the footsteps of our Master let us do all the good we can as we meet men along the way.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

In the Dark

It is one thing to walk with God in the light, and quite another thing to trust him in the dark, when you can neither see his face nor hear his voice, nor feel the pressure of his hand. But it can be done, and happy are those who do it. For those about whom the pall of darkness was gathering, Jesus spoke these words: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am, there ye may be also."—Religious Telescope.

Joy That Lights Up Heaven

Giving gladness to Christ is the marvelous opportunity that is open to men—both to sinners and to Christians. A Christian lawyer, who has known what it is to be in the depths of sin and rebellion against God and is now living a life of consecration and soul-winning, was reading this verse: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." "I had always thought," he said, "that this meant that the angels were glad. But now a new meaning flashed out of the verse. It is not speaking of the angels' joy. It is Christ's joy, and all heaven knows about it." What a privilege to bring such a pay to our Lord that the angels see it lighting up even his face! And this joy comes, not when a nation is converted, but when one sinner repents. How infinitely is the fruit of our service multiplied when it reaches heaven.—S. S. Times.

The Christian Faith

But we who have received the clear teaching of Jesus Christ that God is our loving Father have even greater reason than the Psalmist for such confidence and trust. So we are taught not to be anxious about even such fundamental necessities as what we shall eat and wherewithal we shall be clothed, "for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." If we "seek first his Kingdom and his righteousness," all these things shall be provided for us (Matt. 6: 33). In the same vein is the exhortation of the Apostle Paul: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 6.)—Congregationalist.

"Prayer girds human weakness with divine strength, turns human folly into heavenly wisdom, and gives to troubled mortals the peace of God."—C. H. Spurgeon.

You believe that Christ is present with you, nearer than your nearest and truest friend. You believe that he sympathizes with you, that he loves you, that he is not looking at you to blame you or criticise you, but to help you, to give you cheer and encouragement. You believe him when he says, "I am with you all the days." Now practise that faith. Act as if you believed it. Make the fact real by faith, and then do just precisely as you would do if you looked up and saw his face beaming upon yours.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

Plant patience in the garden of thy soul
The roots are bitter, but the fruits are sweet;
And when, at last, it stands a tree complete,
Beneath its tender shade the burning heat
And burden of the day shall lose control—
Plant patience in the garden of thy soul!

—Henry Austin.

FOR HOME READING

What's Come Over Murray?

An American Presbyterian minister tells the following story:

A young man came to me recently to ask, "What Christian work can I do?"

I said to him, "What time do you get up in the morning?"

"At half-past six."

"What do you do after breakfast?"

"Go to the office and work steadily until I go to lunch at twelve o'clock."

"What do you do after lunch?"

"Work steadily until half-past five or six, sometimes later."

"What do you do after supper?"

"Read the paper, or sometimes go to a lecture or concert. I'm too tired to do much."

"When would you do Christian work if I gave you any to do?"

"I don't know."

"Murray," I said, "God has so placed you, so filled your day, that I don't see where you can get time for much outside Christian work. I don't think God expects you to add any Christian work to your daily burden."

Murray looked at me a moment and said, "I guess that's so."

"But wait a bit," I said. "Are there other men employed where you are?"

"Yes, a great many," he answered.

"Do you do your work as well as the rest, or not as well, or better?"

"Oh, about as well as any of them, I think."

"Do they know that you are a Christian?"

"Why, yes, I suppose so."

"See here, Murray, here's something you can do. Do your work better than you ever did. Help the other fellow who is behind, if you can. Let them all know that you are a Christian, not by talking, but by living. Get a helpful word here and there. Get some fellow to drop his oaths or his drinking. Show Christ living in you and controlling you. Preach the gospel among your associates by the best life you can live with God's help. Will you try it?"

He promised, and went away. Six weeks later I met the superintendent of the department where he worked. He said, "Isn't Murray one of your men?"

"Yes," I said, "Why?"

"What's come over Murray?" he asked.

"I don't know," I said. "I didn't know anything had."

"Well, there has. He's the best clerk in the whole force, and has become so in the last month. He's the best influence about the whole place. The men all notice it. He's quiet, earnest and full of a spirit that imparts itself to others. Something has come over Murray."—United Presbyterian.

"Get Under the Load"

A big dray was drawn up at the side entrance of one of the city's mammoth stores, and a square box as big as a piano was coming up from a basement to be loaded on the heavy wagon. It was rolled easily onto the skids, and up even with the floor of the dray, and then somebody had to lift. Suddenly there was an indignant shout from the man who had first bent his broad back to the burden.

"Get under the load—you! What good do you think you are lifting with the tips of your fingers there at the edges? Get under the load, the way I do!"

As I listened, I thought I would have liked to set that draymen in a pulpit. I would like to hear him preach from that same indignant oratory, to the crowd of comfortable shirkers who in every church are lifting with finger-tips instead of giving their shoulders to the burdens. I would like to see him in the superintendent's desk, giving that ringing message to half-alive teachers, who lift a little, "at the edges," never minding who is breaking his back under the settling load. And if not that, why should they not take a lesson of him? It isn't good business to let one or two persons do all the work, while the rest are soldiering. Sunday-school work has had quite enough of finger-tip helping. What it needs is somebody—and a good many somebodies—to get under the load.—Selected.

A Small Beginning

One day a little English girl was walking along a street in London, on her way to school. She carried her books and a little bouquet for her teacher. A poor little boy, leaning on crutches, said to her: "Say, gimme a flower?"

The kind-hearted little girl picked out a rose and gave it to him. Four or five other children gathered around her, each begging for a flower; and one by one she gave them all away; and had no bouquet that day for her teacher.

The next day she took two bouquets, one for the teacher and one for the street children, and day after day she carried flowers until at last she carried a basket especially for the poor children.

This was the beginning of the Flower Mission. The news spread and the idea was taken up all over London, and then some one in Boston began it, and then in New York, and now thousands of flowers are given away all over the country. So all this beautiful work started with one kind-hearted little girl.—Exchange.

"How oft a gleam of glory sent
Straight through the deepest, darkest night,
Has filled the soul with heavenly light,
With holy peace and sweet content."

O Love Divine, O Larger Love, come take us,
Weave Thy sweet net outside our house of love,
Caught in Thy snares, and seeking not to rove Outside Thy love. —Katherine Tynan Hinkson.

PERSONAL MENTION

Austin Osborn is serving the meetings at Amo and Walnut Chapel, Indiana, as pastor.

Clark Brown and wife assumed charge of the Indian work in Oklahoma at the close of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Sarah Kirk has returned from a trip to the Holy Land and has resumed her work in the Y. W. C. A. at Des Moines, Iowa, and has also taken her place as teacher of the Elizabeth Fry study class of the Friends' Church.

Lavinus K. Painter, who has spent the summer at Collins, New York, has returned to his second year of study at Hartford Theological Seminary, carrying with him the good wishes of the Friends at Collins.

Vincent D. Nicholson participated in a week's campaign in Massachusetts in behalf of national prohibition, the week before he entered Harvard University. He spoke each night of the week except one, and three times on the Sabbath.

Horace E. Coleman has gone to New York City to take up special studies in religious education and allied subjects, that will help him in Bible teaching in Japan and prepare him for his work as a Bible School specialist in that country.

Joseph John Mills of California, George N. Hartley of Indiana, Richard Haworth of Iowa, Jesse W. Wilmore of California, Mrs. Wollam of Illinois, and S. E. Nicholson of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, were among the visiting Friends at Kansas Yearly Meeting last week.

Walter W. Brown, of Paoli, Indiana, who is canvassing for subscriptions for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, is President of the Orange County Bible School Association, and gave an address at the annual convention of the Association at Orleans, on September 30th, as did also his wife, Mellie M. Brown.

Willis H. Bond recently closed his work at Danville, Indiana. During his three years' pastoral work at that place the church has been greatly strengthened both in numbers and spiritual life. He leaves the church and community followed by the best wishes and prayers of a host of friends of every denomination. He began his new work at Knightstown, Indiana, October 4th.

The friends of Lydia M. Chase, a minister in the meeting at Kansas City, Missouri, are moved with sorrow to learn that she fell in her room, the evening of September 28th, and fractured her hip bone, and in consequence will be confined to her bed for some time. Although she is in her ninety-second year she has been quite active, having attended meeting both morning and evening the day before the accident. She is at the home of her son, 2004 Askew Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. She formerly lived with her son-in-law, Francis A. Wright, Sr.

NEWS NOTES

Rally Day was observed at the Second Friends Church of Marion on October 4th in a very appropriate manner. The morning service was devoted to the regular Sunday-school exercises and a miscellaneous program in which several of the members of the Sunday-school and church took part. Everyone was invited to come and bring their dinners and an enjoyable meal was served in the basement at noon. Truman Kenworthy gave a fine address in the afternoon and also took part in the evening service along with a musical program. We certainly feel that it was a day well spent and it will long be remembered for the many pleasant associations as well as the spiritual strength which we received. We had an excellent attendance at each of the services.

We have just completed a $1,200.00 improvement in the way of new Sunday-school rooms in the basement, of which we have been sorely in need. Our enrollment last Sunday was about three hundred. The primary department has been holding up exceptionally well this year and we feel that the entire school will be greatly benefited now that we can offer better accommodations.

The first Sabbath in October was observed by Friends at Bloomingdale, Indiana, as a day of prayer for peace among the nations of the world in accordance with President Wilson's proclamation. The pastor, George H. Moore, gave an able sermon full of convincing arguments on "War and Its Effects."

John Pennington, pastor of Friends' Church at Damascus, Ohio, complying with the request of President Wilson, held a prayer service and delivered a sermon in favor of Peace at the morning hour for worship, Sunday, October 4th. Sunday evening Jesse Edgerton spoke in the Friends' Church by invitation, giving an account of his recent visit to Washington as the bearer of a message from the Yearly Meeting of Friends' Church at Barnesville, Ohio, addressed to the rulers of the nations at war in Europe.

The address was statesmanlike in its diction and was a strong appeal for peace from a Christian standpoint. Mr. Edgerton stated that an audience with Secretary of State, Bryan, was had and a pleasant exchange of views was made. At the suggestion of Secretary Bryan a copy of the message was mailed to each of the crowned heads of the European countries at war, and a copy to each ambassador representing these countries stationed at Washington. Mr. Edgerton read portions of an address recently made by President Butler, of Columbia College, recently returned from the war zone, that each of the warring countries made the claim that they are not responsible for the present war. The address was timely and interesting.

Sunday, October 4th, was Rally Day in the Sabbath School and Friends' Church of Des Moines, Iowa, as well as the day of prayer for Peace. Several promotions were made in the graded department of the school, especially in the primary department. There was a large attendance at both services.

AT INDIANAPOLIS

An unusually interesting and able sermon was preached Sunday, October 4th, by W. O. Trueblood, pastor of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, along the line of universal peace, with special prayer service for the nations now at war, in accordance with the proclamation of our President.

After a period of comparative inactivity during the summer months, the various departments of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, are starting into the winter's work with a vim. The first meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held on Friday, the 2d, and the work outlined. The Delitha B. Harvey Circle will study various phases of the subject, "How Our Bible Was Made," and the Home Mission Department will reorganize Sunday, the 11th, and continue its work in a substantial way. Rally Day exercises in the Sunday School, held the 4th, indicated a high degree of enthusiasm in that branch of the work.

NEWS FROM AFRICA

A letter from Emory J. Rees, dated August 10th says:

"You will no doubt know, ere this reaches you, of the conditions that exist here on account of war in Europe. We are under martial law, and arrangements are being made by the administration for all missionaries of the district, in case of need on account of a native uprising, to concentrate at the Church Missionary Society's station some ten miles west of Marigoli. We do not anticipate any need to leave our stations. While the natives are considerably excited on account of the war, there is no sign of any hostile feeling, I think."

ENGLISH FRIENDS' MESSAGE

The whole civilized world almost has been deeply interested in the peace message of the Meeting for Sufferings in London Yearly Meeting, and published recently in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Several Friends have expressed a desire to have copies of this for distribution, and THE AMERICAN FRIEND has ordered 5,000 copies for this purpose. A letter from Isaac Sharp gives the information that they have been shipped, and will undoubtedly arrive soon.

He says they make no direct charge, but as they have been at a heavy cost in printing the document, English Friends will be glad of any contributions American Friends may make for this purpose.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be glad to fill orders for this valuable document but as it will cost a fraction over a cent per copy to mail this out, including postage and wrapping, we will ask Friends to remit at the rate of two cents per copy. All received over and above the actual cost to us will be forwarded to Isaac Sharp to remunerate them for printing these copies. Stamps can be sent for small orders, postoffice orders or checks for larger ones. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

AT COLLINS, NEW YORK

Farmington Quarterly Meeting was held at Collins, New York, October 2, 3, 4, 1914. Besides the pastors of the Quarterly Meeting, there were present William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie; Ida T. Parker, of Oakwood Seminary, and Francis G. Watkins from Cleveland, Ohio. The Monthly Meetings were well represented and all felt that it was good to be here. On Sixth-day afternoon the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight discussed the subject, "What Future Has the Society of Friends?" opened by George Hull, followed by others. The address Sixth-day evening by William J. Sayers was an inspiration to Bible School workers.

The business session was held on Seventh-day morning, Reuben J. Payne, Clerk, and in the afternoon a gospel service, in which many participated. On this evening Ida T. Parker gave an address on "The Practical Use of the Bible," with an interesting account of the Biblical course at the Oakwood Seminary.

On First-day morning Francis Watkins preached, from the text, I John 4: 7-8. During the Bible school hour Ida T. Parker gave a talk to the children, illustrated by the use of paper and shears. The closing session on First-day evening was a gospel service, in which William Loveless, Ida Parker and Francis Watkins took part.

William Loveless has recently been engaged for pastoral work at Elba; Reuben J. Payne at Farmington, and Francis Watkins has accepted a call from Collins and will take up work there in the near future, an addition of three young men to the pastoral force of Farmington Quarter. All the ministers engaged in active work in the Quarterly Meeting were present. An excellent spirit pervaded the sessions and the Word was preached in power.

Over forty years ago the Quarterly Meeting organized a Quarterly Meeting Bible School Conference and set apart one evening in each of the quarterly sessions to be used by the Conference. Later, an evening was set apart for Christian Endeavor work, and a Quarterly Meeting Christian Endeavor Conference was organized. These evenings have, with few exceptions, been utilized by these two organizations, and we believe have been instructive and helpful to the work of the Quarterly Meeting.

AT FALL RIVER, MASS.

The second roll call of the meeting at Fall River, Massachusetts, was held at the meeting house September 17, 1914. Several hymns were sung at the beginning of the service, followed by a devotional period. Reports were given of the Bible School, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Christian Endeavor and Round Table. There was special music. Percy C. Guy gave a short address on the subject, "The Relation of the Church to the City," and the pastor, Ora W. Carrell, made remarks. The roll of the membership was called and those present responded. Several absent members sent responses to their names. The service closed with singing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." A social hour was enjoyed and light refreshments were served.

AT WEST MILTON, OHIO

The work in our particular meeting is progressing nicely and we have been favored with a splendid attendance through the summer months. The presence of Robert Douglas a number of times this summer has been greatly appreciated by his home people, and his words of counsel and admonition and his fervent prayers have been an inspiration to our meeting. It is the united judgment of the meeting that our pastor, John L. Kittrell, should continue his labors among us and we all are united in entering the year with zeal to make this coming year one of the most telling for the Master. Our pastor has gone to conduct a union revival in the western part of Indiana. It is interesting to note that our young people, encouraged by the older members, are willing to assume the responsibility of services during his absence.

Our Bible School is doing splendid work. The organized classes hold their class meetings, and different classes of the school have taken charge of the weekly prayer meetings with good success. Our open air meetings on Sunday night through July and August were a great success.

THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT

BY TIMOTHY NICHOLSON

The prominent positions held by Truman C. Kenworthy in the Five Years Meeting and Indiana Yearly Meeting are well known to all Friends who usually attend these meetings, but as he has been a member of our Yearly Meeting only six years and much the larger part of our membership rarely attends the Yearly Meeting, I think it proper through THE AMERICAN FRIEND to briefly allude to something of his work in and for the church.

My first acquaintance with Truman C. Kenworthy was in Iowa Yearly Meeting in 1891, when I met with committees from other Yearly Meetings to arrange a plan for the second Quinquennial Conference in 1892. The plan proposed was adopted by Iowa Yearly Meeting and its delegates were appointed, one of whom was Truman C. Kenworthy. He was placed by his delegation on several important committees, and strongly advocated a pastoral system among Friends. For ten or more years he was pastor in Iowa Yearly Meeting, at one time in Des Moines, the capital of the state. In 1903 he accepted a call to the large Damascus meeting in Ohio, where he remained five years. In 1908 he was pastor in Spiceland meeting, one of the largest in Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Allen Jay, upon his retirement from the pastorate of East Main Street Meeting in Richmond, held at the Yearly Meeting house, strongly recommended T. C. Kenworthy as his successor. Spiceland Friends were pleased with his services and regretted to have him leave, but finally consented, as he expressed his desire to send two of his daughters to Earlham College. East Main Street Meeting had just lost eighty or more of its active members by the establishment of West Richmond Monthly Meeting. By the pastor's very efficient services the membership steadily increased, and last year there were about one hundred and fifty additions by conviction and by certificate and letters from other denominations.

T. C. Kenworthy was a very active and highly respected member of the Richmond Ministerial Association. In 1909, his first year in Richmond, he was appointed by the Yearly Meeting a member of the Gospel Meeting's and Epistolary Committees, and of the nominating committee to fill vacancies on the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Committee, and every year since he has been on the Gospel Meeting Committee and for three years its chairman. In 1910 he was appointed to fill the vacancy on the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, occasioned by the death of our late dear Friend, Allen Jay.

Two years later he was re-appointed on this committee and the last year he was its chairman. During the severe and protracted illness of its superintendent, Ira C. Johnson, the duties of the latter devolved upon T. C. Kenworthy and George W. Bird. In 1911 the former was appointed a delegate to the Five Years Meeting of 1912, and he was appointed by his delegation a member of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of that Meeting, and was made a member of its executive committee.

T. C. Kenworthy is a graduate of Penn College and had post graduate work at Princeton University in New Jersey. His public ministry is evangelical and also eminently practical. The above is written without the knowledge or suggestion of any other than myself. Richmond, Indiana.

Tenth month 10, 1914.

WORK AMONG THE INDIANS

It seems good to me to say something more about the Indians. The opportunities for supporting and backing up the educational work being done by the government are now the best in the history of our country. Letters from various superintendents of government schools say there is a marked difference between students coming from tribes where good missionary work has been done and those that have had no missionary training.

The former become leaders in the school and when they return to their homes they, as a rule, set up Christian homes and thus wield a strong civilizing and Christianizing influence. Missionaries in the field hold up the hands of the young people as they return from school. More than seven thousand of these are returning annually filled with new ideas, but being thrown into the old environment without help they would be liable and even likely to fall back into their old ways.

The government wants help in the schools as well as in the field. I quote a small part of a letter from H. B. Pairs, Supervisor in charge of Indian schools and a man of large experience and much interested in the elevation of our Indians:

"It does seem to me that if the various denominations would take more interest in Christianizing the Indian people that the number of persons who really have the missionary spirit and who are qualified under the Civil Service law for positions could be very materially increased.

"I believe one of the greatest things that the religious denominations can do for the Indian people is to make a very determined effort to interest people of real missionary spirit to enter the Federal service through the Civil Service.

"While there are many splendid people in the service who are giving their lives to the cause, there are, of course, hundreds who care nothing about the service or the Indians except for what they can get financially. Such workers can accomplish but little of real, lasting good.

"We ought to have scores and hundreds of active interested Christian people entering the service every year. They can do so only by taking the Civil Service examinations and getting in through the regular channels."

Here is a call for help. I would urge young people who wish to do good for humanity to enter this open door. Great opportunity and good pay. Write "The Civil Service Bureau, Washington, D. C." Tell what you want to do, ask for information and you will get it. The examinations are not more difficult than for public schools of same grade.

INDIANA ON PEACE

Indiana Yearly Meeting adopted the following peace resolutions at its recent session:

1. Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends convened in its ninety-fourth annual session, takes this opportunity to repeat and emphasize once more its ancient belief in the doctrine of peace as an essential feature of the gospel of Christ, the Prince of Peace. The present dreadful war in Europe, the most terrible and disastrous in human history, in no way disturbs our conviction that war is a wicked, irrational and unsuccessful method of dealing with international differences; nor does it disturb our serene and settled conviction of the ultimate and speedy triumph of peaceful and judicial methods of securing justice and lasting peace between the nations.

2. We commend and approve the course of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan in their patient and peaceful policy in dealing with the difficult situation in Mexico, by which our country was kept from intervention in the troubles of that distracted country—a policy that seems already amply justified by the logic of events.

3. We approve and endorse the suggestion recently made to the President and Secretary of State by a committee composed of representatives from several of the most prominent peace organizations of the country, and trust that the proposal therein contained may receive due consideration when our offer of mediation to bring about peace shall be accepted by the contending nations.

A copy of this resolution, together with one on our Mexican policy, properly certified by the clerk, is directed sent to the President and Secretary of State.

4. Notwithstanding the present deplorable war in Europe, with its baleful shadow covering nearly the whole of that continent, we now declare that the prospect for the triumph of this cause is bright. We have unshaken faith in that "power above us that makes for righteousness" and can adopt the language of the greatest of the Hebrew prophets, uttered twenty-five centuries ago: "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till He has established justice in the earth and the isles shall wait for His law."

NEW COLLEGE PRESIDENT

Ellwood C. Perisho has been elected recently to the presidency of the South Dakota College, at Brookings, in that state. The Industrial Collegian has the following statement about him and his work:

"Dr. Ellwood C. Perisho, president-elect of the South Dakota State College, took charge of his office at the college this week following a busy summer as director of a number of important teachers' institutes in this state. His coming to State College is well received by students, faculty, the citizens of Brookings, and by the people of the state in general. On Friday evening, September 11, he was given a reception by the Commercial Club of Brookings at the regular monthly meeting in the club headquarters.

"President Perisho takes up the work at State College following an unusually clean record of eleven years' service in the educational circles of the state, during which time he has held the position of Professor of Geology and Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of South Dakota. His work also as State Geologist with printed reports on the geology of the state has been invaluable.

"Dr. Perisho is a native of Indiana. He was graduated from Earlham College in 1887, from which institution he received the Master of Arts degree four years later. In 1895 he was conferred the degree of Master of Science by the University of Chicago, where he was a fellow. From 1888 to 1893, he was Professor of Mathematics in Guilford, North Carolina. From 1896 to 1903 he held the professorship of geology in the State Normal School at Platteville, Wisconsin. Since that time, his services as educator, lecturer, and state geologist have been given to South Dakota."

30, 1885, and died August 17, 1914, aged 28 years 10 months and 17 days. He was united in marriage to Susie J. Chism in the spring of 1905. He was reared in a Christian home and had a birthright in the Friends' Church. He was a practical conscientious Christian man and had expressed to his companion his desire to live the right life. He was instantly killed while on his railroad engine, and there are high testimonials of his Christian influence while in the railroad service.

Edmundson—Bessie Pemberton Edmundson, daughter of John and Retta Jay Pemberton, was born at Albion, Iowa, and died at Salem, Oregon, March 29, 1914, aged 32 years 3 months and 15 days. In the spring of 1896 she moved to Salem, Oregon, with her parents, and in Christmas, 1900, was married to J. William Edmundson. She was a birthright Friend and was converted in early life. She lived a consistent Christian life and often bore the message of love and salvation to the people in song, choosing to give her talent to the church instead of the general public. She was a member of South Salem Friends' Meeting.

Presnall—Rachel Presnall, wife of Enos Presnall, formerly of Grant County, Illinois, died of paralysis at her home in Salem, Oregon, June 15, 1914, aged 65 years and 11 months. She was a life-long Friend and her home was always a home for homeless girls.

Sopher—William P. Sopher, son of William K. and Agnes Sopher, was born near Oskaloosa, Iowa, March 24, 1952, and died at Zephyr Hills, Florida, September 16, 1914. He was converted under the ministry of Rufus P. King when attending Iowa Yearly Meeting in 1869. For more than forty years he was a minister in the Friends' Church, a clear exponent of the gospel of Christ and especially of the doctrine of Holiness and the Second Coming of Christ. For forty-five years there was no break in his fellowship with his Savior. He is survived by one son, two daughters, six grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Interment was held at the Bloomfield cemetery at Oskaloosa, Iowa. Services were in charge of Alfred Comfort.

An October Morning and Evening

Filled were His tubes
With wondrous shades of russet and emerald,
Scarlet and gold and gray.
With strokes strong and true
He spread them on nature's canvas,
Fashioning furlongs of dunes and trees
And romping vines, with stretches
Of river curving near.
From an all new sun he drew
Stretches of light and shadow—sheen and shimmer—
And lo! an October morn was wrought.

All day long we studied the theme
Of a work so gloriously fair;
And our words ran riot in praise of it
And His goodness in placing it there.

That He listened and heard and grew glad
We knew. For, when the shadows fell long
On field and butte and trail
And the sun had bidden the day good-night,
The doors of the west were left ajar
Letting waves and shafts of radiance through,
Slowing—climbing—shifting—
Till it seemed that all the lights of heaven
Were hanging there on the mountain's brim.

Hushed and revered we watched.
All words seemed out of place—
The Artist's alone was the hour.
Smiling 'neath the glow of colors,
Unto our souls He sped this message,
"In my pleasure the morning's mate
Glorifies the western sky.
Behold an October evening."

Enough Copies Received

We thank our friends for copies of the July and August AMERICAN FRIENDS, asked for two weeks ago. We have sufficient numbers to serve our purposes.

Tell Your Friends

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be sent to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1916, for $1.50, the price of one year's subscription. The general testimony is to the effect that the paper is getting better all the time. Tell your friends and neighbors about this special offer, that they may get the benefit of the good things now appearing. Some of the very best features we have been able yet to offer are being planned for the coming winter. No Friends' family can afford to do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the paper needs the support of every Friend's family.

It is equally important that all subscribers shall continue to patronize this periodical of the church. It must be put on a paying basis before another year. It is an obligation in which every Friend's family shares a direct responsibility. Subscribe this week.

Monthly Meeting Chronicle

We continue to get orders almost daily for the Chronicle of "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting." Many a meeting will find in it an inspiration and an incentive to undertake larger things in meeting the needs of the community, if copies can be put into the hands of the members. Price, single copies, 15 cents. Ten copies, $1.00. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Young People's Societies

THE AMERICAN FRIEND would like to have brief accounts of the important plans which many of our meetings have for their young people the coming year. Brief stories of what the Christian Endeavor Societies and Fellowship Groups are doing will be an inspiration to other bodies of young people.

A Campaign for South America

Many Americans do not think of South America as a mission field. Deceived by the splendor of a few great cities and by the number of great cathedrals, many of them very beautiful, they do not consider that North America has any responsibility for moral and religious conditions in the Southern Republics. Now that the attention of American business men is being drawn to South America as never before, in view of possible closer relations on the opening up of the Panama Canal, it is right that Christians in America should be brought to realize how shockingly low moral and religious conditions are in Latin America, under the control of a corrupt and decadent church. The World's Sunday School Association will hold in November public meetings in Plainfield, Summit, Montclair, Bridgeton, Elizabeth and Trenton—all in New Jersey—to arouse interest in South America as a field for religious education and to secure support for a Sunday School secretary. Among the speakers will be Dr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. S. Earl Taylor, Bishop W. F. Oldham, Bishop T. B. Neely, Mr. Frank L. Brown and Mr. Harry Wade Hicks.

Love Never Faileth

BY FLORA M. BEALS

One of the strongest proofs of the futility of militarism which I have ever heard came from the lips of an officer who had spent his life in English military service.

He related how he was one time on duty as a mounted policeman in the African deserts searching for an outlaw. His horse as well as himself was famishing for water and when he saw a Kaffir camp in the distance he put on a brave face and urged his horse forward. To show cowardice before these people meant death. The crowd surrounded him with grimaces and murmurs of hostility, yet he dismounted and took his seat among them. From his uniform they judged him to be a "man killer" and an enemy.

Presently to keep up his waning courage he began to sing. Was it chance that the first song which came to his lips was a hymn?

The chief of the tribe listened, then came forward.

"Are you a missionary?" he inquired.

"No," replied the soldier.

"But you must know the missionaries," the chief anxiously asserted. "You sing the missionaries' song."

"Yes, I know the missionaries," he answered wonderingly.

"Then you are a friend," and the chief extended his hand. "The man who sings the missionaries' song will not hurt us."

And his needs were supplied by these newly found friends who had faith in the song of the missionary.

The Final Triumph of Peace

In the face of the present titanic struggle beyond the seas, one is overwhelmed with the conviction that the ordinary peace propaganda is of little or no avail. Civilization itself is at stake and the problems involved are the bed rock problems of the social order of the world. It has been the dream of the pacifists that the world was evolving toward an era of universal and permanent peace. But across the pathway of pacification has burst the greatest, bloodiest struggle of all history.

Wherein lie the causes? Apparently the future historian alone can answer the query with exactness. In the foreground of all investigation, however, stalks the specter of militarism as an ever-present, sufficient, great first cause. And militarism has incited militarism, both offensive and defensive, until whether for the sake of the dream of world empire or for the sake of defense against the aggressions of more heroic neighbors, Germany and Russia and England and France and all the rest have made Europe an armed camp against a day such as is now horrifying the world. Until militarism be overthrown, whatever may be the agency of its overthrow, the hope of world peace appears to be well nigh vanishing.

The problem is made more complex by reason of the open antagonism of militarism toward Christianity and because of its avowed purpose to establish a new paganism. While rulers for the most part observe the outward rites of religion, the spirit that governs their action is plainly anti-Christian. In a recent article in the London Friend, Edward Grubb quotes the late Professor J. A. Lamb of Queens College, London, in his "Germany and England," as saying that "Corsica, in a word, has conquered Galilee," and points out the fact that this same Professor has "called upon England to throw aside the weakness of Christianity, and arm herself to encounter on its own terms the new life of young Germany."

More than ever then must the church become a factor in the reconstruction of the social order of the world, for more than ever it has been made apparent that Christianity can have no agreement with militarism. But the ordinary propaganda of the church will hardly avail. Christian statesmanship must match its intellect and heart against the infidelism of bloody strife whose chief cornerstone is the doctrine that "might makes right." Peace cannot win upon the optimism of generalities. World pacification will come when the causes which make war possible have been destroyed.

Dr. Frederick Lynch, editor of The Christian Work, has recently said that "There is really no lasting hope for peace except in democracy," and Hamilton Holt of The Independent has pointed out the fact that in 1795 Emmanuel Kant declared that universal peace will never exist until the world is politically organized, and that it will never be possible to organize the world politically until the people, not the kings, rule. If this doctrine be true even in part, peace must await the evolution of world empire until it has attained to a constitutional democracy, however slow the process, though in the end successful.

Unfortunately majorities are sometimes as wrong as kings are often reputed to be. The salvation of democracy lies in its moralities and in its standards of Christian ethics. Without these the rule of the people may be no less tyrannical than that of crowned heads; with these emperors and kings may serve their day and generation with justice and with equity. Generally speaking the trend of democracy is undoubtedly toward pacification, but we have a feeling that the roots of permanent peace must find a soil deeper than the soil of popular government.

George Fox declared that he "lived in the virtue of that life and power that took away the occasion of all wars," and so declaring linked himself and his followers forever to the program of Jesus, when in the face of imminent danger He bade Peter to put aside his sword. Until militarism be destroyed by the power of a Christianized social order, the pacification of the world is bound to lag; and it remains yet to be tested what democracy will do in this direction, unless democracy is made to feel the impelling touch of a Christianized public sentiment.

The cause of world pacification is inseparably linked with the triumph of the program of Jesus Christ. Treaties and conferences and international agreements all point the way to the final triumphant goal, but whether absolutism or popular government shall dominate the earth, rulers and people alike must come to feel the binding force of the spirit of love and human brotherhood through which is transmitted the transcendent love of the Son of God, if the nations are to learn war no more. Herein lies the hope of lasting peace, and to the church is committed the keys that will unlock this treasure house of the future for the generations that are to be. Until the church has failed in this larger mission, Corsica will not have conquered Galilee.

The Issue of a Larger Membership

In these days when there is a persistent demand for efficiency in religious work no less than in the materialistic world, it is well to remember that the church has the solution of its multiplex problems mainly within its own hands. Christianity cannot afford to wander far afield into the realm of the speculative, either in its doctrine or its methods of operation. Generally speaking, an improved use of old methods will yield better results than untried procedure.

In these days of popular evangelism, the minister of the Word, be he pastor or not, must continue to remain a persistent evangelist himself, else he is no true minister. At a time when the religious expert is being pushed to the fore, no Christian disciple can disown his individual responsibility in the field of religious service. Ever and always the church must maintain its normal functions in the task of winning the world to Jesus Christ. There can be no substitute for steady, faithful, devoted Christian activity.

It is not our purpose to decry or even to criticise the use of new methods in the church. Methods themselves are not sacred. Our present concern is that the church shall not misplace its energies by waiting for a revolution in procedure, while it fails to improve the opportunities that are at its door. Many a meeting is waiting for some new device to lift it out of the ruts, when by the exercise of its own faith and the proper use of the unused methods at hand, the remedy lies within its grasp. Waste of opportunities is an enormity that ought not to be tolerated anywhere, much less in the church of Christ.

There is a restlessness in the church which may easily be turned either to good or evil account. If it drive the membership to the closet of prayer, there in prostration before the Lord to seek to know more intimately the divine will, there to wait until clothed with power from on high, and then to go out with an heroic trust faithfully to perform the whole tasks included in the divine commission, blessings without number will attend the effort. If on the other hand, this restlessness voices itself in an unending quest after mechanical processes that seek to thrive by the rule of formulae, reducing religion to terms of the materialistic and the philosophic, wherein it is busy serving tables and ministering to outward display, the end will be destruction. It is "not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."

In at least four of our American Yearly Meetings this year, a well defined concern has arisen for a larger denominational life. At Nebraska Yearly Meeting, after full consideration the pastors pledged themselves to a united and determined attempt to win one thousand new members the coming year. In Western, the suggestion of the retiring Superintendent that a positive effort be made to secure two thousand new members within the next twelve months met with an earnest and apparently unanimous response upon the part of the meeting.

At Indiana Yearly Meeting a concern arose at the men's supper in a definite proposition that a concerted effort be made to gain at least three thousand new members before another Yearly Meeting. The men present arose to the occasion in support of the proposition which was later ratified by the Yearly Meeting. Kansas Yearly Meeting had a similar proposition before it, coming from Wichita Quarter, which without naming a definite goal was referred to the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee for consideration and formulation.

Here is an issue which should challenge the attention of the whole church. These Yearly Meetings say in effect that they are not satisfied with the present record. Their eyes have been directed to the fields which are already white unto the harvest, and the vision of a larger denominational life has stirred them to a definite purpose. Both for their own sake and for the sake of the indifferent and careless communities scattered all through their borders, the various meetings are asked to rally for an aggressive membership campaign.

What of the outlook? Shall these aspirations develop into a ready fruition, or shall they be blasted in the forming by the failure to improve the opportunities that are at hand? How many meetings will set to work courageously, faithfully to secure their full quota in this forward movement? How many will wait for some miraculous plan to be devised that will compensate for their own inertia? How many will let the matter drift until the opportunity has passed by and it is too late to accomplish anything?

If the hopes of these Yearly Meetings are realized, it will involve evangelistic activity, both collective and personal; it will mean that many congregations must first themselves be revived; it will mean that in many places the ministry must take on new life. But in no instance will it mean more than a normal manifestation of religious zeal, and the exercise of methods which ought always to characterize the life of a growing congregation. Christianity means life, and life means growth.

Let no meeting then shift its responsibility because the task seems stupendous. If each Friends' congregation in America will set out earnestly and with well defined purpose to meet the tasks in its own neighborhood, if each meeting will organize upon the basis of personal activity and collective zeal for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God locally, if the careless and indifferent will be made to feel the sympathetic welcome of hot-hearted men and women bent upon winning the world for Jesus Christ, the membership of the Society of Friends can be doubled within a decade.

The solution of most meeting problems lies with the meetings themselves. A few consecrated men and women can revolutionize a whole neighborhood. The issue raised in these four Yearly Meetings can be duplicated in every other yearly meeting. Taking into consideration the tremendous need of applying the principles and politics of the Society of Friends to some of the urgent present-day problems, the concern of a definite campaign for membership is most opportune. Not alone for the sake of a longer church roll, but for the sake of giving the fundamentals of our Quaker faith a larger application, all men and women of good-will will bid a hearty godspeed to this movement for a larger life.

The Fall Elections

In the states of Ohio, Colorado, Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington, the voters will face the definite issue of state-wide prohibition at the election on November 3d. Friends reside in all of these states and will be given a somewhat unusual opportunity to voice the well-known principles of Friends upon the subject of a paramount moral reform. It is not conceivable that any Friend entitled to vote will fail to vote upon this occasion, or will fail to vote to destroy the iniquitous liquor traffic. In the last five named states, the women enjoy the privilege of suffrage, while in Ohio the voters will pass their judgment upon this question at the November election.

In all these states the influence of Friends ought to extend far beyond their own vote, if they are properly active in the campaign. The effect of these elections upon prohibition as a nation-wide issue is bound to be far reaching. The thirty thousand majority against the liquor traffic in old Virginia last month sent a thrill of joy throughout the nation among all sober minded people. A prohibition victory in all the six states which vote on the question in November or even in a majority of them would electrify the Republic, and would mark the beginning of the end in a contest that has been waging for more than a century.

A feature of the Ohio campaign is the growing confidence that has taken possession of the dry forces as the end of the contest is neared. There are evidences that the liquor interests are in a state of uncertainty, while the anti-liquor advocates seem determined to spare no efforts that will bring victory to their cause.

In that state voters are asked not only to vote "yes" upon the prohibition amendment, which is a suggested amendment to Article XV, Section 9, but they are asked to vote "no" on the liquor home rule amendment, which is a suggested amendment to Article XV, Section 9a. Voters cannot be too particular in voting upon both these propositions.

Voters in Indiana will express themselves as a separate proposition on the question of calling a state constitutional convention next year to revise the constitution which has been in force for more than sixty years. All friends of the prohibition cause are asked to vote in favor of the proposed convention, in order that opportunity may be had to raise the issue of constitutional prohibition next year. Friends can do much in support of this matter by a little activity in their several communities. Temperance organizations generally, like the W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League, are active in supporting the proposition for a convention.

In Kansas all the political parties have endorsed prohibition, but an independent candidate for governor is running on a resubmission issue. His hope is that with the prohibition vote divided among several other candidates, he may secure a plurality of the votes. In various other states, like Iowa, Pennsylvania and Illinois, the temperance issue is raised in a variety of local forms and Friends are asked to ignore party and stand for the men who, if elected, can be trusted to aid this reform. In all the states Friends should be careful to vote for no candidate for Congress, either the Senate or House, who is not in favor of submitting the pending prohibition resolution for the action of the several states.

There can be no equivocation henceforth on the issue of the destruction of the un-American liquor traffic. Business, science, the church are all writing the sentence of condemnation upon it. But it will not vacate the field willingly. It is buttressed by legislation, and legislators must be chosen who will write its doom. With sixty per cent. of our accidents, three-fourths of our crime and practically half of our insanity and poverty due to liquor; with our homes impoverished and broken up, with politics corrupted, with the church hampered because of this national sin, there should be no delay in applying the curative remedy of cutting out the cause of this national disease. The time has come to destroy the liquor traffic.

Friends who profess to be friends of Jesus and of all men cannot afford to make an exception of their own number by fostering the spirit of antagonisms in the church.

It is well for the world to remember that the ten commandments have not lost their binding force. The world is out of joint because they are not obeyed.

The Gospel Team Movement

Perhaps no recent religious movement has attracted wider attention and shown more positive results than the gospel team movement. Perhaps the most successful effort in this direction is that of the gospel team work which has centered at Wichita, Kansas. This particular work has an added interest for Friends, in that its leadership for more than two years was largely under the care of Edgar H. Stranahan, a well known Friends minister, and because a number of local Friends have been active participants in it. Believing that readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will have a practical interest in this successful evangelistic endeavor, we give below an account of its origin and operation as prepared by Mr. Stranahan, and printed in booklet form.—THE EDITOR.

On Sunday afternoon, January 21, 1912, the Men's Meeting in the Wichita, Kansas, Young Men's Christian Association was in charge of a group of business men who had been converted in the "Billy Sunday Revival." Five men found their Savior in this meeting.

That night the plan of the meeting was transferred to the First United Brethren Church, the pastor having invited one of the laymen of the city to take charge of that meeting. Ten men made up the party. Before going to the church these men met in one of the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. and had a session of earnest prayer. For many of these it was their first public prayer and that night most of them gave their first public testimony for Christ. There were nineteen conversions. It was indeed a most opportune meeting with results that were most stimulating. It at once suggested a type of meeting and a plan of work that was soon to transform the lives of a multitude.

The "Billy Sunday Revival" continued through the closing six weeks of 1911. The "Men and Religion Movement" came in February, 1912. These two great campaigns brought together hundreds of men, from all walks of life, who were demanding a worth-while job, and who were keen to see men evangelized. They faced a trying condition, however, as 5,200 converts, gathered from a somewhat limited territory, had caused many to conclude that all forms of evangelism would of necessity be quiet for a time, at least. The results of these two meetings opened up a great field of service as men saw what men, by a simple testimony, under the blessing of God, could accomplish.

This new movement, now two years old, has resulted in the conversion or renewal of 3,246 people as the direct result of the meetings held by the Wichita Teams alone.

The report of these first meetings aroused intense interest. Practical business men began to dream dreams and to have visions. Here was a job worth while, an opportunity for religious expression coupled up with tangible results. Men in twenty churches were soon organized and ready to go here and there to tell the "old, old story." Busy men have hurried from their work to catch a train, traveled most of the night, held three or four meetings on Sunday, taken a late train for home and been back at their work on Monday rejoicing in the opportunity that had been given them to serve their Master. It has been by no means an easy task to carry the evangel to the 133 places outside of Wichita, besides the 55 points reached inside the city. Some of these towns are more than 200 miles distant; others could be reached only as autos carried the Team forty or sixty miles across country.

Has It Lasted?

As the number of calls increased and the work enlarged, the management of the Teams was turned over to the Church Federation. The Secretary of this organization, who is Religious Work Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., was given the general supervision of the whole Team movement. All dates are now made through his office, where all the data of the work is filed.

The Teams have purposely abstained from any elaborate organization. Some of them have had regular meetings for prayer and counsel, while all have joined in an occasional union meeting held under the direction of the Committee on Evangelism of the Church Federation. Any permanency that has resulted is therefore not because of a strong organization, but because of the value of the work itself and the determination of the men.

After two years' strenuous work that has tested the metal of every worker—after a long period of the severest sort of trials and discouragements, when all the forces of men and devils have combined to break up this work, we are still in the midst of a marvelous campaign. There has been, it is true, an occasional ebb and then a flood, but the average has been high.

It was expected that locally there would come a decline in the visible results of the meetings conducted by the Teams. This has proved to be the case, as the unconverted almost ceased coming to a church when a Team had charge, because so nearly always a clean sweep was made, and it was, consequently, uncomfortable for the unsaved.

But note the figures: During June, 1912, there were 120 decisions; June, 1913, 19; July, 1912, 302; July, 1913, 62; August, 1912, 135; August, 1913, 75; September, 1912, 33; September, 1913, 31; October, 1912, 162; October, 1913, 18; November, 1912, 241; November, 1913, 480; December, 1912, 196; December, 1913, 52; January, 1913, 164; January, 1914, 238. These would seem to indicate a tendency to a decline if it were not for the fact that during the Summer of 1913 we did little work outside of the city because of the unusual heat and because Teams stayed at home to assist in a series of tent meetings held in various parts of the city. The beginning of 1914 shows a return to former aggressiveness which seems to prove that the work is, in fact, a permanent one.

By-Products

The results of this work are by no means to be measured by the bare statistics which indicate the number of meetings held and the decisions made. It is the testimony of more than a few pastors in and out of Wichita that the most dependable men in the church are men who have most frequently been on the Teams.

Almost entirely because of the vision and passion for souls resulting from trips with Teams, there are now two new pastors in one denomination and six men are now giving most of their time to special religious work. Neither is their labor in vain, for many are finding salvation as a result of the efforts of these men under the blessing of the Lord.

At one point, not only has the pastor come from the ranks of the Team movement, but a splendid new edifice is in progress, largely the result of the efforts of the pastor and the stimulus given to the church through several visits of Teams.

Around one Team a certain pastor organized an "Every Member Canvass" for church benevolences. The number of contributors was increased from 100 to over 400, and the amount over 60 per cent.

Of more value than this was the spiritual uplift. Such was the fervor of the Team men making this canvass that during the three hours spent in it, many who had fallen away were restored to active church fellowship.

Numerous Bible classes have been started either during the visit of a Team, or immediately following it. The moral tone of many communities has been radically changed for the better. Pool halls have been closed. They have been forced out of business either by vote of the citizens, or by lack of patronage, or been replaced by a more wholesome line because the owner was converted. Sunday base ball has ceased in several communities. Prayer meetings of the church have been revived by a large increase in attendance and an incoming of a fresh spiritual fervor. Cottage prayer meetings are being conducted in several localities with splendid results. Several churches that were entirely closed, or about to be, have taken on new life, secured pastors, and in every way taken their places in the community. In one frontier community, hitherto without a church, one was organized.

Sectarianism has lost its meaning to these Team men, not that they are any less loyal to their own denominations, but that they have learned the meaning of Christian unity. Baptist Teams will aid Presbyterians in evangelistic meetings, and work to the limit of their ability to save men, not slacking one whit because they know that more than likely most of those converted will unite with some denomination other than their own. So it is that all Team men have learned to work together in real Christian unity.

The attempt has been made, not always with complete success, to arrange for union meetings where Teams are to go. Where this plan has been adopted, the very best of results have accrued. Many smaller towns have had their most valuable lesson in co-operation in such meetings. Practically every town visited has seen the value of churches working together. The Teams draw no lines as to methods, but will use every workable means to win souls, regardless of whether or not that method has their own denominational brand on it.

Hardly a Team goes out composed of just members of a single church, so the men have come to recognize the fact of spiritual power in all churches and the wastefulness of inter-denominational rivalry. The Team men are, in very truth, "comrades of the cross."

Best of all, because more fundamental, thousands of men have caught a vision of self-sacrificing service, are looking at the church work with more sympathy for the pastor, and with a greater desire to co-operate with him, and have learned that the primary obligation of a Christian is to win men to Christ.

What Manner of Men are These?

The call of Gospel Team work has gone forth to every variety of red-blooded men. No job holds a man so securely but that this work may jar him loose. Lawyers, doctors, barbers, carpenters, grocerymen, real estate dealers, railroad men, teachers, bankers, newspaper editors and reporters, ex-prize fighters, lumbermen, ex-jointists, commercial travelers, manufacturers, cattle buyers, blacksmiths, printers, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, postal men, seed men, musicians, college students, bookkeepers, coal heavers, insurance agents, farmers, city officials, chautauqua lecturers, jewelers, clothiers, restaurant keepers, laundry men, each has found his place and been willing to contribute his share. Rich and poor have met in a common task and each has found his strength to lie in the endowment of Power from on High. Success has come, not because of some temporal position, but as each has lost himself in a zeal for others. One characteristic has been supreme, the one thing that makes possible effective team work—a willingness to co-operate with every other fellow for the ultimate success of the whole project.

Our most successful men are those who have kept themselves under the exalted Christ. Bible study, prayer, purity of conduct, constant effort to win souls, have been mighty factors in keeping the men "on the job." Frequent meetings for conference and prayer have aided in maintaining spiritual life and the flocking of others to the help of a tottering brother has prevented many from falling.

As light on new obligations has come, most of the men have not failed. Many a user of tobacco has quit, even when he had been a user for a half century. Some merchants have stopped selling it. The growth in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord has been nothing short of marvelous. Men who a few months ago thought they could not speak two minutes before an audience, can now lead a Team in a testimony meeting that will result in a score finding pardon from sin, or, when required, speak "to edification" for twenty or thirty minutes and still count themselves, as they are, just laymen.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

May We Still Personally Appropriate a Pentecostal Blessing?

BY JOHN S. KIMBER

It has been said that God has dealt with the world in three great dispensations, which might be denominated by the terms—God for us (as in the days of the prophets of old), God with us (as in the days of Christ), God in us (as in this present dispensation, the days of the Holy Ghost.)

In the first of these periods there was some very sweet teaching concerning the Holy Spirit. He "brooded" over the waters in the creation, like a dove, and brought harmony and order out of chaos. He dwelt in the heart of Enoch and enabled him to "walk with God," and "please" Him. He shone forth in a pillar of fire by night, filled the most holy place with Shekinah glory, fired the hearts of the prophets with visions of holy rivers, bringing fruitfulness wherever their waters flowed; dry bones raised up into an army of living men, a wilderness that "shall blossom as the rose," and a way for the ransomed of the Lord to walk over, and "it shall be called the Way of Holiness."

He was the inspiration of the poet, and his song foretold the river whose streams should make glad the city of God, or pictured the king's daughter all glorious within, whose raiment was wrought gold and fine needle-work, or sighed like David for a clean heart and a right spirit and for that heavenly anointing which would enable him to teach transgressors the ways of the Lord.

In the second dispensation our beloved Lord greatly deepened the teaching upon this subject. He, Himself, was born of, led by, and filled with the Holy Spirit, and, in a modified sense, He desired that His followers should be so also. He said that from His believers should flow rivers of living water. "But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." (John 7: 39.) He said that it was expedient for them that He should go away, for if He went not away the Comforter would not come—that other Comforter who will not leave us comfortless or orphaned—but, when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you, and enable you to do the works that He did, and (marvelous, studendous teaching!) "greater works than these" shall ye do, "because I go unto my Father."

And when this, the last dispensation, was "fully come," "suddenly," like "a rushing mighty wind," He, the Holy Spirit came. The Lord whom they had sought "filled all the house where they were sitting." "Tongues like as of fire sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." "And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What mean-eth this? Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine."

But Peter standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and said unto them, "Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words, for these are not drunken as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit on all flesh." "For the promise is unto you and to your children" (thank God! Upon us Gentiles also is poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost) "and to all that are afar off, as many as the Lord our God shall call."

Some one has said the trouble with the Church today is that she has lost her way to the upper room. How sadly true! And being out of touch with the power-house, she has no longer Pentecostal results. Please read the description of the early Church given in Acts II: 42-47, and notice that there were about it seven marked and miraculous characteristics: it was steadfast, prayerful, powerful, liberal, social, joyful and increasing. And a Spirit-filled Christian, and a Spirit-filled Church, can and will and should have the same Pentecostal characteristics today; and anything less grieves the heart of God, and falls short of the purchase of His Blood—"This is the will of God, (even) your sanctification."

"O the Spirit filled life! Is it thine, is it thine?
Is thy soul wholly filled with the Spirit divine?
O thou child of the King, has He fallen on thee?
Does He reign in thy soul, so that all men may see
The dear Savior's blest image reflected in thee?"

"Has He swept through thy soul like the waves of the sea?
Does the Spirit of God daily rest upon thee!
Does He sweeten thy life, does He keep thee from care?
Does He guide thee and bless thee in answer to prayer?
Is it joy to be led of the Lord anywhere?"

"Has he purged thee of dross with the fire from above?
Is He first in thy thoughts, has He all of thy love?
Is His service thy choice, and is sacrifice sweet?
Is the doing His will both thy drink and thy meat?
Dost thou run at His bidding with glad eager feet?"

"O the Spirit filled life may be thine, may be thine,
In thy soul evermore the Shekinah may shine;
It is thine to live with the tempests all stilled,
It is thine with the blessed Holy Ghost to be filled;
It is thine, even thine, for thy Lord has so willed."

This, then, is the Christian's privilege and blessing. Yes, it is the Blessor Himself, indwelling. There are two great gifts, Christ for the world, and the Holy Ghost for the Church. Are they both ours?

Newport, Rhode Island.

Be patient with every one, but above all with yourself. I mean do not be disturbed because of your imperfections, and always rise up bravely from a fall. There is no better means of progress in the spiritual life than to be continually beginning afresh and never to think that we have done enough.—Francis de Sales.

THE HIGHER LIFE

In Secret Prayer

"Lord, I have shut my door—

Shut out life's busy cares and fretting noise.
Here in this silence they intrude no more.
Speak thou, and heavenly joys
Shall fill my heart with music, sweet and calm—
A holy psalm.

"Yes, I have shut my door,

Even on all the beauty of thine earth—
To its blue ceiling, from its emerald floor,
Filled with Spring's bloom and mirth;
From these, thy works, I turn, thyself I seek,
To thee I speak.

"Lord, I have shut my door!

Come, thou, and visit me: I am alone!
Come, thou, as when doors were shut, thou cam'st of yore
And visit thine own.
My Lord, I kneel with reverent love and fear,
For thou art here."

—Author Unknown.

"Keep Your Hand Upon the Throne"

It is a great thing to rise above the posture of helpless and perhaps hopeless pleading for God to manifest to us some act of charity and mercy, and take by faith the high ground of authority and confidence in the name of Jesus.

This is surely the significance of that remarkable statement in the seventeenth chapter of Exodus at the close of Israel's victory over Amalek. "Because the hand is upon the throne of the Lord, therefore the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation." This identifies us with God and His almightiness, and makes the battle not ours, but the Lord's.

This surely is the significance of praying in the name of Jesus. That is, as if Jesus were himself praying. It is our high privilege so to identify ourselves with our ascended Lord that our prayers shall go before the throne as his, and shall be answered according to his merits and his authority.—Alliance Weekly.

"As Unto the Lord"

She was only a poor, plain, freckled woman, whose clothes were of the same fashion her mother might have worn, says a writer in Christian Life, yet day by day, as she busily plied her iron, many a humble neighbor would stop by her door to listen to the quaint old hymns she sang so vigorously.

"My good woman," said Mrs. C——, who had called to engage her services, "how can you stand all day in this hot room, always ironing and yet singing so cheerily?"

"Ah," she replied, "the Lord has given me this work to do; so, when I'm tired and out of sorts I say to myself that verse about doing things heartily, as unto the Lord, and try to think how I'd feel if I could see Him standing by my side and He knew I had an unwilling heart for His tasks. Then I sing my brightest hymns, and while my iron smoothes out the wrinkles in the clothes I'm planning how to smooth out the rough places in my neighbors' lives.

"There's poor Granny Jones, left alone all day. She's crippled with rheumatics, and nearly blind, too. When I sing it cheers her a bit, and she feels as if some one cared for her.

"Little Tommy Greene, in the room above me, has a weakness in his back, and lies in his cot bed from morning till night. His mother works in a factory and doesn't come home till dark. When he's lonely and sick with pain, he pounds on the floor with a stick, and I sing the hymns he likes best, and he lies quiet and hums them over to himself till he falls asleep. Then once in a while I slip up with a cup of water, and bits of picture papers that come wrapped around the clothes, and give him a pleasant word. Ah, ma'am, the Lord's so good to me I must try to help them that have few blessings."

And this thankful woman lived in a little hot room, spending her whole life ironing and smoothing out wrinkles for others.—Selected.

Joy in God

If we would find joy we must get out of ourselves. God has established this as the law of the universe. He himself finds his greatest joy in saving men, in doing good to others. If we persistently pull ourselves to pieces in an attempt to find joy with us, or if we search for it in the dismal dark memories of the past, we shall fail in our quest. The Word of God does not say, "Rejoice in yourselves;" but its injunction is "Rejoice in the Lord." If we look continually at self we will see only that which will give us sorrow; but he who looks outside of himself, and sees a loving Lord, and learns his loving ministry to men, will live a joyful and a triumphant life. That was a gracious word of St. Paul, "I know whom I have believed." This ought to be of increasing value to every believer. Christian experience must be a growing quantity augmenting our faith each day. The matter of faith ought to increase rather than decrease through the years. We ought to be able to believe more, and find the enlargement of faith the most sacred practice of our lives. A man comes to be called a "man of great faith," not by trimming his faith or constantly crimping the edges, but by a continuous process of pre-empting new ground and by experience incorporating it into the main body of his faith. Do we ever sincerely pray, "Lord, increase our faith?"—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

"Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when he Is most invisible."

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

Kansas Yearly Meeting held its forty-third session in the old stone meeting house in Lawrence, from the seventh to the twelfth of October. For twenty-five years this was the only home of the Yearly Meeting. But the center of population in the Yearly Meeting began to move south-west. Seventeen years ago the plan of alternating with Wichita in the holding of Yearly Meeting was adopted. During these years the south-west continued to grow, while the north-east did not hold its own. This year it was decided to meet at Wichita hereafter, "by adjournment from year to year." In the representative meeting this action was unanimous, and prevailed by a considerable majority in the meeting at large. It will require the confirmation of this action again next year to make it final.

The meeting felt itself fortunate in having a strong force of visiting ministers present—not particularly large in number, but full of wisdom and the Holy Spirit. Among these were George N. Hartley, Indiana; Jesse W. Wilmore, California; Clark and Elma T. Brown, Iowa; Richard Haworth, Iowa; S. Edgar Nicholson, Indiana; Joseph John Mills, California; Roy Hare, a Christian worker from Ohio; and Emma Wollam, an elder from Indiana.

In the Meetings on Ministry and Oversight a leading concern was that in this day of international strife, when the whole world seems to be in turmoil, when men's faith in Christianity is being shaken, is the time when we, of the Society of Friends, must assert as never before the need of a purely spiritual religion. The formal and the spectacular in Christianity is collapsing. It is our mission to carry to the world a faith that reaches every department of life. God is His own witness in the souls of His children.

A new and interesting event of the week was a luncheon for men one evening, in the rooms of the Merchants' Association of the city of Lawrence. Although there was a pouring rain at the time of gathering, about seventy-five were present. Addresses were made by J. J. Mills, S. Edgar Nicholson and Richard Haworth. A splendid spirit of good fellowship prevailed.

The clerks appointed were Edmund Stanley, presiding clerk; Martha M. Woodard, reading clerk; John R. Wright, recording clerk; Lillian Hadley, assistant recording clerk; Arthur Jones, announcing clerk.

George N. Hartley gave the address in the session devoted to foreign missions. Out of his knowledge of Christian history he showed how we and our immediate ancestors are indebted to Christian missionaries for the blessings of our civilization. We are in honor bound to use our earnest efforts to spread to others the blessings we have received. The session on temperance was addressed by S. Edgar Nicholson. As a starting point for the temperance address the speaker produced some recently published charges made by the liquor forces in which social conditions in Kansas, due to the prohibitory law, were unfavorably compared with those in a license state. The assertions were so utterly absurd they appeared humorous to a Kansas audience. But they were typical of the methods of the liquor propaganda.

In the session on Bible Schools Richard Haworth made a very thorough presentation of the new Friends' quarterlies, and the obligation of Friends' schools to use them. It was evident from the general expression given that those publications are rapidly growing in favor in this Yearly Meeting.

Perhaps one of the utterances most likely to produce thought for a long time was the address of J. J. Mills in the educational meeting. He gave the results of some of his own very thorough investigation of the relation of our educational institutions to the training of our ministers. From his figures it is evident that the academies and colleges of Friends have been an indispensable factor in the education of our active ministers. The educational report showed that one of the academies is closed for the year, while another has reopened after having been closed for two years. Friends' University was reported in a way quite satisfactory to the Yearly Meeting.

The Christian Endeavor meeting was up to its accustomed lively interest, although there were not quite so many young people present as sometimes attend. Fred C. Cope gave the address, on the true spirit of pledge keeping. Wallace C. Kemp, cashier of the "Quaker Bank" of Wichita, had charge of the raising of the funds for the Christian Endeavor Union, as he has done for several years past. His inimitable good humor, evidently both studied and spontaneous, has come to be one of the features of Yearly Meeting week. The budget of the union includes not only the local expenditures, but also a substantial support of the work in Africa.

On the proposition to so regulate the recording of ministers that the final act shall rest with the Yearly Meeting, the meeting was unable to reach a satisfactory conclusion, and left the matter open for next year.

L. C. Hinshaw was continued as general superintendent of evangelistic and pastoral work, for his tenth year of such service. William P. and Abigail Haworth retired from the work of the Shawnee Indian Mission after ten years' faithful and effective labor in that field. Clark and Elma T. Brown are entering into that work.

On Sabbath the ministers in attendance were called upon for gospel service in ten churches and institutions in the surrounding community. At the Yearly Meeting house there were large congregations at all the meetings and the Word of the Lord seemed to have free course, and was glorified. At the ten o'clock meeting Joseph John Mills delivered the message on "Hastening the coming of the day of the Lord." Certainly there was no one present but that was brought to a deeper realization than ever before of the responsibility and opportunity of every Christian having a part in bringing in the Realm of God, in this present world. His closing words will long rest in the minds of the hearers: "If men forget to tell the story of the love and sacrifice of Christ, God has made no other provision for letting it be known." The meeting closed with singing "A Charge to Keep I Have," most impressively adapting the last lines,

"Assured if I my trust betray, Another soul will die."

ARTHUR JONES.

FROM PRESIDENT WILSON

Robert L. Kelly, Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting, has received the following message from President Wilson, in answer to the letter sent him by Indiana Yearly Meeting approving his peace policy:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
WASHINGTON.

October 2, 1914.

Dear Mr. Kelly:

Will you not convey to those who attended the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends an expression of my genuine appreciation of, and warm thanks for, the more than kind words of the communication you have been good enough to send to me in their name? I am grateful for their approbation and good will.

Cordially and sincerely yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly,
Presiding Clerk, Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, Richmond, Indiana.

YEARLY MEETINGS, 1914

Baltimore—At Baltimore, Maryland, November 13. Clerk, Allen C. Thomas. Haverford, Pennsylvania.

EFFICIENCY IN ADMINISTRATION

In 1911 Western Yearly Meeting created a commission on finance "for the consideration of the subject of revising the financial system of the church." This commission reported a plan at the Yearly Meeting of 1912, in which it was set forth that the scope of consideration of the commission was of necessity broader than the revision of the financial system, "because the present church organization is too slender and incomplete to support a financial system properly revised." The commission reported the following, which was adopted by the Yearly Meeting:

"We are, therefore, agreed that as a condition precedent to further attempts at solidarity and efficiency, the Yearly Meeting should

"1. Create a representative body of control with a superintendent or financial secretary in continuous charge; to the end that it may effectively possess its corporate rights and administer its duties as the supreme legislative body of the church continuously.

"2. Substantially increase its jurisdiction over subordinate meetings.

"3. Require that the title to all church property should vest in the Yearly Meeting Corporation through local trustees.

"4. Require that all permanent church extension or other work, involving the expenditure of money, should be referred to the representative body of control for authorization.

"5. Officially determine upon a fiscal year which shall govern the reports and accounting of all subordinate meetings.

"6. Authorize and prepare identical report and accounting forms for all subordinate meetings.

"When these preparatory steps are taken, it may then safely revise its financial system in the following particulars:

"1. Create and maintain a fund for opening and supporting new meetings, make and accept loans for building, or the purchase of property.

"2. Determine upon and enforce methods of assessments, disbursements and budgets of expense for the ensuing year.

"3. Solicit and receive endowments, bequests, properties and trusts.

For various reasons the plan had not been put into operation during the past two years, but at the recent session of the Yearly Meeting the following report was presented by the Representative Body of Administration and was adopted by the Yearly Meeting.

The Representative Body of Administration submits the following report:

The body was organized by choosing Morton C. Pearson, President; William Chandler, Vice-President; Martilia Cox, Secretary-Treasurer.

Careful consideration was given to the five recommendations of the original Commission on Finance embodied in the minutes of the meeting of 1912, and we recommend that they be amended to read as follows:

Section 1. Create a representative body of administration, to the end that the Yearly Meeting may effectively possess its corporate rights and administer its duties as the supreme legislative body of the church continuously.

Section 1, Paragraph 2. That the Representative Body of Administration consist of the Superintendent of each department of church work and one member from each Quarterly Meeting not represented by such department Superintendents. This body shall organize by the election of a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer. The tenure of office of its members (excepting Superintendents of departments) shall be not less than three years, nor more than five years.

This body shall be the co-ordinating medium of all departments; it shall suggest to the Finance Committee the amount it desires for each department of church work.

Section 2. That all permanent church extension or other work involving the expenditure of money should be referred to the Representative Body of Administration for approval.

Section 3. Require that title to all church property should vest in the Yearly Meeting corporation through local trustees. Note:—We recognize as a fundamental weakness in our organization the lack of cohesion among our several meetings and of a consciousness of membership in the Yearly Meeting and that increased efficiency and growth depend upon the increased co-ordination and unity of effort and purpose. We further believe that unity and direction can be accomplished only by a more centralized representative church government, and believe it unwise to take forward steps in these matters while the local meeting is supreme in the ownership and disposition of the Church's tangible property. It, therefore, recommends:

"That as rapidly as may be the title to all church property not now so held, shall vest in the yearly meeting through the medium of Trustees chosen from and by each local meeting."

Section 4. Officially determine upon a fiscal year which shall govern the reports and accounting of all subordinate meetings.

Section 5. Authorize and prepare identical report and accounting forms for all subordinate meetings.

Respectfully,

MARTILIA COX, Secretary.

RALLY DAY AT INDIANAPOLIS

We have the following interesting message from Horace W. Carey, Superintendent of the Bible School at First Friends' Church in Indianapolis:

"Reporting to you something of the results of our Rally Day, I wish to say that as a result of our advertisement and postal card invitations, we had a total attendance of 351 as against 321 at the Rally Day in 1913, and 280 at the Rally Day in 1912, and the greatest enthusiasm I ever saw.

"All our work has been directed toward getting the people who have not been attending regularly; not the old-time members who attend when they take a notion, but the ones who have come into the city from some outside Friends' churches and need an invitation and persuasion to come.

"Our record has shown an increasing attendance for three years in a very satisfactory, steady growth. On September 27th, we had in attendance 211 without any effort on the part of any one. So we find that a united effort on the part of each teacher and class officer, backed up by a general effort on the part of pastor and superintendent brought out for our opening fall Sabbath an increase of 140. We find that these special efforts are making the steady growth I speak of.

"For the benefit of those who wonder why we do not have a greater attendance, I will say that our people are scattered over the whole city, and as far as ten miles in the country. Several families come five and six miles and many come three and four miles from all parts of the city, while only a very small per cent. live within walking distance of the church. We are in competition with other churches and Bible Schools in each neighborhood."

The Denver Friends' Meeting extends a cordial welcome to all Friends, who may visit Denver, to attend meeting whenever possible. Meeting house is at 4100 Shoshone Street. Sabbath School is at 10:00; meeting at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Pastor, George D. Weeks. Address Walter W. Weesner, Clerk, 4023 Umatilla Street, Denver, Colorado.

FOR SALE—I want to sell my farm of 160 acres, located in Cherokee County, Kansas. A beautiful location, one-half mile from railroad station and Friends' Church. School, three-quarter mile. A ten room house with closets and other conveniences. Two barns and other out-buildings. Address W. H. WHEELER, LaHarpe, Kansas.

FARM LANDS

Those interested in Farm lands in Canada, near Friends' Church, should correspond with E. HOWARD, Adanac, Sask., Canada.

PERSONAL MENTION

Daniel Oliver and family reached the mission post in Syria about the first of the present month.

Joseph Youngs will serve the meeting at Kennard and Shirley, Indiana, as pastor for the coming year.

William C. Allen and William B. Harvey have been heard from by cable as having landed safely in Japan.

Dr. Seth Mills and wife of Valley Mills, Indiana, are arranging to go to California early in November to spend the winter.

Esther A. Balderston, who sailed on September 8th for Japan, has sent a cablegram announcing that she had landed safely.

D. W. Whybrew is spending some time in Nebraska holding meetings at Aurora, Plainview and Spring Bank and other points.

Irving Stegall has accepted a call to the pastorate at New Westville, Ohio, succeeding Frank Long, who has gone to Pennville, Indiana.

O. Perry Bantz, who served as pastor on the Rockford, Ohio, circuit the past year, has accepted a call to the pastorate at Charlottesville, Indiana.

R. Solomon Tice and wife are expecting to return to Victoria, Mexico, in the very near future to resume their missionary activities at that place.

Levi Johnson has accepted a call to serve at Walnut Creek Meeting, Kansas, as pastor the coming year. His post-office address is Burr Oak, Kansas.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Board of Young People's People's Activities, has returned for a final year's work at Hartford Theological Seminary.

John S. Kimber of Newport, R. I., has been holding a series of meetings at Greensboro, North Carolina, with excellent results, the pastor, Fred E. Smith, assisting.

Joel T. Wright, a minister of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, is very low, and is not expected to live long. He wishes to assure all his friends that all is well with him.

Truman C. Kenworthy, General Superintendent of Evangelistic work in Indiana Yearly Meeting, is spending the present week among the meetings in northern Michigan.

Tennyson Lewis has arrived at his new field of work at Everett, Washington. He received a royal welcome from the members of the local meeting, and the prospects are good for a prosperous year's work.

Orville Chance of Jonesboro, Indiana, has accepted a call to the pastorate at Whitewater Meeting, Richmond, Indiana. He and his wife are taking some work at Earlham College.

Arthur Hammond, who has recently taken charge of the work at Watseka, Illinois, writes that everything is going nicely and that the prospect is good for the work the coming year.

Charles W. Sweet of Muncie, Indiana, has been retained as pastor of the meetings at Mooreland and Little Ridge, the latter being an important country meeting near Fairmount, Indiana.

J. Edward Ransome has made arrangements to hold Sabbath afternoon meetings at Ferrisburg, Vermont, where a Friends meeting house has stood vacant for a number of years.

Elwood Hinshaw of Lynn, Indiana, has accepted the pastorate of the meetings at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, and Cadiz, Indiana, for the coming year. He will alternate between the two places.

Luther Addington has accepted a call to the pastorate at Lynn, Indiana, succeeding Milo S. Hinckle, who has taken the pastorate of the East Main Street Friends Meeting at Richmond, Indiana.

Fred E. Smith of Greensboro, North Carolina, began a series of meetings at High Ponit, North Carolina, last week. He recently held a meeting at Kernersville, North Carolina, with good results.

Lyman G. Cosand, who served the meeting at Barclay, Kansas, as pastor last year, and who is now a student in Earlham College, has taken the pastorate of the meeting at Dunreith, Indiana.

L. Oscar Moon of Baltimore, gave peace addresses at Sedley and Bethel in southeast Virginia on October 4th, in response to the arrangements of local Friends to observe that day as a day of prayer for peace.

Edward E. and Susie E. Hartley, recently pastors in Vandalia Quarter, Laporte County, Indiana, are now entering upon the pastoral work in West Union and Highland meetings, Monrovia, Indiana.

William J. Sayers, who for the past five years has served the meeting at Poughkeepsie, New York, as pastor, is planning to go to Muncie, Indiana, the first of November to take charge of the pastoral work at that place.

Lester C. Haworth, a graduate of Earlham College and formerly a member of Western Yearly Meeting, who for the past two years has served as assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Buffalo, New York, has been elected secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Youngstown, Ohio, and will take charge December 1st. The corner stone of a new $300,000 building at Youngstown was laid week before last, the secretary-elect participating in the exercises.

Prof. Henry H. Townsend of Wichita, Kansas, is at the head of the department of mathematics and physics in the Sumner County High School at Wellington, Kansas. He continues, however, to reside at Wichita.

Samuel Miles of North Ferrisburg, Vermont, now nearly eighty years of age, was able to attend the recent sessions of the Quarterly Meeting. His wife is an invalid and they bespeak the prayers of all Christian people.

Eliza Armstrong Cox has entered upon her third year's pastorate at the meetings at Sand Creek and Azalia, Indiana. In order to be nearer her work, she and her husband have moved from Columbus, Indiana, to Azalia, which will be their future home. All correspondence relating to the Missionary Advocate should be addressed to her at Azalia, Indiana.

Zeno H. Doan, after attending Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, has returned to his charge at Lynnvile, Iowa. He has now entered upon his fourth year's work at that place with every indication of another prosperous and successful year. During his absence the pulpit was supplied by Glenwood Stanley, Leona B. Doan and Professor Clark of the local high school.

NEWS NOTES

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, in Wilmington Yearly Meeting, will be held at Martinsville, Ohio, October 29-31.

The meeting at Plainview, Nebraska, has repaired its church building and parsonage at an expense of about $300.

The Monthly Meeting at Lynnvile, Iowa, has voted to continue its support of Mary E. White, of Jamaica, as its foreign pastor.

The meeting at Azalia, Indiana, held a very interesting echo meeting of the recent Western Yearly Meeting on Sabbath evening, October 11th.

It is reported that the Bicentennial of London Grove Meeting, Pennsylvania, was one of the best celebrations of its kind that has been held. The Philadelphia Friend prints an interesting sketch of this meeting in its issue of October 8th.

During the recent visits of Amos Kenworthy, of California, to Hamilton County, Indiana, he visited all the meetings of West Grove Quarter except one, holding two meetings at each place. His services were very acceptable and encouraging. He was enabled by the power of the Spirit to present some gospel truths in a new and inspiring way. While the physical man is wearing out we are rejoiced to see the spiritual man green in old age.

The Winona Conference News has been enlarged to an eight-page paper and the price of subscription has been advanced from fifteen to twenty-five cents. All remittances should be addressed to Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Indiana.

On October 11th, a collection of $10.75 was taken in the Clear Creek Meeting at Leesburg, Ohio, for the Widows' and Orphans' Fund, as printed in the Sunday School Times. The meeting chose Belgium as the country to which the money is to be sent.

The Philadelphia Friend announces that while military training is required of the students of Pennsylvania State College, at the present time members of the Society of Friends are excused from this service, and other work is substituted in its place.

Friends of Central City, Nebraska, joined with other churches in a union tent meeting, which began on September 20th. Cottage prayer meetings were held twice a week in five sections of the city previous to the opening. The evangelist was Charles Cullen Smith.

On the evening of October 4th, the meeting at Kansas City, Missouri, was addressed by Stella F. Jenkins on "The War Cloud as Viewed from English Soil." Miss Jenkins was one of the Americans in England at the beginning of the war and she had many experiences that were both interesting and illuminating.

William J. Sayers, pastor at Poughkeepsie, New York, met with a group of fifteen Friends in Buffalo, New York, October 1st, and talked over the probability of organizing a regular group meeting, until such time as a regular meeting could be established. The prospects seem bright as there are a number of Friends in this city and others are moving there from time to time. Half of those who met were young Friends.

The members of West Union Meeting, Monrovia, Indiana, recently held an interesting social at the church in honor of the retiring pastor, James M. Swander, and family, who have been with them for three years, but are about removing to Ridge Farm, Illinois, to take up the pastoral work at that place. About eighty-five were present, and many expressions of appreciation of the work of Brother Swander were given.

The occasion was one of much interest socially, with music, remarks and refreshments.

Cornwall Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Clintondale, New York, October 14-15. At the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight on Wednesday the subject for consideration was "In what relation does the Pastoral Committee stand to the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight?" In the evening a missionary conference was held, addressed by William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie. On Thursday a meeting for worship in the forenoon was followed by dinner, and the business session in the afternoon.

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at Monkton Ridge, Vermont, on October 10th and 11th. There were no visiting ministers present. At the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight on Saturday there was a discussion about the non-attendance of members and others. The regular business session opened with appropriate singing and prayer. A member in the body of the meeting spoke of the life of Caleb. On Sabbath morning Mary McCarthy delivered a soul stirring discourse from Ezekiel 22: 30. Many testimonies were given. In the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock a meeting was held by the smaller body of Friends from different parts of the country. Four old men sat upon the platform, and in time of prayer all the others stood. The evening meeting was well attended, and there were many expressions of praise to God for His goodness to us.

Greenville Quarterly Meeting was held at the Okoboji meeting at Arnolds Park, Iowa, on the 10th and 11th instant. There was but a small attendance on account of the condition of the roads. General Superintendent, H. R. Keates, was present throughout the meeting and his messages and counsel were well received. The condition of the two churches composing the Quarter was reported good. Waldo Reese is continuing his services another year at Greenville. There have been some additions and improvements to the church and the parsonage and the general condition is that of progress. At Arnolds Park, Grace M. Elliott, who has served this meeting the past six years as pastor, has resigned, and Ernest L. Gregory has taken charge of the church for the coming year. Mrs. Elliott will continue her residence here for a time while acting as Field Organizer of the Yearly Meeting W. F. M. S.

Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Iowa Falls, Iowa, Oct. 2-4. This is the first time it has been held here in ten years, as during that time, up to two years ago, this meeting was practically closed. The meeting house is being remodeled and though not quite completed, all were comfortably cared for and on Saturday a bountiful dinner was served in the dining room of the new basement. The pretty new parsonage is finished and was open to visitors during Quarterly Meeting. Two visiting ministers present were Harry R. Keates, of Des Moines, our Evangelistic Superintendent, and Isaac N. Rich, pastor at Marshalltown. Their messages were helpful and inspiring. On Friday evening Anna Swallum gave an interesting report of the Chicago International Sunday School Convention. At the business meeting it was voted to raise two hundred dollars to start again the work at Kanawha. The Sunday night meeting closed with an altar service, at which the greater part of the members reconsecrated their all to the great Head of the Church.

The meeting at Kansas City, Missouri, welcomed thirty-seven new members into church fellowship at the close of the morning services on September 27th. Besides these quite a number of persons have been received as affiliated members, who are a part of the working force of the meeting, but who for various reasons have not decided to give up their membership elsewhere. On the evening of October 15th a basket dinner and social reception for new members was held in the meeting house. On the evening of October 29th the women's Bible class will give an English tea at the church. On last Sunday evening the pastor, Arthur Jones, began a series of nine Sunday evening lectures on the general theme of "Character Building." The topics include "The Invoice of a Life," "Use of An Open Face," "Duty in Thrift," "Moral Integrity an Asset," "Recreation and Dissipation," "The Gospel of Work," "The Use and Abuse of Companionship," "The Personal Value of Religion," "The Demand for Optimism." Rally day was held at the church on September 27th, with an attendance reaching 168. At the church services on that day $36.00 per week was subscribed within a few minutes toward the church budget.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING NEWS

Samuel R. Neave and L. Oscar Moon recently paid a visit to Elkhorn Meeting in McDowell County, West Virginia, the newest, most remote and isolated meeting in Baltimore Yearly Meeting. It is located four hundred miles from Baltimore, in one of the most productive coal districts of the state, and its membership are almost all connected with the mining industry, chiefly as superintendents, foremen, mechanics and skilled laborers. The meeting has never had a pastor and for some years past has not even had a resident minister, but nevertheless is growing in attendance and membership, and is becoming a substantial force for religion and morality in the valley.

A short time ago an Italian girl of about fifteen years and of Catholic parentage, was received into membership, her parents expressing the desire that she might "grow up to be American and have American religion too." The meeting is setting before the Yearly Meeting an example of courageous and successful expansion.

On their visit Samuel R. Neave and L. Oscar Moon held special meetings and called upon a number of the families in their homes.

They also held a meeting at Vivian, seven miles from Elkhorn, where Friends have secured the use of a Presbyterian church and are meeting regularly once a month. There are half a dozen families of Friends here, and on their meeting days the meeting at Elkhorn is suspended and their forces combined for the new field of endeavor. The prospects for Friends here are encouraging.

Dunnings Creek Half Year's Meeting was held at Fishertown, Pennsylvania, on September 27th and 28th. Rufus P. King and L. Oscar Moon were the visiting ministers present, the latter being the Yearly Meeting Field Secretary. The attendance on Sunday morning and evening was the largest for some years, the house being well filled at both meetings. The Bible School at this place has almost doubled in attendance in two years through the activity of the organized adult and young people's classes. No minister lives in the community and the results have been attained by the members themselves.

Baltimore Quarterly Meeting was held at Ashton, Maryland, on October 10th to 12th. The Saturday evening conference was addressed by William C. Dennis, of Washington, on "Some Causes of the European War." The address was illuminating and was followed by a lively discussion. The Ministry and Oversight meeting seriously discussed the spiritual condition of the meetings and as a result should be able to apply some effective remedies this winter. The reports were generally encouraging but leave room for regret that more positive gains are not manifest. The meetings for worship were quite well attended by the people of the neighborhood.

IN HONOR OF PASTOR

The Christian Endeavor and Sabbath School held a very pleasant social affair at the Friends Church last Saturday evening in honor of their pastor, Z. H. Doan, and family, who have just been returned for the fourth year.

There was a goodly number present to enjoy the evening. George C. Renaud was master of ceremonies and introduced different persons who spoke in behalf of the various departments of the church. C. O. Macy brought greetings from the church in general; C. H. Newby for the Sabbath School; Miss Abbie Ratcliff for the Christian Endeavor; Mrs. Doan for the W. F. M. S.; Mr. Renaud spoke words of appreciation of the work done for the choir and their efficient leader, Mr. Gifford, and also of the help of Miss Taylor, both of whom rendered very pleasing solos during the course of the evening's program. Mr. Doan was called upon for remarks after the others had finished and voiced his pleasure at being permitted to commence another year of work with this people, pledging the best he could do for the cause of the Master.

At the close of his talk the audience sang "Blest be the Tie" and then gathered in informal groups over the church and were served with cake and coffee.

Mr. Doan and family have always taken a keen interest in anything that was for the betterment of the town and we are sure that every one present hopes for a pleasant year for pastor and people and friends of the church.—Lynnville, Iowa, Star.

"No Alum"

must be the watchword when the housewife buys baking powder.

Alum is well known to be a powerful astringent, and should never be used in food.

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M. D., of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "I consider the use of alum baking powder highly injurious to health."

Food economy now, more than ever, demands the purchase and use of those food articles of known high quality and absolute purity and healthfulness.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 1.

Subject—The Arrest and Trial of Jesus.

Lesson—Matthew 26: 47-68.

Golden Text—As a lamb is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before its shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth.—Isa. 53: 7.

Time—About daybreak, April 7 A. D. 30.

Place—Open court of the Ecclesiastical palace.

One is struck by the fact that Jesus was denied that element of fair play which is one of the finest of our Anglo-Saxon traits.

He was made the victim of false testimony, while the priest violated all rules of jurisprudence by endeavoring to compel Jesus to testify against Himself.

Civilized countries do not treat their worst criminals in such a manner. The populace that might have been friendly were still asleep and Jesus was at the mercy of his accusers and prejudiced officials.

Official Jewry was determined to get rid of Jesus at any cost, and the Roman officials were willing to curry favor with the Jewish leaders for the sake of a better hold upon Palestine. Amid such a setting justice was an unknown quantity.

To the house of Caiaphas. He was the high priest that year, and was son-in-law to Annas, before whom Jesus was first taken, and who yet retained great influence among the people.

Peter followed him afar off. Impulsive Peter was in a maze of uncertainty. Evidently he had not expected Jesus to be taken. John and Luke tell the remarkable story of Peter denying Jesus three times, when he came to himself, and remembering what Jesus had said, and remembering what Jesus had said, wept bitterly. It had been an awful night and before we criticise Peter too severely, we must make sure that we too are not following Jesus afar off.

Sought false witness. The Council of the Sanhedrim then in session was willing to violate any law to get rid of Jesus.

He hath spoken blasphemy. Any declaration by Jesus would have been adjudged blasphemy by such a tribunal.

He is worthy of death. The case was pre-judged and sentence had already been agreed upon. Jesus was condemned, but since that day His cause has continued to grow until it has literally filled the whole earth. Truth crushed to earth is bound to rise again.

Want Ads in THE AMERICAN FRIEND are proving their worth by bringing answers. Terms given upon application.

WANTED—A partner in a General Merchandise Store, in town of twelve hundred, with Friends' Meeting. (Must be a Christian and one interested in Church Work.) Will sell one-third or one-half interest in a good paying business doing $35,000 to $45,000 yearly business. For further particulars write to PHIL STEIN, Plainview, Nebraska.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 1.

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. XI. The Work Verse. Eccl. 9: 10. (Consecration Meeting.)

Faith without works is dead, and conversely works without faith accomplish nothing. Each is the proper complement of the other in a dual action that insures spiritual results.

Idleness is sin, but the blessing of the Lord is upon righteous labor. We are to be workmen that need not be ashamed.

"Do with thy might" whatever is to be done. If half the persistent effort could be put into the local meeting and the Christian Endeavor Society that is put into making business successful, there would be a revival that would shake many neighborhoods to their foundations.

Work while it is day. Work that is untimely is work wasted. Many an act that is proper in itself is fruitless because it was done at the wrong time.

Work with cheerfulness. Work is hard when the heart is not in it. Both by our living and by our service we will be enabled to win others for the kingdom.

"If any will not work, neither let him eat." (II Thess. 3: 10.) By the sweat of our brow we are to eat bread. Toil is sanctified when directed to righteous ends. "The workman is worthy of his meat."

Work for the ushering in of God's kingdom and thus prove your discipleship.

AN ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN COLLEGE PRESIDENTS

The Council of Church Boards of Education, at the St. Paul Conference last July, authorized the formation of an Association of American College Presidents for the purpose of co-ordinating the efforts and defining the place and function of the denominational college in the American educational system.

To perfect his organization, there has just been appointed by Dr. R. L. Kelly, Chairman of the St. Paul Conference, a committee consisting of nine representative college presidents: Presidents J. H. Main, D.D., Grinnell College, Iowa; Hill M. Bell, D.D., Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa; T. H. McMichael, D.D., Monmouth College, Illinois; T. W. Hinit, D.D., Central College, Danville, Ky.; Rush Rhees, D.D., Rochester University, New York; R. Watson Cooper, D.D., Upper Iowa University, Fayette, Iowa, and George R. Fellow, D.D., James Millikin University, Decatur, Illinois.

This committee will draft a constitution and by-laws for the Association, determine the relationship of that body with the Council of Church Workers in State Universities, and will assist in preparing the program for the January Congress on Christian Education to be held in Chicago. This Congress will represent thirteen Church Boards of Education, the Church Workers of more than a score of state universities, and over three hundred colleges and universities throughout the United States.

There has been for many years an organization of state universities and an organization of the leading secular institutions, but the hundreds of denominational colleges in America have not heretofore co-ordinated their work. The organizing of these institutions will form a noteworthy epoch in the development of our educational system. The program of this Congress will be announced later.

RALPH D. KYLE,

Secretary of the Board of Education of the United Presbyterian Church in America.

FIELD SPORTS

When you keep a boy interested in football, baseball, tennis, and the like, you lessen the chances that he will get interested in things not so good for him.

The Youth's Companion, since its enlargement, gives generous space to this matter of athletic training, and gets the best coaches in the country to write for it.

How to practice to become a first-rate pitcher, how to train for a race, how to learn the newest strokes in swimming—these and a hundred other topics of the greatest interest to boys—to girls, too, for that matter—are touched upon in this important department of The Companion.

And this is only a small part of the service which The Companion renders in any home which it enters. It has points of contact with a hundred interests.

If you do not know The Companion as it is today, let us send you one or two current issues free, that you may thoroughly test the paper's quality. We will send also the Forecast for 1915.

Every new subscriber who sends $2.00 for the fifty-two weekly issues of 1915 will receive free all the issues of the paper for the remaining weeks of 1914; also The Companion Home Calendar for 1915.

To Be a Man

BY WILLIAM O. SHEPARD, JR.

To be a man!
In all that goodly word may mean
And all a man may be when seen
Even by God's eyes,
And all that it implies
Of large or little, all that lies Between
The victor and the vanquished, heaven and hell,
Between o'ercoming nobly and failing well.

And not to be a hero all life long!
A hero, armored only against outrageous wrong,
Is pierced by glancing arrows to sharp pain
And, spat upon, he needs must spit again.
He dares not speak soft words if so he be
But poor enough to own an enemy.
Defeated, he can sing no quiet song,
But blusters coward-like and says he hates.

Ah, no!
To be a man and smile,
Though teeth and fists be clinched the while,
Though eye to eye against the leering foe
And answering deadly blow with manful blow.
To smile the more in bickerings and debates
Of petty strife.
To have a life
Horizon large, and towering skies above
All spite and scorn and everything but love.

This shall not be my symphony—
A wheedling flute-note lacking strength to die.
This is a war cry!
To be a man!
That's I.

—Central Christian Advocate.

Tell Your Friends

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be sent to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1916, for $1.50, the price of one year's subscription. The general testimony is to the effect that the paper is getting better all the time. Tell your friends and neighbors about this special offer, that they may get the benefit of the good things now appearing. Some of the very best features we have been able yet to offer are being planned for the coming winter. No Friends' family can afford to do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the paper needs the support of every Friend's family.

It is equally important that all subscribers shall continue to patronize this periodical of the church. It must be put on a paying basis before another year. It is an obligation in which every Friend's family shares a direct responsibility. Subscribe this week.

Monthly Meeting Chronicle

We continue to get orders almost daily for the Chronicle of "Slow Valley Monthly Meeting." Many a meeting will find in it an inspiration and an incentive to undertake larger things in meeting the needs of the community, if copies can be put into the hands of the members. Price, single copies, 15 cents. Ten copies, $1.00. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Membership in 1914

In the issue of October 8th we published statistics showing the membership of the various Yearly Meetings held up to that time this year, as compared with the membership of these same Yearly Meetings last year. Since that time Kansas Yearly Meeting reports a total membership this year of 11,555, a loss of 303 as compared with last year. The totals show a net increase in all Yearly Meetings, including London and Dublin, of 295. Of this number the American Yearly Meetings including Canada, show a net increase of 152. Baltimore Yearly Meeting is yet to be held and statistics there are not yet available.

"With Eagles' Wings"

BY JENNIE E. HUSSEY

My heart is weary of its load
Of daily toil and care,
While journeying a lonely road
Beset with many a snare.
I long for dove-like wings to soar
Above the fret and strife,
To some far distant, peaceful shore,
Beyond this mortal life.

But to my heart a whispered word
Of promise comes anew,
Like cooling breezes softly stirred,
Or summer's evening dew.
A thought of strength beyond my need
The poet-prophet sings,
That "They that wait upon the Lord Shall mount on eagles' wings."

Immeasurably stronger, they,
Than wings of dove can be;
To higher heights more far away
They mount exultingly.
And thus, my soul, renewed once more,
Shall soar aloft and sing
New praises never voiced before,
To God, my heavenly King.

Henniker, New Hampshire.

Statement of English Friends on Peace

Following the announcement in a recent issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that 5,000 copies of the statement of English Friends on the Peace question were on the way from London to THE AMERICAN FRIEND office, a number of requests for copies have been received. We have word that the packages have arrived in New York City but, being sent by freight, they have been slow in arriving at Richmond. As soon as they are received here all orders on hand will be filled. All other orders will be honored upon receipt of amounts equal to two cents per copy, this to cover the cost of sending them out, the balance to be forwarded to English Friends for the printing.

Personal Workers' League

THE AMERICAN FRIEND would like to know how many Friends meetings in America have a Personal Workers' League or some committee on invitation and welcome that takes the place of such a league. We fear that too many meetings are inclined to put the burden of this work upon the pastor or to let it go by default altogether. With a league or with a committee charged with the responsibility of setting to work to win the careless and indifferent in the community to the meeting and Bible school, there are few meetings in our judgment that would not show a substantial growth in membership during the coming year. It is an experiment worth trying. We would like to have brief accounts of the work being done by such organizations already in existence in any of our meetings. We welcome also brief statements of the organization of such committees or leagues in any of the Yearly Meetings.

The Church and the Social Order

It must be apparent even to the casual observer that the ideals of the Christian church are far from being the practical working standards of the social order. Theoretically the doctrine of the golden rule is perhaps accepted by the world in general. Practically it is trampled under foot daily by multitudes in business and social life. In every political forum the stump speaker proclaims the doctrine of political probity in the world of politics and government, but in actual practice graft and bribery and moral cowardice still characterize the public life of all too many of our officials.

With universal accord the rulers of nations avow their dependence upon Jehovah, and fix the Christian standard as the rule of national conduct, but for the most part in times of international stress they are ready to set at naught their professions, trample under foot the doctrines of the Prince of Peace and turn their peaceful lands into fields of hate and awful carnage. Civilization itself, while confessing allegiance to the Christian faith, is yet prone to worship at the shrine of Mammon rather than at the altars of Jehovah. The world has hardly yet ceased to regard government as the instrument of material prosperity rather than of righteousness. For the most part our social reforms end in spasms, because the public is not ready to pay the price of a reconstruction of the social order, wherein the worship of Jehovah makes strenuous ethical demands upon the people in their daily life.

Ancient Israel strayed far from the teachings of the law and paid the penalty of going into a forced captivity, because she was unwilling to adjust the practices of her social and business life to the religious precepts of her founder, her law giver and her prophets. By going after strange gods, rulers and people alike were merely trying to find a less exacting religion that would content itself with the formalities of outward worship, and that would not be concerned about the daily collective life of the people. To her sorrow Israel learned that she could not divorce business and politics and social life from the service of the most high God.

Apparently the world is facing again the same stern lesson. It must learn that it cannot with safety serve Jehovah on Sunday and the devil the rest of the week, that business ethics must harmonize themselves with Christian ethics, that social standards must be the Christian standards, that political conduct must be governed by the rule of religious conduct, that government is ordained of God and must be constructed and operated after the pattern of His plan, that individually and collectively, the rule of conduct of the Christian life must become the rule of conduct of daily life.

The world has gotten too far away from an authoritative religion that appeals with binding force to every relationship of life. The dictum of righteous obligations falls too lightly upon organized society. The old prophets were continually proclaiming the doctrine that obedience to the divine will was a requirement upon which depended all hope of national and individual prosperity. No less in our day does government under Jehovah call for reforms and the putting away of evils. We need again the voice of the prophets calling the nations to obedience to the divine behests, so that in their internal adjustments and in their outward relationships they may realize the divine favor upon them.

Why has the world been loth to accept the ideals of the church as its working principles? Partly perhaps because the church itself has not always been consistent; because the church has sometimes proclaimed one doctrine in the pulpit and in its literature, while many of its members have practised another in social life, at the polls and in the marts of trade; because the church has taught the principles of brotherhood, and in actual practise has set boundaries for classes and races; because the church has at times compromised its message to suit the needs of circumstance and environment; because the church has seemed idealistic rather than practical and sometimes has blinded its eyes to the conditions of life all about it; and partly because the world has refused to take the church seriously or to inform itself about what the church is really doing for the betterment of the people. The world is prone to see the faults of the church and to overlook its virtues, and it has often failed to distinguish between professional and realistic Christianity.

Recently two leaders in the local industrial world confessed that for many years they had not been inside a church building. Although men of standing in the community, and avowedly interested in social reforms, they admitted a total lack of confidence in the church as they viewed it from the outside. Their plea was that the church and the ministry lacked sympathy with the masses in their home life, no less than in their social and industrial life. We may readily concede that the men were wrong in their attitude, and that holding aloof from the church they had failed to be conversant with what the church is really doing in the way of human uplift. But to stop there is to ignore a serious aspect of the problem. The church cannot afford to rest under the charge, whether it be true or false, that it is unsympathetic with the masses. Its problem is to convince the world of its sincerity in preaching the gospel of love and brotherhood. Its task is to show the world that the religion which it professes is the religion of the heart and life.

At a time when the ideals of democracy are being put to the test of solving our social problems, the church needs to exemplify its teaching that in the Christian brotherhood there is neither Jew nor Gentile, neither bond nor free, but that all are one in Christ Jesus. It is up to the church as in no other age, both to preach and practise a gospel that meets the needs of the world at every point. It is time that the Lord's prayer was set to the task of righting the wrongs of earth until human society shall be made to conform to the heavenly idea. It is time to Christianize the social order of the world.

The Gains in Temperance Reform

The election on November 3rd will mark another milestone in the march of sober-America against the organized liquor traffic. The count of the votes alone will tell whether or not the campaign is to be temporarily halted for better constructive endeavor, or whether it has gained sufficient momentum to go forward against all opposition. In no previous campaign has there been such extended and persistent pounding at the citadel of rum as in this year of 1914.

Beginning with the great conventions of temperance forces last November, which surpassed all records in their attendance and enthusiasm, and gaining tremendous momentum by that historic march upon the nation's capitol in December, the prohibition movement has gone forward with unabated zeal and with startling success. The movement may have been said to have reached the popular stage, popular because it is so largely successful and because of its appeal to the sober-minded judgment of the nation. At last the Republic is thinking upon the question, a fact which bodes ill for the un-American saloon.

The liquor traffic has reached the appealing stage, where it is down upon its knees begging for sympathy and imploring to be let alone. That it promises to be good was to be expected. The condemned man is willing to consent to any terms if only the sentence of execution be stayed. But the saloon has sinned out its day of grace. It has no legitimate place in a Christian civilization. Through political intrigue, by transforming itself into an angel of light, because certain electors here and there are more ready to play the political game than they are to do a citizen's part in a great cause, the saloon may abide for a time, but it is incapable of permanent reformation. The worst thing about it is itself. No amount of pruning can make it respectable. It is evil and wholly evil.

The signs of coming and final victory are upon every hand. Half our national population is living in prohibitory territory. Ten states have made the saloon an outlaw, while in thirty-three others it has been driven into corners before the onrush of an enlightened and determined public opinion. Physiologically, alcohol is an outlaw everywhere. Our leading scientists both here and abroad proclaim it a poison and never a food. The employers of labor have been stirred to action by the discovery that approximately sixty per cent. of all the accidents in our factories are due to strong drink. It is an enemy to efficiency everywhere. No railroad, no manufacturing institution, no business of any sort wants the patron of the saloon in its employ. Furthermore, these institutions will not have him, and already leading men in the business world are declaring that in the near future there will be as much sentiment against locating a saloon in the vicinity of a factory as there is against locating it near a church or schoolhouse.

The general retail trade recognizes the saloon as its worst competitor and, therefore, an unnecessary competitor. The ban of the church, of education, of commerce, of science, of civilization itself is upon it. The taxpayer is beginning to see that whether he patronizes the saloon or not, he must help to pay for the burdens which it imposes. Upon November 3rd, this institution ought to be given a further boost into oblivion. The liquor traffic is doomed.

To be a Christian means being right seven days in the week, in the store, the shop, the field, at the ballot box, in the home, the school and at the corner grocery.

Has Jesus Christ had a fair chance in your life? Until He does, His mission will not have served its purpose so far as you individually are concerned.

We are constantly sowing our tomorrows. A little sunshine today will open the door for a harvest of happiness tomorrow.

Friends and the War

BY ROYAL J. DAVIS

It may seem paradoxical to suggest that a time when the whole world is looking on with horror at a great war, is the time when an organization that has always stoutly opposed war might well consider its position regarding it. Is not this like saying that when you have convinced somebody of the correctness of your views upon some matter, you ought then to begin to have doubts of its correctness yourself? What I am proposing, however, is not that Friends should begin to have doubts about peace and war, but merely that this is a good time for us to find out just what we think concerning warfare. Our traditional and official attitude is for everyone to read. It is an attitude of uncompromising opposition to all war, offensive or defensive. We point to members of our Society who have suffered imprisonment and torture for their refusal to bear arms. We call attention to the fact that we have always advocated peaceable solutions of all difficulties. We sometimes go to the verge of proclaiming that if everybody had been like us and our fathers, war would long ago have vanished.

Why, then, suggest that we consider our position upon war? I make this suggestion because I do not believe that many of us have ever really considered it. I feel sure that most of us, the great mass of us, have accepted the Society's opposition to war very much as we have accepted the ten commandments—because it seemed the thing to do. Everybody else seemed to accept it; why should not we? But that many Friends have actually thought deeply upon the subject I do not believe. One reason for this scepticism is that whenever I have heard the subject discussed in any but a perfunctory way, I have seen differences of opinion that ranged from belief in absolute non-resistance to belief in the policy of a big navy. The moment we forget we are Friends, that moment we find that our convictions are not so settled, so unanimous, as we had taken it for granted that they were.

I shall not attempt here to consider the whole question of our position in this matter, but I do desire to offer an idea or two upon one or two phases of it. We have been inclined to dwell upon the sacredness of human life as one of the leading elements in the case. Ignoring the material and often sordid considerations often put forward in discussions of the right and wrong of war, we have made our stand upon the divinity of the individual. This is in accordance with our philosophy of the universe, and it is a point well worth making—within limitations. Human life is sacred. But so are many other things. And in singling out this one thing and putting all our emphasis upon it, we run the risk of grave distortion of the reality. How can a Society whose members have from the first been ready to suffer a martyr's death speak as if there were nothing so sacred in its eyes as life? The truth is that there are few persons in this world to whom life is the supremely sacred possession. Love life as we may, we must be base indeed if we love not other things more. It would be nearer our practice, as well as the facts, to assert that honor is the sacred thing. If the life of one of us stood between the community and safety, as in an outbreak of fire or flood, should we not be base churls to prate of the sacredness of human life rather than to throw our own away with a great joy that we could make such rare use of it? If the reply be made that it is right and proper to give one life for the sake of saving many, since the sacredness of a group of lives is naturally greater than the sacredness of one, I would point out that this is a step in retreat from the unqualified doctrine of the sacredness of human life. How much farther back from it one will go will depend upon one's general way of viewing things.

I am sometimes tempted to wonder whether our peace doctrine is related to our temperament as a Society. Are we lovers of peace mainly because we are quietistic? I should be sorry to think so, for that would mean that we were erecting a trait into a principle. One who is made faint by the sight of blood will have difficulty in getting people to believe that his opposition to bloodshed is based upon lofty and disinterested motives. Yet I confess that the idea disturbs me a little. I should feel more certain of the solidity of the ground under our feet if we talked less about the holiness of peace and more about the unholiness of international injustice. Fervent congratulations to the President and to one another upon escape from war with Mexico seem to me eminently sensible, for a war with Mexico would be the worst solution of this difficult question that could be devised. But to shake the head over the mention of war, as if it were always and necessarily the worst alternative that could be chosen, seems to me to be assuming more than we can prove, more, at all events, than we do prove or try to prove.

My plea is simply that we do not take refuge in an ostensibly axiomatic deliverance, as if a declaration of faith demonstrated anything but the opinion of those making it. On the contrary, let us know what we believe, and why we believe it, and let us not be in too great a hurry to condemn those who differ from us. Let us find out why they differ. Let us understand more fully the problems to be solved by those who are actively engaged in administering the governments of the world. It is not an act of great courage, as it appears to me, to say what a fine world this would be if everybody were like us. What would we do if the burden of managing international affairs were partly upon our shoulders?

Let no one say that I am trying in an indirect and roundabout fashion to defend the present war. I think it is one of the most needless conflicts in history. I am only endeavoring to set forth the desirability of our waging war against war with greater intelligence and consequently with greater success.

New York City.

The Gospel Team Movement

(The following is a continuation of the article on the Gospel Team Movement, printed in last week's issue, and is taken from the same publication compiled by Mr. Stranahan. We present this as a practical phase of the movement, without which the account would be incomplete.)

HOW IT IS DONE

So many inquiries come to us asking for information as to just how a meeting is conducted by the Gospel Teams that we will attempt the almost impossible task of putting into print the very things that are said and done. None of these speeches is manufactured, but the account is a very faithful abbreviated record of what certain men actually give as their testimony.

Just previous to the meeting, the Team has spent perhaps a half hour, if possible, in a season of most earnest prayer—prayer that is freed from all formality and is real communion with God. The Team men will sit on the platform and the leader is in charge of the whole meeting. Every effort is made to keep the whole meeting under the direct leadership of the Spirit. Good, lively singing is a valuable aid to the later work. Scripture reading and vocal prayer will usually be engaged in several times during the meeting. The leader will announce the hymns and after a few introductory remarks will introduce the speakers.

The Leader—"The first speaker will be Mr. Reporter, at one time Chief of Police in Wichita, and the man who enforced for the first time the prohibitory law in the city."

Mr. Reporter—"I was raised in an infidel home and made it my aim in Bible reading to see things I could tear to pieces. I married a Christian woman. When we lost our first-born and people told me it was a judgment of God, I became soured on the community and moved West. In a short time we were located—God was leading but I did not know it—in a community where a mighty revival was going on. I did not attend, although my wife did. One night as she knelt by my bed and begged of me to attend, I promised I would. The next night at the meeting the Evangelist talked to me and as I started to argue he turned, saying, 'I can't take time to talk to you when there are so many here who are really interested in salvation.' It struck me. In a few nights I was converted and through these many years God has blessed me and what He has done for me He can do for any man."

The Leader—"Isn't it wonderful what great things God can do, and how He can keep us in all sorts of temptations? We will now hear from Mr. Meat Dealer, a man who was converted in the Billy Sunday Meetings, who has stood true ever since."

Mr. Meat Dealer—"It is not so much my own experience that it seems to me the Spirit would have me tell you, but what took place as the result of my conversion. Just as soon as the Lord saved me, we established a family altar and I began saying grace at the table. It was a new experience to our little girl, four years old, and she was much interested. Next neighbor to us was a family who had lost a child just a short time before, who was about the age of our little girl. She found a warm place in their hearts and was frequently over there, even staying to meals and sitting in the high chair, now unused by their own child. A few days after my conversion she was over there and just before they started to eat she said, 'Ain't you going to say something? My papa does now.' The husband hesitated, and in confusion asked her to 'say something.' It was but a small thing by a little child, but it broke the lonely hearts of this man and woman. They were converted by God using the fact that I say grace. Oh, you Christians! It means much to observe the little things and always be true to your Master."

Mr. Leader—"Just notice in this story of Mr. Meat Dealer how all things work together. God is true to His promise. One man yields to the Savior, establishes a family altar, and a neighborhood is blessed. Some of you may be blocking a blessing from a whole community. It pays to yield. Our next speaker is one who has had a varied career though constantly marked with sin. Just before Mr. Cattle Buyer speaks I am going to ask Mr. M. to pray that this testimony may count where it is most needed. Let us all stand while he prays."

The prayer is characterized by an absence of the usual phraseology of church prayers. The man has learned to pray by just talking to God and expecting Him to hear and answer. There can be no doubt about Him hearing, either. Then comes the testimony:

Mr. Cattle Buyer—"I drifted out West and married a Christian girl. We were blessed with a fine family of children, but I went deeper in sin. I drank, gambled, and wasted my time in the pool rooms. The Billy Sunday meetings didn't phase me. Soon after they closed my little girl climbed upon my knees and said, 'Papa, when I get big I want to marry a man just like you.' That was going too fast for me, for I didn't want a son-in-law as low down as I was. Then in a little while a bunch of my friends was going to H. with a Gospel Team and asked me to go along. I thought I was the wise guy, and would go with them just for the sport of it. To keep my courage up and embarrass them, I put a pint bottle in my pocket to use in any emergency. When the call came, A. B. came to me and said that now was the time for me, and though I put him off and said to wait until we got in the car going home, he would not be bluffed. Finally I yielded, and oh, how glad I am! My home has been changed. My good wife, who never ceased to pray for me, has been rewarded. I went home, and all that night, nearly, I wrestled with God. I had been awfully profane, and I did not see how I could break the habit; but God has kept me and only once, three days after my conversion, have I fallen, and that is now pardoned. The old whiskey habit has gone and, praise the Lord, I am a new man. Men, it pays to serve Him."

The Leader—"There must be something in religion when a change like this comes over a man. It is a great way from a whiskey-drinking, gambling, swearing cattle buyer to a clean, praying, soul-winning president of a Men's Bible Class. Let's sing number 38. You all know the chorus:

"Tis a great change for me, a great change for me!
Oh, now I am happy! from sin I've been set free!
From out of the darkness I've stepped into the light,
And oh, 'tis a great change for me!"

"That was fine! But maybe some young fellow is thinking that these men sowed their wild oats and then came out all right, so he guesses he will take his chance and have a good time. We have one man, one of a great multitude who might speak, who has a message for just that sort. He will now speak."

Mr. Wholesaler—"I was raised in a Christian home, the parsonage of a preacher. I cannot remember the day when we did not have the Bible read and prayer. I have always gone to Sunday School and church. During my first year at college I made a public confession of my Savior, and all these years He has been most precious to me. These men on the Team are all my friends and as they have opened their hearts to me and told of their struggles to break from evil habits, and have laid bare the scars on their souls, I could not but humbly thank God that He could take boys into His Kingdom and save them throughout life. Not through any merit of my own, but because of the infinite mercy of the Lord I am saved now. It is great to know He keeps all that is committed unto Him. He is the best partner any young man can have. Take Him as yours."

The Leader—"Our last speaker is Mr. Real Estate."

Mr. Real Estate—"I left home when just a young man and wandered from place to place. My folks thought I had been killed in the San Francisco fire. I got back to Kansas City, was married, and soon had a prosperous business, but wasn't satisfied. There was something inside that was not at rest. One day I said to my wife, 'I'm going to sell out and move on our farm, and then I will be happy.' But I wasn't. God was out there, and He wouldn't give me peace until I had acknowledged Him. We then came to Wichita, bought us a home and an auto, promising ourselves that by joy-riding over the good roads we would have a fine time, but still I had no peace. We traveled through the South and West, but everywhere was the same unrest of soul. The Billy Sunday meetings came, and on the last night my mother, who had come to visit us, asked me to go with her. I didn't care much about it, but told her if she really wanted to go I would take her. We were a little late, and seats were scarce. An usher that I knew found seats for my wife and mother, and I was about to leave when a man handed me a ticket for a seat in the chorus, and I went up there. The sermon was a powerful one, and something seemed to say, 'If you go out of this building unsaved, you never will be.' I hardened my heart until the invitation was given, and then I said, 'I'll not go down, even if I am forever lost, unless Mr. B. comes and speaks to me.' I thought I was safe, for I didn't think he could find me. There I stood, fighting it out. All around me people were going. This one and that one spoke to me, but no! I wouldn't go unless Mr. B. came. Tears were blinding me, the meeting was just about to close, when a man touched me on the shoulder and said, 'Come on, old fellow! now is your time!' and it was Mr. B. It broke me all to pieces. There was nothing left for me to stand on, and I yielded. I went and took Billy Sunday by the hand, and gave God my heart, and how I do thank God that He forgave me. He has brought peace to my heart, and He will do the same for you if you will let Him."

The Leader now casts the net. Each leader has his own methods. The greatest variety of methods is used. The needs of the people as the Spirit indicates are taken into consideration. The Christians may be asked to form a circle around the room, and the unsaved invited to join the circle as they make confession. All the men may be asked to come to the front, regardless of their experience, and there, in a heart-to-heart talk, the unsaved be urged to make decision. Whatever method is used, an effort is made to get people to definitely commit themselves. Names and addresses are taken and handed to the pastor of the church of their choice.

During the drawing of the net, invitation songs will be sung, and the members of the Team and others who will, go out through the congregation taking people by the hand and inviting them to the Christian life. This is the most effective part of the meeting. Many of these laymen know very little about the technique of personal work, but their hearts are on fire, and they show they mean business. There is little argument, just a simple "Come on, now is your time. Give Jesus your heart." It is not so much what is said, but who says it and the power of the Spirit manifested in the big-hearted, red-blooded men who invite. These men in such times "hustle" for souls just as they on week days "hustle" for business, and they get results.

Supposed Saying of George Fox Questioned

BY MEAD A. KELSEY

A few months ago the writer in an article contributed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND made use of the following quotation, attributing it to George Fox in accordance with popular usage:

I knew Jesus and He was precious to my soul, but I found something within that would not be sweet, that would not be patient, that would not be kind. I did what I could to keep it down but it was there. I besought Jesus to do something for me and when I gave Him my will He came in and took out all that would not be sweet and patient and kind, and shut the door.

Not long after the appearance of the article referred to I received a letter from a Friend in Iowa asking me if I could locate the quotation in the writings of Fox. This I had already attempted, without questioning the validity of the passage, but was not successful. I, however, tried again, making use of the volumes of Fox's works which were at hand, but again I was compelled to give it up. Then I wrote to Rufus M. Jones, hoping that he would be able to throw light upon it as he had edited "An Autobiography of George Fox," and would naturally be familiar with his writings. He however, replied that he had no recollection of the passage and advised me to write to Norman Penney, Librarian of Friends' Reference Library, Devonshire House, London, as the one most likely to render assistance in my quest. I at once wrote Norman Penney, from whom I received the following initial note under date of August 17:

Thy letter of the 25th ultimo is to hand this morning. I do not recognize the quotation as that of Fox, but I will look around in his works and I may happen on it.

Later under date of August 29, I received another letter which follows:

Dear Friend—Respecting the quotation enclosed I forwarded it to Miss Richardson, the author of a little book of selections from George Fox's writings, and I send thee her reply.

I purpose to insert the quotation in the Journal of Friends' Historical Society under the heading "Author Wanted." I am sorry that we do not seem able definitely to state the authorship.

Thine sincerely,

Norman Penney.

Following is the letter from Miss Richardson:

Dear Mr. Penney—No; I have not met the passage enclosed in my Fox readings.

My own feeling about it is that the very utmost that can be said about it as a whole is that it might just conceivably have come from the pen of Fox. The style from the words "I found" to "it was there" is, I think, typically Foxian; and that little vivid touch at the end, "and shut the door" recalls him. But the remainder of the passage does not commend itself to me as authentic either in matter or in manner.

Yours sincerely,

Dorothy M. Richardson.

This is all up to date. If any to whom this may come can add further light it will be a valued contribution to our Quaker literature and mayhap to the truth.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

As showing the changes going on in the medical world, the Cincinnati hospital used 1,230 pints of intoxicating liquors during the first six months of 1895, and only 7½ pints during the first six months of 1914.

Prohibition has done great things for Oklahoma. It has kept money in the channels of legitimate business; it has saved weak men from a bad habit and it has safeguarded our youth.—Governor Cruce of Oklahoma.

Prohibition works all right in Kansas—whatever the whisky advocates in other states may say. If they think not, let them come to Kansas and open a saloon in Hiawatha, Lindsborg, Wellington, Dodge City or in any one of the thousand clean and wholesome towns which adorn this commonwealth and see what will happen and how quick it will happen. When their tribulations are over, and they return to their old homes in the whisky states, whatever else they may say of Kansas they will not contend that prohibition does not prohibit!—John S. Dawson, Kansas Attorney-General.

The Philadelphia Quartz Company, of Chester, Pennsylvania, has offered an increase of ten per cent. in wages to every employe who would promise not to use strong drink, the managers declaring that they expect to be more than repaid for the additional wages by the improved service they will gain from sober workmen. Nearly every employe, it is said, signed the pledge after the offer was made.—The Congregationalist.

There are thirty thousand feeble-minded persons in New York who are at large and there are thirty-four thousand in public institutions. Statistics show that the use of alcoholic liquor by parents is the most prolific cause for imbecility. The reckoning with this terrible evil in our country is a most terrible one.—Herald and Presbyterian.

Professor Bayer of Austria, who made a careful study of the effects of moderate drinking (beer) on school children, found that abstainers stood higher in their studies than those who drank one or two glasses of beer daily. On account of their beer drinking habits large numbers of German university students are compelled to prolong their studies one or more years before receiving their degrees. This is also true of young men who attend the various colleges and universities in the United States. Almost invariably students who excel in each class are to be found among the abstainers.—Col. Maus, Medical Corps, U.S. Army.

Prohibition in North Dakota and its effects are described by Governor L. B. Hanna and Judge Charles A. Pollock of Dakota. "In August," said Governor Hanna, "we had in our state penitentiary 172 men and 3 women; not a very large number when you consider that we have a little over 600,000 population. That would be about one to every 3,500 of our population, but when you consider that over 50 per cent. of the men in our state penitentiary are men who are not residents of the state, but come into the state during the harvest season, then we find that there is only about one for every 7,000 of our population.—Central Christian Advocate.

Against such a mercenary and rapacious enemy the moral forces of the nation must combine to strike with all the wisdom and courage at their command. The principle of prohibition has established itself as the right and duty of every community which would rid itself of an agency which saps and drains its best life. Thus far prohibition has won its way in this country by contesting through local initiative and energy every inch of territory. Sometimes it has lost ground, but in the overwhelming number of cases it has recovered it. Steadily the unit of prohibition has grown larger, expanding from town to city, from city to county or district and from county and district to state.—The Congregationalist.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

Forgiven Sins Will Not Be Mentioned in the Judgment

BY FRED E. CARTER

Text—"There is, therefore, now, no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."

According to Young, the Greek word for "condemnation" in this text is "Katakrima," which means "judgment against." Therefore, we can read: "There is therefore now no 'judgment against' them which are in Christ Jesus."

"If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed * * * all his transgressions that he hath committed shall not be mentioned unto him."—Ezekiel 18: 21, 22.

In Isa. 43: 25, Jer. 31: 34, Heb. 8: 12 and 10: 17, God offers to remember our sins no more if we turn from them. It is clear from this that there is no judgment, so far as sin is concerned, to them that are in Christ. For if God blots them off the record and remembers them no more forever, and the forgiven sinner continues faithful, there will be nothing to stand against him at the judgment.

A well known writer speaks of "the accusing spirit who flew up to heaven's court with Peter's oath, blushing as he gave it in, and the recording angel dropped a tear on the page and blotted it out forever."

There is that thought in every man's mind that the angel is ever recording the evil deeds of men. The truth which this embodies is the omniscience of God. We feel that he takes note of every word, thought and deed. And yet he declares, "I will remember them no more."

Can this mean that there is no responsibility for past sins on the believer? Some will say, "Yes, so far as guilt is concerned, but there remains a mark." We do not dare say "stain," for the Word says "They shall be whiter than snow." Do we not take this view of forgiveness because we have not learned to forgive as God forgives?

We say, "O yes, I can forgive, but I can't forget," which usually means that we have only half forgiven.

Take that most extreme case, where the woman was brought to Jesus, and her accusers had slunk away, because in His presence they suddenly realized their own sins were as an open book to Him. And then He stooped down and wrote her sentence in the forgetful sands and said to her "Where are thine accusers?" and she replied, "Gone," and He said, "Go and sin no more."

God does have power to destroy the influence of the past, or Jesus made a failure when He came to destroy the works of the Devil. We doubt this; heredity, we say, is a thing that sticks to us. We admit there is heredity, but we must not forget that there ALSO IS GOD, and He never surrenders His sovereignty to heredity or the power of sin.

Can God abolish the effects of the past? Not all.

There will still often be a price to be paid, and if a man will pay it manfully God's grace can take care of the law of sowing and reaping. "Whatsoever a man soweth" applies to good seed as well as to bad, and the increase of the good seed will be as much greater than that of the bad seed as God is greater than the power of evil.

To be sure, we cannot go back and erase one line of what is written, but God has access to the past; He is not shackled as we are by time. All past and future are present with Him; He has it in His Hand, and can frustrate, divert and overpower streams that pour down out of the past. He will restore the years which the locust hath eaten.

The man in Christ is a new creature and "Old things have passed away and all things have become new," and it is said of the new creation "The former things shall not be remembered nor come into mind." In John 5: 24, we are told that the believer shall not come into condemnation, and in this case the word "condemnation" is taken from the Greek word "Krisis," which means "the process of judgment"; so the true meaning is, "He that believeth on Him that sent Me HATH everlasting life and shall not come into 'the process of judgment.'"

Some will ask, "Does not Paul say all shall appear at the judgment?" Yes, "that every man shall receive as his work has been." For how can sins that have been cast into the depths of the sea" and "removed as far as the east is from the west," and "sins that have gone on beforehand unto judgment," ever appear against the forgiven man at the judgment?

The judgment to the man in Christ can mean only the welcome voice of the Master saying, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." The judgment to him will mean a great day of awards. To the man in Christ the terrors of the judgment are past; he has been tried, condemned and executed in the person of his surety, Jesus Christ. He has become our substitute and the law has been satisfied.

The great truth of a vicarious atonement is the guarantee for this act of forgetful pardon. God forgets our sins as well as forgives them. Herein is the love of God made manifest. Can Eternal Mind cast out of itself a subject of knowledge? Can Infinite Wisdom cease to remember? With men it seems impossible, but with God all things are possible.

Into the Street Which Is Called Straight

BY JACOB LINDLEY SPICER

Deep in the heart of all normal persons is the desire to live in the "Street called Straight." Even professional crooks point with pride to whatever they do or attempt which is really "straight."

Cheap linen? Handkerchiefs at thirty cents a dozen are marked "Warranted Pure Linen." The claim of purity is on all inferior articles, showing how deep-seated is the conviction that the pure, the straight, the good, are the really worth while in life.

Saul was found in the "Street called Straight" after he had seen the Heavenly vision, had repented, confessed and prayed. Now he was in a receptive, obedient frame of mind, and he could be taught "the way" more perfectly. God sends us upon many little errands for Him if we are "buying up the opportunity." These little stories from the flowing stream of experiences may prove of interest to many another who may be sent to impart a Divine message to an individual.

No. 1—"OLD BROM AND HIS CRONIES"

Along the reaches of the upper Hudson was an old weather worn house standing a little back from the road. Large lilac and snowball bushes, long uncared for, grew into a thick, rank hedge in front.

Here lived two men and their three sisters with numerous children and grandchildren. The house and people bore a very unsavory reputation.

Tales of drinking bouts and wild orgies were afloat, and like many another rich community, there had been allowed to grow up this resort which was a menace to the moral and physical good of the neighborhood.

There was an old church building, long unused, within a short distance, and many poor children with no religious privileges in the neighborhood. Those who had horses and a love for church and Sunday School, drove a few miles away to a village.

My father and mother and other members of the Society of Friends, though living quite a distance away, were attracted to the needs of this place and opened an excellent Bible School. A little uncared-for girl, who lived at "Old Brom's," was induced to attend. Money was raised to purchase clothes for her. She would go to a kind neighbor's, be washed and dressed in the new clothes, go to the Bible School, then stop at the same home on her return and don her old garments.

Years passed; this girl had taken many good books, papers, and best of all, the Bible, into the house where sin seemed to rule. She had grown into womanhood and slipped away to the city.

One First-day morning a message came to our little white meeting house that this family desired to know about God, and some of us went there and held a meeting. It was a strange occasion, but evidently the call of God.

Other meetings followed until finally every member of the family confessed Christ as their Savior and Redeemer. "Old Brom" became a most interesting Christian character. As I recall, one of his prayers was much as follows:

"Oh, Lord, the best thing about ye is, ye don't hev' it in fer a feller after he gives up ter ye. Oh! I wuz wicked. I us' ter cuss yer and did'n' kno' ye, and done all kin' of evil, but I'm dead sorry, an' when the nail flew up and put out my only good eye in the hen roost I jes giv' up ter ye. I'm blind like ol' Saul, but I'm a prayin' now an' believin', an' I'm goin' ter serve ye as long ez I lives. Oh! God a'mighty I wuz so bad. I'd taken the prize fer weekedness at the county fair, but ye heard me an' cleansed me an' I'm jes' so happy my ol' heart sings yer praises all the days."

As suggested in the prayer the moment of final yielding his heart to God was the accident which caused total blindness as he was putting a perch in place for his hens.

In the revival which followed many were led into the "Street called Straight," served faithfully, and died in the evident triumphs of faith. Later special meetings were held in a school house across the Hudson River. The result was a larger number of conversions, and the establishment of a large meeting.

A handsome chapel was built and here meetings and Bible School are continued to the present day. The good seed thus sown in prepared ground by Lydia Mott Cary, William Penn Angell, William Cary and a score of others, has given and is giving abundant harvest.

When a few years ago I visited the place, one of the first converts, then a man well past eighty (who has since entered into rest) told me, "You know I was always a pretty good hunter. When I was younger I could shoot straight. Well! I can never forget your mother; once when she was a praying for me, God took a sentence of hers and shot it straight into my heart, and I just had to give up to it, and I'm so glad. I hardly believed God could save such wicked fellows as old Brom and I was, but He did, bless His name. We did almost every wicked thing but murder, and God had mercy upon us. You know the old 'Black House,' (an old-time hotel) was a tough hole. Men disappeared from there and their bodies were never found. Well, a queer thing happened once; I never can forget and I never drank so hard after it, couldn't never shake it out of my mind somehow. There was an awful thunder storm on, and a fellow went to the bar and called for a tumbler of 'whiskey straight.'

"As he raised it he said, 'Here's to the Almighty.' There was an awful flash and report and the man fell dead in his tracks. He had no time to taste the liquor. He turned black. Oh, I'm so glad God called me and I came."

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION OF WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

The recent session of Western Yearly Meeting was unusual for more reasons than that a new meeting house was dedicated. Among the important events was the rejuvenation of the Board of Administration appointed two years ago. A recent meeting of this Board in Indianapolis indicates that the purpose of the originators of this idea of co-ordinating the work of all the departments of the Yearly Meeting was a very important one.

The Board is composed of the superintendents of the seven departments of church work, plus one additional member from each Quarterly Meeting not represented by superintendents. This body then becomes the Executive Committee of the Yearly Meeting, whose object is to organize the work of the Yearly Meeting as a whole on such lines as shall tend strongly to unify and build up the Yearly Meeting into an aggressive working force.

The meeting of the Board at Indianapolis, which was largely attended, resulted in the following recommendations:

The Monthly Meetings are advised that all annual reports going to the Yearly Meeting should cover the period between July 1, of 1914, and June 30, 1915. This will give a uniform period as a basis for Yearly Meeting statistics.

Uniform blanks for reports of departments of the Yearly Meeting, of the same size and style, will be printed for the use of local meetings and Monthly Meetings and the statistical secretary of the Yearly Meeting. A suitable file will be procured in which all reports may be filed for future reference.

A committee was appointed composed of Charles O. Newlin and Morris E. Hadley to locate and list all the trust funds of the Yearly Meeting, and also of the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings. They will not only list the amounts of the funds, but the names of the donors, the purpose for which the funds were given, and the conditions under which the gifts were made. It has been discovered that there are thousands of dollars held by Monthly and Quarterly Meetings of which the Yearly Meeting possesses no knowledge whatever. These funds should be so safeguarded that the church may never lose them or have them reverted to individuals.

The Board was unanimous in the opinion that the title to all church property should rest in the Yearly Meeting. Deeds to the Western Yearly Meeting can be executed, the supervision of said properties to be vested in local trustees appointed by the Monthly Meetings. It is very important that title to church properties shall rest in the Yearly Meeting in order that said properties will become in fact the possession of the Yearly Meeting when meetings are discontinued and laid down. There have been cases in which church property often returns to a few individuals still belonging to the meeting, instead of the church at large, for which the gifts were originally made. Enos Harvey was appointed to present this subject to the various Quarterly Meetings and ask for their co-operation in this important matter. Deed forms will be prepared by some competent attorney for the use of Monthly Meetings.

Before the next Yearly Meeting the Board of Administration will carefully survey the needs of the church at large and will recommend to the Finance Committee appropriations which in its judgment should be made for the work of the following year.

The Board recommends the enlargement of the building fund of the Yearly Meeting by the gift of five cents per member throughout the Yearly Meeting and also by the generous gifts of well-to-do Friends. They also favor strongly the creation of a permanent fund for aged ministers of the Yearly Meeting, the fund to be placed in the hands of suitable trustees who shall work for its enlargement and look after the distribution of the accumulating interest.

After a period of discussion as to how the superintendents may assist each other, and an agreement that the slogan of the Yearly Meeting should be "Two thousand additions to Christ and the church this year" the meeting adjourned. This slogan is great enough to challenge the faith and consecration of the entire church.

MORTON C. PEARSON, Chairman.
MARTILIA COX, Secretary.

HIGH POINT NORMAL

HIGH POINT, N. C., Sept. 14, 1914.

The Southern Committee of the Board of Home and Foreign Missions of New York Yearly Meeting of Friends:

Dear Friends—The new laundry is about completed. Our young men have worked faithfully to get it ready by the 17th, when school begins. I am very glad to say that we are about ready. All the work has been done by our own boys. They seem to be as proud of the new laundry as the girls will be when they return to school.

We have canned about 300 gallons peaches, apples, tomatoes, etc. We still need 160 more gallons to fill our shelves. Because of the great scarcity of money we have refrained from buying the fruit jars to can more fruit.

We have saved much feed from the corn tops. We have also prepared five acres of land for Crimson clover. Some land has been broken for wheat. We have planted quite a crop of turnips for table use. The hay crop is very promising. The potato crop is good and we shall no doubt have a satisfactory yield after all. The drought has been so much against the farm this year. The corn crop is very good and we shall have sufficient for our needs.

School is about to begin. We have no coal nor wood. This is one of the serious problems that confront us every year. We cannot afford to buy coal from the local dealers by the single ton at $6.00 per ton for soft coal. We could buy coal at a reasonable price now if we only had the money. I have engaged a small quantity of wood but I cannot tell just how we shall get the money to pay for it. I regret that we must continually appeal to our friends for money to meet the obligations of the school. I am sure they wish the school to go and for the children to be made comfortable.

We would be grateful for $250.00 for a carload of Anthracite coal. This would last about half the winter. We need $150.00 for fifty cords of oak wood. Unless we can buy coal and wood in large lots it will cost the school from twenty to thirty per cent. more.

Food stuff is much higher. We have advanced our price for board just a little, but not sufficient to meet the advance in price we must pay. This will mean an addition to our expense in running the school. May we appeal to our friends to sympathize with us especially at this time. We will do our best to live on just as little as possible, that we may encourage them to keep up their interest in the education of the negro boys and girls who come to High Point.

One day last week I attended a farmers' conference in Cabarrus County. They had on exhibition canned fruit, sewing, quilting and farm products. I found, to my surprise, several High Point students who are leading lights in that community. From what I saw there I am greatly encouraged and know that High Point is doing a splendid work in the education of the negro.

We have a bright outlook for this year. We thank you and our many friends for their constant support and for the new laundry.

Faithfully yours,

ALFRED J. GRIFFIN.

PERSONAL MENTION

Elmer E. Morris, of Liberty Center, Indiana, is the new Clerk of Barbers Mills Monthly Meeting.

Marcia M. Furnas and Amy Winslow are in the New York State Library School at Albany, New York, for the winter.

Mary E. Woodard, of Fountain City, Indiana, has been re-elected Corresponding Secretary of the Indiana State W. C. T. U.

David E. and Sarah Sampson, since their return from Europe, are again in pastoral charge of the work at Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Virgil Brock has not taken a pastorate for the coming year, but is field agent for "The Boys' Friend," traveling throughout Indiana and other central states.

Sarah H. Hoge, of Lincoln, Virginia, State President of the W. C. T. U., was one of the active participants in the campaign which resulted in making Virginia dry.

Joseph Elkinton and family have returned to Philadelphia from their visit to Europe. They found opportunity for much acceptable religious service, especially in England and Scotland.

Timothy Nicholson, of Richmond, Indiana, attended the annual convention of the Indiana State Board of Charities at Madison, Indiana, October 17-20, as one of the appointees by Governor Ralston.

Amos M. Kenworthy, who attended Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, has returned to his home in Whittier, California. The report has come that since returning home he has not been at all well.

Richard Simms, pastor of the meeting at Chester, Indiana, has been in the hospital at Richmond for the past week, having had a cataract removed from one of his eyes. The operation is regarded as successful.

Dr. George F. DeVol gave a very interesting and instructive lecture to the Friends of Denair, California, on the evening of the 15th. Dr. DeVol and his wife are medical missionaries on their return to China. They were to sail the 21st inst. A collection was taken to aid them in their work.

Richard Haworth and family, who have gone to Earlham, Iowa, to assume pastoral charge of the meeting there, were given a great reception week before last. The mayor of the town, the school superintendent, the other pastors and Friends generally were present to give them a royal welcome.

Joseph Tyler, who for the past twenty-five years has resided in Chicago, spent a few days recently among Friends at his old home in Richmond, Indiana. Mr. Tyler is an Englishman by birth, and his father was the first editor of the London Friend, which was established in 1847.

Morton C. Pearson, Secretary of the Indianapolis Federation of Churches, gave an excellent address at the First Friends Church in Indianapolis, on October 18th, in which he outlined the work of the various departments of the Federation, setting forth in a very forceful way the large vision of that movement looking toward the betterment of conditions in the city.

Alpheus Trueblood and wife, who for some years have had pastoral charge of the Whitewater Meeting in Richmond, Indiana, moved to their new home in Dayton, Ohio, last week, where they will have pastoral charge of the meeting in that city. The year has started out nicely and the outlook is promising. There are a number of young people in the meeting and also several men from various offices in the city.

NEWS NOTES

Friends Bible Schools will do well to patronize the programs which may be had from the Board of Foreign Missions, and which are advertised on the last page of this issue. Special attention is directed to the Thanksgiving program.

All services in the Friends Church at Des Moines, Iowa, are to be suspended until the close of the Billy Sunday campaign, which is to begin the first Monday in November. The Friends are taking an active part in preparation for his coming.

The brotherhood meeting of the Friends Church at Des Moines, Iowa, held its regular session on October 19th, and was addressed by Mr. Blakesly, State Auditor, on "Men and Religion." The address was highly appreciated by all those present.

The girls of the First Friends Church of Marion, Indiana, have formed an organization which is known as the "Girls' Quaker Club." Its business will be the study of the history and doctrines of Friends and to promote the mental, moral, spiritual and physical betterment of its members.

The meeting at Haviland, Kansas, seems to be progressing along all lines of church work. In the absence of a pastor the home ministers are carrying forward the evangelistic work. The various departments are active along all lines. October 18th was Bible School rally day and there was an attendance of 416. The academy under the supervision of Professor Emmett Hadley, Miss Pearl Horine and Miss Winifred Riggs is doing excellent work with an enrollment of fifty-three.

Lewis E. Stout began his work as pastor of the meeting at Carmel, Indiana, on September 30th. Up to the present time he has visited in forty homes and has preached two sermons each Sabbath. Both the senior and junior Christian Endeavor societies have been reorganized. October 4th was observed with special peace services. Everything seems favorable for a prosperous year's work.

The Monthly Meetings suppers, which were instituted as an experiment last fall by the First Friends Church at Indianapolis, will be continued this winter, the first one to be Thursday evening, October 22. These occasions, when the members of the church are brought together as a church family, are considered well worth while, and it is expected that the interest will be even greater this winter than last.

John S. Kimber, of Newport, Rhode Island, held a successful series of meetings in Friends Asheboro Street meeting at Greensboro, North Carolina, in which great good was accomplished. The meetings closed on the evening of October 16th and on the following evening he preached at Spring Garden Street to the comfort and edification of all present. This was a union meeting of the two congregations in Greensboro.

Many friends of Chloe A. Breed may not know that she left her home last June, in Henniker, New Hampshire, where she had lived for seventeen years and has since resided in Bloomingdale, Indiana, where she may be addressed. The meeting at Henniker for which she and her husband, the late Stephen Breed, labored faithfully for so many years, is now without a pastor, since the summer worker, Luther E. Warren, returned to his studies at Wilmington College, Ohio. Services are regularly held with different leaders and the interest is good.

On the evening of October 11th, the Friends Church of Denair, California, gave a reception to the new pastor, Zimri Stubbs, who recently gave up his work in Wichita, Kansas, and accepted a call to this place. The reception was given in the meeting house which was nicely decorated. It was attended not only by Friends, but by a large number from the other churches. Introductions were followed by a short program, including music and addresses of welcome, after which light refreshments were served and a general social time was enjoyed by all.

At Wilmington Monthly Meeting, Wilmington, Ohio, held October 14th, fifty-nine persons were received into membership, forty-five by request, nine by letter and five by certificate. In addition to these, twenty-four were changed on their own request from associate to active members. A public welcome was given to the new members on Sunday, October 18th. About three-fourths of the accessions were the direct result of a series of union meetings conducted at the college auditorium by Dr. Herbert Yeuell, but most of these are the evidence of faithful work on the part of Bible School teachers. The present membership of the Wilmington local meeting is 1,102.

As a result of a series of gospel tent meetings held some time ago in Whittier, California, by Charles H. Stalker, a company of members of the Monthly Meeting at Whittier petitioned recently for the establishment of another Monthly Meeting. Whittier Monthly Meeting considered the subject on October 15th and decided almost unanimously not to grant the request. We have a report to the effect that the Clerk's estimate on the vote was about 10 for it to 300 against it. The pastoral committee which met just before the Monthly Meeting voted 5 for it and 25 against it and that body reported to the Monthly Meeting that the time was not right for the establishing of another meeting.

Hamilton Holt, editor of the New York Independent, gave an instructive lecture at Earlham College on the evening of October 21st, on the general subject of the European war. In his concluding remarks he advocated strongly a federation of the civilized countries of the world as being the only hope of permanent peace. The speaker declared his belief that this is a possibility no less than was the formation of the Federal union from the somewhat discordant and scattered American colonies. The address was given under the auspices of Earlham College and the Peace Committee of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting, and there was a large attendance of faculty, students and citizens.

The efficient work of a well organized missionary committee is bearing fruit in the meeting at Damascus, Ohio. The Christian Endeavor Society retains for another year the banner given by the county organization to the society giving the highest amount per capita to missions. The Damascus Society gave six dollars and seventy cents per capita the past year. The missionary money for the entire church, with a membership of less than three hundred, was $1,056.92. October 18th was observed as missionary day with an appropriate sermon in the morning and a program of special interest in the evening. This is to be followed by a three days' personal canvass of the members who have not contributed toward the $943 already pledged.

At the anniversary of Brown University, President Sharpless, of Haverford, spoke on "Quaker Ideals in Education." "There are certain features of early Quakerism," he said, "which it might not be amiss to instil into our college system today. Friends early opposed duels, lotteries, slavery and war. If the colleges are educating the leaders of thought and method, might they not find it profitable to approach the new schemes of reform in the manner of the Quakers' quiet assemblies, with mind and heart open to suggestions from the upper as well as the lower sources? Then these early Friends were preachers of literal truthfulness. Who will deny that our system of higher education needs something of this tonic?"—Philadelphia Friend.

The meeting at Glens Falls, New York, has issued a most interesting year book for the pastoral year 1914-15. It contains a most interesting recital of the varied interests of the meeting, and a full roster of all the officers and committees. A total of $1,979.98 in receipts is shown. There was a balance on hand October 1st of $64.48. There is a total indebtedness of $350. The actual running expenses of the meeting last year were $1,405.71. There has been an accession of twenty-four members during the year with a loss of eleven. The enrollment in the Bible School on October 1st was 142, and the average attendance during the past year was 91. Albert G. Shepherd has charge of the pastoral work and it is felt that the meeting is in a prosperous condition.

A reception was given at the Friends Church at Damascus, Ohio, Monday evening, October 12, in honor of John Pennington, the pastor of the church, who has been chosen as pastor for the fifth successive year. About one hundred and fifty were present and they gave to the minister a warm welcome and handshake and expressed congratulations on the decision to have him remain at least another year as pastor of the flock. In the basement of the church, coffee, sandwiches and fruits were served. A program was rendered in which all the branches of the church were represented by a chosen representative. There was special music of a high order and appropriate for the occasion. There were welcoming addresses of a kindly nature for the pastor and his family and the church.

Rally Day services were held at Barbers Mills and Pleasant View Friends churches in Indiana, on October 11th. At the former place the program, consisting of appropriate exercises by the children and young people, was carried out following the Sunday School at 9:30 a. m. Special invitation cards had been mailed previously to all members and others, and ninety-five young people were present. Rally Day buttons were pinned on each person as they entered the door and all enjoyed the spiritual feast of good things. Following the Sunday School lesson study, which is held at 2:00 p. m., a few recitations were given by the children, after which Professor Myers, Superintendent of the Wells County Teacher Training Work, gave an appropriate address on "Boosting the Sunday School." This address was well received by the good sized audience present.

GUILFORD COLLEGE NOTES

Bishop Edward Rondthaler of the Moravian church for North Carolina, and President of the oldest female Seminary in the state, now the Moravian college at Winston-Salem, gave a clear and forceful address at the college on the European war on the evening of October 10th. He is unusually well equipped for the consideration of such a subject, being of Slavic and Teutonic descent, and having spent much time in European countries. During the past summer he was in Germany and other countries and was caught in the great war cyclone.

As factors entering into the question of the war he named the following: 1. Race antipathy between Slavs and Teutons, which is the deep underlying cause. 2. The long struggle between France and Germany over Alsace and Lorraine, intensified by the Franco-Prussian war forty years ago. 3. The spirit of militarism. He paid a tribute to the exactitude and promptness of the German army and the German people generally. 4. The English and German rivalry for the commercial supremacy of the world.

He made no venture or guess as to the outcome of the war but said, "Watch Italy. Her existence as a nation depends upon her ability to guess the winner and govern her actions accordingly." He expressed the belief that the people of Germany, no matter how the war terminates, will eventually be in a better condition, although he did not claim that any good results, which might come from the war, would justify the war.

He closed with an interesting recital of personal experiences on the continent as a penniless foreigner. He complimented very highly the generosity of some American business men who chartered an Italian ship on which 399 Americans were brought in safety to their native land. He said, "I never before have loved my fellow citizens of America so well as since my return home." The address was highly instructive and helpful, and was enjoyed by the college faculty, students and residents of the community generally.

On the following day which was the Sabbath, David E. Sampson attended the meeting at Guilford College. Since the war in Europe began they have returned from a six months' sojourn in Europe, principally in England and Ireland. David E. Sampson preached an excellent sermon to a large congregation, in which he made some allusions to his experiences beyond the Atlantic. In the evening he gave a sermon-lecture on "Four Great Englishmen." These were John Tyndale, the translator of the Bible into English, George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, John Bunyan, the author of Pilgrim's Progress, and John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist church.

AT DUBLIN, INDIANA

The Whittier Class of the Dublin Friends Bible School held its regular monthly meeting Sixth-day evening, October 9th, at the home of Thomas O. Henby.

The invitations having been sent out by Mr. Jack-o-lantern, this smiling gentleman upon the porch greeted the members of the class as they arrived incognito. When all had gathered they were led by a long rope to the barn. The large double doors were pushed aside, there revealing a bower of beauty. From lanterns fastened overhead the light streamed upon fragrant mows of hay festooned with gorgeous boughs of autumn leaves, and on all sides the shocks of fodder and the pumpkins gave evidence of the abundance of the October harvest.

Some time was consumed in trying to guess who the man under the walking tree might be, the little lady under the old plain bonnet, the ghosts, witches, etc. Much was done by the host, hostess and social committee to make the evening a pleasant one for the young people.

The Whittier Class has been organized a little more than a year and has a membership of twenty-three. We believe these social gatherings are beneficial, helping us to become better acquainted with each other and adding strength to the Bible School.

Class Secretary.

RELIGIOUS SCHOOLS IN CUBA

A new work has recently been begun by the Friends Mission at Gibara, Cuba. Religious schools are held once a week in buildings adjacent to two public schools (no religious instruction being allowed in the public schools themselves). The hour of the religious schools is just after the close of the day schools. Good success has followed this work. The Christian Endeavor Society of Gibara has subscribed money to pay the expenses of one of their number to go each week to teach the religious school in the village of Santa Rosalia, the school itself paying the expenses for supplies, etc. At this place all the children in the village voluntarily attend the religious instruction.

WHITTIER COLLEGE NOTES

Perhaps Whittier College is the most cosmopolitan institution among Friends. In the first place nearly every member of the Faculty represents a different college or university and this year there are students enrolled who have taken work in the following institutions:

Central College, Nebraska.
Earlham College.
Stanford University.
Mills College.
Stephens College, Missouri.
Pacific College.
Hastings College, Nebraska.
Smith College.
Penn College.
Manhattan College, Kansas.
Hiram College.
L. A. State Normal.
Park College, Missouri.
Dakota Wesleyan University.
Friends University.
San Jose State Normal.
University of South California.
Pomona College.
University of California.

Bishop Wm. M. Bell, of the United Brethren Church, gave an address to the students and Faculty on October 12.

Mr. Kiyo Sue Inui, a Japanese orator of international fame, gave a very helpful address before the College on October 13. Mr. Inui is one of the most eloquent speakers not only of his race but of any race.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 8.

World's Temperance Sunday.

Subject—Sowing and Reaping.

Lesson—Galatians 6: 1-10.

Golden Text—Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Gal. 6: 7.

Bear ye one another's burdens. This is the key phrase of Paul's heart to heart talk with the Galatians. It is the foundation principle of the prohibition movement.

All history has been an affirmative answer to the wail of Cain in that morning of the world, "Am I my brother's keeper?" No one can approve the doctrine of human brotherhood without standing for total abstinence and the overthrow of the liquor traffic.

The saloon thrives upon the weakness of men. No one ever planned to be a drunkard, and were it not for appetite and habit and convivial association there would be no liquor problem.

That shall he also reap. Herein is the universal law of human society. No one can sow weeds and reap wheat. To sow wild oats is to reap a harvest of tears and barren regrets. The tippler is never safe.

The converse of the proposition is also proverbial. He who sows to the Spirit will reap eternal life. Total abstinence will multiply virtues and bring health and contentment.

The saloon is the natural breeder of crime and disease and poverty. The people who foster it must pay the penalty. The liquor traffic will work destruction for any nation.

The Temperance Movement.

The movement for temperance reform has been forming for more than a hundred years. Starting as a protest against excessive drinking, it passed by easy stages through the periods of total abstinence and regulation to the more modern demand for the total annihilation of the rum traffic.

Early it was seen that as long as liquor was sold, there could be no assurance of general sobriety. By the same token, when a few bold spirits began to raise the standards of total abstinence, it was soon comprehended that there could be no universal or even general abstinence so long as the saloon stood with open doors and with the authority of the law behind it, beckoning the young men to patronize its wares.

Then came a period of regulation, with the result that thinking men and women came to understand that a regulated saloon was even more potential for evil than the so-called dive. Young men would not learn to drink in the dive.

Furthermore, the saloon, now organized as an institution, began to refuse to be regulated. Then it was that the pioneers in the reform began to proclaim the doctrine that a business that would not be regulated must be destroyed.

From this the prohibition movement has grown, and latterly by leaps and by bounds. It is the only method by which civilization can properly protect the weak and thus establish forever the doctrine of human brotherhood. Remove temptation, lend a helping hand, set a right example, are the foundation stones of the movement to destroy the liquor traffic.

Why Prohibition?

Science proclaims alcohol to be a poison and never a food.

Business thrives with the overthrow of its worst competitor—the saloon.

No business firm wants the product of the saloon in its employ.

Criminality, pauperism and insanity are reduced materially by the no-saloon policy. Sixty-five counties in prohibition Kansas have no inmates in penal institutions.

The tendency is to reduce taxation when the causes which make so much of our taxes necessary are destroyed.

Purity in politics and in government is promoted where the liquor traffic is abolished.

The Church has a better chance to reach the people with the Gospel when their brains are no longer steeped in liquor.

The saloon is evil and wholly so, and its overthrow as a national sin is the only right policy upon which the nation can prosper.

Present Status

Ten states have voted to outlaw the saloon: Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, North Carolina, West Virginia and Virginia. (The latter will not be actually dry until 1916.)

Nearly all the other states have more or less of dry territory. Forty-six million of our population live in no-license territory. Only fourteen counties out of 120 in Kentucky permit saloons; 8 out of 67 in Alabama; only three or four in Arkansas; 12 out of 33 in Idaho; 21 out of 98 in Iowa. Ohio has 45 dry counties; Texas 177; South Dakota 18; South Carolina 31; Nebraska 29; Missouri 74; Michigan 33; Maryland 10; Indiana 30; Illinois 31, Florida 38.

A resolution proposing a national prohibition amendment to the constitution is pending in Congress, and forms the chief issue on the question in America. Its passage will harmonize with Paul's letter to the Galatians.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 8.

Topic—Getting Out of Ruts, and Keeping Out. (Amos 6: 1-8.)

It is easier to talk about getting out of the ruts than it is to get out. It is more important to get out than it is to talk about it.

It is so easy to follow the line of least resistance. The easiest thing is to do that which we are accustomed to do, and that of itself wears the rut in time.

The temptation is to hold each society meeting just like the previous ones were held, and for the committees to work this year in the same mold which marked their activities last year.

It is a good time to plan something new for the winter's work. Plan to take stock in some definite way in the missionary field, either by supporting a missionary, or by furnishing partial support.

Select a sub-committee out of the Lookout Committee that will plan a membership campaign, setting the goal at a definite number of new members.

Introduce variety into the prayer meetings.

Let each committee be inspired to plan something new and practical.

Married

Ballard-Shriver—At the home of the bride in Marion, Indiana, October 14, 1914, Horton Ballard to Verha Shriver, Charles E. Hiatt officiating. Both are active members of the First Friends Church and are prominent in choir and Sunday School work, Mr. Ballard being director of the choir in the Jonesboro Friends Church.

Bogan-Compton—At the Friends Church in New Burlington, Ohio, after the custom of Friends, Raleigh Leon Bogan, son of Edgar and Mary O'Neal Bogan, to Marianna Compton, daughter of Horace F. and Lucy A. Compton, Frank P. Milner, Jesse Hawkins and the grandfather of the groom assisting. Both are highly esteemed members of Caesar's Creek Monthly Meeting.

Cary-Henderson—At the home of the bride near Gansevoort, New York, August 6, 1914, A. Heywood Cary, son of George L. and Anna M. Cary, to Mary V. Henderson.

Lewis-Stanley—At Cottonwood Meeting near Emporia, Kansas, according to Friends' ceremony, September 14, 1914, Walter E. Lewis, of Gate, Oklahoma, to Jane Lewis Stanley.

Smitherman-Kendall—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kendall, Haviland, Kansas, August 12, 1914, David Smitherman to Lida Kendall, B. H. Albertson officiating.

Died

Johnson—Joseph Johnson was born near Petersburg, Virginia, and died at his home near Crawfordsville, Indiana, May 18, 1914, aged ninety years. He was married to Jemima Cox in 1858. One son, two daughters and thirteen grandchildren survive him. Funeral services were conducted by Lindley M. Reagan. Interment at Greenlawn cemetery near Darlington, Indiana.

King—Edward King, son of Dean and Esther King, was born near Wilmington, Ohio, October 27, 1842, and died at his home in Richmond, Indiana, October 11, 1914, aged nearly seventy-two years. He was a birthright Friend, being a member of Chester Meeting, Indiana, for more than forty years. Since 1910 he was a member of West Richmond Meeting where he was also an elder. Throughout his whole life he was a regular attendant at meeting both on the Sabbath and in the middle of the week. He was actively interested in every phase of Friends' work. His Christian life was clear but unassuming, and in every word and action he displayed an unswerving faith in Christian principles. He was thoroughly honest, even to the extent of sacrificing his own interests and never did he knowingly take advantage of anyone. He was thoroughly progressive and always clear in his thinking and ever anxious to keep informed upon all present day advances. He was sick only a few hours and passed away so peacefully that even those at his bedside little thought that the end was near. His wife, Mary E. King, a minister, a son, three daughters, a brother and two sisters survive him.

Stuart—Douglas Harlan Stuart, son of Henry H. and Hester Torrence Stuart, and grandson of Dr. J. H. and Annis L. Stuart of Minneapolis, Minnesota, died of typhoid fever at Seattle, Washington, on October 6, 1914, aged eight years.

Williams—Isabel Williams, wife of Ezekiel Williams, died at her home in Haviland, Kansas, October 7, 1914, aged 71 years 9 months and 4 days. She left the evidence that she was entering the haven of rest.

WHY THE YOUTH'S COMPANION SHOULD BE IN EVERY FAMILY

"If I could take only one paper," said the late Mr. Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court, "it would be The Youth's Companion—a little of everything in a nutshell, and unbiased." The Companion is a family paper in the completest sense. It provides reading that, without failing to interest the young, still interests the mature. It unites young and old through their common enjoyment of delightful fiction, agreeable miscellany, and the clear exposition of public questions.

So carefully is it edited, so varied are its contents, that it would easily supply a family with entertaining fiction, up-to-date information and wholesome fun, if no other periodical entered the house.

If you are not familiar with The Companion as it is today, let us send you sample copies and the Forecast for 1915.

New subscribers who send $2.00 for the fifty-two issues of 1915 will receive free all the remaining issues of 1914, besides a copy of The Companion Home Calendar for 1915.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION,
144 Berkeley Street, Boston, Mass.

Thanksgiving Proclamation

"It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. The year that is now drawing to a close since we last observed our day of national thanksgiving has been, while a year of discipline because of the mighty forces of war and of changes which have disturbed the world, also a year of special blessing to us.

"It has been vouchsafed to us to remain at peace, with honor, and in some part to succor the suffering and supply the needs of those who are in want. We have been privileged by our own peace and self-control in some degree to steady the counsels and shape the hopes and purposes of a day of fear and distress. Our people have looked upon their own life as a nation with a deeper comprehension, a fuller realization of their responsibilities as well as of their blessings, and a keener sense of the moral and practical significance of what their part among the nations of the world may come to be.

"The hurtful effects of foreign war in their own industrial and commercial affairs have made them feel the more fully and see the more clearly their mutual interdependence upon one another and has stirred them to a helpful co-operation such as they have seldom practiced before. Their unmistakable ardor for peace, their earnest pity and disinterested sympathy for those who are suffering, their readiness to help and to think of the needs of others, has revealed them to themselves as well as to the world.

"Our crops will feed all who need food; the self-possession of our people amidst the most serious anxieties and difficulties, and the steadiness and resourcefulness of our business men will serve other nations as well as our own.

"The business of the country has been supplied with new instrumentalities, and the commerce of the world with new channels of trade and intercourse. The Panama Canal has been opened to the commerce of the nations. The two continents of America have been bound in closer ties of friendship. New instrumentalities of international trade have been created, which will be also new instrumentalities of acquaintance, intercourse and mutual service. Never before have the people of the United States been so situated for their own advantage or the advantage of their neighbors, or so equipped to serve themselves and mankind.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, November 26, next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 28th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth.

"WOODROW WILSON.

"By the President:

"ROBERT LANSING, Acting Secretary of State."

Monthly Meeting Chronicle

We have on hands a number of the booklets, "The Chronicle of Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which are awaiting the orders of our Friends. More than 400 copies have been sold thus far, and orders are coming in almost daily.

One pastor writes: "I took the books to meeting yesterday, and there was a general stampede to get one." The same pastor wrote about the good the book is doing, and ordered another dollar's worth.

It is believed that this Chronicle will awaken new interest in almost every meeting if only it can be placed in the hands of the membership. In many meetings pastors could easily sell the books at cost if only they had them on hands to deliver. Price: Single copy, 15 cents; 10 copies, $1.00. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Tell Your Friends

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be sent to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1916, for $1.50, the price of one year's subscription. The general testimony is to the effect that the paper is getting better all the time. Tell your friends and neighbors about this special offer, that they may get the benefit of the good things now appearing. Some of the very best features we have been able yet to offer are being planned for the coming winter. 'No Friends' family can afford to do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the paper needs the support of every Friend's family.

It is equally important that all subscribers shall continue to patronize this periodical of the church. It must be put on a paying basis before another year. It is an obligation in which every Friend's family shares a direct responsibility. Subscribe this week.

There were in the United States in 1913, 37,280,370 persons enrolled as church members, including Protestant and Catholic. This leaves more than 62,000,000 unenrolled in any church of any name in our land. Of these fully 41,000,000 are of mature or responsible age.

Work Out Your Own Salvation

BY ANTHONY M. KIMBER

These four words of holy Scripture used to trouble us until we realized that we could not work out our salvation until it became our own by accepting it as the free gift of unmerited mercy. For it is written, "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works lest any man should boast."

Faith and works are sometimes compared to the wings of a bird or to the two oars of a boat, but the Bible teaches that good words and good works are the legitimate fruits of saving faith. If we do not talk right and do right we are not "saved to the uttermost." Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of His good pleasure, not of His own good pleasure, as it is sometimes quoted. If we are co-workers with God in harmony with His will, it is our good pleasure also, and we can humbly adopt the language of the Psalmist, "I delight to do thy will, Oh my God!"

The context shows that the apostle was anxious lest his Gentile converts should depend on him too much. From that day to this the same trouble has been apparent. We are prone to depend too much on the pastor or teacher to work out our salvation for us. Some Christians are honest enough to say that they are willing to pay their pastor, but that they themselves really do not have time for the work of the Lord and would hardly know how to go about it.

When George Fox was traveling on horseback in New England, he stopped for the week-end with a friend expecting to stay and preach there the next day, but they flattered him so much in asking him to stay as their pastor that he asked for his horse to be saddled and rode on to the next town, saying that if he had only succeeded in attracting attention to himself, he had better go somewhere else. We must work out our own salvation, for it is a task which we cannot commit to others.

The annual report of the New York Bible Society records the distribution of 326,146 volumes of the Scriptures in forty-seven languages during the year. It has furnished over 10,000 volumes to 372 hotels in the city of New York. Within three years more than 33,000 Bibles have been furnished by the Society to 542 hotels in New York. During the past year 180 institutions have been supplied with the Scriptures. More than 100 missionaries have been engaged in the work. Bible Sunday will be observed on December 6, the last International Sunday School Convention having recommended that this day be observed in all the Sunday Schools of the country.

In the Southern Presbyterian Church the Sunday School enrollment last year was 280,234, a gain over the year before of 19,837. Sixteen Sunday School missionaries are now at work and the committee hopes to place in the field one missionary for each Presbytery.

Our Gains and Losses, and the Remedy

Exclusive of Baltimore Yearly Meeting which has not been held, the record of statistics reveals a net increase in membership of 152 in the American Yearly Meetings as compared with last year. Nine Yearly Meetings show an increase and five a decrease. The Yearly Meetings in the Five Years Meeting show a decrease of 362. This loss is more apparent than actual, however, in that Western Yearly Meeting shows a decrease of 1,288 as compared with the totals in 1911, the last year that statistics of the entire membership were taken in that Yearly Meeting.

Indeed the loss is thought by some in Western to be larger than indicated as no accurate statistics were gathered this year. The total of 14,250, however, represents statistics gathered by THE AMERICAN FRIEND within the year, in full for eleven Quarterly Meetings, and in full for four others except a single monthly meeting in each, which are estimated, based upon the record of resident members given, and an estimate of the smallest Quarterly Meeting entire upon the same basis. This number is believed to be approximately correct, and is at most conservative.

It has been stated, however, by those best calculated to know that there are more members in Western this year than last, and that the loss indicated should have been credited to some past years, whereas in fact, the totals of 1911 have been carried over each year in computing the total membership of all the Yearly Meetings. Accepting the statement of these Friends as correct, the actual gain this year would approximate 1,000 members.

Another fact needs to be taken into consideration. Both Iowa and Kansas which show losses respectively of 446 and 303, and perhaps other Yearly Meetings, have been revising their membership rolls, and in a number of local meetings some severe pruning of the records has been going on. It is claimed that in both these bodies there has been an actual gain in the live working membership. Until this process of pruning be completed, the totals of membership are not likely to be satisfactory.

In practically every Yearly Meeting, the records are admitted to be incomplete, and there are as many systems of gathering the statistics as there are Yearly Meetings. The need of a uniform system appears to be imperative, while at the same time many Monthly Meetings need to exercise far greater care in keeping the record of members. Until these ideals are realized our status as a denomination is too indefinite to be comfortable.

The lesson of this uncertain situation is that it is difficult to know whether as a body we are growing, whether we are at a standstill or whether we are actually losing out in the march of the Christian churches in this country. One thing is apparent, we are not marking progress conspicuously in comparison with our privileges and opportunities. Something is clogging the wheels that must ere long be investigated.

It is far easier to see the problem than it is to find the solution of it. An exchange says that "There are generally obstacles in the way of doing anything that is worth doing." Perhaps we are too small in numbers to have an ambition that is compelling. The paucity of our members has led to a meagerness of support that is often discouraging to our working departments.

For a century and more Quakerism developed in a single mold that inspired little of resourcefulness and narrowed the scope of our denominational vision and activities. When in the revival of a half century ago, the Society broke its bounds, it had a tendency to drift to the opposite extreme, wherein the multiplicity of plans worked divisive tendencies and introduced a variety of methods that have not been conducive to a growing body, with the result that the church has lacked definiteness of purpose and unity of program. Lacking concert of plan, we have grown provincial both in spirit and in methods, and provincialism makes little appeal to the masses.

While taking satisfaction in a common name and in a common heritage, we lack denominational continuity and the incentive of a consuming passion in behalf of some mighty mission or some great concept of religious truth. It has grown difficult to enlist our membership in sacrificial service, especially if it conflicts with personal interests. Our policy has grown to be negative rather than positive. We are against war, we are against the liquor traffic, we are against vice, we are against slavery, we are against formalism in worship, against oaths, against worldly display, against the ritualistic. We do not practice the ordinances nor do we baptize our converts with water; we do not believe in a professional ministry, nor do we accept one man leadership.

But what do we believe in terms of positive conviction? To be sure our fathers proclaimed the Godhead of the Father, the Sonship and Deity of Jesus and the presence of the Holy Spirit to enlighten every obedient life; they declared the doctrine of the atonement through Christ, of the Resurrection, of the priesthood of all believers, of the universality of worship, of God's call to the ministry, of the divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, of true communion and of the true baptism, of the cleansing from all sin through the blood of Jesus Christ, and to these doctrines the church has continued faithfully to adhere. But these are the fundamentals of the Christian faith, with which in large part the various branches of the Christian church are in practical agreement.

Just as in the days of Fox, Friends were enabled to preach the doctrine of salvation through faith in Christ in terms of adaptability to the peculiar needs of that age and in terms understandable to the masses, may we not now have a message, adapting this same gospel to the needs of this present day in terms of the soul needs of humanity everywhere? The simple democracy of our politics and organism ought to give Friends an entré to the confidence of the masses which few other bodies find it possible to realize. We do not presume to suggest the particular form or nature of this message, except that it is our conviction that it must have something to do with an appeal that will command the attention and ultimately the confidence of the careless and unconcerned masses all about us, and that it must present the gospel of divine truth as the curative for all human ills, personal, social, industrial, political, governmental and international.

What a field there is for the inspired prophets of God! The age is ripe for a clarion gospel call to resound through the earth that will awaken the sleeping millions to a consciousness of the fact that not only do they need God, but that God needs them for His service.

The world needs to be told why it should join the church. As it is, when a few do join, the rule is to leave them largely to their own resources, either to find a congenial place of service, or failing in that, to wither and ultimately to die. We have been wondering what would happen if suddenly the young people of the Society of Friends would rise up in a body and demand the assignment of some great tasks commensurate with their faith and their youthful ambitions. Has the church a plan that would contemplate such a magnificent possibility? Or if during the coming year, there should be a great ingathering of converts into the church, has the church a program by which these could be easily and readily assimilated into its life and organism?

If the Society of Friends would grow it must utter a message and devise a plan of operations that invite growth. When within the compass of our gospel welcome and within the plan of our organism, sincere men and women find that there is an opportunity for assimilation into a system of operations for the betterment and uplift of the world, we will have laid the basis for the permanent enlargement of our borders.

English Friends and the War

As the war develops, we are increasingly impressed with the perplexities that are oppressing our Friends in England. Some of them are passing through deep waters, and some apparently are finding their faith sorely tested. The struggle between loyalty to the country and loyalty to their denominational precepts is a struggle which other men have faced, and which men will continue to face so long as war is allowed to curse the earth.

Conscious of the unholy character of war, some of them are torn with questionings about the dishonor of England, if she had failed to meet her treaty obligations in the attempt to protect unfortunate Belgium. One writer in the London Friend says that the "alternative to the present war was submission, the surrender of our fleet and the dissolution of the Empire." Another says, "This war is a war for freedom, humanity and—paradoxical as it may seem—Peace."

Other writers uphold the Quaker ideals vigorously. In this perplexing situation the editor of The Friend, wisely, as it seems to us, gives the following advice:

Our human life is full of paradox. That our Quaker testimony under present circumstances may appear to the world fragmentary, obscure, and even of little importance must not unduly disturb us. It may be that we have yet to learn the true meaning of the Inward Light, what it is, what it entails, and whereunto it leads us. We must not think harshly of any Friend who amid conflicting loyalties—a conflict in which we are all so unwillingly immersed—chooses loyalty to the larger group rather than the smaller. Nor need we on the other hand abandon our position or forsake our trust. In these difficult times for lovers of peace, let us strive to be patient, watchful and steadfast: let us be slow to judge each other, and quick to examine ourselves; slow to criticize the mistakes of others, swift to condemn our own. We must aim to develop a policy and a practice in the Society which will be characterized both by wisdom and tenderness in regard to the limitations of our present Quaker witness, but which will seek to strengthen and inspire us along the lines of vital Christian experience.

He who prays for peace and then cultivates a belligerent, controversial spirit, is making prayer a mockery.

No one can serve two masters. God requires whole-hearted service. Divided affections will always bring trouble.

Duty is sometimes a hard taskmaster. But the Christian service is a service of joy when the heart is right.

Friends and the European Crisis

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE OF ENGLISH FRIENDS

Reported by HERBERT H. CATFORD

(We are deeply indebted to Herbert H. Catford, Assistant Secretary of the English Friends Foreign Mission Association, for this interesting and comprehensive report of the Llandudno Conference. Quite naturally the conference turned its attention to questions growing out of the war. The report will be found to be both instructive and edifying.—THE EDITOR.)

In the closing weeks of 1913, a concern arose simultaneously in the minds of several Friends in Great Britain for the holding of a Conference to focus the thought of the Society upon some questions of far-reaching import for the future of the Church and of the world. This concern led to the issue, in April last, of "A Call to the Society of Friends" to a Conference at Llandudno, a watering-place beautifully situated between two headlands on the North Wales coast, during the closing days of September. The Conference was convened by four organizations which are responsible for a large proportion of the aggressive work of English Friends, namely:

The Woodbrooke Extension Committee.

The Friends Foreign Mission Association.

The Friends Home Mission and Extension Committee of London Yearly Meeting, and

The Young Friends Sub-Committee of the Home Mission and Extension Committee.

The arrangements were carried through a Committee of twelve well-known members of London Yearly Meeting, three of whom are familiar to American Friends as delegates to the Five Years Meeting (Gulielma Crosfield and Edward Grubb in 1907, and Henry T. Hodgkin in 1912). Henry T. Hodgkin, Secretary of the Friends Foreign Missionary Association, and Frederick J. Edminson, Secretary of the Woodbrooke Extension Committee, were appointed Joint-Secretaries.

The Scope of the Conference

Early in July, the Committee spent a quiet week-end at the home of one of its members, when it was decided to issue a Memorandum for the careful study of all Friends who expected to be at the Conference. The following are the main heads of this document:

- (A) The Present World Situation.
- (B) The Answer of Jesus Christ.
- (C) The Indwelling Christ.
- (D) The Individual and the Church.
- (E) The Divine Resources.

Whilst it was decided to invite certain Friends and a few others to give special thought to specific topics with a view to taking part in the Conference, if at the time it should seem right to do so, no detailed program was issued. It was indeed definitely stated that the program should "be regarded as somewhat flexible in order that we may be able to go forward from day to day as we are led."

When August arrived and we were drawn into the darkness and gloom of the great crisis in Europe, the wisdom of the plan which had been followed became apparent. Other churches decided to abandon their autumn meetings. Friends felt that, whilst it would be well to shorten the Conference, and its character must be modified by the new circumstances which had arisen, the need for considering together the great problems by which we were faced was more urgent than before. Hence on Friday, September 25th, Friends from all parts of England and a few from Ireland, gathered at Llandudno, until, including a few other visitors, about 275 were present. Amongst these we were glad to have the company of several dear Friends from America, including the "Elkinton quartet" from Philadelphia, and Catharine Murray Shipley. We were accommodated in three large boarding houses, which were situated within a few minutes' walk of St. Paul's Church House where the sittings of the Conference were held. Henry Lloyd Wilson (ex-Clerk of London Yearly Meeting) and his wife, Theodora M. Wilson, of Birmingham, acted as Wardens.

Workers and Seekers, Not Dreamers

As we sat at session after session of the Conference the feeling grew upon one that this gathering was different from the "Summer Schools," which have been held on this (the British) side of the water. It was at once more representative and more practical. It was a company, not of dreamy enthusiasts or irresponsible holiday-makers, but of workers and seekers. The fact that we had amongst us a number of young men between the ages of nineteen and thirty-five, who had resisted pressure to join the army, and that many others not eligible for military service were known to be greatly perplexed as to our peace views, gave to the whole proceedings a note of reality, which is sometimes absent from Quaker assemblies.

At the opening sitting, Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, who presided throughout the Conference, and A. Neave Brayshaw (Chairman of the Home Mission Committee) briefly outlined the objects for which we had gathered, and the spirit in which it was desired that discussion should be conducted. Might we each day come with our eyes fixed upon God, seeking with the whole mind and heart the truth that would make us free, avoiding anything like empty theorizing or platitudes. Let us live, as it were, in the realities of the battlefield, endeavoring to think our thoughts through to clear views, so that we may understand rightly what is our duty in the presence of the horror around us. We longed also that we might have spiritual insight to see beyond the things so insistently around us to the things that are invisible, and enter into that covenant of peace where no wars or strife are. The sitting closed with the reading of Malachi III: "But who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth?" etc.

Christianity and the World Situation

On Saturday morning, Mary Higgs, of Oldham, one of the most earnest and self-denying workers for social reform in England, the author of "Glimpses Into the Abyss," spoke upon "Christianity and the World Situation." After reading portions of Joel II and III about "the great and terrible day of the Lord," she said that it was difficult to see the Day of the Lord in the present crisis. Yet God is God of night as well as of day. Thick darkness, as morning spread upon the mountains, is the prelude to the Day of the Lord. We need to dive deep into the counsels of the Lord, so that we may learn something of His character that we had not understood before. At the close of an address that deeply moved the Conference, she said that, before the crisis, we were beginning to talk about social reform. The greatest danger now is that the Christianity of our land will not rise to the point of self-sacrifice, to make us solid with our poorest brothers and sisters. If Christianity is to triumph it must triumph by suffering. There is no other way. Our soldiers go out to meet hunger, cold, and nakedness. Their lives are to a large extent hidden. It lies with each of us to practice that hidden heroism, and to bring ourselves into unity with the sufferings of Christ. He is suffering today in our cities. We could do so much; we could gather together those who are needy, and brother them or sister them, in the spirit and passion of Christ.

Richard Roberts (Minister of the Presbyterian Church at Crouch Hill, one of the northern suburbs of London), who occupies a leading place amongst the younger men in the Presbyterian Church of England, and author of "The Renaissance of Faith" (quoted from London Yearly Meeting's Epistle in 1912), followed on the same subject. He remarked that we were confronted by issues so varied and complicated that it was difficult to thread a way through. We had the extraordinary spectacle of England, a Protestant nation, being allied with two Catholic countries and one Greek Orthodox, against the other chief Protestant people in Europe which is allied with a Catholic people. To make the position still more complicated, we were allied also with a non-Christian people. But we had to recognize that there was no such thing as a Christian nation. There were a good many pagan nations with a tincture of Christianity, and this described England.

Examining the assertion that the war implied the "bankruptcy of Christianity," he said that such a statement involved (1) Recognition that war is an evil thing—a real advance upon older theories; (2) Recognition that Christianity ought to have prevented war; (3) Recognition that Christianity was a force in the world—again an advance. Instead of Christianity having failed, it would be truer to say that it had never been fully tried. A friend had written to him that the Church was on a "Sub-Christian Platform." It always had been sub-Christian. We had bowed down to the god of progress, and had given way to the thought that humanity was just gently going up an inclined plane to God, or that God was a kind of motor auxiliary to get us up hill! But He is not a present help unless He is our Lord and Master all our days. We cannot believe in dreadnaughts and in God. Professor Cramb had said "Corsica had conquered Galilee." It was not true, but either Corsica or Galilee must rule the world. It would be worse than any defeat for Christianity to rely upon force. There is no hope for England except in Galilee, in the triumph of love.

Joseph Elkinton and others took part in the discussion. Maurice Gregory (of the Friends' Association for the Promotion of Social Purity) called attention to the remarkable letter issued by five leaders of the Student Christian Movement upon the war. It includes the following striking sentence: "We believe that Christian men are forbidden to take part in war; that the only legitimate and practical way of the Church is the way of love, though it lead to a cross, and that in the end Christians can do their country no better service than by seeking to be like Christ, who came in great humility and love and died and conquered by the Cross."

J. Walton Newbold, of the Independent Labor Party, pleaded that Friends would stand side by side with the Independent Labor Party, which has taken a strong stand against the war. At subsequent sittings other speakers called attention to its weekly paper, The Labor Leader, which was referred to by George Cadbury as the only peace paper in Great Britain with a large circulation.

Difficulties: Can They Be Met?

The sittings on Saturday afternoon and evening were devoted to the discussion of difficulties. It would take too much space to report the proceedings in detail, and we can therefore only attempt a brief summary of the points which emerged. The speakers included Dr. Kingston Fox of London; E. Richard Cross of New York; Joan Mary Fry (daughter of Sir Edward Fry), Richard Graham (son of John William Graham, Principal of Dalton Hall, Manchester), James Hope Moulton, M.A., D.LIT., (Professor of Hellenistic Greek and Indo-European Philology in Manchester University), and others. The questions included such points as: Are our peace principles practicable? In a federation of states what force will be needed to carry out decisions? May we not don the sword to protect a little nation that has trusted our word? Would not England indeed have been disgraced if she had stood aside in the present war?

Herbert G. Wood, M.A., the new Warden of the Woodbrooke Settlement, dealt suggestively with some of these questions. He said that in our thought about peace we had not presented it to our minds sufficiently as a heroic and manly thing; presented merely as abstinence from war it fails to make a deep appeal. The belief in war is more influential than we like to admit. Noel Buxton says that the Balkan question might have been settled a generation ago if the diplomats concerned had not believed in war. From the side of national determination war is ennobling and that is why many men believe in it. So long as Christianity is not presented as an heroic religion war will continue. National life must have a central aim. Can Christ give us that aim? If we say that Christ is a sufficient answer to this central need of human nature it is really an act of faith. Christ will not seem to be sufficient until we understand Him better.

What Would Have Been Christ's Solution?

What would have been the Christian solution of the difficulty that our nation was placed in with regard to Belgium? He thought we did not know. The war may have been the best solution our nation knew, but it is not Christ's solution. Would non-intervention have been right? We should probably say again that that is not the line which Christ would have taken. H. G. Wood suggested that perhaps the kind of answer would have been similar to that of Telemachus, who, by sacrificing himself to the gladiatorial games, put an end to all such games in the future. We need to carry back our protest against war much further than we have ever done, and to examine the whole of our social and national life in the light of it. There is an element of truth that we must recognize in the Socialist's criticism of industrial warfare. Christ challenges the very spirit of our social institutions. But it is not enough to organize our social relations in the spirit of brotherhood. We shall not be able to save our nation unless we are appealing to our people to dedicate themselves to the highest service. We need a fresh vision of what the cause of Christ stands for in the world.

Some Foundation Truths

On Sunday afternoon a message from the Socialist Quaker Society was read. The Chairman announced that the Committee had decided that in order to afford opportunity for the more adequate discussion of some of the points before us on the previous day, it had been decided to divide into four groups as follows: Public Life (Chairman, Arnold S. Rowntree, M. P.); Enlistment (for men) (A. Neave Brayshaw); Enlistment (for women) (Amy E. Sturge); War and the Social Order (Herbert G. Wood). A fifth group gathered for quiet waiting upon God. Before we separated for the group meetings the Chairman briefly outlined the position which the Committee hoped we should most of us be able to accept. We must found our peace principles on the bed-rock of our philosophy of life and upon loyalty to Christ. Most of us have not realized how fundamental is our protest against war. It is based on human brotherhood and the fatherhood of God: the reverence due to everyone, for in each one there is the seed of divine life. Freedom of conscience is based on principles of the Gospel. This is violated directly men come under the military system. The supreme forces that are given to men are mental and spiritual. If we take up war we surrender the highest faculties. Love is the supreme force in the universe. This fundamental truth is violated when men go into battle, for the spirit of hatred cannot but be let loose. Is there not given to us a prophetic mission to spread these views from which we dare not withdraw?

Sunday Evening Addresses

On Sunday evening, addresses on the meaning of the Cross were given by Professor J. H. Moulton and Richard Roberts. For these we must refer our readers to the report of the Conference which is in course of preparation by the Committee. The meeting closed with a time of quiet prayer when it is believed that many dedicated themselves afresh to the call which has been given to our Society "to give a corporate witness to the spirit of peace in this time of war."

The Call to Prayer From America

On Monday morning our attention was drawn to the Proclamation of the President of the United States designating Sunday, October 4th, as a day of prayer for "the nations now in the throes of conflict." Friends were encouraged to bear the matter in mind in their several meetings on the date referred to.

Work Amongst Distressed Aliens

After a suggestive address from Edward Grubb on "Christ the Sufficient Answer in International Relations," Anna Braithwaite Thomas, of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, gave some account of the work which is being done by the "Emergency Committee for the Assistance of Germans, Austrians and Hungarians in Distress," of which she is Honorable Secretary.* The great object of the Committee is to present the principles of Christ and of good-will to "alien enemies" and so prepare the way for better feeling. It was the only Committee of the kind that was working from a Christian standpoint. The majority of the people they had come into touch with were in absolute destitution. Numbers of Germans who had been discharged from employment had been helped. All kinds were coming to them: engineers, travellers, professors, teachers, artisans. As we look into the faces of these people we realize that war is a terrible thing. They had been able to send back one hundred and twenty German girls (governesses, etc.) to their homes in Germany. Money was needed to carry on the work.

TO BE CONCLUDED

Christian Optimism

The European war has put to the test the faith and hope of the Christian optimist. If it were not for the fact that social progress is measured by centuries rather than by decades there would be large grounds for discouragement.

All progress is based on cause and effect and so we are obliged to look beneath the surface for the great war now in progress. It is a very easy matter to refer the whole thing to the devil in man, but this is not a very clear statement of the case and is not satisfactory to the average thinking man. The social world is just as much subject to a definite law as the physical world. Violate that law and you have social decay just as you do in the physical law. Nature is a great healer when given a chance, but even nature cannot obliterate all the evil effects of violated law.

Going back to the founding of the Roman Catholic Church, the church became the one dominating force in the western world. To believe its doctrines and to follow its practices was a sure passport into heaven. To doubt or refuse obedience meant eternal punishment and torment in a lake of fire and brimstone. Under such influence the priesthood became absolute and the people became intellectual slaves. This was Europe for hundreds of years. As the political forces began to assume the control the people became the slaves of kings as they had been slaves of the church. The people were too weak to think and too helpless to act. Kings played their games and the people paid the penalty. It takes nature a long time to reassert itself under such environments.

The Protestant revolution was a desperate effort of nature to free the mind of man, but the effects of long customs were too great to be overcome. The Protestant Church became almost as tyrannical as the Roman. The kings still played their games and the people paid the penalty. To teach contrary to the church meant, with the Roman Church, death temporal and spiritual; with the Protestant Church, expulsion and spiritual ostracism.

Mental subserviency became the governing factor in men's lives and they thus became an easy prey to designing political rulers. We are still reaping the evil effects of such a condition. Human nature is selfish and to hope to obliterate war through the leaders of nations is a hopeless task. The human mind must be set free. Men must be taught to think for themselves. The element of fear must be eliminated. Such a change is taking place though slowly. This scientific age is bringing it about. The Christian religion literally covered Europe and utterly failed. This proves that religion alone is not sufficient. The human mind must be taught to think and act.

The reform must come from the people and not from the rulers. It cannot come until the people are able to enforce their demands. We were surprised at the wild patriotic emotionalism of the Germans and French. We would be almost equally surprised at the people of our own nation under similar conditions. What then is the remedy? Men must be taught to think out the problems of life for themselves.

A general education will do something. Freedom of the press and speech will do much. A genuine conception of the brotherhood of man will have its effect. Great international organizations to promote these things will produce great results. Thorough organization of the great common people will give them courage to act. Other means may be valuable.

These are times to try men's faith in the final triumph of the principles laid down by Christ. We should remember that the world has made wonderful strides. This period of retrogression should not dim our faith in the ultimate working out of God's law in the social world. It should rather nerve us for renewed effort.

THE OPTIMIST.

Wichita, Kansas.

[The writer says that "The Christian religion literally covered Europe and utterly failed." But has the true Christian religion yet had a fair chance in Europe? Many will answer with an emphatic negative. Spectacular religion is not the Christianity of the heart and life. What Europe needs, what the world needs, is a religion of the heart, and therein lies the ground for true world optimism.—THE EDITOR.]

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

The Value of a Man and the Dignity of His Service

BY FRED E. SMITH

(Extracts from a sermon preached to the railway men of the city of Greensboro, North Carolina.)

"What is man that thou art mindful of him?"—Psalms 8: 3, 4.

"I am among you as he that serveth."—Luke 22: 27.

I. The Value of Man.

The Psalmist, beholding the greatness of the universe, the sun, the moon, the stars, which Jehovah has created, naturally asks the question, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" So the ages have been asking this same question, "What is man?"

The naturalist would say, "Man is one of the tiny creatures that lives on one of the minor planets of the great solar system. He is not as big, nor as swift, nor as beautiful, nor as strong, nor as long lived, nor as healthy as other creatures that live on the same planet." The chemist would say, "Man is a creature made up of gases, salts, charcoal and a few other substances sprinkled out of the great caster of nature." The biologist would answer, "Man is a composition of several of the features and peculiarities of the creatures that have preceded him on the earth."

But if you turn to the Word of God and ask, "What is man?" you would find the answer, "And God said Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. And God created man in His own image; in the image of God created He him." "And Jehovah God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." "For thou hast made him but little lower than God, and crownest him with glory and honor." So we may say that man is one of God's created beings in whom dwells the spirit of the divine. Man, though made of earth, is capable of approaching God and holding communion with Him. You may grind him to powder, yet the immortal spirit will arise and claim kinship with God.

II. Jesus Christ reveals the value of man and the dignity of his service, by taking his place on earth amongst men as a toiler.

His townspeople knew him as the "carpenter's son." Jesus says, "I am among you as a servant." When God wants a man for a great service, He passes by the idler and selects a man of toil. When He needed a law-giver, He called Moses from the land of Midian, who for forty years had been caring for the flocks of Jethro. When He wanted a general to lead the army of Israel to success, He went to the threshing floor and there found Gideon. When He wanted a king, He called David who was caring for his father's sheep. Jesus called Peter from the fishing boat; Matthew from the place of custom. Labor is one of the greatest blessings that God has bestowed upon mankind. It is man's safety; it keeps him out of sin and vice. Some one has said that "Nothing great or good ever came to this world that did not come through work." "A workless being is a worthless being."

III. Jesus Christ glorifies the commonplace tasks of life and removes the drudgery.

He substituted "delight" for duty. He says "I delight to do thy will, O God." He used this expression, not because He was working short hours; not because He had an easy task, but because He really delighted in the tasks before Him. Weary and footsore He treads the rugged roads of His native land, hungry and thirsty He stops at the well of Sychar. Weary with the toil of the day He sleeps in the boat in the midst of the tempest. Again, He girds Himself with a towel and takes the place of the lowliest slave and washes His disciples' feet; and turning to them He said, "If I, your Lord and Master wash your feet, so ought ye to wash one another's feet." This example and command were not for the purpose of instituting a religious rite or custom, but rather to teach them that the tasks of life are glorified by the spirit we put into them.

IV. Jesus Christ reveals a heroic spirit in all the tasks of life that command the admiration of the world.

His was the courage of the heart. He had not the association about Him to furnish inspiration; it manifested itself in isolation. He marched alone. It was not the heroism that came at stated times like that which is seen in the time of some great disaster, but His was the heroism of the commonplace toil, in the quietness of His daily activities with no one to encourage Him. It was the heroism that could face sin and rebuke it with the righteousness of His own life. But the greatest act of heroism was when He returned to His Nazareth home the first time after He had entered His public ministry, "and as His custom was He entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and stood up to read. * * * And He began to say unto them, Today hath this scripture been fulfilled in your ears." Then came the wonderful flow of teaching from the heart of this man of Galilee. Then His townspeople arose in a body to put Him out of the synagogue because He dared to speak the truth. It takes the greatest courage to espouse an unpopular cause for righteousness' sake, to stand in the face of evil and evil associates and reveal to them the power of a Christian life.

V. To Jesus Christ all toil was the working out of great religious principles, the redemption of man and society.

With Him there was no difference between the religious and secular, so called. All honest toil for the betterment of mankind is alike sacred. Again I say that His primary object was the redemption of man and society. To have an ideal social order we must have ideal men and women to run it. Nothing can make ideal men that does not take them first as individuals, and go to the very root of their being, showing them their fundamental relations—their duties and responsibilities, and I know of nothing but the religion of the lowly Nazarene that can do this. Some would have us believe that this can be done by education. I believe in education of the highest type, but I never heard of it taking the meanness out of the heart of a man. Others would depend on civilization. Germany, France, Wall Street and Tammany are all civilized, but that has not kept Germany from breaking treaties, nor from the horrors of war; or Wall Street and Tammany from graft and political corruption.

Again others would tell us that we need better laws, but if salvation could come by law, we would have been saved long ago. If then Christianity is the only sound basis for the development of an ideal society, then I say to you that to society no less than to the individual, that great institution, through which Christianity expresses itself, the church, is absolutely indispensable. Remove the church from the community, and you would remove the schools, the industrial institutions; property would depreciate in value, and we would be glad to leave because of the increasing immorality. If religion is an essential and fundamental element in life, individual and social, and if the church is the great organism through which it expresses itself, and does its work, then every one of us should identify ourselves with it and give it our most active and loyal support. Thus doing, we put ourselves in the way of true service for our fellowmen by exhibitions of sympathy and love, as expressed by Jesus when He said, "I am among you as he that serveth."

Acquaintance With Christ

BY CHARLES W. SWEET

That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His suffering, becoming conformed unto His death.—Phil. 3: 10.

The heart struggle of Paul was to be free from the righteousness of the law, and be submerged in the "righteousness of Christ by faith." With this taste of the heavenly, he was inspired with the highest motive possible to man.

First, that he might know Christ.

This opens the door for possible acquaintanceship with Jesus Christ. The Master clearly stated in His prayer that "Life eternal came by knowing God and Jesus Christ whom He had sent." (John 17: 3.) The question may arise, is it possible to become acquainted with Deity? One of the best known Christian workers in America made the following statement regarding a beloved fellow-worker, "I know this brother better than I know any human being; yet, as well as I know him, I know God better."

Through history and testimony we may in part become acquainted with Christ, yet "no man can say that Jesus is the Christ, but by the Holy Spirit;" hence the Holy Spirit enters so fully into the plan of human redemption. It seems that the more Paul knew, the more he wanted to know of the Master. O that the Church might cry out the more to know Christ in reality! Yes, to come into such close touch with Him, so that the most perfect acquaintance may be had.

Strange as it may seem, many of us can say with confidence that we know Him, and He has become so precious. When the saintly Polycarp was being led to the fiery stake at the age of one hundred years, he was urged by some of the heathen to renounce Christ by uttering even so much as one word against Christ and save himself from the agonies of a cruel death. Remember his noble answer, "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He has never done me anything but good all my life, and shall I now renounce Him in my old age?"

The fact of a deep and perfect acquaintance with Christ upheld the aged saint in that great and trying hour, and the Christ that was so real to Polycarp wants to enter into a close relationship with His followers and thereby become the source of life and action; as the Master said, "I have come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly."

The writer is persuaded that a better acquaintance with Christ would make the Society of Friends a power in soul winning. A life of complete consecration and to know the "power of His death," having been crucified and buried with Him by baptism into death, and raised with Him, "so that the life we now live in the flesh we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave Himself for us,"—that is the ideal life.

One cannot know much of the power of Christ's resurrection, unless there is a pretty clear concept of His death, "that is, tasting death for every man," hence passing through death to the resurrection, thereby conquering the enemy, and opening the door for the resurrected life, thus giving a consciousness of an acquaintance with Him that is so real.

Paul wanted not only to know Christ and the power of His resurrection, but he longed to follow on into "the fellowship of His suffering." So many like Peter want to be on the mount, and build a tabernacle and there stay and while the time away, while the multitude is in the valley below. Yes, and Gethsemane is below, and outside the city inclosure, Gethsemane, where the agony is real, and sorrow unto death, and the "sweating as it were great drops of blood."

Little will be done unless His own can follow Him out of the city, over Kedron, and into lonely Gethsemane, and become as Paul said, he "could wish himself accused for his kinsman in the flesh," or like Moses when he cried, "Forgive Israel or blot me out of thy book," or again like John Knox when he cried, "Give me Scotland or I die."

Some one has said that not much will be done in soul winning unless the life of Christ, His passion, resurrection, ascension and the glorious pentecost, comes to be a reality in the individual life. The sad fact remains that so few are willing to pay the price and enter into this close fellowship with Christ, so that He may be known as the one so precious, the soul's satisfaction, and "the one altogether lovely."

The Westtown Letter

I send this month the conclusion of George L. Jones's paper on the Religious Life at Westtown. In perusing it I would wish the reader to remember that the faculty of Westtown is drawn from six Yearly Meetings and the pupils from about eighteen. There are now eighty pupils from outside of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and of these sixty-three belong to groups of Friends comprising the Five Years Meeting.

To supplement George L. Jones's impressions I add some selections from a paper by Edith L. Cary, our teacher of Latin, who is a native of Glens Falls, New York.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

The Religious Life of Westtown

In the third place, I believe that Westtown, in its religious mission, has a profoundly important work. Its environment, its history and traditions, yes, and its very restrictions, lead it, whether it will or no, to a task peculiarly its own. It is none other than this,—with mind facing toward the light and with soul open to the truth, to comprehend clearly and to give to the world, by the teaching of voice and pen, by spirit and life, and consecration, through faculty and student body, our interpretation of the spirit of the Quaker message, going back not simply through the traditions of the decades to the source of Quakerism in George Fox, but on back through the centuries to the fountain head of all truth, Christ himself. To Westtown come yearly the successive groups of boys and girls from almost every yearly meeting in our country, and often beyond the seas. They represent every type of Friendly community and every phase of Quaker belief. It is as if Westtown were the heart of our Quaker organism, into which flows regularly from near and distant parts, the life-blood of our Society; and whence, under the pressure of our impelling strength, it should again flow out and on, sparkling and clear and life-giving. Westtown's duty and Westtown's opportunity are not toward itself alone, nor simply toward our yearly meeting, but to the Society of Friends at large. I know of no school or college with so unique a privilege or so peculiar a fitness for the task. With elderly Friends in our midst, ripe in experience and clear in judgment, occupying important positions in our Society and in closest touch with its work; with younger Friends intensely loyal, open-minded, clear-visioned, willing for service; with a student body alert, vigorous, pliable, yet with positive convictions of its own; with a multitude of supporters, open-handed and loyal;—surely, as the young life of our Society, with its variety of belief, and practice, and inheritance, draws in to Westtown year by year to catch our spirit and our life, it ought to find here a positive, thoughtful, vigorous interpretation of a Quakerism that satisfies the cry of a needy world; and so deeply imbued should it be with the reality and power of this life that, at its outgowing from us, it will carry back to our Quaker communities near and far our spirit and our message, not so much to standardize and to unify as to vitalize and upbuild.

GEORGE L. JONES.

The Religious Life of the Westtown Girls

BY EDITH L. CARY

During the past five years of my acquaintance with Westtown, I think that there has been a real growth in the religious life of the school. In this the girls have had their share. The first year I was here, we had, at one time, eight consecutive silent meetings, and the silent meeting was usual rather than occasional. While I believe that there can be, and very often is, the highest kind of worship in a totally silent meeting, these meetings were often restless and the silence was depressing rather than uplifting. Now, silent meetings are rare. There is speaking not only by older persons present, but also, occasionally, by some of the students.

Beginning with the summer of 1911 a small group of girls has each year attended the Northfield Conference for Young People. The inspiration received from these meetings they have brought back with them. They, with a few others whom they have chosen, have met together once a week either in a meeting for worship or in a meeting to talk over their own special problems. While these meetings have not, as yet, accomplished for the school what it is hoped may be done, the girls are sincere and it seems to be a move in the right direction.

Many of the girls are thinking seriously about religious matters. They need each other's help, and more than that, they ought to be making their lives tell for Christ among their more indifferent schoolmates. All of us too often allow our religion to become a selfish matter and we forget those who do not know Christ, and whom we, as loyal disciples, should be exerting every effort to bring to him.

TIMOTHY WILSON

Timothy Wilson was the son of John and Margaret White Wilson. He was born in eastern North Carolina on January 20, 1832, and died at Indianapolis, Indiana, June 25, 1914, aged 82 years, 5 months and 5 days.

He came with his parents to reside at Dublin, Indiana, when about ten years of age. He lived with them on a farm for a few years and then became one of the first pupils at Friends Boarding School, afterward Earlham College. Here he met Elizabeth Ann Terrell, who became his wife, the marriage taking place at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, August 25, 1852.

To them were born six children, of whom two died. He is survived by his daughter, Olive B. Newlin of Whittier, California, and by his son, Terrell Wilson of Pasadena, California.

After leaving school he engaged in business as a merchant at Dublin, Indiana. Leaving business he followed the profession of teaching and was the Principal of Friends Academy, Spiceland, for several years. He was also County School Superintendent of Henry County, Indiana, for six years. He was a successful farmer and was so occupied for many years at Dublin, Dunreith and Spiceland.

In April, 1865, he sustained the loss by death of his first wife. In August of the following year he was united in marriage to Elmina Foster Coffin, who survives him. Selling his farm, he removed to Maryville, Tennessee, where for four years he taught in the Friends Freedman's School. He came to reside in Richmond about 1886, and for over twenty years he was a bookkeeper with Benjamin Johnson and Son, retiring from active service about four years ago.

Timothy Wilson was a man of superior parts. Deprived of a college education in his youth he made up very largely this lack by persistent study of the best authors. He kept himself abreast of the times, and was always well informed on current topics. He was in many respects a self-made man. He was very practical, and in his later years showed a remarkable receptivity to new ideas and new methods. Of sound judgment, his opinion was highly valued. He always made his presence felt though in a quiet, unobtrusive way. He was original and possessed a keen wit. He was remarkably studious and learned Greek when well advanced in life.

He was a birthright Friend, and was devoted to the interests of the church all his life. He was for many years Superintendent of the Bible School at Spiceland. He introduced singing into the Spiceland meeting amid much unkind criticism. He was clerk of Milford Dublin Quarterly Meeting, and in fact, filled many honorable places in the church.

On taking up his residence in Richmond he identified himself with South Eighth Street Friends, and proved himself to be a very valuable and beloved member. When South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting was established he was one of the three chosen as elders for three years, and he remained an elder to the day of his death. He took a great interest in the Bible School, and for many years was a very efficient and successful teacher. He also conducted the Teachers' Class. He won the loving fellowship of all connected with the church.

He was a very active member of the Tuesday Club and identified himself with all movements for the public good. Timothy Wilson lived a long, useful, faithful life. He retained his faculties until within a few weeks of his death, and now that he has gone to receive his reward, his memory and influence will live long in the hearts of those who have been privileged to know him.

And he, my friend, the last to enter in,
With whom I took sweet counsel here,
Tender and true, without a peer,
Wise, fearless, faithful, gone his crown to win. * * *

IMPORTANT NOTICE*"Esther E. Baird Love Fund"

To the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America:

At the Triennial Conference held at Muncie, Indiana, last May, the Union gladly assumed the salary of our dear friend, Esther E. Baird, of India. At that time a number of pledges were made, and since the Conference closed, we are happy to report that Nebraska, New England, Iowa and Western Yearly Meeting W. F. M. S. have pledged a yearly amount towards this "Love Fund."

It was decided at the Conference that all money given for this fund was to go through the regular channels. The Union is therefore asking all who have pledged amounts, and all who desire to help in this precious work, to send half the amount of their yearly pledge before December 1st, to the treasurer of their own Yearly Meeting. In this way each Yearly Meeting will be credited with the amount given.

Kindly mark all money sent for this purpose, "Esther Baird, Love Fund."

The Union has promised that half of the $500.00 will be paid January 1, 1915. The various Yearly Meeting Treasurers are therefore requested to see that the money sent them is forwarded to the Treasurer of the Union, Emma G. Randolph, 29 Williams Street, Worcester, Massachusetts, on or before January 1, 1915.

On behalf of the Union,
CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS,
President.

PERSONAL MENTION

Edna Goodwin has gone to Peshastin, Washington, to take up pastoral work in that meeting.

Edwin I. and Ida R. Niles have located as pastors of the Friends meeting at Lake Stevens, Washington.

Harry A. Shepherd has accepted a call to take pastoral charge of the meetings at Orilla and Manton, Michigan.

Joseph Phillips will serve as pastor of the meeting at Arthur Center, Michigan, for the coming year. This meeting is in the limits of Manton Monthly Meeting.

A. J. Hanson and wife have entered upon their fourth year of pastoral work at LeGrand, Iowa. Mr. Hanson is President of the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

William P. and Abigail C. Haworth, formerly in charge of the Shawnee Friends Mission work, have accepted a call to serve the meeting as pastors at Lawrence, Kansas. They take the place of Rachel C. Woodard, who has been liberated for religious services in the meetings of Friends and others in Tennessee.

NEWS NOTES

The meeting at LeGrand, Iowa, will continue to support Alice Kennedy as missionary in Jamaica for another year.

On October 4th, President Levi T. Pennington, of Pacific College, addressed a union meeting of all the churches of McMinnville, Oregon, on the subject of peace. The largest church in the city was filled and splendid interest was shown.

The movement to organize the churches in cities in behalf of general welfare work is spreading throughout North Carolina. Greensboro is already organized with Earle J. Harold, a Friends minister, as Secretary. Mt. Airy, Winston-Salem and Salisbury are contemplating an organization similar to the Greensboro movement.

The young men of the Bible School at Danville, Indiana, have formed an orchestra and they play both at the sessions of the Bible School and also at the evening religious service. Wilhom Easley, President of the Christian Endeavor Society, and Merrill Shaw, the Treasurer, attended the recent state Christian Endeavor Convention at Logansport.

Charles M. Woodman, pastor of the Friends Meeting at Portland, Maine, has arranged a series of four sermons during November on the general topic of "What Is the Message of Quakerism Today." The subjects are as follows: 1, "The Basis of the Quaker Faith"; November 8, "The Guide of the Quaker Life"; November 15, "The Creed of the Quaker Church"; November 22, "The Field of the Quaker Message."

The Bible School at Westfield, Indiana, held a Rally Day recently. It was an enthusiastic occasion. The school has taken on new life. Since rally day the attendance has reached a still higher mark. On October 25th, the pastor, E. Howard Brown, preached a sermon on prison reform and in the evening on the temperance problem. The attendance is increasing at all the meetings. The school year at the Seminary has opened with good prospects.

A reception was given on the 9th of October by the members of the meeting at Danville, Indiana, in honor of their new pastor, Mary Miars Harold and her husband, Arthur Harold. The pastors of the other churches spoke words of welcome, as did also President Laird of the Central Normal College, to which Mrs. Harold responded in a pleasing manner. Musical numbers were given by musicians representing all four churches. The program closed by all uniting in singing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." A social hour followed. During the receiving hour a musical program was given on the piano.

The Friends of West Richmond Meeting held a congregational meeting on the afternoon of October 18th, to consider the question of the erection of a new meeting house. The discussion continued for about three hours, after which a private vote of those present was taken to determine whether or not the proposed building should be erected on the grounds of Earlham College or whether at some other point in West Richmond. The result of the ballot will not be made public until the November Monthly Meeting, at which time it is expected that the meeting will decide definitely with reference to the location. It was agreed with practical unanimity that a building should be erected somewhere.

The Friends Meeting at Denver, Colorado, of which George D. Weeks is pastor, has issued a unique folder announcing the location of the meeting house, the hours of service, etc. It is generally known perhaps, that Billy Sunday has just closed a successful evangelistic campaign in that city. On the outside of this folder in large type are the words, "Billy Sunday Has Gone"; on the inside is the following: "But the Friends Church is still here, at Forty-first Avenue and Shoshone Street, and invites you and your friends to attend the Rally Day Exercises next Sunday, November 1st. Sunday School Children's Exercises 10 to 11 a. m. Rally Day Exercises 11 to 12 a. m., conducted by the pastor. Christian Endeavor Exercises and entertainment 7:30 p. m. Good music. You are welcome to all services. Come."

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting was held at West Branch, New York, on October 17th and 18th, and was a time of refreshment. The public meeting on Seventh-day morning was followed by a luncheon and the afternoon business session of the Quarterly Meeting. Following this a very interesting session of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight was held. In the evening there was a Bible School Conference, in the discussion of which many took part. Following the meeting for worship on Sabbath morning, the Bible School was held at the noon hour, at the close of which interesting remarks were made by some of the visitors. Rhoda Adams, one of the veteran mothers of the school, gave some excellent counsel. A very profitable testimony meeting was held in the evening, participated in by many. Aulder Larzelere, pastor of Smyrna Meeting at Upperville, was present at all of the meetings and preached the gospel with great acceptance. Henry Ellsworth and wife of Upperville, were present and greatly helped the Quarterly Meeting in song.

During the recent campaign to make Oregon dry many of the Friends found splendid opportunity to help the good work along. Charles O. Whiteley, pastor of the meeting at Newberg, assisted by Clarence Butt, an attorney, held a big "Oregon Dry" meeting at Dundee, on the evening of October 4th. On the following Sabbath Charles Whiteley and Mr. Richie of the Christian Church, held a similar meeting at Springbrook, while Julius C. Hodson and other Friends spoke to the Friends of Rex. Levi T. Pennington addressed a street meeting for the "Young Campaigners" on Saturday evening, October 10th, and on the following day spoke in a meeting at Dundee. The women also were very busy. Louisa P. Round, Edith Minchin, Lorena A. T. Hodson and others gave largely of their time and energy, especially through the agency of the W. C. T. U.

There were about 230 members of the Friends Church at Wilmington, Ohio, present at a church social Thursday evening, in the basement of the church. The occasion was one of the most delightful that the church has ever known. After a musical program, Richard C. Greene was called on to speak for the congregation its feeling of appreciation for the work of the pastor, E. R. Purdy, and his good wife, during the four years they have been here. At the close of his remarks he presented the pastor and his wife a small parcel, given as he said, as a token of the love the people have for them. Both responded feelingly to the address of Mr. Greene, and then, their curiosity getting the better of them and at the insistence of their friends, they opened the box which had been handed them. In it were eight double eagles, totaling $160.00 which the people were giving their pastor as a token of their esteem. It was a happy gathering and will be remembered long by those who attended.—Journal-Republican.

J. J. and Sara H. Armistead write gratefully of the visit of John F. Hanson, who has held a number of Peace and Gospel meetings among the Norwegian fishing population among whom our Friends are working with the aid of their Red Cross mission boat. S. H. Armistead writes: "The visit has come just at the right time, when people are all discussing war, many of them saying it is God who has sent this one. They have crowded to J. F. Hanson's Peace meetings as well as to the Gospel ones, wishing to hear the other side of this war question." At one large Peace meeting at which, writes J. J. Armistead, the various points were taken from the Christian standpoint, "the people came to us afterwards and said, 'We never heard such things before,' and invitations came to hold meetings in many other places." "We have been able to visit many remote places together," writes our friend, "including Vigten and other islands; the crowded meetings have been largely blessed as the Gospel message has been delivered."—The London Friend.

PENN COLLEGE NEWS

Penn College has recently come into possession of a magnificent gift. Almost a quarter of a century ago Robert and Martha Raley, residing at Bangor, Iowa, made a provisional deed to Penn College of their farm, consisting of two hundred and forty acres. The provision was that they should have full use of the land as long as either lived. About two years ago Robert Raley passed away, and since that time Martha Raley has been in poor health. Recently she had a paralytic stroke, and the decline from that time on was very rapid. She passed away on Monday, October 19th. By her death this excellent farm becomes the property of Penn College. The farm is valued at $50,000.00 and can be disposed of at that figure.

Robert and Martha Raley had no children of their own, but had raised six children, although none of them had been legally adopted. They were Friends of the old type, industrious and frugal; were models of honesty and uprightness of character. Their gift of the net results of their life earnings to the cause of education is a most commendable act. Although they are departed, their influence will go on through all time, and the way will be opened for scores of young men and young women to be trained for life's services.

If this sort of thing could be done as frequently as it should be, our educational institutions and other avenues of church service might be well financed. How much better it is to direct funds into such channels than to leave it to people who do not need them and who, in the majority of cases, resort to the law courts in its distribution. Men who handle estates tell us that at least seventy-five per cent. of inherited money proves a curse to those who receive it, when given directly to individuals for their own use. In a large majority of cases people should be left to make their own way in the world, and the property which a man accumulates and does not use himself, should be directed to philanthropic channels. A great many men in these days of generous giving are turning over inherited funds at once to some good cause. This is a most commendable thing to do, and will bring to him who does it a satisfaction that is superior to any other manner of disposition of inherited funds.

Robert and Martha Raley little thought when they made this donation almost a quarter of a century ago, that it would come into the possession of the college at a time when it was so needed as it is at the present time. In a sense, it might be said that these worthy people have saved the college from dissolution. Will not many others who read this account think seriously of the matter, and make a similar provision for some one of the educational institutions of our church?

Penn College is well started on what promises to be the best year in her history. The enrollment of students is the largest in the history of the college, and the freshman class is the largest one Penn has ever had.

The annual "Penn Day" celebration was an occasion of significant interest. On the evening of October 22, the Board of Trustees entertained the Faculty at a dinner. The object of this gathering was that the two bodies of people who have the management of the college, and who are directly responsible for her success, might get a better understanding of the problems which confront them. Irving C. Johnson, President of the Board of Trustees, presided as toastmaster; and the various phases of the college proposition were presented of England, France, Germany and Russia are not permitted to use a pound of alum baking powder. The efficiency of the soldiers depends too much upon their health and endurance to risk the use of food which the authorities believe would be detrimental. Therefore the manufacture and sale of the alum powder is prohibited.

Royal Baking Powder is extensively used privately and by the military forces throughout the world. Its absolute wholesomeness, imparting as it does, healthful as well as appetizing qualities to the food, and its perfect keeping qualities in every climate and under different conditions, make it particularly desirable for all conditions of use.

On Friday, October 23, at 10:30 o'clock, a. m., a most excellent address was given by Edgar H. Stranahan, pastor of Oskaloosa Friends Meeting. The music of the occasion was furnished by Professor Louis F. Burnett, formerly head of the department of music in Penn College, now engaged in evangelistic singing. Music was also furnished by students of the department of music. A picnic dinner was had at the noon hour, each class having its special place upon the college campus, visitors being invited to eat with the various groups of students. In the afternoon occurred two football games, the first between the Penn Second Team and Lynnville High School, which resulted in a score of 6-0 in favor of Penn; and the second game being a game between Penn and Iowa State Teachers College, resulting in a score of 19-7, in favor of Penn. In the evening occurred the annual "Home-Coming" banquet, which was largely attended and was a most enjoyable and profitable occasion.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 15.

Subject—Jesus and Peter.

Lesson—Mark 14: 27-31, 53, 54, 66-72.

Golden Text—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—I Cor. 10: 12.

Time—Early Friday morning, April 7, A.D. 30.

Place—Court of the Palace in Jerusalem.

The lesson is a character study of one who in many respects may be called the leading disciple of Jesus. That his life appears to be full of contradictions only emphasizes the naturalness of the man.

Peter was a sort of rough diamond that had to be shaped and polished, but which gained only in value with the polishing. He was the type of a fairly well-to-do business man, who never lost the practical side of his nature, although constantly bubbling over with his optimism and self reliance.

He was a man who dared much, who was courageous and resourceful, but who in a crisis found that he had overestimated his self control. Sincerity was written over his whole career, but with it was an impulsiveness that marked the one instability of his life.

Jesus seems to have found a peculiar affinity for both Peter and John, two men of wholly opposite types. John was affectionate, trustful, companionable; Peter keen-visioned, impressionable, ready; both the counterparts of a full orb, well rounded life.

Peter was quick to learn that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of the living God." He seemed to be able to sense the mission of the Master with a clearness and intensity that came to the other disciples more slowly.

Peter's development in association with Jesus was the development of a natural man. Time after time he met the severest tests, and while he was constantly making mistakes, he always learned to profit by them, and each testing added to his faith and strength.

His one sad experience of denying Jesus in the early morning hours of a strange and terrible day sobered him as nothing else had done, and as an apostle he had the strength of a rock and a positiveness in his message that could hardly have been realized except by a man who had passed through the fire.

Peter's denial is the act of a sleepy man in a daze. Perhaps Peter had expected Christ to have delivered Himself by miraculous power. In his impulsiveness he draws his sword to strike the first blow in defense of his Lord. In the early morning hours, sleepy and confused, he perhaps failed to understand his Master's command to put aside his weapon.

For the moment he faced the hopelessness of the future. The whole scheme seemed doomed to failure, and the promised Kingdom seemed tumbling to destruction. For the moment he was afraid. If Jesus could be taken and killed, why not His associates who had been participants in the new era that had disturbed all Jewry?

It was one of those moments of weakness which many men face; when the whole fabric of their fondest dreams seems to be tumbling about their ears. Human frailty asserted itself in the darkest moment of the world's history.

We ought not to be too ready to condemn Peter, so long as humanity is so constantly prone to lower the standard of its Christian profession to suit the changing circumstances of life. The man who believes that a pure gospel will not stand the test of practical business, of practical politics, is denying the power of his Lord. The man who feels that the liquor traffic cannot be destroyed, who has visions of the triumph of evil, who thinks the church is going to destruction, is one who has lost sight of an all conquering Christ.

After Jesus had been taken Peter followed Him "afar off." That was the time of preparation for the spirit of denial. Therein may we learn a lesson. Jesus must be our companion or else we are on dangerous ground. Picture Peter trembling in the gray of a terrible morning and Peter standing with boldness at Pentecost. The contrast marks the difference between those who look upon Jesus from afar and those who have Him as an abiding guest within.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 15.

Topic—Magnify the Christian Endeavor Pledge. Eccl. 5: 1-7. (Led by the Lookout Committee.)

The best way to magnify the pledge is to live it. This pledge sets forth concisely the normal rule of conduct for the healthy, growing, Christian life.

If all men who profess to be Christians would really strive to do whatever Jesus would have them do, this world would soon feel the impress of a new humanity, and Christian standards would become the standards of daily life.

The Bible should be read daily because it is the handbook of ideal living. They who study the Scriptures faithfully and sincerely will find a straight path in which to walk, will find protection from all evil.

Daily prayer is the key that will unlock God's bounteous storehouse of blessing for every soul. Through communion doubts and perplexities will be removed that would otherwise handicap the Christian life.

Every true disciple will be loyal to his church, by attending the regular services and contributing to the support of the church according as God hath given ability. The meeting for worship is the recruiting station for needed spiritual strength with which to meet heroically life's duties.

The pledge sets forth a program of Christian living that is ideal.

FRIENDS GIVE RECEPTION

According to previous plans and arrangements, the Ladies' Aid Society of the Friends Church at Earlham, Iowa, gave a reception for their new pastor, Rev. Haworth and family. They received as their guests the parishioners of the church, pastors and wives of sister churches, with others numbering in all about two hundred.

The time was spent in getting acquainted with each other in a social way. The music, which furnished a great deal of amusement and entertainment, consisted of choruses, quartets, duets, and many whose musical talent had not been displayed for a number of years, entertained the company in a manner not to be excelled by professionals or experts.

After this delightful treat, the president of the Society, Mrs. Silas Thompson, who deserves a great deal of credit for the success of the evening's entertainment, introduced our Mayor, Dr. Day, who in a pleasant manner, in behalf of our citizens, welcomed the pastor and family to the homes and interests of Earlham. Following Dr. Day, Professor Gerber spoke of the school and church, extending to all the pastors of the city a cordial invitation to visit our schools, public as well as academy. Professor Gerber was followed by the pastors of the city churches, whose talks were seasoned with mirth, wit and wisdom, that manifested the spirit of the "Great Teacher," who went about doing good. Rev. Stribling, an ex-pastor of the church, closed this part of the program with an interesting talk of the work of the church and the ministry. After these intellectual feasts the President with her able assistants served cake and coffee.

Thus passed one of the most pleasant functions socially and spiritually that has been our privilege to attend for some time. At a reasonable hour the guests wended their way to their homes, feeling it was good to be there. Thanking the ladies for the pleasant time, we said good-night.

One Who Was There.

—From an Earlham Paper.

A cordial welcome is extended to Friends coming to New York City and vicinity. Meeting houses, 144 East Twentieth Street, New York, and Lafayette and Washington Avenues, Brooklyn. Hour of worship, First-day, 11:00 a. m.

THE CHRISTMAS THOUGHT

Ideas on Christmas giving are rapidly changing among the sensible. Those who think as they give are looking for a year-round service as the important thing.

In a week of shopping, with all its strain, you will not find a better gift than a year's subscription to The Youth's Companion. It offers its service, its clean entertainment, its fine suggestiveness week after week; and the end of the year, which finds many a gift in the attic, dust-covered and forgotten, brings The Companion again, with all the charm of last Christmastide.

No American monthly at any price offers the same amount of reading, and none can offer better quality. Less than four cents a week provides this best of Christmas gifts—$2.00 a year. If you subscribe now, all the remaining issues of the year will be sent free, and The Companion Home Calendar. A copy of the Calendar is also sent to those who make a gift subscription. Send for sample copies, and the Forecast for 1915.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION,

A Prayer for Peace

BY WILLIAM B. DELANCY

From age to age, in the deep shadows standing,
A mighty God keeps "watch above his own."
The planets move through space at his commanding,
In a design known to him alone.
His wondrous mind regards the sparrow's falling;
He only knows the hour when time shall cease:
Almighty One, hear now thy children calling,
Lord God of Hosts, wilt thou not grant us peace?

O God, we kneel today, a nation praying,
Strong in our faith, a faith that knows no fear,
Save godly fear of thee. Without delaying,
Wilt thou not, Lord, thy pleading people hear?
Today we lift our hearts to thee, imploring,
That bloody strife forevermore shall cease,
That nations may forget the art of warring;
That all men on the earth may dwell in peace.

Humbly we kneel before thy throne in asking;
Our hearts bowed down in sorrowing and grief.
In thee we place our trust; be thine the tasking
To move the hearts of men to bring relief.
"Thy will be done on earth as 'tis in heaven,"
So may it be, O Lord, without surcease,
Till all the world's responsive to the leaven
Thy word has given through the Prince of Peace.

Above the clash of arms, the roar and rattle
Of strife where man to fellow man deals death,
Where legion after legion moves to battle,
What time we watch and wait with bated breath,
Lord God of Hosts, hear thou our voice appealing,
Stretch forth thine arm, bid war's destruction cease;
For thy Son's sake, the Father-heart revealing,
Hear us, O God, in mercy grant us peace.

English Peace Document Here

The pamphlets containing the message of the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting on the war situation in Europe, addressed to "Men and Women of Goodwill in the British Empire," have arrived at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and are being distributed to those who have sent in their orders.

This message has attracted large attention not only throughout the British Empire, having been printed in all the leading daily papers in England, but it has been commented upon throughout the world.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has received 5,000 copies of this document, and will be glad to fill all orders at the rate of 2 cents per copy, this to cover postage in sending, the balance to be sent to our English Friends to help them pay for the printing.

It is a document which every Friend's family should have. Address orders to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana. Stamps will be taken for small orders.

Tell Your Friends

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be sent to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1916, for $1.50, the price of one year's subscription. The general testimony is to the effect that the paper is getting better all the time. Tell your friends and neighbors about this special offer, that they may get the benefit of the good things now appearing. Some of the very best features we have been able yet to offer are being planned for the coming winter. No Friends' family can afford to do without THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the paper needs the support of every Friend's family.

Monthly Meeting Chronicle

We have on hands a number of the booklets, "The Chronicle of Slow Valley Monthly Meeting," which are awaiting the orders of our Friends. More than 400 copies have been sold thus far, and orders are coming in almost daily.

It is believed that this Chronicle will awaken new interest in almost every meeting if only it can be placed in the hands of the membership. In many meetings pastors could easily sell the books at cost if only they had them on hands to deliver. Price: Single copy, 15 cents; 10 copies, $1.00. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Peace Prizes

The Church Peace Union takes this opportunity to remind all clergymen, divinity students and members of churches and Sunday Schools that the contest for the five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) in prizes closes the first of January. There has already been a wide response and from all parts of the United States essays are being submitted for these prizes.

The first prize is one of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) for ministers; the next is a series of three prizes, five hundred dollars ($500.00), three hundred dollars ($300.00) and two hundred dollars ($200.00) for divinity students; the other three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) is to be divided among young church members and Sunday School pupils.

The topic of the present awful war in Europe affords an opportunity for constructive writing on the most vital subject now before the world, of which we wish all might avail themselves, and it is especially to be hoped that the clergy of the United States may write freely and frankly on the relation of the church to this calamity. Detailed information concerning the prizes can be obtained from the office of The Church Peace Union, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Autumn

BY LUKE WOODARD

'Tis autumn, and the year
Begins to wane, the bloom
Of spring is gone, the perfume
Of the summer rose has died, the sear
Has touched the leaf
Which falls, fit emblem of our grief.
As falls our tear
When loved ones pass away,
And nature seems today
To grieve, if we might say
That nature ever grieves.
And yet her funeral dress
Is not the dark habiliments of gloom,
But rather those of loveliness,
For myriad leaves
Are still upon the trees,
And trembling in the breeze
Display their varied hues of green
And gold and scarlet to adorn the scene.
Thus, just before the breath
Of autumn crisps the leaves
And causes them to fall,
Kind nature weaves
With her own hand her pall
And shroud, and dons her loveliest dress,
And in her dying doth assume
An aspect that appears far less
To speak of death than finished life—
Fit prelude of eternal blessedness.

Saving Every Life and All of Life

Perhaps in no other age has there been so much in the record of events to challenge the capabilities and spirit of the Christian Church as at the present time. It is the day of spiritual opportunity for the whole of Christendom, and it will require a united church to meet the issues that are fast crowding upon this generation.

The rapid awakening of the pagan world and its need of spiritual illumination and guidance, the supreme problem of federating international life upon the bed rock basis of human brotherhood, the unspeakable catastrophe that is turning the professedly Christian nations of Europe into an enginery of hate and destruction, the arrogance of evil organisms in our own land that set at naught the laws of Jehovah no less than the statutes of the people, the problems of the immigrant, of the tenement districts, our idle population, of the children who toil and grow old in babyhood, of the country church in relation to the community, these are a part of the record of this day that is challenging the Christian world to make good upon its professions of social and individual regeneration.

A prominent business man was heard to say the other day that Christianity has been a complete failure, having in mind the gory spectacle of the present European conflict. On the other hand we hear Count Okuma, a pagan statesman—one of the greatest of his day—declaring that the only hope of the world lies in Christianity. No student of the times in serious mood will be ready to proclaim the bankruptcy of our Christian civilization, but the march of recent events has forced a time of testing that must mark new adjustments in the relationships of the church to the changing conditions of the times.

The gospel propaganda has been narrowed to its own hurt by the exclusiveness with which it has been applied to individual regeneration. Without in any sense lessening the force of its individualistic appeal, the gospel must become the redemptive force in our social organism no less than in the personal life. Men must be made to see that they cannot profess discipleship in the point of personal character and become irresponsible as factors in the corporate relationships of life.

For all too long a time the Christian world has had one standard for the man and another for men in association together in the material world. In its true setting, Christianity must impress its transforming touch upon all human relationships. Politics and religion may not readily mix, to use the common phrase, but religion must become the controlling element in politics, else government is doomed to failure and religion will fall short of its highest purpose.

The burden of Christ's message was the establishing of the kingdom of God, the introduction of a new social and spiritual order into the world, wherein human society would know the transforming power of a new life. His emphasis was upon a vital piety that would find its best expression in the varied forms of the social life. Not only did Christ come to bring salvation to every life but to "all of life," as the United Mission program has expressed it, and the world is learning in a new way that the gospel has not saved to the uttermost until race hatred has been abandoned, until the gospel light has illuminated our city slums and until the glory of the Lord shall have risen upon the nations.

Hear the voice of the old prophet as he proclaims this primitive social message for the redemption of his people:

The Spirit of the Lord Jehovah is upon me; because Jehovah hath annointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the year of Jehovah's favor, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them a garland for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they may be called trees of righteousness, the planting of Jehovah, that he may be glorified. And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

As in that elder day, so in this; Christian character must find its highest expression in civic and social betterment or the whole enterprise of world evangelization will fall to pieces through sheer impotency and lack of spiritual energy. What shall it profit any people, what shall it profit the whole wide world, if only here and there a scattered discipleship shall catch the vision of a better life, and the impress of its quickening shall find no lodgment in the bewildering ignorance and superstition and selfishness and wickedness of the social order all about us? If our own country shall grow rich in population and pile up its wealth until it can no longer be counted, what shall it profit if the masses are to lose the satisfying sense of the living Jehovah, and collectively are left to the controlling influences of demonistic tendencies in the body politic and in the commingling of daily life? Of what avail shall be our boasted twentieth century civilization, if international hate shall continue to be the rule of conduct for the nations, and if Christianity shall be stifled on the very threshold of its ideal of international, interracial brotherhood?

The spirit of democracy will do much in the line of social betterment, for it is inconceivable that any people knowing the right will deliberately choose the wrong; international arbitral agreements can do something to avert the horrors of bloody strife, for a nation's honor is defiled if it breaks its compact; the realization of the hopes of a federal union of the so-called civilized nations of the world would go far to guarantee a higher destiny for all mankind; but unless the spirit of the Man of Galilee shall become the dominant force in all these relationships there can be no assurance of permanency in the social regeneration of humanity.

The church is facing the mightiest task of its existence. Christianity has not broken down; it is its counterfeit that has failed. With painful infrequency has Christ been granted the guest chamber of the life of the nations. The world has uncovered its head in token of formal allegiance to the Lord of Lords, but it has failed to uncover its heart in pledge of loyal, obedient submission to His Holy will. Mankind has respected Christ when it ought to have been worshipping Him; it has accepted His standards as ideal, but has failed to incorporate them into the practical usages of life.

But Christianity has not failed, despite the empty homage which has characterized so large a part of the world's activities. A writer has said that the blackest page of Christianity is whiter than the whitest page of paganism. Take from civilization all that Christianity has put into it, and it will be left an empty, blackened shell, not far removed from the paganism of the heathen world.

But the church is yet in only the earliest stages of its mission. Its work must continue to be transforming. Its gospel is not merely a corrective force, but a curative, creative force that inevitably will work the miracle of a changed life. The church must enlarge its vision until it grasps the full meaning of a religion that saves to the uttermost, of a gospel that has an application for the whole of life. The gospel cannot be limited to any zone, to any race, to any limitation of time. It is the heaven that must work out the social redemption of the world no less than the regeneration of the individual man.

When the church is ready to throw off the shackles of conventionality and is ready to grasp its golden opportunities of sacrificial service for every element and condition of human life, the gospel of our Lord will have a new meaning for this old earth. Out from the storm and battle of the eastern world, out from the stress of our modern industrial order, out from the faithlessness and the moral turpitude of the modern political and business world, there will then come a new revelation of the Divine purpose, bringing to all mankind the hope of a universal redemption, as men of every race behold the gospel of our Christ visualized in the practical relationship of life. Herein lies the hope of the world and of every problem of humanity. The church thus becomes the arbiter of the world's destiny, and must set itself to the task with faith in the Omnipotent Jehovah and with confidence in His ability to save not only every life but all of life as well.

Prohibition Gaining

Prohibition had another try-out at the polls on November 3d, and succeeded in scoring some new triumphs. On that day Arizona, Colorado, Oregon and Washington decided to abolish their saloons, and this action together with that of Virginia on September 22, adds to the dry list prohibition territory containing 4,879,745 inhabitants based on the census of 1910.

Fourteen states having a population of 19,565,706 have now decided to prohibit the liquor traffic. It is a good guess that Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Vermont and Utah will take similar action whenever they are permitted to vote directly upon the question, and that with a little more of constructive educational work the states of Kentucky, Louisiana, Nebraska, South Dakota, Texas, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana would follow the same course. If this survey be taken as substantially correct, it will be readily seen that the possibility of getting three-fourths of the states committed to the proposed National prohibition amendment is not remote by any means. It would only need the addition of five more to the lists above named, and with states like Minnesota, Delaware, Wyoming, Connecticut and New Mexico to draw from, not to mention Illinois with approximately fifty dry counties and Missouri with seventy-four, the prospect is by no means an idle dream.

There is disappointment at the result in Ohio, where prohibition was defeated by 83,371, in a total vote of 1,089,955, and where a vicious liquor proposition was adopted by a majority of 8,300 in a total vote of

1,100,796. When it is noted, however, that the two counties containing Cincinnati and Cleveland returned majorities aggregating 109,400 against prohibition and 94,339 for the liquor "home rule amendment," it will be seen that the balance of the state is dry. Seventy out of eighty-eight counties returned dry majorities, and of these twenty-seven are now wet. It is probable that the drys will rally their forces for another campaign a year hence in the effort to overthrow this verdict.

Other minor victories were recorded elsewhere with some defeats. California voted to retain saloons as was expected, although the drys made a splendid showing. The face of the Nation is apparently turned with determination toward the final overthrow of the un-American liquor traffic.

War and Peace—Some Thoughts on the Present Outlook

(A paper read by Edwin Coventry at British Columbia Quarterly Meeting held at Victoria, B. C., October 24, 1914.)

The advocates of Peace principles as held by Friends, cannot fail in these present days of stress and strain to be frequently confronted with the query, as to whether they would be prepared to see their own country attacked and overrun by an enemy and themselves possibly put to torture and death rather than to take up arms in self-defence? To those who do hold that all war is wrong and incompatible with the spirit of Christ, of course there is only one answer.

We have, fortunately, preserved for us many instances in which in point of fact, Friends—and others—have had their faith in this matter put to the most severe practical tests, and the result shown by them is that not only have their lives actually been preserved in circumstances of the greatest apparent danger, but the faithful carrying out of their trust has had influences for good far beyond what could possibly have been expected or dreamed of at the time.

The case of Pennsylvania comes readily to mind in this connection, the most conspicuous example in history, proving all that could be desired in favor of our argument. Those who hear this will be very familiar with this history and I pass on to mention one or two other historic happenings. The Irish rebellion of 1798 was a terrible time of cruel war, of bigotry and hatred let loose in its worst forms. Yet the "Friends" throughout were preserved so completely from harm that an official document of theirs states—"It is a cause for thankful acknowledgment to the Father and God of all our mercies, while in some places we did not know but that every day would be our last, seeing and hearing of so many of our neighbors being put to death, that no member of our Society fell a sacrifice but one man who came to an untimely end through his own want of faith and consistent conduct. He fled to a garrisoned town in County Kildare, while his family whom he had quitted were preserved unhurt."

A woman Friend gave the following narrative: "About the middle of Fifth month, 1798, the County of Wexford became the scene of open rebellion. A short time before this date a Roman Catholic gentleman called on my father to say that the country would soon be in a state of insurrection, and offered my father accommodation for our household in a vessel he had procured to transport his own family to Wales. After trying to seek for best wisdom, our dear parents concluded it was right for them to remain at home, placing their confidence in God. The rebels formed two camps on each side of my father's residence, and our central position caused a constant demand on us for provisions of all sorts, which were carried to the camp, my mother often remarking the supply for her large family was like the cruise of oil and barrel of meal, never failing.

"During these times of disturbance our Meetings were regularly kept up—my two sisters usually walking three miles to meeting, as our horses had been driven out of our stables and mounted by the rebels. One day some of the people said, 'See how they dare us by going through the streets to their meetings; they shall be dragged to the altar of the chapel and pay the penalty;' but my sisters passed on unhurt. At this time our friend David Sands from America was passing through Enniscorthy to attend meeting, when his companion had to alight and assist in removing the dead bodies from before the wheels of his carriage. That Quarterly Meeting, as may be supposed, was a solemn and favored one. After the burning by the rebels of Scullabogue Barn, which was crowded with women and children, a large company appeared on the lawn carrying the black flag, the signal of death. My mother coming forward heard them say, 'Why don't you begin?'—each seemed looking to the other to begin the work of death, but presently they muttered 'We cannot,' and at this critical moment some women ran to their husbands in great agitation and dragged them away; a higher power than the will of the murderers saved my dear father's life.

"But again the rebels entered our house to rob and plunder, leading forth my father, who was in feeble health, to the main guard, as they said, to murder him. In the darkness of night he stumbled and sat down, whereupon they said he might as well die there, demanding, 'Have you anything to say? Your time has come.' On his remaining silent and being again hurried to speak, he said, 'I was praying that the Almighty would be merciful to me, and forgive you, as I do sincerely,' they then left him, saying it was a good wish.

"My mother's trust in God never forsook her. That night she called for the servants to prepare refreshments for my father on his return, saying, 'I have faith to believe they will never be permitted to take his life.' Remarkable also was the protection experienced by my uncle Joshua Wilson, whose hall door was on one occasion shattered by a volley of musketry. He was met in the hall by a man who presented a pistol to his head when his wife rushed between them saying, 'Thou shalt not, nor dare not, take my husband's life, for the arm of the Almighty is stronger than thine.' The man was confounded and let the pistol drop from his hand, and the whole party left the house. At length English troops and German hussars landed, and a dreadful scene, partly in our view, was enacted for some hours, the cannon balls falling thickly around our house. The poor deluded people were seen running away in all directions, some of them coming to us to have their wounds dressed. The German troops slept on the lawn, and next morning twenty or thirty of their officers breakfasted with us, and said we had had a marvelous escape the previous day, the cannon having been pointed at our house, and even the match lighted, when a gentleman came forward saying, 'That is the house of a Quaker.'"

Since the rebellion in Ireland nothing of this character has occurred which can be compared with the faithfulness of Friends in the Southern States of America during the Civil War. In consequence of their steady refusal to take up arms or identify themselves in any way with the proceedings of the Confederate government, not only being opposed to war but also to the system of slavery, they had a double portion of enmity to bear. In the multitudes that swelled the two vast armies, there could not have been found examples of more lofty heroism than were exhibited by that little band who made up another army and followed as their only leader the Prince of Peace. They were loyal at heart to the Government of the United States, testifying against the fresh efforts to establish slavery more firmly—this was no small offence.

Above all, they would not fight; and with the spirit of war so rampant in their midst that the preaching of the Gospel of Peace in almost every place of worship gave way to the call of arms, the hatred and malice thus aroused fell on them with peculiar violence. Let it be noted that of those who steadily refused to bear arms (many of them were imprisoned), not one suffered a violent death. Rude arrests, violent threatenings and imprisonments were the common lot of many who were conscripted but refused to fight. In not a few instances they were for several hours suspended by the thumbs as a military punishment. (It is an interesting fact that this unflinching adherence to their convictions led to a large accession to the membership of the Friends.)

Among many instances of heroic faithfulness we may cite that of a young man named W. H.—, who on refusing to fight, was told by the colonel that he would be shot. He replied that if it were God's will he should lay down his life, he would rather do so than disobey his command, but if it were not the Divine will, none of them could take his life. On refusing next morning to go with the foraging party the officer became greatly excited and ordered his men to run him through with bayonets, but they continued only to pierce his clothes. A squad of men was then drawn up, and as the order to fire was about to be given, W. H. said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"—not a gun was discharged. The soldiers were heard to say, "We cannot shoot such a man." The colonel then struck at his head, missed his aim, then spurred his horse, trying repeatedly to run him down, but the horse sprang aside at each attempt. The officer then left, saying he had not done with him, but he himself was killed the same or next day, in the battle of Gettysburg, and after further trial of W. H.'s faith and patience he was released.

On the assassination of President Lincoln, Sherman's force was roused to a more determined spirit, and rushed onward prepared for utter devastation. "Between the two armies," writes an eye-witness, "indeed, partially surrounded by them, lay our peaceful homes, with apparent certain destruction hanging over them. We had neither weapons nor shield, save our prayers and trust in the arm of the Lord, but these proved all sufficient. Through four years of danger and distress God had been increasing the faith of His people and now it was given them to rejoice in safety over the last crowning and signal deliverance. The cloud of battle rolled away and the surrender of the last Southern army was effected without bloodshed in the very midst of our quiet homes."

Many more examples of preservation by a Higher Power in circumstances, humanly speaking, courting nothing but dire disaster could be given, but these will suffice.

While we continue to marvel at the slowness of the Christian world to entirely grasp the wrongfulness of all war, and must be amazed at the apparent incongruity of the position, let us remember that throughout the nearly 2000 years of the Christian era, God has never been without His witnesses. "I am a Christian and cannot fight" were the words of many when brought before the military authorities of ancient Rome to be enrolled as soldiers.

It is certain that for a considerable time after the death of Christ His followers believed that He had forbidden war, and refused to engage in it. The early Friends told us that what they, the Quakers, preached, was merely primitive Christianity revived, and a recent writer has said that "so far as our Christian sects today are evolving into liberality, they are simply reverting in essence to the position which Fox and the early Quakers so long ago assumed"—and an Anglican clergyman said three years ago to his congregation in London, England, "In that distinctive position of the Friends, their insistence upon being men of peace, they were right again, through and through. We are now laboriously working out their position. In theory, at least, we are all Quakers now."

AS THE AMERICAN FRIEND and other denominational papers have so well pointed out of late, it is certain that when the awful spectacle now presented in Europe has passed away, the whole world will be sick at heart and millions will be eager and ready to receive a real spiritual experience. What shall be the medium through which this spirituality can be best extended?

I am one who firmly believes that the Society of Friends has the message best applicable to the coming new conditions. The inheritance, training and traditions are all with us. Manifestoes setting out our position may perhaps do some good at times like the present, but in the last analysis it must only be as we individually "do live in the virtue of that life and power which takes away the occasion of all war," that Friends will have any real or lasting influence on the world around. As the late J. S. Rowntree said, "The profession of a Friend, carrying with it large responsibilities as well as ennobling privileges, demands the dedication of the whole nature."

Some of us must often feel like saying, "It is high, I cannot attain to it." On the other hand, do we not feel that we must "love the highest when we see it?" And if we have received the vision, ours to follow it, falteringly often, doubtless, and with many failures, but if pursued with faith and constantly renewed consecration, so will our influence prevail and attain results now undreamed of. But, if we are faithless to the vision, after clearly seeing it, what shall the answer be?

Church and Country Life

The Committee on Church and Country Life of the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has just begun a state-wide rural survey of the State of Ohio. The Field Representative of the Federal Council, Charles O. Gill, is making his permanent headquarters in Columbus, Ohio, and has organized for the purpose of the survey the Ohio Country Life Association. The subjects to receive investigation are "The Financing of the Country Church," "The Training of Country Pastors Through Co-operation and Federation," and "The Country Church as a Community Center."

President E. O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, is at the head of the movement, Gifford Pinchot, who is Chairman of the Federal Council Committee, having the survey in charge.

Addresses on European War

The Commission on Peace and Arbitration of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students have brought to this country D. N. Furnajieff, pastor of the Evangelical Church of Sofia, Bulgaria, to address the churches relative to the moral and religious aspects of the European war.

Pastor Furnajieff had a special permit and moved freely through the field of conflict in the recent Balkan wars and has also an intimate acquaintance with the present European situation. Arrangements may be made by communication with the Secretary of the Federal Council, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.

To work on, serve on, love on, unnoticed and unpraised, is perhaps the finest heroism earth can show.—G. H. Morrison.

Sayings of George Fox

In the last issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND my attention has been arrested by the heading of the article, "Supposed Sayings of George Fox Questioned," as contributed by Mead A. Kelsey. I have investigated an abridged copy of the original George Fox's journal, published in 1808. I find the declarations as quoted below, which embody in meaning all that has appeared in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, but not verbatim words. They may occur in his large original volumes. The quotations are found in his early history, just as he was commencing his ministry, while going through a great spiritual conflict.

MARTHA N. LINDLEY.

He says: "When I was in the deep, under all shut up, I could not believe that I should ever overcome; my troubles, my sorrows and my temptations were so great that I often thought I should have despaired, but when Christ opened to me, how He was tempted by the same devil, and had overcome him, and bruised his head, and that through Him and His power, light, grace and spirit I should overcome also, so He it was that opened to me when I was shut up and had neither hope nor faith. After this a pure fire appeared in me; then I saw how He sat as a refiner's fire and as the fuller's soap. The spiritual discerning came to me, by which I discerned my own thoughts, groans and sighs and what it was that veiled me and what it was that opened me. That which could not abide in the patience, nor endure the fire, in the light, I found to be the groans of the flesh that could not give up to the will of God, which so veiled me that I could not be patient in all trials, troubles, anguishes and perplexities; could not give up self to die by the cross, the power of God that the living and quickened might follow Him, and that which would cloud and veil from the presence of Christ, that which the sword of the spirit cuts down and which must die, might not be kept alive. Now was I come up in spirit, through the flaming sword into the paradise of God. All things were new and all creations gave another smell unto me than before, beyond what words can utter. I knew nothing but pureness, innocency and righteousness, being renewed up into the image of God by Christ Jesus. So that I was come up to the state of Adam which he was in before he fell, but I was immediately taken up in spirit to see into another or more steadfast state than Adam's innocency, even into a state in Christ Jesus that should never fall."

I believe that love reigns, and that love will prevail. I believe that he says to me every morning, "Begin again thy journey and thy life; thy sins, which are many, are not only forgiven, but they shall be made, by the wisdom of God, the basis on which he will build blessings.—Thomas Erskine.

For honesty is before honor; and, though man must write his poems in sounding words, God's poems are printed best in the brave and silent duties of common life.—Edward Garrett.

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

Spiritual Worship

BY MURRAY S. KENWORTHY

"God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth."—John 4: 24.

Religious emotions have been expressed chiefly through two channels. The first we designate as priestly or ritualistic, the second prophetic or spiritual. The former is the more widely known. The second must sometime become universal. In the meantime, the former will often be the vehicle of the latter. Many Christians today insist that the two must be combined. They do not know how to give their feelings expression except through formal and approved methods.

Developing life is not fixed; it is ever changing. This is no less true of the soul than of the plant, consequently sooner or later, men feel that ritual has its limits; they grow weary of the cramped position imposed by formal religion; there must be room for expansion; the old trellis must be enlarged or torn down. A review of individual and race experience leads to the discovery of the kernel within the shell. Paul came to this conclusion when he discovered that it was Abraham's belief in God that saved him (Romans 4: 3). Ever after, faith to Paul was the life; works—ritual—was the chrysalis through which life came.

Paul's conversion seems to have come suddenly; all at once he was in the broad glare of a new day. He saw clearly that the old formal life was gone. He was no longer slave to law, ritual. But why the ritual? For many years it had been the standard by which he had measured his religious devotion. Had men been saved by it? He had thought so. He now saw that the Mosaic Law was but a schoolmaster leading to Christ. Abraham was saved without it. He had lived hundreds of years before its inauguration. How was he saved? By faith. He believed God. So all men prior to Christ had been saved; so all men must be saved.

The idea of salvation apart from law or ritual was not new. It had been a prominent teaching of the prophets from an early date. Solomon built a magnificent temple and established an elaborate ritual; but the prophets of that day apparently without hesitation furthered Jeroboam's rebellion, divided the kingdom and gave themselves to religious work in Israel, probably with the hope that thus they could preserve the old Hebrew democracy, including a religious service nearer their spiritual ideal.

Beginning with Amos greater emphasis was laid upon the spiritual element. He and his successors insisted that acceptable service—true worship—was possible only when a man lifted clean hands godward and voiced the emotions of a pure heart. It even seems that they denounced ritualistic service as foreign to God's desire. (Read Amos 5: 21-27; Hosea 6: 6; Isaiah 1: 11-17; Micah 6: 6-8; Jeremiah 7: 21-24, 31: 31-34; Isaiah 58: 5-7; Psalm 51: 16-17.)

These are the men to whom credit must be given for conserving the better elements of the old faith and adding the peculiar spiritual and ethical tone which made Jehovah worship unique among the world religions.

These men lived in new religious realms. At one with God in soul communion they saw Him in clearer appreciation of His sense of justice (Amos), forgiving love (Hosea), exalted holiness (Isaiah), a Deity with whom the lover of justice and kindness could humbly walk (Micah), who wrote His laws "in their inward parts" upon their hearts instead of upon tables of stone (Jeremiah), and who graciously accepted heart worship, in a foreign land, far from the ashes of a destroyed temple (exilic prophets). To them a ritualistic service as an end in itself was base mockery, an insult to God.

It seems impossible, however, to progress in any line of human activity without some one formalizing those actions by which progress is made. The Prophets had made a real contribution to Hebrew faith, but it was a living thing; it was fluid. It was easy enough to say "deal justly," but how was the common man to know when he had fulfilled the injunction? Having been instructed as to the more delicate phases of this new effort, he forthwith followed the rule and, sooner or later, life was fixed, the living stream had been poured into legal molds and solidified.

Centuries later Jesus of Nazareth came voicing the spirit of the prophets, crying against the deadening influence of ritualism, pleading for righteousness in life and thought. "God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and truth." For a time He lived and taught in harmony with this eternal truth. Emphasized thus, not by an ordinary prophet but by the Son of God, we might very properly expect the teaching to escape the trammels of legalism. But not so, the old Jewish ordinances of washings and the pascal supper were the forms into which the new baptism and communion must be poured.

Thus formalized men thought they were performing acts of Christian worship when they participated in these rituals. Undoubtedly this has been true in innumerable cases. Formal speech may convey heart emotions, but in the matter of worship too often the act has been held to have merit in itself. Again, Fox and his associates came waiting for the spirit to prompt some vocal service. Later this same season of living communion degenerated into a dead, silent meeting, a service as formal as any ritual ever designed.

Effective worship must be spiritual. This is the fundamental fact enunciated by the prophets and Jesus Christ, the fact that must be ever before us. We must live a life of righteousness; be immersed into the life of Jesus, whose life was above moral reproach. We must commune with God the Father. This worship must be free from method even when performed through method. It must be a living, vital, unfettered heart function.

Upper Life Experiences

BY RICHARD HAWORTH

Text: Isaiah 40: 31.

Theme: God teaches the superiority of Spiritual life through His natural and Spiritual creations.

In this chapter the author is pointing to Jehovah as incomparably above all other gods. Different ideas of God are cited as represented in the variety of idols seen in so many places about them, but nothing like that can satisfy the inquiring mind. He then goes on to inquire if they do not remember Jehovah, unlimited in creating, understanding and life-giving power, and says:

"They that wait for Jehovah shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." He wants them to know that Jehovah has helpful ability for all who need it and energizing power for those who are depressed.

1. This thought is beautifully illustrated in some of the lower forms of creation. God has made everything for beauty and symmetry, and the nearer anything approaches the object of its creation the greater joy or blessing or happiness it receives, or bestows, as the case may be. Witness this in the eagle as suggested in the text. When up, it is in its element. It soars and nests above the hindering uncertainties of the earth.

The skylark soars and sings, increasing the beauty of its song as it rises. The mocking bird, the robin and many others of the sweetest songsters mount the topmost twig of some tree or copse and pour forth their melodies in sweetest lays. The finest fruit and most beautiful foliage also are usually found on the higher boughs.

2. Coming to some of the higher forms, the same general observance holds. Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount, His great Manifesto, the Magna Charta of Christianity, from the mountain top. In it He lifts man into the realm of God in his possibilities for his fellow men.

His transfiguration took place on another mount where God came in such close touch with man as to cause even the garments of His Son to be so white that the natural eye could scarcely behold them.

His ascension also took place from another similar elevation, where apparently God could most easily meet the man-God, Christ Jesus, and the two return to the place from whence Christ had come to lift humanity from the depths of sin into which it had fallen.

Moses, the man of God, met and received the law from God on Sinai, the Mount of God. There God revealed Himself in fire and smoke, in thunderings and lightnings, and gave the tables of stone and the pattern for the tabernacle, together with the instructions regarding the law and their worship.

Jerusalem, the Holy City, was the fitting crown of a sacred mount, hallowed by the presence of God in numerous ways and on divers occasions. The Temple, Synagogue and most places of ancient worship, were located on the highest places obtainable. The Temple was the place where the nation met and worshipped God in ceremony and song; the Synagogue was the place of instruction in the law and concerning God and communion with Him in worship.

3. In the foregoing it was "up" for a blessing and "up" to meet God. Just why, no one knows. Why not the valley, the depression, the wilderness? Ah, they convey the opposite thoughts—entanglement, doubts, struggles; but the mountain peak gives joy, blessing, happiness.

It was God's way. We know not why. Often to reach the mountain peak the way leads through the valley, the wilderness, and sometimes the deep depression, even a pit. But God is there. He goes before. His blessing awaits. Through and following the natural He imparts the Spiritual.

"Up" then, means away from the filth and mire of the earth and into the purity and holy atmosphere of God; out of the dark things of life and into the clear things of God as revealed in His Word and by His Spirit; away from things questionable to those that reveal God. The "up" of God is the purity of Himself and His Presence.

Then, who are they that "mount up with wings as eagles"? It is those who "wait for Jehovah," and in His presence and with His companionship overcome the obstacles and hindrances of life and build purity of character and holiness of life.

God regards purity as above impurity, hence it becomes symbolical of God's uplift to us. He is anxious to keep us from all things that prevent our soaring for Him, and to place about us such things as develop the higher forms of Christian living.

These spiritual conceptions continue to increase and multiply as the individual mounts up with wings, or runs without wearying, or walks without fainting. Today these spiritual heights are attained through the Holy Spirit in His fullness of blessing.

Baron Kato on the Sunday School

In an interview with Horace E. Coleman, Honorary Secretary of the Japan Sunday School Association, Baron Kato, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Japanese Empire, said:

"As to the work of the Sunday School, we feel the need strongly now of moral education for our children. In former times they had a very good moral training through the teaching of Confucius, but in recent times this teaching has very much waned, and now we are really in a serious state so far as our moral condition is concerned. For this and other reasons we gladly welcome the moral training that the Christian Sunday School can give to our young people. I wish you the best success in the undertaking in which you are connected."

Self-control is a very important lesson to learn. Some one has said, "The happy man is not the one who has possessions, but the one who has himself in possession."

A Quaker Tale of the Long Ago

BY IDA CHARLOTTE ROBERTS

Before Grandfather began his weekly story, he asked his grandson if he had read Whittier's poem called "How the Women Went from Dover."

On receiving a negative answer he took from the bookcase a copy of Whittier's poems and read the one mentioned, without comment. He then said:

"Four of the people who figured in that poem were your ancestors, my boy. Whittier, himself, was a descendant of one of those men, though I have been told that he did not know it. When you are inclined to judge our forefathers, remember that Christian tolerance did not flourish in the early days of our country.

"Now for the story:

"About two hundred and fifty years ago there was a small, thriving settlement on Dover Neck—one of the first to be made in the state now called New Hampshire. One day a traveler arrived from Boston bringing news of all the hamlets through which he had passed. In those days a traveler was most welcome because, in a newspaperless age, when people were as eager as now to know what was going on in the world, the traveler had the best opportunities to gather bits of news. Among other things, this traveler said that members of a new sect—the Quaker sect—had arrived in Boston and were causing great excitement by rising in the churches and speaking out in meeting. He told of the rigid laws made by the Massachusetts colony for the purpose of driving the Quakers out of the country, and said that these Quakers were scattering themselves among the different settlements.

"Mayhap some will come to Dover," he added, "and you must be prepared to enforce the laws."

"A few days after the traveler's visit, Emigrant Thomas Roberts—he is called Emigrant in history because he was the first of his name to go to that part of the United States—was chopping the last of his pile of wood for the winter's use. He was an old man and though he had received grants of land from the king and had good opportunities for making money, he did not make a fortune. He, like his neighbors, labored with his hands. Looking up from his work he noticed in the distance three strange figures moving slowly. As they drew nearer, they appeared to be women who were walking with dragging feet as if their strength were nearly spent. Suddenly their progress quickened when they caught sight of Emigrant Thomas's home; it looked as if, by a mighty effort, they hoped to reach it before they dropped in their tracks.

"The Emigrant left his work and walked to the road to meet the women.

"Perchance," he said to himself, "these may belong to that persecuted sect of Quakers and, if so, they must be in sore distress."

"Whence come ye, women?" he asked in greeting, "and why are ye so worn and weary?"

"They looked at each other as if to say 'Can we trust him? Dare we tell him?'

"Finally one said:

"We are Quakers who have fled from persecution in Boston. How many days we have wandered we cannot tell, for hunger and fatigue have deadened our minds. All we know is that we must carry to all the world the knowledge of the truth of our new doctrines, even if we are put to death for our zeal."

"Come into my house and my wife will give you food and ye shall find rest and shelter," he invited.

"With surprised, glad hearts, the women entered this home, one of the few that had been opened to them.

"On the morrow, which was the Sabbath day, the three Quakeresses, Anne Colman, Mary Tompkins and Alice Ambrose, had not recovered from their exhaustion. The Emigrant, a faithful member of the First Parish Church, surprised his wife, Rebecca, by saying:

"Let us remain at home today with these travelers and learn of their new doctrines."

"But Thomas, we shall be fined, and we can ill afford to pay a fine. Besides, is it right to absent ourselves from the house of the Lord for such a reason?"

"We shall be fined, no doubt, and you are right in saying that we can ill afford a fine, but I must hear of this new doctrine. I have a feeling in my heart that there is something in it for me; I have never felt so about any other new faith. Perhaps this is an indication of an inner light such as these good women tell of. I believe it is not wrong for us to remain at home today, though God knows it will be the first time."

"So Thomas and Rebecca stayed at home with their guests to talk of the new doctrine from early morning till candle-lighting time.

"The next day the two officers, marshal and constable, who were the Emigrant's sons, John and Thomas—John was our ancestor, by the way—imposed a fine on their aged father for absenting himself from the meeting on the Lord's day, and another one for 'entertaining vagabond Quakers.'

"Alas! my sons, that you should fine your old father, because he followed his conscience," said the Emigrant. "Alas! that I should live to such a day."

"The three women remained at Dover Neck trying to inculcate their doctrines into other minds until Tuesday, when Major Waldron's warrant was received. I'll read it to you:

"To the constables of Dover, Hampton, Salisbury, etc., and until these vagabond Quakers are carried out of this jurisdiction,"

"You, and every one of you, are required in the King's Majesty's name to take these vagabond Quakers, Anne Colman, Mary Tompkins and Alice Ambrose and make them fast to the cart's tails and driving the cart through your several towns, to whip them upon their naked backs not exceeding ten stripes apiece on each of them in each town; so to convey them from constable to constable till they are out of this jurisdiction, as you will answer it at your peril, and this shall be your warrant. Richard Waldron. Dover, December 22, 1662."

"No sooner was a copy of this warrant received by the officers than they hastened to execute it. John and Thomas went to their father's house, seized the women and dragging them out of doors, tied them to a cart's tail. The driver hastened the cart, while the constables laid the whip to the full number of stripes, on their bared backs.

"The father followed after, mournfully crying, 'Woe, that ever I was father of such wicked children. Alas! Alas!'"

"Hatevil Nutter, an elder in the church and a direct ancestor of yours, thought he was living up to his Christian name by urging the officers on to what he and they conceived to be their solemn duty.

"The Emigrant's wife was probably the woman who offered a noggin of milk, according to Whittier. At any rate the cow that furnished milk for Thomas Roberts and his wife was taken from him.

"The women were driven to Salisbury, where the constable, a man with ideas far in advance of his times, refused to execute the warrant. He was upheld by his frightened but tender-hearted townsmen.

"The next Lord's day, Emigrant Thomas and his wife Rebecca, attended the First Parish Church as usual. At the close of the first service, Thomas arose and said:

"I have lived among you for forty years. You have honored me by electing me governor of the colony, president of the court, and have bestowed on me many other offices, as you well know. I have tried to do my duty. Now, I am full of years and nearing the end of my earthly life. I rise here in the house of the Lord, where we have worshipped together these many years, and ask forgiveness for being the father of two such sons as the marshal and the constable have shown themselves to be in executing Major Waldron's cruel warrant. I shall regret their behavior to the day of my death. May God forgive them as I am trying to do. On this day, likewise, I have it in my heart to tell you that I have accepted the doctrines of the Quakers and from this time forth shall be allied with them.'

"When he ended his confession and sat down, a solemn silence fell on the congregation. A few sympathized with him but most of the people were inclined to censure him. The latter were the ones who caused him to be again fined and his cow to be taken from him.

"That their father forgave his sons we may infer from the fact that he remembered them in his will—made in 1673—a will that is said to stand high as an example of legal precision.

"You may think it strange, but it is true that those officers, John and Thomas, became Quakers before their father's death and for several generations their descendants were for the most part of that faith. If you will notice your relatives—in my family—you will see that some of the characteristics of the Friends have cropped out; for instance, a dislike of show of any kind, the custom of wearing quiet colors,—when did you ever see your Aunt Martha in anything but gray or black?—disapproval of mourning garb, and tolerance for the beliefs of others."

THE HIGHER LIFE

A Helpful Prayer

"O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

"Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

"Teach me thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong;

"In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live."

—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The Community in Prayer

We must not, however, think of prayer as a merely individual necessity and duty. Christ was often on the mountain top alone but he sought every opportunity of common prayer which the church system of his time and land afforded. It was his custom to pray in communion with others. He had that sense of the unity of God's children which is so necessary for our life on earth, which is an upholding force, and lends purpose and power to our petitions. Prayer in the closet may perhaps turn upon selfish wishes, but prayer in the communion of others must of necessity think of the needs and sympathize with the desires of those with whom we pray. It is significant that our Lord put his great model prayer in the first person plural: "Our Father," "Give us this day our daily bread," "Lead us not into temptation."—The Congregationalist.

The Father Himself Careth for You

God cares. His love for each one of us is so deep, so personal, so tender that he shares our every pain, every distress, every struggle. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." God is our Father, and his care is gentler than a human father's as his love exceeds human love. Much human care has no power to help, but when God cares he helps omnipotently. Jesus said that when his friends would leave him alone yet he would not be alone—"because the Father is with me." When human friendship comes not with any relief, then God will come. When no one in all the world cares, then God cares.—J. R. Miller.

"Instead of longing for something easy, make your own work easier by putting earnestness and energy into it and leaving worry out."

THE CHURCH AT WORK

On Friday night, November 6, the social committee of the Woman's Class of the Sunday School of the Friends Church at Westfield, Indiana, gave a reception in honor of their pastor, E. Howard Brown and family. The reception was given at the Friends Church. An enjoyable social time was spent for an hour which was followed by a program of song, addresses and reading. Everyone enjoyed the evening and the reception revealed the closest friendship between the pastor and his people.

The young Friends of the Providence (Rhode Island) Meeting have, with the aid of Alexander Purdy, organized a Quaker Roundtable. The purpose of these meetings is to study the history of the early Friends and what led up to the founding of the Society. The first meeting was held in the Providence Friends meeting house on the evening of November 8, at seven o'clock with an attendance of nineteen. In this meeting four interesting papers, covering the period of time from Queen Elizabeth to the early life of George Fox, were read and greatly appreciated by those present.

The Social Service Committee of the Friends Church at New London, Indiana, planned a reception for their new pastor and wife, J. I. and Mrs. Phillips, which was given at the church on the evening of November 5th. A good program was given consisting of music and short talks by members representing the different departments of church work. This was followed by a social hour which was used in getting acquainted and having a good time. Brother Phillips responded feelingly to the cordial welcome and spoke of his desire that much might be accomplished by the church in the advancement of the Master's Kingdom. All went to their homes feeling that they had spent a profitable evening.

On the afternoon of November 8th, under the direction of the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Bible Schools of the different denominations in Westfield, Indiana, observed World's Temperance Day in the Friends church with a temperance rally. The different classes of each school carried banners bearing temperance texts, or other temperance sentiments. Good music and other exercises were rendered by the schools and E. Howard Brown, pastor of the Friends church, gave an illustrated address of more than ordinary interest. As the audience dispersed appropriate temperance leaflets were distributed. Much satisfaction was expressed for this method of observing the day.

Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held at Friends chapel, Van Wert, Ohio, November 7 and 8. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight was not very largely attended, but the attendance on Saturday was unusually large. Considerable business claimed the attention of the meeting and all was disposed of in a spirit of perfect love. The new clerk, Francis E. Runion, handled the business in a masterly way. There were no visiting ministers, but the local ministers proved themselves capable for the occasion and delivered the messages. A service was held in the evenings of both Friday and Saturday. Oscar Trader remained over Sunday. He has been pastor at Rockford, Ohio, the past year and is now located at Greenfield, Indiana. Mary B. Chappell, of Carthage, Indiana, rendered valuable service in song and also brought the message on Saturday evening.

Spring Bank Quarterly Meeting was held at Kemma, near Bloomfield, Nebraska, November 7 and 8. A goodly number of representatives were present from Spring Bank, Elk Valley, Plainview and Norden Monthly Meetings. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight convened at 1:30 o'clock on Saturday afternoon with the devotional service conducted by Theo. Foxworthy, Superintendent of the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension work of Nebraska Yearly Meeting. This was followed by a discussion of the subject, "The Duties of a Layman, by a Layman." Curtis Hockett presented the phase of a layman's duty in the Sunday School; Wilbur Roberts, his duty in the regular meetings for worship; Philip Stein, his duty as a financier. Each speaker was blessed in a very practical presentation of his subject. The business of the Quarterly Meeting was then transacted. It was decided that the subject for general discussion should be presented hereafter at the regular business session of the Quarterly Meeting. The meeting Saturday evening was conducted by Ralph Clem, who has recently taken charge of the pastoral work at Elk Valley near Waterbury, Nebraska. The theme, "But We See Jesus," was impressively presented. The services on the Sabbath day were indeed times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The morning meeting was led by Theo. Foxworthy; that in the afternoon by Jesse Hunt and wife, of Norden, Nebraska; in the evening by Lawrence Linton, of Allen, Nebraska. At the close of the morning service a collection of almost eight dollars was taken for church extension work. The spirit of reaching out into new fields was predominant. At a meeting of the pastors at the close of the morning service several places were mentioned which Friends might profitably enter and it was decided that steps be taken to enter such fields.

PERSONAL MENTION

A. L. Knight, of Friendswood, Texas, has accepted the pastorate of the meetings at Fairview and Alba, Missouri.

William F. Pribbenow will continue as pastor at Lowell, Kansas. At this time his wife is quite sick with typhoid fever.

James Wood, of Mt. Kisco, New York, addressed a conference at the Twentieth Street Meeting in New York City, on October 15th, on the subject of peace.

Emma F. Coffin is the assistant pastor of the meeting at Whittier, California. She finds plenty of work to do, more even than two pastors working together can accomplish.

Professor Frank H. Clark, of Friendswood, Texas has accepted a call to the pastorate at League City, Texas, and the work has started out with much promise for a successful year. Much interest is being manifested both by the members of the meeting and the people of League City.

Herbert C. Hoover, who is chairman of the American Relief Committee for the Belgians and whose name has been so prominent in the papers of late, is a graduate of Pacific College, Oregon. He is the son of Huldah Hoover, who was a Friends minister in Iowa thirty-five or forty years ago.

William and Edith Stanton Worth, who have successfully served the meeting at League City, Texas, as pastors for the past two years, have moved to their home at Friendswood, Texas. The members at League City fully appreciate the good that was done during their stay, and it is felt that the meeting has been greatly benefited by their labors.

M. Jennie Street, the well-known Sunday School worker and this year's President of the British National Union of Christian Endeavor, has recently joined the Society of Friends. It is asked that Friends Christian Endeavorers should prepare for a good Friends Rally at Birmingham in 1915, the place of meeting for the next conference of the British Christian Endeavor Union.

Visitors to Washington, D. C., preferring lodgings in a Friend's home near Friends' Church (Orthodox), accommodated. Every convenience; excellent board near. Cars direct from Union Station. C. H. HALL, 1117 Lamont St., N. W.

NOTES FROM HOLGUIN, CUBA

A most interesting union meeting of the Christian Endeavor (Friends) and the Epworth League (Methodist) was held in the Friends Church, Tuesday evening, October 13. The church was decorated with potted plants, the Christian Endeavor banner, and the Cuban flag.

The meeting was ably directed by José Angulo, our assistant pastor and Christian Endeavor president. The subject, "New Steps Which Our Societies Should Take," was well handled by members of the two societies under the topics: 1. Why Should Our Societies Take New Steps. 2. New Steps in the Church Work. 3. What Advance Steps Might Our Societies Take? 4. New Steps in Our Devotional Life. 5. New Steps in Our Socials.

About eighty-five were seated in the main room of the church and perhaps twenty-five more stood at the door. The attention and interest were unusually good. We hope that some good seeds were sown and will take root in the hearts of these young people who so much need to know Jesus Christ.

At the home of Dona Josefa Avilla at eight o'clock on the evening of October 2, a pretty wedding was celebrated when Caridad Luisa Fernandez, our assistant teacher, became the wife of Jose Angulo.

The bride, dressed simply in white, entered with her uncle and met the young man who was to be her husband, near the center of the room. They then took their place at one side of the room and were married by Clarence McClean. These young people are devout Christian workers in the church and school. We rejoice at the founding of a Christian home in this land where so many families are reared without the marriage of the parents.

The day school opened this year with good prospects for the future. The school that began two years ago with an enrollment of fourteen reached eighty-four the first month of this year and twelve have entered since. Here we feel is a very large field for daily Christian training. The other school in Holguin, offering high school work, boasts that it gives no religious teaching and its morals are very lax.

A lawyer in talking to Clarence McClean, the principal of the Friends school, said that many were afraid to send their children to it on account of the religious teaching, but later he put three children in the school. Last year a mother asked that her boy be taught no religion. It was explained to her that that was a part of the regular course. The boy came on to school and is back this year with his sister. We feel that it is necessary to make the school work so thorough and the course so complete that these parents who are afraid of our religion will in spite of it put their children under our care and so we may gain some of them for the Master. We need more teachers in training now for the future development of this great work. Who will come over and help us?

FRIENDS' HEADQUARTERS

Anticipating that Friends, in large numbers, will attend the Panama-Pacific Exposition here in San Francisco, next year, and the Yearly Meeting having appointed the undersigned a committee in the matter of Friends' Headquarters, we would give the following information.

First. We are informed, that though the nations of Europe are now engaged in such terrific war, the management fully expects that the great Exposition will be held.

Second. As there is no Friends Church in San Francisco, and as there are commodious meeting houses in Berkeley and Oakland, just across the Bay, it is thought that most Friends would feel more at home near these centers. Then, too, our meeting houses would be freely opened for all conferences and occasions, while the matter of a place on the grounds or in San Francisco, may be a difficult thing to arrange.

Third. As to transportation, access to grounds, etc. While the grounds are beautiful, the setting picturesque, the buildings artistic, even imposing, yet the access is not all that could be desired from San Francisco, only three street car lines going to the grounds.

To meet this condition, the Key Route, a Ferry and Car-line Company, on this side, have put in slips at the Exposition grounds, and will run a Ferry service, direct to the grounds from this side, thereby avoiding all transfers, and placing the visitors without delay at the grounds.

The extra expense of this trans-bay trip, over the street car fare in San Francisco, is thought will be more than met, in the matter of board, rooms, etc., on this side of the Bay, as compared with the congested condition that will be on the other side.

The Committee has thought it unnecessary to open special headquarters until near the time of the opening of the Exposition, but will endeavor to give necessary information.

It is hoped that conferences may be held, by Friends, on the following subjects, during the season: Education, Bible School work, Missionary work, and Evangelistic and Pastoral work. A conference on work among the Indians is being planned.

That the greatest benefits may accrue we desire to hear from Friends interested in these lines of work, that, as far as possible, we may be able to bring about occasions that shall prove helpful to all concerned.

NEWS FROM RAMALLAH, PALESTINE

An extract from a letter received by Mead A. Kelsey from A. Edward Kelsey, is as follows:

October 9, 1914.

Dear Brothers and Sister—It has been nearly four weeks since we heard from any of you, or the children, and we begin to feel that we are indeed cut off from the world. This country is in a terrible state of unrest, and although there is no war, still with the mobilizing of the troops the country is in a sad state. They have taken everything in sight from both natives and foreigners irrespectively. We nearly lost our year's supply of wheat, but the governor intervened on our behalf. Yesterday they took one of the mission horses, but I have petitioned the head man and had a favorable interview with him yesterday and am hoping to secure the horse's return. There is hardly a family or institution in the land that has not suffered, and so I feel that we are much favored. * * *

We have opened our day schools and next week we open the training school for girls, but I feel reluctant about opening the boys' school. These testing times have given us fresh evidence of the goodness of our Heavenly Father, and we have gone to Him again and again in our extremity and He has supplied us with the needed wisdom. * * * Four men in the village have come to me in the past two weeks and offered to loan me money in sums from four to sixty dollars. Some of this has come in the nick of time for pressing needs. * * * I have carried a two thousand dollar London draft in my pocket for two months and part of the time the largest piece of money that I could lay my hands on was the value of ten cents. * * *

I have never passed through such perplexing times as we have of late, but we know that our God is able to deliver and we are trusting Him. * * *

IMPORTANT NOTICE*"Esther E. Baird Love Fund"

To the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America:

At the Triennial Conference held at Muncie, Indiana, last May, the Union gladly assumed the salary of our dear friend, Esther E. Baird, of India. At that time a number of pledges were made, and since the Conference closed, we are happy to report that Nebraska, New-England, Iowa and Western Yearly Meeting W. F. M. S. have pledged a yearly amount towards this "Love Fund."

It was decided at the Conference that all money given for this fund was to go through the regular channels. The Union is therefore asking all who have pledged amounts, and all who desire to help in this precious work, to send half the amount of their yearly pledge before December 1st, to the treasurer of their own Yearly Meeting. In this way each Yearly Meeting will be credited with the amount given.

Kindly mark all money sent for this purpose, "Esther Baird Love Fund."

The Union has promised that half of the $500.00 will be paid January 1, 1915. The various Yearly Meeting treasurers are therefore requested to see that the money sent them is forwarded to the Treasurer of the Union, Emma G. Randolph, 29 Williams Street, Worcester, Massachusetts, on or before January 1, 1915.

On behalf of the Union,

CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS,
President.

A PASTOR RETIRES

The writer was among those who attended Friends services at Hesper, Iowa, last Sunday, at which time H. C. Carter preached his farewell sermon to a large congregation, who had not only gathered to worship God but also to pay their respects to His servant who has labored among them for the past ten years. The text was taken from I. Corinthians 3: 9, "For we are laborers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building," from which Mr. Carter prepared and delivered a sermon in a very impressive manner, speaking as only those who have long associated with their God and Redeemer can speak, and leaving with his hearers a lasting thought of what their lives should be.

During their residence of ten years in Hesper, Mr. Carter and family have made many warm friends who are sorry to see them go, but on account of Mr. Carter's failing health he finds it necessary to discontinue preaching. In their leaving, Hesper and vicinity not only lose a worthy and highly esteemed family but also an earnest and sincere pastor who has devoted his life to a good and most worthy cause. They expect to make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Carter's daughter, Mrs. William Blott and husband of Burns, Oregon, leaving this week for that place. The best wishes of a host of friends and neighbors go with them.—Mabel, Minnesota, Record.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' CONFERENCE

Under the auspices of the Ministerial Union of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, a Christian Workers' Conference will be held at the Friends Church in Wilmington, Ohio, December 4 and 5. The Conference will open at ten o'clock on Friday morning and close at 3:30 on Saturday afternoon. Among the speakers are W. O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis, Indiana; S. Edgar Nicholson and Charles E. Tebbetts, of Richmond, Indiana, and Professor L. Vogt, of Miami University, a specialist on the rural church problem. This Conference will be an inspiring and instructive one and a large attendance is desired.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Jacob W. Winslow and Elizabeth H. Newby, who were members of Driftwood Monthly Meeting of Friends in Jackson Quarter, Indiana, were married according to the custom of Friends, near Seymour, Indiana, September 17, 1864, and celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage September 17, 1914, at Tonganoxie, Kansas. A number of relatives and friends were present to offer their congratulations and a pleasant time was spent together. The rooms were decorated with goldenrod and ferns, and refreshments were served. This estimable couple have resided near Tonganoxie for over forty years. A number of congratulatory letters were received from friends and relatives.

Health First

In buying food articles we must consider several things—economy, results, convenience, reliability; but the most important is Health.

Health means everything. If one gets cheated in buying dresses, shoes or bonnets it is provoking, but the harm is chiefly loss of money. In buying food articles, if imitations or poor stuffs are supplied, there is a loss of money and probably an injury to health also; and good health is beyond price.

Remember these facts when buying baking powder.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 29.

Subject—Christ Crucified.

Lesson—Mark 15: 21-41; Luke 23: 39-43.

Golden Text—Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.—Isaiah 53: 4.

Time—Friday, April 7, A. D. 30, 9:00 A. M. to 3:00 P. M.

Place—Calvary, outside the northern wall of Jerusalem.

Following the farcical trial before Pilate and Herod, Pilate delivers Jesus, whom he believes to be innocent, to the mob which was clamoring for His crucifixion. With what serenity Jesus meets the taunts and jeers of the soldiers as He is taken first into the hall and then is led out to Calvary!

The mob might kill His body, but Jesus was the victor on that day when the world held high carnival over the Son of God. By His sacrifice He was purchasing freedom for a sinful world.

That was a wonderful procession that wended its way out to the knoll beyond the city walls. A centurion is leading, who a few hours later is convinced that "this was the Son of God." Then came a soldier with the board on which is written the crime with which the prisoner is charged; then four soldiers with the mallet and spikes, and Jesus is in the midst bearing His own cross. Behind are the two malefactors, each bearing his own cross, and more soldiers and then the priests, the high churchmen and trailing in the rear the motley mob.

"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Jesus was living out His own teaching when He had commanded "Love your enemies."

They compel Simon of Cyrene to bear the cross, and this was probably the means of making of him a disciple, for a little later the sons of Simon were well known members of the new church.

Never was there greater ignominy heaped upon anyone. The soldiers jeered, the priests mocked, the passers-by railed upon Him. They were blind to the fact that the failure to save Himself was proof that He was the Messiah, who had come to redeem the world by the willingness with which He met death.

Jesus was not wholly deserted. The Marys were there and other women, and John was standing by, with the other disciples probably not far away. One of the significant events was the saving of the robber in the last hour. Note the assurance of Jesus: "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise."

"Into thy hands I commend my spirit." His mission was accomplished; the victory was complete. The cross has changed the whole front of human history. Had Jesus failed at the supreme moment, subsequent human history would have been vastly different.

The crucifixion was the greatest event in history. There the last battle was fought out between fear and faith, and faith triumphed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 29.

(Missionary Meeting)

Topic—Missionary Heroes and Heroines.—II Cor. 4: 1-18.

This is pre-eminently a missionary age. It could hardly be otherwise, unless the Christian church runs away from duty.

There is no country where the products of civilization are not going, the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the latest implements, and with these the changes in life that are necessary to harmonize with the new conditions.

Along with these must go the gospel, or else a materialistic infidelity will take possession of the heathen world that will be little better than paganism.

But there is every evidence that Christianity will keep pace with the march of business. The fruitage of the early missionary heroes is ripening already into a bounteous harvest. The sacrifice of a hundred years are bringing their rewards in an awakening world.

Missionary endeavor has always been marked by danger. Personal heroism on the battlefield has been matched over and over again by the heroism of Christian discipleship in the lands of darkness.

The early missionaries faced hatred and superstition and treachery and plagues and famine and persecution and torture and death itself. But the fact that they did not shrink from the dangers has caused the movement for missions to triumph. No amount of ignorance and persecution can prevail against the work of men and women who are ready to risk their lives for the sake of delivering the gospel message.

"Very much is heard about the heroism of the battlefield. Paul showed a greater heroism. His was a life-long campaign. He could say, I die daily. In every age the men and women that have done like work have shown the same spirit. The heroes are not all dead. Death is not the only way to show heroism; it is sometimes harder to keep faithfully toiling without apparent results. Holding steadily a lonely and obscure post may be as hard a test as to face great danger where one knows that the eyes of many are watching."—C. E. World.

Let each member bring a brief account of the life and work of some missionary hero or heroine, culled from some of the missionary books and periodicals. Each Sunday School or meeting library ought to keep a supply of the latest and best missionary books for reference.

FOR ALIEN SUFFERERS

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has forwarded a draft for $120.00 to England in aid of the innocent sufferers among the Germans and Austrians in that country, who are being cared for by an association of English Friends, of which Anna B. Thomas is the Secretary.

These funds came in chiefly from members of Indiana and Oregon Yearly Meetings, with some scattering from other Yearly Meetings. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will receive and forward other amounts for this purpose, which may be sent in, and will also receive and disburse funds which may be sent in to aid the Belgian sufferers. This last situation is very acute, and for a time the Belgians apparently must rely largely upon the aid of neutral nations.

Funds should be marked "Alien Fund" or "Belgian Fund," as the case may be, and checks or money should be forwarded to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

FAREWELL RECEPTION

Members of the Friends Church tendered a farewell reception to Mr. and Mrs. William J. Sayers last evening at the Sunday School rooms of the church in Montgomery Street, at Poughkeepsie, New York. Palms, bay trees and hydrangeas, of which the decorations were composed, formed a charming background to the gowns of the ladies.

Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Gildersleeve received with the pastor and his wife. A substantial sum of money was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Sayers, and Mr. Gildersleeve gave an address.

"Blest Be the Tie That Binds" was sung by those present.

Thomas' orchestra furnished a musical program. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served during the course of the evening.

On the reception committee were Mrs. Elias Minard, Mrs. Adna Heaton,

Westtown School

WESTTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

WESTTOWN SCHOOL is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about twelve Yearly Meetings. It

HAS ALL THE ATTRIBUTES OF AN EFFICIENT HIGH SCHOOL

and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Because of its nearness to Philadelphia it is surrounded by a large group of devoted friends who are continually helping the School, and bringing to it their religious concerns, and their interest in the

Thanksgiving

For the days when nothing happens,
For the cares that leave no trace,
For the love of little children,
For each sunny dwelling-place,
For the altars of our fathers,
And the closets where we pray,
Take, O gracious God and Father,
Praises this Thanksgiving Day.

For our harvests safe ingathered,
For our golden store of wheat,
For the flowers and the vinelands,
For the flowers up-springing sweet,
For our coasts from want protected,
For each inlet, river, bay,
By the bounty full and flowing,
Take our praise this joyful day.

For our dear ones lifted higher
Through the darkness to the light,
Ours to love and ours to cherish,
In dear memory, beyond sight,
For our kindred and acquaintance
In Thy heaven who safely stay,
We uplift our psalms of triumph,
Lord, on this Thanksgiving Day.

For the hours when heaven is nearest,
When the earth-mood does not cling,
For the very gloom oft broken
By our looking for the King,
By our thought that He is coming,
For our courage on the way,
Take, O Friend, unseen, eternal,
Praise this Thanksgiving Day.

Thanksgiving Glory

BY ROXIE DIXON WHITE

"Thou crownest the year with thy goodness."

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

The year has sped onward, the world has whirled sunward—

"Thanksgiving, Thanksgiving 'again!'"

Hear the "hills shout for joy," and the "trees clap their hands"

"Thanksgiving, Thanksgiving again!"

O praise ye, His people, by hamlet and steeple,

Your bounty fling wide with your hands—

Vie with woods and with dales, the hills and the vales—

To the Need—in all of the lands.

Let the praise of all nature, the hearts of all people

And the hands of the children of men

Commingle and well—commingle and swell—

Into pæans of praise, through all of the days,

"Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving again!"

Guilford College, North Carolina.

Of Interest to Taxpayers

There is greater increase in the valuation of property under prohibition than under license. This means less tax rate because there is more property to tax.

Georgia, at the end of the first year of prohibition, which was a year of financial panic, of low-priced cotton and of withdrawal of thousands of dollars of saloon property, showed an increase of $4,000,000 in taxable property, mostly in the rural districts. This year her comptroller general announces an appreciable reduction in the tax rate.

In North Carolina under prohibition the average annual increase in property valuation has been over $54,000,000.

Maine, from 1900 to 1910, increased its taxable property more than $11,000,000 a year.

In Kansas there has been an increase of $120,000,000 every year for ten years. In 1880 under license the tax rate was 5.5 mills on the dollar; in 1914, after thirty-three years of prohibition, it has been reduced to 1.2 mills.—W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

Protecting the Denominational Name

The following are the two bills now pending in Congress at the request of Friends Board on Legislation and Temperance, designed to protect our denominational name from use in articles of trade and commerce. Friends are asked to communicate with their Senators and Congressmen, asking them to support these measures.

Senate Bill 5262 and House Bill 15401 are now pending in the Judiciary Committees of the two houses of which Senator Charles A. Culberson and Hon. E. Y. Webb are the chairmen, respectively; while Senate Bill 5698 and House Bill 16098 are before the Committees on Patents, of which Senator Ollie James and Hon. Wm. A. Oldfield are the chairmen. It will be well to address letters to these men also.

The bills are as follows:

(S. 5262 and H. R. 15401)

A BILL

To prohibit the use of the name of any church, religious denomination, society, or association for purposes of trade and commerce.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country of any article of trade or commerce which is branded or marked, or contained in any package which is branded or marked, with the name of any church, religious denomination, society, or association, or the name or designation by which any such church or religious denomination is commonly or popularly known, is prohibited; and any person who shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or who shall receive in any State or Territory or District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or District of Columbia, or foreign country, and having so received, shall deliver, in original unbroken packages, for pay or otherwise, or offer to deliver to any other person, any such article so branded or marked, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and for such offense be fined not exceeding $50 for the first offense, and upon conviction for each subsequent offense not exceeding $100, or be imprisoned not exceeding one month, in the discretion of the court.

(S. 5698 and H. R. 16098)

A BILL

Revising and amending the statutes relative to trade-marks.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section five of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same, approved February twentieth, nineteen hundred and five, and amended by an Act approved March second, nineteen hundred and seven, and further amended by an Act approved February eighteenth, nineteen hundred and eleven, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by inserting in paragraph (b), at the end of the first clause thereof, after the word "emblem," the following: "Or the name of any church, religious denomination or society, or the name by which any church, religious denomination or society is commonly known or called," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

The Meaning and Opportunity of Thanksgiving

Perhaps more than is true of any other single element in our American life, the observance of our national thanksgiving anniversary is indicative of a religious strain that is not otherwise readily observable. In no other way and at no other time is there such universal public acknowledgment of our allegiance as a people to the Giver of all good; by no other means do we collectively put the stamp of spiritual relationship to Jehovah so indelibly upon our community and national existence. Thanksgiving day is our great national holiday, wherein our religious observances become cosmopolitan and the heart of democracy feels the thrill of aspirations that are divine.

From the day when God made of the seed of Abraham a great and mighty nation down to the present hour, the eye of Jehovah has been upon the Nations, and the need of maintaining religion as the controlling, dominating element in the collective organisms of human government has been supreme. In this Christian era, the teaching of gospel truth can in justice be no more separated from the public operations of the social order, than can the act and duty of worship be disassociated from the life of the obedient Christian disciple. The proclamation of Jehovah that "righteousness exalteth a nation" is written large upon the annals of the centuries, and thereby is established for all time the obligation of human government and of human society and of peoples gathered collectively together in whatever capacity to acknowledge the sovereignty of God in His world and over its peoples.

It may be argued that the observance of a thanksgiving day is a purely mechanical process, and that its formalism is a mockery of that spirit of thanksgiving which should characterize all faithful followers of our Lord. But even at that, the formal recognition of Deity as the sovereign head of government, as the fountain source of all blessing, as the author of material no less than spiritual prosperity, is bound to find its counterpart in a more devotional attitude on the part of great masses of our people. The reflex influence of this public acknowledgment of the Divine favor upon the irreligious elements in our population is by no means the least important factor in the proclamation of a day of national thanksgiving. No body of people can render even formal homage to the Creator in a public way without in turn having its standard of spiritual life raised, without having some conscious sense of a divine nearness that affects the quality of its life and of its service.

It may be taken for granted that as a people we do not get for ourselves all out of thanksgiving day that we might. It may be questioned whether even the church upon this occasion gets very far away from formalistic utterances that are commonplace as compared with the tremendous opportunity which the day affords for genuine spiritual uplift and evangelistic endeavor. The tendency is strong to limit the scope of thanksgiving day by remembering only that which has ministered to our own personal enjoyment, forgetful that in a larger sense the hand of the Lord has been outstretched in beneficence upon the nation. It is the conception of Jehovah as the sovereign of the nations that broadens our spiritual understanding, that begets a deeper sympathy for the whole humanity, that lifts us to a higher and keener consciousness of the obligations of Christian discipleship.

Why this particular day of thanksgiving? To be sure, a good custom ought not to be abandoned. We are almost lonely in our enjoyment of peace and the maintenance of neutrality among belligerents. Our crops have poured out abundantly into the lap of plenty. No pestilence has come nigh our habitation. In spite of some threatenings no marked disaster has overtaken our business world. There have been personal blessings beyond measure, and despite more than the usual amount of laxity in the industrial world, the nation, judged by the ordinary standards, will be regarded as fairly prosperous. These are the tributes which will be the common expression of our people.

The occasion was never more opportune for a professedly Christian nation to utilize a day like this to get nearer to the heart of things, to proceed with a self-examination that will create new conceptions of the relationship of the Christian faith to the mighty world problems of this age, to get a new vision of the place we hold nationally as a factor in Christianizing the civilizations of earth. In the final record of the world's history, what place shall America hold in the upward march of the race toward a higher destiny? Our contributions to the world's wealth, to invention, to industrial progress, to democracy, and in some measure to art and science are already fixed. In many of the elements that contribute to the civilization of the world, America holds a commanding place in the vanguard. In many respects she has so far outdistanced her competitors that there is no longer any semblance of a contest.

But today, in the light of the unspeakable and almost unthinkable devastation that is tearing away the very vitals of civilization beyond the seas, in the face of mighty world problems that are putting to the test the ancient bulwarks of the Christian faith, a supreme, overwhelming need is beginning to dawn upon the consciousness of the world's thought, the need of a virile, practical, successful demonstration of the power of Divine truth, operating in human life, to meet the severest tests of the world's inquiries, to settle the clamorings of humanity's deepest doubts and necessities. Men are asking after all whether or not civilization is about to collapse, and whether Christianity is potent to save it in any vital sense. They are asking what answer Christianity is going to make to the cry of the victims of evil in our social organism, to the wail of the hungry and suffering in our industrial order, to the demands that the golden rule shall become the standard of conduct in the world of business and government?

Whether or not she chooses to recognize it, the responsibility lies largely with America to give answer to these questions. No other nation has ever had such an opportunity. Christianity has become a bigger question than the mere maintenance of denominational decorum, or the preservation of some particular creed, or the building of palatial church edifices, or the abstractions of theological debate, or the generalizations of pulpit oratory; a more important question even, vital as is this element, than the salvation of chance individuals who manage to break through their environment of sin to find redemption at the Cross. The question which Christianity faces and which the church of America largely is called upon to solve, is whether or not there can be such a reconstruction of the social order through the operations of the truths of the gospel, that men and women will be liberated to find Jesus Christ, that the power of the liquor traffic, of social vice, of industrial oppression will no longer be potent to enslave the multitudes, that war will no longer be a possibility, because the teachings of the Man of Galilee will have forever established as the working polity of the nations the brotherhood of all men and the supreme Fatherhood of God.

If on this thanksgiving day we can be led as a nation to dedicate ourselves to this supreme task, it will indeed become the occasion of universal thanksgiving among the nations. America can hardly ignore her responsibility in this direction and escape the penalty of disobedience. Where if not here can the miracle be worked out of making the gospel of the Son of God the dominating, controlling force in every relationship of life?

What an opportunity there is before the Christian church of our land! With our own peculiar conceptions of gospel truth, which harmonize with the type which the world today seems anxious to find, what opportunities there are before the Society of Friends! Having put our hand to the plow, we dare not turn back from declaring the whole truth of God to a needy world.

Being Adjusted to God

Most of the defects that exist in the Christian life are due to the lack of having a conscious sense of the mind of the Holy Spirit. The human reed is a slender thing upon which to lean in time of weakness; human philosophy is an uncertain guide in times of the deepest heart searchings. The problem of knowing the mind of the Spirit is mainly a problem of proper spiritual adjustment. There are too many broken spiritual circuits, too many imperfect points of attachment, too many hindrances to the perfect insulation of the divine current.

The sap of the vine cannot flow into disconnected branches nor will fruit develop upon broken limbs. He who would live Godly in the world must keep his spiritual life adjusted to the requirements of the Spirit of God. No one can know the keeping power of the Lord who grows careless in his prayer life and in his heart life, who becomes negligent in watching, who fails to keep himself in the divine atmosphere wherein the Holy Spirit operates. There are too many fruitless lives because there are too many careless lives.

With all His love and His omnipotence, God will coerce no soul into the path of obedience.

Herein is humanity's part in the scheme of redemption. By an exercise of the will born of a sincere desire to attain the best in the Christian life, we must forsake self and ally ourselves positively, constructively with the spiritual forces that operate to transform human life into the image of the divine pattern. By the same process, and through the grace imparted to us through obedience, we become partakers of a new life, and in the power of that life are enabled to stand with our spiritual adjustments permanent and complete so long as we will to obey the mind of the Spirit.

No one who really puts God to the test will be disappointed. Christianity will never break down from that side of the gospel equation. The religious life is marred, if marred at all, because of man's inconstancy. They who seek the Lord diligently will find Him and He will neither leave nor forsake those who trust Him.

A Needed Emphasis

BY PROF. W. J. REAGAN

In Leicestershire, in the early part of the seventeenth century, there lived a youth whose chief peculiarity seemed to be his serious, rugged honesty. Nothing particularly striking happened to him till he was about nineteen, when he began anew his search for God. He had always been upright and honest and religious, but in this adolescent period, he demanded a first-hand religion. His religious life had become inadequate; he was dissatisfied with the cheap profession and empty morality of his time. His anxiety for satisfaction became so intense that he left home and traveled from place to place, asking advice from those who were supposed to know God best. His quest brought no relief, for these men only knew about God. He studied the Bible long and continuously; he sought out the needy and helped them, but these things did not avail. In this condition of despair he turned away from the external world and found inside "a voice that spoke to his condition." He had met the inward, ever-living Christ. Now his Bible study became significant and his ministry of service brought satisfaction. This inward Christ was the central fact of life for Fox and it made him founder of the Society of Friends.

This Society which he founded, although small in number, has been noted for its interest in all reforms—recognition of women, abolition of slavery, universal peace, abolition of the saloon—all reforms have had the united support of Friends. They were honest in business and life; they were simple in manner, dress and speech; their home life was beautiful. But while these things are the necessary results of spiritual life, based on the inward Christ, they are secondary. There are two great commandments and they are much alike, but the first commandment is friendship between man and God. "I have called you friends."

This conception of the relationship between man and God must ever be the central fact of Christianity. The historical Christ is a dismal failure and must lose His grip on humanity, if He does no more than smile lovingly and speak authoritatively down through the centuries from the sun-lit Galilean hills. It is not enough to feel the beauty of nature; we must know the God of nature. It is not enough to hear good sermons and listen to inspiring music; it is not even enough to study His word. Christ must be a living, vital presence in deepest consciousness, if He is to survive in this age, merciless in its criticism, uncompromising in its demand for actuality and efficiency. Fichte said, "Herein doth religion consist, that man in his own person and not in that of another, with his own spiritual eye and not through that of another should immediately behold, have and possess God."

This test of Fichte was the very one which Jesus proposed for the religion which He came to establish. Every man is religious who submits to that inner God consciousness which seems to be universal. He becomes Christian when he discovers that the historical Christ is the best and only interpretation of that inner God consciousness. As Christians and churches, we cannot ignore our economic and social problems; we dare not violate the physical laws of life; we need tremendously increased efficiency in Bible study; we need help through great books, good sermons and inspiring music, but the pivotal thing is to make the religion of our Christ actually significant to the deepest needs of our own inner consciousness and to the consciousness of those whom we would help.

If we are to accomplish this task of primary importance, we must avoid two dangerous extremes. The first and gravest danger is that of substituting for real communion beautiful forms. As Friends we do not observe the sacrament and baptism, but often we resort to cheaper forms, which are not as significant symbols as sacrament and baptism. Our congregations demand entertainment without effort on their part. We have choirs to call us together by their singing. They entertain those who did come on time till the late comers arrive. Some of this music entirely fails to strengthen or cement that friendship and communion which ought to be the main object of the hour of worship. The music may be technically perfect, but perfection and harmony of blending voices is not conducive to worship, if hearts of choir and people are not made to beat in harmony with the great heart of God. And music is but an illustration of all phases of worship. Prayers may be long and loud and beautiful; sermons may be entertaining and enthusiastic, and may even contain much valuable material; Churches may have the most beautiful architecture; all this may be without worship. All these things may be made means to an end which is worth while; they must not be made substitutes for that end.

The second danger comes from the determination to avoid all form. We arrange no music and have no choir; the sermon lacks thought and organization; seats are uncomfortable and the whole building has a dilapidated appearance; the whole service shows a woeful lack of careful thought and intelligent planning. We lose the most capable and intelligent people in the community because we are not intelligently religious.

Surely anything is legitimate which is really conducive to real worship. The best music and literature and thought must contribute to our united fellowship. They must not come, however, at a price which will thwart their usefulness. All these externals are legitimate means; they must not be substitutes for individual fellowship and worship. May our church, rich in its history of inwardness, continue to establish a communion that will abide.

Wichita, Kansas.

"Happy and strong and brave shall we be—able to endure all things, and do all things—if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment of our life is in God's hands."—Ex.

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

Thanksgiving

BY THOMAS R. WOODARD

Text—Giving thanks always for all things.—Gal. 5: 20. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks.—I Thess. 5: 17.

1. The Thanksgiving Proclamation.

We are again reminded of the pleasing and inspiring custom of public thanksgiving, both as a duty and a privilege; a duty because we have received such a multitude of unmerited favors; a privilege because a sacrifice of thanksgiving is all we have to offer to God in return for His bounties.

2. Prayer and Praise Are Twin Virtues.

The privilege of prayer enjoins the duty of praise. Praising the giver is appraising his gifts. The value of our appraisal may be judged by the volume of our sincere praise. As in rowing a boat two hands must be used, so the two oars of prayer and praise are necessary for spiritual progress. The use of only one oar makes progress very uncertain and round about, rather than along a definite line of spiritual development.

The great apostle has embodied the vital process of spiritual respiration into these two brief sentences of admonition, "Pray without ceasing," "In everything give thanks." Continual praying without thanksgiving in effect is like breathing the same air over and over again.

Full exhalation of praise prepares the heart for full inhalation of fresh air from the infinite atmosphere of God, in whom "we live and move and have our being." (Acts 17: 25.) In answer to prayer a continuous flow of blessing is assured to those who really "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?" (Ps. 116-12.) Thankfulness is the key which unlocks God's infinite treasure house of benefits.

3. Bible Full of Praise and Thanksgiving.

The word praise in different forms occurs one hundred and eighty times in the Psalms. David is an inspiring example of a thankful soul. His heart was a bubbling fountain of praise. It is worthy of note that a daily thanksgiving service (I Chron. 23: 30) was instituted by the Hebrew king, who laid the foundation for the greatest prosperity ever enjoyed by the Hebrew people. So full of gratitude was David that his songs sound sweet as the twitter of spring birds. His joy breaks out like the laughter of children, and his psalms of thanksgiving have echoed down the ages with his rapturous exclamation, "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men." (Psalms 107: 21-22.)

Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises at midnight under very adverse and discouraging circumstances. The Lord sent a relief expedition with such swiftness that it jarred the earth, shook their prison doors open and loosed their feet from the stocks. Result—the conversion of the jailor and his whole family. Remembering this marvelous and miraculous evidence of the efficacy of combined prayer and praise, Paul afterwards wrote to the church at Philippi, admonishing them to "Rejoice in the Lord always," and to "Be careful for nothing," prayerful for everything and thankful for anything. (Phil. 4: 6.)

4. Gratitude Is a Necessary Trait of Christian Character.

It is a virtue frequently and especially enjoined from Genesis to Revelations. Seneca, the Grecian philosopher, perhaps unconsciously, taught a fundamental principle of Christianity when he said, "He that preaches gratitude pleads the cause both of God and man, for without it we can neither be sociable nor religious. A grateful person is a visible beatitude—a living doxology. An ungrateful person is without excuse, for even a child may be grateful if it wills to be so. It is an obvious, a cheap and an easy virtue, so obvious that wheresoever there is life there is a place for it, so cheap that the covetous man may be grateful without expense, so easy that the sluggard may be so, likewise without labor."

To appreciate the real beauty of this trait of character, one only needs to study the actions of a little child that has been carefully trained to say "thank you." What more does a devoted parent want or expect for days of toil and nights of care and multiplied gifts than the child's expressions of sincere gratitude? Is our Father less appreciative or mindful of the gratitude of His children? It is one of the most ennobling impulses of our religious nature and lends a charm to character like the perfume of clover in the summer air.

5. Unthankfulness Is Accounted Most Inexcusable in Ourselves and Least Pardonable in Others.

Ingratitude is its own avenger. It stamps its impress in the lines of a sad countenance. It is the perennial fountain from which flow streams of murmuring, complaining and quarreling with the world for what is, in reality, the wrong in one's own selfish heart. A colored preacher once likened such persons to hogs under an acorn tree. They eat the acorns, but never look up to see where they come from.

6. Abundant Cause for Thanksgiving.

"Count your blessings, name them one by one." Name the achievements of science, the marvels of invention, the wonders of discovery; count the stores of treasured wisdom of the ages, the victories for freedom of thought and liberty of action won by the blood of heroes and martyrs that have been accumulated into a priceless inheritance of blessing and poured into the lap of this generation. While other nations are pouring out millions of treasure and seas of blood in sacrifice to the ghastly god of war, let our grateful nation pour out libations to the Prince of Peace.

This day from trustful hearts we'll blend

With incense of sincere thanksgiving

Our ardent prayers that He may send

A grander day of true thanksgiving.

Knightstown, Indiana.

The True Church and Her Mission

BY HARRY R. KEATES

Text—I Peter 2: 9, 10.

God determines the character of His church and its mission in the world, and whatever its denomination, the true ecclesia will manifest its heavenly origin and purpose; for without exception its membership has been transplanted out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of His well beloved Son; has become "new creatures in Christ Jesus, old things passed away and all things become new, and all things are of God." Such a transformation is not found in the realm of theoretical religion, where theories, doubt and speculation hold sway; but the true church has an experimental knowledge of salvation which excludes all debate, for its members have passed from death unto life and are conscious of vital union with their Lord and Savior. They have become His temples, in-dwelt by His spirit who witnesses to their adoption and empowers them to witness for Him unwaveringly.

The mission of the church is to "shew forth His praises, who hath called us out of darkness into His marvelous light, and from the power of Satan unto God," and to it has been committed the preaching of the Gospel to the souls that are lost in sin and nature's night, and the evidencing of its reality as attested by ourselves, that they too may experience forgiveness and remission of sins.

These things being true it behooves us to examine ourselves as to whether we are in the faith or not. Judging from the lives of many professors, it is to be feared that they have lost sight of the clear line of demarcation between sin and salvation, and they are in difficulty as to their true relation. Harken to one such as he makes his sorrowful confession:

"'Tis a point I long to know
Oft it causes anxious thought;
Do I love the Lord or no,
Am I his or am I not?"

Christianity is not a proposition to be discussed; it is a life to be accepted as "the gift of God," and there ought to be no more question as to its vitality than there is of physical life, of which we are continually made conscious by its functions. Whole or partial paralysis is a pitiful condition, and this applies equally to both cases. We cannot but deplore the fact that such a condition is prevalent today, and it is our bounden duty not only to consider it, but also to seek for the remedy. A healthy condition of body depends upon a due observance of the laws of nature, and men have regard to their food, hygiene, clothing, etc. as necessary to their well being, otherwise ill health soon takes away the power to achieve. The spiritual life has its laws which are equally binding, yet they have been too sadly neglected by many of us. Vital union with our Lord is indispensable. "I am the true vine, ye are the branches; every branch in me that beareth not fruit, He taketh away." "Without me ye can do nothing."

Real prayer, communion, study of His word, watchfulness and unwavering faith are absolutely essential for the maintenance of soul life. The prayer meeting as an indicator of the prayer life of many is dangerously near the zero mark; the pale ghost of spiritual vigor manifests our lack of communion. The laxity in study of the Word is painfully apparent. The lives of many show their neglect of watchfulness as seen in both word and actions, whilst faith which should remove mountains is almost a microscopic quantity. Such conditions are not only undesirable, they are reproachful and should be humbly confessed and amended in order "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

That there is some consciousness of our failure is apparent from the popular demand for social service and philanthropic activities, but good as these efforts may be, they are not the primal necessities in the case, for they pertain to the creature, and do not go to the depths of his needs which lie in the soul. The by-products of true religion should, and will, take care of these things when normal conditions prevail, and they must, if we are to "glorify God" and accomplish His purpose in the world by becoming Spirit filled witnesses of His saving power. We shall then be instrumental in leading souls from the bondage of sin into the freedom of His glorious salvation.

The church, which has failed along these lines, makes little or no progress or growth, and to him who has the eye to see, the sad comment is being written by the hand upon the wall, "Ichabod" (the glory is departed). The effectually evangelized soul will be evangelical, and the church composed of such will be evangelistic. Thank God, there is balm in Gilead, there is a physician there, and today there is the blessed evidence in some places of a return of spiritual life and vigor and a determination to fulfill the mission of the church along God ordained lines.

Oh, may the fiery pentecost of His love sweep over every one of our meetings until we can say, "Jehovah Shammah" (the Lord is there), and may we all be so filled that from us shall flow rivers of living water to the refreshing of the soul thirsty ones about us. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

Des Moines, Iowa.

Church Unity

The more we love our own homes, the more we love the homes of our neighbors and friends. The more we love our own boys and girls, the more interest we feel in the boys and girls not only of our friends and neighbors, but we are interested in the young people of our whole community or town.

So it is with our church associations and homes. If we love our church and her family, we are interested in the neighboring churches with their membership. We know we have one great Father and we are all brothers and sisters in Christ.

At the great Christian Endeavor convention at Los Angeles, all church creeds were thrown aside and forgotten. No one was asked to what church they belonged or their idea of this or that ordinance, for all felt they belonged to one great family—the church of Christ. A great milestone was reached at this convention toward church unity and federation.

May God speed the day when the churches, instead of using their vitality and energy in fighting each other, will all fight together under one banner, for the building up of the kingdom of Christ.

Earlham, Iowa.

Be Ye Doers of the Word—A Plea From Labor

BY FLORA M. BEALS

"And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed unto him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us."

"Good Christian people of the United States, you never seemed so admirable as you do now. Your eyes are wet with tears, but your hands are not wet with blood. Your own troubles are many, but they have not made you forget the greater troubles of others. You pray to the God of Peace. May you be heard.

"But what if you should be heard? What if your God should ask you questions? What if your God should say, 'You ask me to bring peace to Europe. What have you done to keep peace in the United States? The United States may be at war next. I note that it has a large navy, and I have observed that it occasionally has a meddlesome disposition.'

"If the United States should be at war next, whose fault would it be? Would it be your fault or the fault of your rulers? Would you declare war, or would a few men declare war for you? If a few men should declare war for you, do you believe I would hold you blameless? Did I say, 'Thou shalt not kill,' or did I say thou shalt not kill unless others shall tell thee to do so, and then thou shalt kill by hundreds? Did I say you were all my children and all brothers to each other, or did I say that some were my children and others were not? Did I tell you to love yourselves or to love your neighbors as yourselves?"

"The people of Europe had little or nothing to do with the bringing about of the present slaughter, because they had foolishly permitted a few men to hold the war-making power. Nowhere were the people consulted either at the moment of war making or before the war. Kings made treaties as they pleased, though the treaties were sputtering fuses, leading to powder chambers in the hearts of their respective subjects.

"Wherein is the situation in the United States much different? Our constitution declares that a majority of a quorum of Congress shall have the power to declare war. Congress is composed of 531 members. A quorum is 266 members. A majority of a quorum can declare war and 134 members are a majority of a quorum. Add the president and we have 135 men as the number necessary to hurl 100,000,000 people into war.

"Suppose 135 men should hurl us into war and you should go to God to pray for peace. If you had not fought to obtain for everybody the right to vote upon the war declaration, do you believe your God would say, 'You deserve peace. I'll end the war,' or is it possible that your God would say, 'When you have peace, why don't you protect it? Why do you permit a few men to speak for you and all the other millions? Why do you not speak for yourselves? Have I ever said that I did not hold each of you responsible for the observance of the commandment not to kill? Have I ever said that if 135 should vote to kill I would pardon the other 100,000,000 for killing?'

"Martin Luther, speaking from the Germany of long ago, said, 'The fewer the words the better the prayer.' In how many words do you pray for peace in Europe? Why not be Luther-like and put it all into a single sentence, 'Almighty God, give us the courage to resist our rulers and say that we will not go to war, unless we ourselves have voted for it and are willing to go before you with bloody hands and try to justify our conduct.'

"Jeremy Taylor, speaking from the England of long ago, said, 'Whatsoever we beg of God let us also work for it.' You pray for peace in Europe, you long for continued peace in the United States. How much have you done and are you doing to insure continued peace in the United States? Do you hold any part of the power to declare war? Do you believe you have no responsibility for making certain that war shall not come? If you have failed to fight for the right to vote against war, do you believe that God will acquit you of responsibility for a war that you have done nothing to prevent? Do you not believe that there are sins of omission as well as sins of commission?

"Why should not the people take over to themselves the right to speak in this great matter of life and death? Why should the American people permit 135 men to say whether 100,000,000 wish to engage in war? Certainly it is not because the 100,000,000 are incompetent to speak for themselves? Everyone understands the death question. Everyone knows whether he wants to kill or be killed. The right of the people to determine by direct vote the question of peace or war lies at the very foundation of self-government. More than any other right, the people need the right to live. If they are competent to exercise no other right, they are competent to say whether they want to die.

"No people on earth have ever yet demanded the right to take over the war making power and exercise it by direct ballot. Now that the demand is made it will be resisted. The ruling classes of the various nations cannot afford to give up this power. The ruling classes everywhere constitute but small majorities. Can you say, when you go to God to pray for peace, 'I did not want this war, but the ruling class of my country did want it'? Either war is right or it is wrong. It is not enough to oppose war without taking adequate measures to prevent a few from participating us in war?

"Christian men and women of the United States, will you not help us to end this intolerable condition? Ask your God what you should do. Our souls are on their knees to you. Help us to take away from 135 men the power to plunge this country into war. Help us to write into the constitution of the United States,

'War shall not be declared except by direct vote of all the men and women of the United States.'"

The above rather remarkable plea is taken from an article from the pen of Allan L. Benson, which appeared a few weeks ago in one of the strongest, most widely circulated labor journals in this country. Though not clothed in the language of the theologian, it raises the heartfelt appeal of the millions of war's potential victims.

"And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them."

Characteristics of Children—Primary Age—And Kind of Teaching that Impresses Them Most

(Read by Mrs. R. H. Williams before the Mahaska County Bible School Convention at Oskaloosa, Iowa.)

Talmage likened children unto flowers, for he said: "The brightest flowers in all the earth are those which grow in the garden of a Christian household, clambering over the porch of a Christian home."

At the primary age we find the child active and restless, not yet able to give sustained attention or to concentrate himself upon a task. The child of six or nine years is impulsive and susceptible. His real life is one of play, and the teacher's appeal must be to the senses and imagination. Imaginative play, with its little dramas of make-believe reaches its culmination in the first half of this period.

It has been well said that we are able to see as much in anything as we put into it. It is not the mere seeing or hearing, but the meaning, which the sights and sounds convey that is important; and their meaning depends upon what is within one, upon his point of view and his ability to understand. The primary age is a transition time—from home to school—from play to work—from instinct to will—from imagination to reason. Each child is working out his own ideas from the hosts of new experiences that are coming to him, and he is sure to get some that are strange enough from our viewpoint.

Consistency is demanded at this period of the child's life, because he is forming his own ideas of right and wrong. Moral laws are to him simple statements of cause and effect. He judges actions solely by their consequences.

The next question is, after we know our boys and girls, what kind of teaching is best to impress them most. Our fundamental aim should be the moral and spiritual development of the pupil. We should seek to bring those we teach to a knowledge of God as revealed in Jesus Christ, and to a loyal and whole-hearted service in His kingdom.

Each department of the Sabbath School should have its specific aim. In the primary department the work of the pupil centers about his reproduction of the story. If the teacher has succeeded in telling the lesson story well, nothing will give the children greater delight than to reproduce it for themselves, and nothing can be more educational. It makes the truth the child's own. There are three ways in which the children may reproduce the story. One way is by telling it. It is a delight to listen to a good story that children remember without effort and are eager to tell it, as if it were a personal experience. The children instinctively emphasize the points which appeal to them.

The child learns truths not alone through the ear, but through the eye as well. He may have the opportunity to draw the story on a blackboard (and there should be a blackboard in every primary department). The drawing can be made very crude, for you are not teaching drawing, but Bible stories. It would be time wasted trying to get a perfect picture. This is only a means by which the child may express his own ideas and get the benefit that comes from such expressions.

Another method to use the eyes is by pictures to represent the story in part as it is told. For example, a teacher was telling the story of the creation; she had cut some pictures from magazines to represent night, day, water, animals, man, woman and so on; as she told the story she would place the pictures in the order they came on the board by means of stickers; thus she impressed on the child's mind the story of creation in the order it came.

Still another method is having the children play the story. They are materially dramatic. It is the spirit of make-believe play. Each little actor, creating his own part himself, lives in the story and expresses in the most natural way possible, its meaning to him. There is no reason why children should not act Bible stories just as they do others.

The committing of Bible texts must not be omitted in the primary department, for it is there where many of the Sabbath School habits are formed. This can be made very interesting, as at this age the child no longer plays alone but with companions, and rivalry and competition begin. So a contest in memory texts would create much interest and arouse enthusiasm. The work with the children is great, and there are many opportunities for those who work in the primary department. Success will be for the teachers who depend on Christ.

In conclusion, let us get the picture F. B. Meyer paints:

"Reckon on Christ to do His part perfectly. Directly you give, He takes. Directly you will open the door, He enters. Directly you will open the flood gates, He pours in a glorious tide of fullness, fullness of wealth, of power, of joy.

"The marble has only to be pliant to the chisel of Michael Angelo; the organ has only to be responsive to the slightest touch of Handel; the student has only to follow the least hint of a Faraday, and there will be no failure in results.

"Oh! to be equally susceptible to the molding influence of Christ! We shall not fail in realizing the highest ideal of which we are capable, if we only let Him do His work unhindered."

It is not the temptation yielded to, but the temptation rejected, that makes moral fiber.—Henry C. King.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Deer Creek, Indiana—The Friends of Deer Creek Meeting, located two miles south of Marion, Indiana, have just completed the repairing of their church building. The interior has been re-decorated, a new furnace has been installed and new cement steps erected. Services are again being held regularly. Revival services were to begin on November 22, conducted by Nettie C. Springer of Indianapolis, assisted by the pastor, Joseph Davis.

Van Wert, Ohio—Truman C. Kenworthy, General Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, was present at our last Monthly Meeting. A meeting had been arranged for the afternoon preceding the Monthly Meeting, which proved to be a very helpful service. The message at the evening meeting was a very strong one and was greatly appreciated by all.

Van Wert particular meeting has just entered upon an evangelistic campaign. The outlook is good and already deep conviction has settled upon the hearts of many. Mary B. Chappell is assisting in song and personal work. The pastor, Fred H. Tormohlen, has charge of the meeting, while the entire force of elders, overseers and a committee of twenty are supporting the pastor in this effort. The membership as a whole is also rendering loyal service.

Minneapolis, Minnesota—During the past year there has been a decided increase in the average attendance at the Sabbath morning meetings. Definite figures for other years are not at hand, but an increase for the past year of at least twenty-five per cent. would be no exaggeration. For the month beginning September 1, the increase in average attendance for the corresponding time last year has been forty per cent.

The meeting on "All Friends Day" in Minneapolis, on November 1st, was attended by a large congregation. Many people in the twin cities, who are of Quaker ancestry or who are in some way connected with Friends, but who cannot attend services regularly, find pleasure and helpfulness in the annual observance of this day. Such an event plays an important part in the permanent strengthening of the meeting.

The Quaker Round Table at Minneapolis, is engaged in an interesting study of the problem of "Peace and War." The causes, costs and Christian principles as applied to war are the topics that have been discussed up to the present time. "Methods of Peace" will be considered at the next meeting. The new plan of study adopted for this year is proving very satisfactory. Three separate groups organized in different parts of the city, meet twice a month for the discussion of assigned topics. About four general meetings of all the groups have been planned for the year at the church.

Colorado's Dry Majority—A letter from George D. Weeks of Denver, Colorado, under date of November 13, furnishes the information that the majority for prohibition in the recent election in that state was 11,880. The letter states that the temperance people are greatly pleased with conditions, but predicts that the liquor interests will try to get the question in the courts in some manner. It is not thought that they will be able to make any headway.

Paonia, Colorado—John and Abigail M. Fry recently visited relatives and friends in Paonia. John Fry preached on Sabbath and his wife had the privilege of attending the meeting of the W. F. M. S. She has long been an interested and active worker in the missionary cause. Years ago she organized Women's Foreign Missionary Societies in Iowa, Nebraska and Colorado which are still doing active work. She has been the means of awakening many to their duty in the cause of missions. It will be of interest to some to know that she was the first school teacher of Charles E. Tebbetts, who is now the Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions. While in Paonia these Friends were the guests of Annie Rugg at the celebration of her fifty-third wedding anniversary. John Fry is Superintendent of Pastoral and Evangelistic Work in Denver Quarterly Meeting and has resided at Boulder, Colorado, for several years.

Newport, Rhode Island—Lucius B. Compton, the Mountain Evangelist of Asheville, North Carolina, was announced to hold special services at the Friends meeting house in Newport every evening from November 15 to 22. A Friendly Class for Men has been organized at the Friends meeting at that place and meets in the meeting house every Sabbath from 12 to 1 o'clock. During the summer and early autumn, the pastor, John S. Kimber, who is also teacher of the class, gave a number of very helpful addresses on such subjects as "The Way Into the Kingdom," "The Mission of Christ," "The Religion of the Spirit" and other topics.

Deep River, North Carolina—George Welker of Springfield, North Carolina, assisted by George Wood, conducted a very successful revival at Deep River, beginning October 15th and closing on the 26th. The meetings were well attended and all appreciated the messages. Ten persons were converted and eight united with us at the following Monthly Meeting. It is felt that there has been a deepening of interest in our membership because of these meetings.

Tecumseh, Michigan—Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Tecumseh, Michigan, November 7-8. Charles E. Haworth of Alliance, Ohio, was present and preached on both Saturday and Sunday and also gave an address at the Christian Endeavor Convention Sabbath afternoon. His services were highly appreciated. Daniel W. Whybrew from Lupton, Michigan, was present on Sabbath on his way to Ypsilanti, where he began a series of meetings on the 8th.

The Friends of Tecumseh appointed October 25th for their rally day. The attendance was considered larger than usual, being 123 at the morning service and 109 at Sabbath School. Mary Barrett preached a forcible sermon and several others participated in the services.

Boise, Idaho—The Friends at Boise are in the midst of a gracious revival. Up to November 16, thirteen persons had been definitely blessed, while the interest was increasing. The meeting at Boise is small, but there are a number of choice workers among them. Charles J. Whitlock, the pastor, is getting hold of the work and is daily growing in the esteem of the people. Lindley A. Wells of Oregon, is the evangelist in charge. He expects to go to Star, Idaho, for services between November 26 and December 13, after which he expects to go to the meeting at Greenleaf. He will remain until about the middle of February in the limits of Boise Valley Quarterly Meeting. Lindley Wells writes that it is a very promising field in that section of the northwest.

Chester Meeting, Indiana—Chester Meeting in the limits of Westfield Quarterly Meeting, is enjoying a good degree of spiritual life. Mary A. Cox was very acceptably in attendance at this meeting on a recent Sabbath.

Hadley, Indiana—The meeting at Hadley, Indiana, observed rally day at the Sabbath School hour and "Everybody to Church Day" at the meeting hour on October 25th. The results of the effort were very gratifying. There was a scourge of whooping-cough in the neighborhood which kept many of the little folks away, yet there was an attendance of about 140 at the Sabbath School with a collection of $4.65. The church services both morning and evening were even better attended. The young people had decorated the house most beautifully with appropriate pennants and also with flowers, fruits and grains, thus indicating their gratitude for God's abundant blessings. There has been a spirit of revival in this meeting for some weeks and a number have been definitely blessed at the regular service. Special evangelistic meetings are announced to begin on Thanksgiving evening to be conducted by Martilia and Mary A. Cox.

New Burlington, Ohio—Miami Quarterly Meeting held at New Burlington, Ohio, on November 14, was a very interesting and helpful occasion. The following ministers were present: Amos Cook of Harveysburg, Evangelistic Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting; A. E. Wooton and Mary Martin of Waynesville; Ida Allen of Urbana; Homer G. Biddlecum of Xenia; Frank Moorman and Deborah Lloyd of Spring Valley; John Crites of Beech Grove; John Hawkins of Chester and Bertha Day and Mildred Allen, who are holding meetings in Wilmington Yearly Meeting. Professor J. Waldo Wood of Wilmington College preached on Sabbath morning. Homer G. Biddlecum gave the address before the Christian Endeavor Rally in the afternoon and A. E. Wooton preached in the evening. Jesse Hawkins, the pastor at New Burlington, was present at all the services.

PERSONAL MENTION

Jonathan Steere and wife, of Haverford, Pennsylvania, attended Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

Nathan Frame is reported to be gradually growing weaker, but his faith is bright and strong.

Zenas L. Martin and wife, of Holguin, Cuba, at home on a furlough, are visiting their daughter, Evelyn Haworth in Minneapolis.

The address of Alpheus Trueblood, pastor of the meeting at Dayton, Ohio, is 1505 West Second Street in that city. The winter's work is starting nicely.

Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Washington, D. C., is holding his own in health and is able to perform his duties as Secretary of the American Peace Society.

Daniel S. Pickett, of Rose Hill, Kansas, is serving the meeting at Stark, Kansas, as pastor for the present year. He has found many kind friends and an open field for work.

Visiting ministers at Baltimore Yearly Meeting included Rufus M. Jones, Thomas Elsa Jones, George B. Evans, Robert Simkin, Charlotte E. Vickers, Ida T. Parker and Hannah P. Morris.

David Hadley, of Danville, Indiana, well known to Friends throughout America, and one of the leading men in Western Yearly Meeting, is considerably indisposed on account of heart trouble. His many friends hope he will soon be able to continue his work in the church.

Martilia Cox attended White Lick Quarterly Meeting at Mooresville, Indiana, November 14 and 15, and gave some addresses on Social Purity in the different meetings of the Quarterly Meeting.

Robert L. Simkin, missionary to Chengtu, China, at home on a furlough, addressed the students of Westtown School, Pennsylvania, on November 1, giving a vivid account of the changes in that country from an empire to a republic.

William C. Allen and William B. Harvey, who have been in Japan since arrival in Asia, are now in China. They expect to reach the Philippines about the middle of January and will go to Australia, arriving there about the middle of February.

Joseph Elkinton and daughter Mary, in company with a personal friend from England, whose field of labor is in China, have reserved passage on the Siberia, sailing from San Francisco on February 15. They will first visit in Japan, and later Joseph Elkinton will spend some time in China.

PENN ALUMNI BANQUET

On Thursday evening, November 5, the Penn Alumni Club of Des Moines, Iowa, held its first annual banquet in the dining room of the Y. M. C. A. About fifty alumni and friends of the college were present. The toastmaster, Marion S. SeEVERS, presided at the toast program in a clever and entertaining manner.

W. H. Cathcart, one of Penn's older alumnus, gave a very interesting discussion on "The Old Days." He urged upon the alumni who were teachers the necessity of considering the pupil's tensile strength. Miss Edith Taber, a member of the graduating class of '08, responded to the toast on "The Transition." She drew an apt comparison between the transition period of our English literature and that of Penn College, showing that just as the transition period brought forth master literary men, so has Penn's transition period brought forth a bigger and better Quaker institution of learning.

Dr. David M. Edwards, president of Penn, completed the history of the college by responding to the toast, "The Present Penn." Although speaking from a strictly psychological standpoint he drew the conclusion that the present is so small as to be an almost negligible factor in time. Yet he showed us that such is by no means the case in regard to Penn's present. At present Penn has a 240-acre tract of land salable at $200.00 per acre as an endowment, and the largest registration in her history. His closing appeal was a call for the loyalty of Penn alumni to their alma mater, especially in a financial way.

R. E. Mendenhall, '12, brought the program to an end with his toast on "The Need of a Des Moines Penn Club." He showed the need of a permanent organization of Penn alumni in Des Moines. All left the banquet with a new feeling of loyalty and enthusiasm for the welfare of Penn College.

WE THANK THEE

BY LEIGH RICHMOND MINER

Not for the harvest alone
 But for the field to till,
 Not for the gifts we give,
 But for the heart's good will,
 Not for the great high tower
 But zeal in building up,
 Not for the draught we share
 But joy filling the cup,
 Not for the evening red
 Or for the bird's sweet call,
 But for joy, joy in it all.

THE CALIFORNIA CONTEST

BY JOHN CHAWNER

The battle is over and the prohibition amendment is lost. It is worth while to consider some of the causes which led to defeat.

The Los Angeles Times, organ of the G. O. P., probably the most powerful opponent of prohibition, hastens to explain that it does not approve the methods of the liquor traffic and pleads for a more drastic regulation of the saloon by high license and rigid enforcement of law, but the proprietor does not like to be deprived of the opportunity to give his guest a glass of wine of four or five percent. alcohol. Experience has proved that if wine and beer are sold, it is impossible to prevent the sale of stronger liquors and the door is open for blind pigs.

The Tribune, organ of the Progressive party, afraid to speak in favor of prohibition during the campaign, now warns the liquor dealers that the immense vote in favor of the amendment should convince them that the saloon must go, and claims that if the amendment had been against the saloon only, and had not included the wine industry, it would have carried by a large majority.

A serious mistake in the proposed amendment was the omission of the time limit. Had it passed as first proposed, it would have closed in five days after the legal announcement of its passage, not saloons only, but wineries and breweries also. A proposition was later placed on the ballot giving saloons until February 15, 1915, to close, and breweries and wineries an opportunity to ship their products out of the state until January 1, 1916. This proposition was not approved by many extreme prohibitionists and did not have the effect which it would have had if it had been in the original proposition. No doubt many who were not very decidedly in favor of prohibition were influenced by this omission, and it furnished a chance for a strong argument by the opponents of prohibition. The breweries and wineries had been tolerated and fostered by the state, and time should have been allowed for the capital and labor to be changed to other employment, as has been granted in other states adopting prohibition.

Many voters who were opposed to the saloon no doubt believed that prohibition would interfere with the success of the Panama exhibition next year and the usual coming of winter tourists.

The anti-liquor contest will not stop. There is a good prospect that the wine question will work out its own solution. Table grapes are worth about $30.00 per ton on the vines, while wine grapes only bring $10.00 per ton or less delivered at the winery. Many acres of wine grapes have already been budded to table grapes.

It has been reported on good authority that Professor Endo Montian, Italian chemist with "temperance proclivities," who has succeeded in manufacturing non-alcoholic wine which retains the peculiar flavor of the grape, was employed by the Italian-Swiss company of California to come to this state and test the California grapes by his process, but suddenly the arrangement was cancelled. The reasons are given as follows by William E. Johnson in the Issue, a paper published at Lordsburg, California.

First. The Italian-Swiss Company entered the California wine association, better known perhaps, as the wine trust.

Second. The dry state-wide amendment campaign had developed and the wine trust had tied up with the Eastern whisky trust in a death struggle to defeat the amendment.

Mr. Johnson further says, "No matter which way the dry campaign goes, the non-alcoholic wine industry for California is assured."

Whether the "Royal Arch" amendment has carried or not there is good prospect that a prohibition amendment will be submitted again in 1916. This amendment No. 47* on the ballot entitled "Prohibition Elections," is intended to prevent the submission of the prohibition question to the people for eight years after the present election. It is believed that if it passed it can be repealed by initiative petition in 1915, and thus open the way for the contest again in 1916. At any rate the anti-liquor people will not cease to agitate the abolition of the liquor traffic.

Pasadena, California.

WITHIN THE ARCTIC CIRCLE

BY JOHN F. HANSON

It is no little treat to spend a summer month up under the arctic circle with the Armisteads. They have spent over a dozen years in devoted mission work, covering a large district—a needy and neglected field. The Armisteads have a large, convenient and well equipped sail boat where six persons can eat and sleep. Among islands and fjords we sailed, anchoring in some convenient bay or sheltered nook.

When the "Red Cross" hove in sight, the people for long distances knew what was coming. From one to three meetings a day was the program. The people flocked together and filled the largest houses on short notice. Never did I see the old-fashioned gospel received with more relish, nor the Holy Spirit more in evidence doing his office work among the people.

The State church has a very loose hold upon the people. Large districts are abandoned by the paid priests or else neglected. People thus situated have strong claims upon us, and these periodic visits render a very important service to the cause of Christ. The people have learned to look up to them as spiritual parents and guides.

The Armisteads have also been of much value to the people by their practical skill and knowledge in sickness and disease. Of no small moment are the two fishing homes on two outlying islands, where thousands of fishermen congregate in the fishing season of the year. Spiritual and physical help and comfort is administered in hundreds of otherwise suffering cases. The good Samaritan spirit is on duty daily and the record is on high. The large mission home of the Armisteads is situated at the head of a little bay amid sheltered and delightful surroundings.

Many a poor, ailing or sick unfortunate is tenderly nursed back to life or fitted for places of usefulness. The pioneering Friends' work for more than a generation in this north land has been as a yeast in its quiet, but powerful effect in lifting the better class out of superstition and error. The result of State church supervision of the spiritual affairs of the people is like a blight. The majority do not advance far without grave fears and forebodings of religious disaster. The Friends have always appealed to a class of earnest seekers who were not satisfied with a mere form of Godliness. They hunger after a personal living Christ, one who is more than a figure on the cross, one who is more than the historic Christ of the catechism a real, true and present Friend, who can cleanse the heart as well as forgive sin.

The war cloud is still gathering blackness. The futility of military defense is on exhibition in a way that he "who runs may read," and "how readest thou" was never so easy to answer. Just read the testimony of the Balkans, and see bleeding Belgium a heap of ruins. The Scandinavian countries are studying the situation at very close range these days. The military experts are crestfallen; they see a little submarine sink a boasted dreadnaught in five minutes. The world was shocked at the loss of life on the Titanic; a sea monster now goes down with 2000 and it hardly causes a ripple. Flying machines can rain down dynamite on a helpless, sleeping city. Such words as horrible, terrible, awful, have become tame, meaningless terms. The young men return from camp and drill and they say "what's the use?" it's misspent time and money.

They listen eagerly to the better way. The old way of being driven like sheep to the slaughter is at a discount. Never was there a truer exhibition of "they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Let not the American ship be torn from her moorings but show the world how "the work of righteousness is peace and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever."

Stavanger, Norway,
November 2, 1914.

USE OF TOBACCO

The Indiana W. C. T. U., through its anti-narcotic department has issued a pamphlet of fourteen pages indicating the attitude which various educational institutions in the state take on the question of the use of tobacco. For the most part the managements have strict rules against the use of tobacco by the students. Some of them merely forbid its use on the college premises, while others have no rule on the question.

The following interesting letter from President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, will indicate the position of this institution on this question:

Richmond, Indiana,
January 29, 1914.

Mrs. Edith McNaughton,
Ray, Indiana.

My Dear Madam—I take pleasure in replying to your favor of January 26th. It gives me especial pleasure because we have some very well defined convictions upon the question you raise. We would not have and do not have any person on our faculty who is addicted to the use of tobacco. We find that it is entirely possible to get men of the highest grade of scholarship and best personal qualities who do not use tobacco. We do not allow the use of tobacco by our students in any form on the campus. This rule is enforced very rigidly. There are a few students who smoke, but they do so off the campus and they are practically without exception, ashamed to have any member of the faculty see them doing so. I asked a young man who smokes what percentage of the students of Earlham College smoke, and he said he estimated it at not over five per cent.—of the men, of course. I think this a very liberal estimate and it is made not by an officer, but by one of the smokers. With kind regards,

Very sincerely,

ROBERT L. KELLY.

CORRESPONDENCE

STRATHMORE, CALIFORNIA.

Editor American Friend:

Ever since reading the comments on the lesson of the "Last Supper" in our Quarterly, published by the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, I have wanted to speak of my hearty approval of the same, not only with reference to the time, but of the fact that it was the "Passover Supper" mentioned so definitely by Matthew, Mark and Luke and not a substitute for it, or a new institution. I am convinced that no one, free from preconceived notions, would conclude from a careful reading of Matthew, Mark and Luke that it was not the Passover Supper. John does not intimate that it was a new institution or one to be continued. Some infer from John's teaching that it was not the Passover Supper of which Jesus and his disciples partook, as reference is made to the Passover yet to be eaten; yet to my mind there is less difficulty in accepting what all four gospels say about the Passover, than to conclude by inference that it was not the Passover Supper.

In the Sunday School Times of September 26th, Professor Riddle says: "All three synoptic gospels state that our Lord ate the paschal supper with his disciples at the regular time, which was the 19th of Nisan. It is here held that the positive statements outweigh the inference that John xviii: 28 can be otherwise explained; that such an anticipation is well nigh impossible. The day of the week was Thursday it is almost universally held and, according to the chronology accepted here, was April 6, A. D. 30."

Professor Riddle and nearly all others not Friends, seem to take it for granted that somewhere along during that supper, was the institution of the Lord's Supper. Dr. Adam Clark, who strongly advocates the instituting of a new supper, confesses: "It is remarkable that St. John says nothing about the institution of the Holy Sacrament."

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think what you can make with wheat around $1 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

A NEW FELLOWSHIP GROUP

On Sunday, November 15th, in Portland, Maine, a new religious society of young people was organized in the Oak Street Friends Church. It is to be known as the Fellowship Group of Oak Street Friends Church. Instead of using the name Christian Endeavor, it selected the name given above as more closely in harmony with present activities among young Friends. It is organized around a covenant instead of a pledge. The covenant adopted is as follows, and is called the Fellowship Covenant:

"Our fellowship is with Jesus Christ whom we acknowledge to be our Savior, and whom as Christians we are earnestly seeking to follow. Our fellowship is a comradeship with one another in an effort to cultivate within ourselves the graces of a Christian character. This our twofold fellowship we purpose to express in daily communion with our Master through prayer and Bible reading, in faithful support of and participation in the meetings of our Fellowship Group, and in earnest service for Christ in the church and in all other ways where opportunity offers."

On the adoption of the covenant the following named young people signed it in the presence of the meeting, thereby becoming charter members of this organization which promises much for the young people of the church: A. Hurford Crosman, Everett E. Goodspeed, Charles S. Tupper, Pearl G. Auspland, Helen Moulton, Olive Barker, Pearl Havener, Ruth E. Hull, Viola Hamilton, Hazel Gore, Isabel D. Auspland, Agnes Hamilton, Frances Tyndall.

INDIANA CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION

We were surprised and grieved also to find so few Friends present at the Indiana State Christian Endeavor Convention recently held at Logansport, Indiana. I learned that Friends have seventy-three Societies in this state and that they stand third in the state in the number of Societies. Two of the superintendents of departments and one of the vice-presidents are Friends.

The program was fine. Every message was full of spiritual power. The very things for which we stand as a denomination and which we preach were emphasized. "The Quiet Hour" or real communion, "The Peace Union," "Bible Study," "Missions," and "Personal Work" or evangelism were prominent features of the program. We cannot understand why the young people of our church do not co-operate more with such organizations and conventions.

As Friends we have stood for many of these great truths, when we have had to stand alone. We have carried the banner until these matters are now being taken up by others and we seem sure of victory. It is a poor time now for us to fail and give over the work to others. Nine hundred young people cheered the message of Dr. Francis E. Clark when he proposed that the young people sign a peace pledge and form a peace union.

The next convention will meet in Muncie, Indiana, and I believe young people ought to show their colors outside as well as inside of our denomination. In fact, I do not see how we can even be loyal to our denomination unless we keep in touch with these great movements.

E. HOWARD BROWN.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING HOUSE

The last of the yearly meetings of Friends which will be held in Lawrence ended its session this forenoon with the final reports of committees and arrangements to incorporate the proceedings in a printed volume. Hereafter the annual meetings will be held at Wichita, which has been designated the permanent place of the gathering.

Although the yearly meeting will not come again to Lawrence, the control of the church is largely in the hands of Lawrence men.

The old stone church at which the yearly meeting was held has been offered as a gift by the yearly meeting to the congregation of the local church. A meeting of the local church will be held Wednesday for the purpose of deciding what to do with the offer.

The building was erected in 1872 and in the minds of the older members of the church, it stands for a great deal in relation to the welfare of Friends' Church since that time. Various offers have been made by business interests for the old church and site, but many of the local members believe that if the building cannot be taken over by the local congregation it should be given to a charitable institution. The suggestion has been made that it be offered for a free hospital, and this will be suggested at the meeting of the local church Wednesday night.—Lawrence, Kansas, Paper.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

"Esther E. Baird Love Fund"

To the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America:

At the Triennial Conference held at Muncie, Indiana, last May, the Union gladly assumed the salary of our dear friend, Esther E. Baird, of India. At that time a number of pledges were made, and since the Conference closed, we are happy to report that Nebraska, New England, Iowa and Western Yearly Meeting W. F. M. S. have pledged a yearly amount towards this "Love Fund."

It was decided at the Conference that all money given for this fund was to go through the regular channels. The Union is therefore asking all who have pledged amounts, and all who desire to help in this precious work, to send half the amount of their yearly pledge before December 1st, to the treasurer of their own Yearly Meeting. In this way each Yearly Meeting will be credited with the amount given.

Kindly mark all money sent for this purpose, "Esther Baird Love Fund."

The Union has promised that half of the $500.00 will be paid January 1, 1915. The various Yearly Meeting treasurers are therefore requested to see that the money sent them is forwarded to the Treasurer of the Union, Emma G. Randolph, 29 Williams Street, Worcester, Massachusetts, on or before January 1, 1915.

On behalf of the Union,

CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS,
President.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 6.

Subject—Christ Risen from the Dead.

Lesson—Mark 16: 1-8; Matthew 28: 11-15.

Golden Text—Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here but is risen.—Luke 24: 5, 6.

Time—Early Sunday morning, April 9, A. D. 30.

Place—In Jerusalem and vicinity.

In Peloubet's Notes it is well pointed out that "the proofs that Jesus really rose from the dead depend in part on the certainty that He really died."

The evidences of His death are cited as follows: 1. Blood and water flowed from the wound in His side. 2. The centurion was convinced of His death and so reported to Pilate. 3. The tomb was new, and had contained no other body, so there could be no doubt of the identity of Christ. 4. The stone against the door of the tomb was sealed and a Roman guard placed so that no one could take away the body and claim Jesus had risen. 5. His friends believed Him to be dead. 6. The story of the guards was stupid, for if they slept, how could they know His disciples stole Him away, and furthermore, the disciples had no motive for stealing the body.

Jesus was buried probably about four o'clock on Friday, the 7th, and arose in the very early morning hours of Sunday, the 9th. His body lay in the tomb one whole day and parts of two others. By the common Jewish reckoning, this was counted as three days.

Evidently the friends of Jesus were not expecting a resurrection, else they would have been at the tomb watching. The women, who first discovered the glad news, and to whom Jesus first revealed Himself, had gone to the tomb to anoint the body as a token of affection.

It has been pointed out that all the gospels tell a different story, which is natural, as different persons to whom Jesus appeared are quoted in their own way. This is a strong proof of the reality of the appearance of Jesus, for if the stories had been manufactured, great care would have been taken to see that all agreed to the very letter. None of the accounts are at all inconsistent with any other account.

The announcement of the angel that Christ had arisen brought a command for action. The women were to be bearers of good tidings, and the disciples were to be assembled again as in the former days. They must be convinced for they were to be founders of the new church.

Peter, so ready three days before to deny His Lord, was the first man to visit the tomb, and with him seeing the empty tomb was believing.

Pilate would not readily believe the story that a few feeble fishermen had outwitted the Roman soldiers; hence the soldiers got the confirmation of the backing of the Sanhedrim in their false report of this marvelous occurrence.

Attention should be called to Paul's conception of the resurrection, I Cor. 15, from verse 12 on through the chapter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 6.

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. XII. The Life Verse. Rom. 6: 23. (Consecration Meeting.)

The gospel brings life, while the wages of sin is death. Life means activity, with all the consequent obligations.

The gift of God is eternal life, a life which must begin here and extend to all eternity with God. Eternal life is eternal joy.

It is the heart life that counts. All other life is superficial and barren of results. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Strive for the larger life and the higher life, a life that is full of service as well as of happiness. No other life avails.

Strive for the constant life. God wants men and women upon whom He can count continually. The up and down life is most unsatisfactory.

We know whether or not we have life. The dead tree is easily discernible, so is the live tree. Luke-warm Christians have been repudiated by God Himself. Condemnation is upon the uncertain state.

It is inconceivable that one who has lived in a palace will be content to dwell in the tenement. Living the Christian life spoils one for the life of sin.

"If you live the eternal life, you will not worry or fret. You will live faithfully, doing your best from day to day, but you will carry around with you the measure of the endless years which will dwarf these temporary and trivial fears that are likely to seem so terrible."—C. E. World.

Have the members discuss some of the present-day opportunities of life.

Married

Phelps-Binford—At the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Joseph O. Binford, Knightstown, Indiana, on the evening of November 8, 1914, Nevil F. Phelps of Charlottesville, Indiana, to Ada Charlotte Binford, Willis Bond, pastor of the meeting at Knightstown, officiating.

Born

Taylor—To George B. and Winifred Trueblood Taylor, at New Britain, Connecticut, October 25, 1914, a son, Robert Campbell.

Died

Burson—Anna E. Burson, daughter of David S. and Margaret E. Burson, deceased, entered her Heavenly home, trusting in the merits of her crucified and risen Savior, November 11, 1914, after a few days' illness of pneumonia, at her late home in Richmond, Indiana. She was a life-time member of Friends church and for a number of years past and at the time of her death held the office of overseer in the church.

Howell—Samuel C. Howell died at his home near Selma, Ohio, October 24, 1914, at the age of 88 years and 2 months. Eighty of these years have been spent in the Selma neighborhood. Those who knew him know his superior character. He commanded the admiration, love and respect of all. Truly a great man has left us.

Miles—Elizabeth Bean Miles, daughter of John and Elizabeth Bean, was born at Alton, New Hampshire, December 26, 1827, and died at the home of her son, B. C. Miles in Salem, Oregon, November 15, 1914. She and her twin sister, Mary H. Tebbetts, were in girlhood and throughout life up to eighty years united by bonds of more than common sisterly affection. After attending Friends Boarding School at Providence, Rhode Island, she taught for a few years in New Jersey and Iowa. She married Benjamin Miles in 1858 at West Branch, Iowa. She was always active in the work of the church and for several years sat at the clerk's table in the women's meeting of Iowa Yearly Meeting. While interested in all lines of church work, she was most keenly alive to the cause of missions and the doctrines of peace. With her husband she spent ten years in mission work among the Indians, a part of this time serving as superintendent and matron of the Osage Government School at Pawhuska, Indian Territory. A few years before the death of her husband in 1890 the family moved to Newberg, Oregon, since which time she has been a standard bearer in Oregon Yearly Meeting.

TROUBLES IN AUSTRALIA

The following statement has been made by Henry Flintoff, a lad who suffered solitary confinement under the Defence Act at the Queenscliff Fortress in Australia. His statements were subsequently put into statutory declaration form. (This case occurred prior to that of Thomas Roberts.)

"On March 17th I appeared at the City Court to answer a further charge under the Defence Act, for failing to render the service required. After assuring the Magistrate that I had conscientious objections and had no intention of doing the drill, I was ordered to Queenscliff for twenty days, together with fourteen others. On the morning of March 18th I was ordered to 'fall in' on parade, and I refused. The officer then said he would report me each morning. On Tuesday, March 24th, the Major from Queenscliff ordered me to 'fall in'; I said 'No.' 'Mind this is a direct order, I order you to "fall in."' 'I quite understand, sir,' was my reply, 'but I cannot do it.' I was then escorted to Queenscliff Barracks and taken before the commanding officer. After speaking some foolishness on the Japanese invasion, he asked me would I drill and defend this free country, the finest country in the world.

"On saying that my opinion was different to his, and that I could not do the drill because it was against my principles, I was sentenced to seven days in the cell. Two soldiers, one at the front and another at the rear, escorted me to my cell, which was about ten feet square. In it was a wooden bed. The cell was half dark. For three days I was kept on full rations ere my diet was changed to bread and water. On the fourth night I asked if I could be allowed a candle. They brought me a small piece which lasted about one hour, and I read. I was told that when I finished my time in cell I was going home. But I was escorted to Swan Island. On the following morning I was ordered to 'fall in,' but again refused. 'Well, go to your tent and stop there, I will see that you get cells again,' said the officer. Since that they never troubled me. My time ended on Saturday, April 4th. I find down there that the Japanese and Chinese invasion seemed to be the only things that keep the town alive with the military spirit."

The Well Diggers

GEORGE HENRY WILLETT

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."—Isa. 35: 1.

Thus spake the prophet: "In the desert where
The weary sands lie burning in the noonday glare;
Where weltering and festering in envenomed sleep
Foul serpents writhe and coil, and poison lizards creep:
In God's good day this burning waste shall bloom.
Where now the very air is fouled with things unclean,
Where raving beasts add terror to night's gloom,
E'en there shall fragrant gardens grow and pastures green.
Here all unharmed shall little children go,
And living streams make music as they flow."

Thus spake the prophet long ago; but still, as then,
The world has many a weary, sunburned desert plain.
Cries of despairing men are heard from dens of shame,
Vile, sin-cursed spots, where, sad and devil-driven
Lost men cry out and die; and not for them
One blessed cooling drop descends from heaven
E'er cursing loud the serpents and the burning sand
The spirit wench free from out that tortured land.

Yet, O my brothers, may these weary wastes rejoice with song
When that the streams of living heavenly water flow among The burning sands. When in the strength of Him who sends the living streams
Men get them out into the noonday's burning beams
And in the desert dig the ditches, sink the wells.
Right weary work, my brother, but for love of Him
Whom drinking, we shall never thirst again
Fare we far out into the plain, with holy glee.
And lo! before that song serpents and dragons flee!
And where the wicked desert wastes a terror stood Build we a garden for the home of God.

With Our Exchanges

Northwestern Christian Advocate—If our readers had entered the Methodist Building at Chicago last week they would have thought it was a wholesale grocery house. Boxes, packages, barrels, by the hundred revealed that Methodists were not deaf to the appeal for the Christmas Ship sent out by the Board of Sunday Schools. A splendid response to a beautiful cause.

Pittsburgh Christian Advocate—That the "Woman's Home Missionary Society is writing one of the greatest pages in the history of Methodism," was evident at the national meeting which recently convened at Syracuse, New York, when voices from Alaska to Puerto Rico sang the one great song of "Service"—"Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." The unanimous desire to serve mankind, and the attitude of purpose charged the atmosphere with an element of power.

Pittsburgh Christian Advocate—The Bishops' Address and Appeal to the church in the interests of the Conference Claimants Fund and the inauguration in 1915 of a campaign for five million dollars, will be placed this week in the hands of every Methodist pastor, to be read in the public congregation Sunday, November 15. Every pastor should with earnest sympathy perform this service.

The Evangelical—The General Conference of the United Evangelical Church, our great quadrennial gathering, with its responsible duties, engrossing labors, far-reaching legislation, its rare privileges and delightful fellowship has passed into history. It was a most important session. The reports were in the main most encouraging, the legislation was progressive, the spirit harmonious and the tone optimistic. Some very perplexing problems were met and results obtained in their solutions that were very gratifying and indicated direct answers to prayers and the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Representatives of the Bible Training School of New York, the Federal Council, the Commission on Evangelism, the M. E. Church, the Evangelical Association were heard with much pleasure and profit. A rare pleasure it was to have Superintendent Dubs with us direct from the mission field in China. The future of the Church is very promising as we enter the duties of a new quadrennium. Let us pray that the promise may be fulfilled.

Religious Telescope—The United Brethren Church dare not fall behind in this Home-Mission-Week procession. We need a renewal of consecration to the maintenance and extension of our Church work. Only so can we help save America. To give up country churches because Methodists and Baptists are doing so is unmaning ourselves. To sell our country churches at fifteen per cent. of their value, simply because we have debts some place else is home-mission observance with a vengeance. To shut our eyes, not only to possibilities, but to actualities, is a disgrace unmentionable and unthinkable in these days of heralded progress and challenging opportunity. Let this week, beginning on Sunday, November 22, and closing with the following Sunday, November 29, mark the beginning of a new devotion, a new proclamation, a new heroism, a new consecration of native talent and gathered finances to the only cause which makes America worth living in and worth being thankful for—its more thorough Christianization.

The Continent (Presbyterian)—It is sometimes thrown up to the church that it is so difficult to find the right man for an important vacant pulpit. Where are the men is a favorite expression. Well, for that matter, that question has to be asked everywhere. Think over the large colleges which have been waiting for months to find presidents and remember how many teachers there are among whom to choose. Think of the rapid progress of men in large businesses, railroading, banking. As soon as a man of power appears, it appears also that he has been needed very widely. As for the churches, most of them will have to be content to take men not yet made and make them. The raw material is not so uncommon. The principal thing is for churches to act, to get down to business, and end the pretense that they are so dreadfully important that only some rare type of man will do for them.

Western Christian Advocate—At the recent meeting of the Board of Bishops in Washington, D. C., the interests of the Conference Claimants were among the chief subjects for consideration. The bishops have issued an appeal and address to the churches inaugurating a campaign for the raising of five million dollars during 1915. This is the pastor's opportunity, and every man ought to feel that it is for the greatest interest of the church. She must provide well for her workmen in their age, or bear the blame that will sting the depths of the heart. The work will not be done unless the minister leads in the matter, or at least bears his share of the burden and then calls his brethren to stand by and assume that part of the load he is unable to bear himself. It is urged that every pastor should read the bishops' address before his congregation on November 15. This will be really obligatory, and any pastor who is dilatory will be considered culpable by his brethren.

The Realistic Application of Gospel Truth

Following hard upon the heels of an era of critical Biblical research and technical theological examination, which has been more or less disturbing to the church for the past two or three decades, has come a period of wide-spread and intense popular yearning to have visualized the vital truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ; to behold the practical realization of the fundamental tenets of Christianity, as applied to the every-day problems of human life. Apparently the world is ready and anxious for a religious invoice and there are signs that it will be satisfied with no surface or ordinary investigation.

No formulae of Christian doctrine will appease the soul hunger of this new era. Professional Christianity will only serve to drive multitudes into the open field of infidelity. No creed will stand in the white light of the searching inquiry that is abroad in the world, except as it points the way to a realistic redemption and a certitude of hope that is convincing. Christianity is at last coming into its own, because as in no other age, it is about to be put to the severest test in the open forum of the world. Its only danger will be the imperfections of the agencies which stand as the chief sponsors of Christian truth.

The violent cataclysm that has torn the historic civilization of Europe from its moorings may be described as the immediate if not the primal occasion of this awakening inquiry that has come upon the world. Men are asking everywhere why Christianity was not potent to avert such a catastrophe, which in itself is a testimonial to the evolution of world ideals to a place where the public mind readily observes the incongruity between the commonly proclaimed Christian doctrines and a resort to the artifices of bloody war. As time advances the insistent query will constantly be presenting itself as to whether Christianity will avail to avert another like struggle.

But this spirit of inquiry is not alone directed to the war. Other wrongs have intruded themselves upon the public thought, and men are asking about the continuance and permanency of evils in the world of society, business and government. Can the public conscience, can the social order be Christianized? Can the church and our city slums both continue to thrive side by side with no power of the one to cure the sin of the other? Can the paradox of Christian freedom and industrial oppression be forever maintained in the same civilization? Can the Christian state—if indeed there be such an institution in fact—maintain its fiction of ministering to public need and caring for its citizens according to the standards of Christian benevolence, so long as it tolerates and even condones the institutions which prey upon the objects of its solicitude and which are constantly eating at the vitals of its own organism?

What the world is really inquiring about, in so far as it is seeking an honest answer as to the application of Christian truth to vital human problems, will not affect the standing and permanence of the verities of the Christian faith. While admitting the imperfections of the agencies which are the avowed advocates of the gospel propaganda, the investigators of this new era will find that there is much more of solid workmanship in the building of a Christian civilization than is always readily apparent. In the face of privation and deadly persecution, the church has maintained its testimony through the centuries and there are many landmarks that beautify the record of achievements which has made for human betterment throughout the Christian era.

But the spirit of inquiry has come and the church should hail it with satisfaction. It will mean the narrowing of that twilight zone between purpose and achievement, between spiritual profession and spiritual attainment, between Christian ideals and actual Christian experience, the existence of which has been the occasion largely of this element of doubt as to the virility of the Christian faith. Henceforth, they who avow their faith in the gospel of the Son of God must take higher ground in life and practice; they must strive to make Christianity realistic as applied to the problems which affect human life the world over, or else, in the face of this era of keener investigation, multitudes will take the path that leads to deeper skepticism and doubt.

It is a day of heart searching therefore for the Church of Christ. Civilization no less than the social order of nations must be Christianized by the power of applied truth. If war exists because the world is yet wicked, if saloons continue, if vice can be condoned, if oppression runs riot because human society is yet unregenerated, the problem of the church to present the gospel of the Christ as the saving power among the nations becomes imperative. Galilee must and will become the conqueror of Corsica. If the church proves faithful to her trust, Christianity will take up its march toward a higher destiny, toward a more realistic exemplification of its saving faith.

In the midst of the searching inquiries that are bringing the Christian church face to face with new conceptions of duty and of opportunity, what of the Society of Friends? To what extent has it put to the test its own ideals? How far has it marked progress in proving its fundamental denominational tenets? By how much has it succeeded in exemplifying in practical life the gospel truths which its prophets have proclaimed? Wherein is the evidence that the faith of its fathers has found expression in the abundant fruitage of righteous living on the part of their sons and daughters? Is Quakerism as the world has heard it, and as our doctrinaires have taught it, only an ideal to be the guiding star of nobler aspiration and endeavor, or is it a verity of life, a satisfactory rule of conduct for saintly living and practice?

Was George Fox a dreamer when he boldly proclaimed himself the recipient of a soul satisfying message from the Son of God, and thereby declared that he "lived in the virtue of that life and power that took away the occasion of all wars?" Were the delegates to the Quinquennial Conference of 1887 which adopted the Richmond Declaration of Faith mere idealists when they expressed their conviction that "all the exigencies of civil government and social order may be met under the banner of the Prince of Peace, in strict conformity with His commands?" Was it a bit of fiction or a mighty truth that was put into the Uniform Discipline, "It is an essential part of the faith that a man should be in truth what he professes in word, and the underlying principle of life and action for individuals and also for society is transformation through the power of God and implicit obedience to His revealed will?"

Perhaps no other religious body has raised a higher spiritual standard for life and conduct than has the Society of Friends. But in the light of searching inquiry we will be judged by our actions rather than by our professions.

It will be readily admitted perhaps, that as a body we have hardly lived up to our ideals. Professing to be Friends, we have seen rivalry and bitterness sometimes where there should have been sympathy and fellowship. Professing holiness at our denominational altars, we have sometimes accepted a counterfeit variety that has lowered the standard of Christian perfection. Ignoring the formulae of worship and turning aside from the rites of outward communion, we have often fallen short of that divine relationship with the Father which the outward observance typifies. With regard to war, to oaths, to many of the requirements of discipline and the standards fixed by the Queries, there have been all too frequent delinquencies in our testimony.

It will hardly suffice to say that we have a goodly heritage and that we have done as well as others have done. It is for the lack of doing better, yea, even of doing its best that the Christian church has not availed to satisfy the questionings of those who are hungry to see a genuine and realistic application of gospel truth to the world problems of this age. By so much as there has been a wide margin between our Quakerly professions and our practices, have we missed a golden opportunity to impress the gospel truth in a convincing, impelling way before the world. To what else more than to our delinquencies in this particular can we attribute our failure to grow and become the mighty body which was foreshadowed in the days of our forefathers?

One of our greatest denominational problems is that we shall set out to realize upon the investments of our high standards of faith and doctrine. In no other way can we satisfy the demands of this new era; in no other way can we satisfy the demands of our own denominational conscience. The world is looking for a conception of Christian truth that harmonizes with the exact teachings of Christ Himself, and with these the teachings of the Society of Friends are in complete accord. If during the next decade we can succeed in measuring up approximately to our professions, we will have gone far toward satisfying the world's questionings, and we will have made valuable contributions to the religious life of the world.

English Peace Statement

We are impressed with a feeling that Friends in America are missing a golden opportunity to advance the cause of peace. It is conceded by all who have read it that the statement issued some weeks ago by London Yearly Meeting for Sufferings is one of the strongest utterances on the position held by Friends that has yet been given. More than 400,000 copies have been circulated in England, and it was printed as an advertisement in all the leading English dailies.

We would suggest that Monthly Meetings as well as interested Friends order copies for distribution, not only among our members but among other people as well. It is an unusual opportunity to get our doctrines before the world at a time when everybody will read.

We have received a large quantity of these statements and can furnish them at the rate of two cents per copy. One hundred copies, $1.50. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

The Romance of Preaching*

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN

The Society of Friends will some day be called to account for its neglect of the function of preaching. The office of the preacher as an office is nothing, the ordination by church action and elaborate program is not (and that rightly) in our polity. But in the welcome absence of these things we are prone to ignore the greatness and power of the preaching gift. We have emphasized the ministry of the membership to the point of even crippling the ministry of the preacher. Our literature, current and historical, has been guilty of implying, at least, that the Society of Friends affords little place for the cultivation or use of the larger preaching gift, that those who have it had better look to other denominational fields for its expression. I frankly resent the implication as out of harmony with our fundamental position, if our claim to be the modern echo of First Century Christianity has any weight whatever. Paul and Peter as preachers will always stand out as the soul, inspiration and leadership of the early church. The mission and place of the preacher in the Society of Friends ought to be greater than among others, because we have resting upon us, not simply the responsibility of carrying the Gospel to the world, but that added task of cultivating and inspiring the ministry of the membership.

In "The Romance of Preaching," by the late Charles Silvester Horne of London, there is a mighty setting forth of the power of the preacher in molding and shaping the world for God. The lash of this man's vigorous intellect, and the warmth of his strong heart are inspiring as set forth in his vigorous exposition (with modern application) of the careers of Moses, the Apostles, Athanasius, Chrysostom, Savonarola, Calvin, John Knox, John Robinson, Wesley and Whitefield. The book is worthy serious reading by those who hold positions of leadership in the Society of Friends, for the point of view is so strikingly Quaker that we can claim the spirit of the author if we have no right to his name. He frankly tells us that inspiration is not conditioned by a white tie or a Geneva gown,—that he has listened to truths as noble and Christian on the floor of parliament as have ever been uttered under the dome of St. Paul's. Ploughmen and herdsmen, carpenters, fishermen, tax-collectors and tent-makers, sons of German miners, Huntingdonshire farmers, and Kentucky backwoodsmen, each in his time and order, have received the divine afflatus, and therewith, the spiritual and moral leadership of mankind.

When preachers under the divine leadership have not only stirred multitudes and won souls for God as did Athanasius and Chrysostom, Wesley and Whitefield, but have also evolved and established new economic and social orders as did Moses,—ruled cities like Savonarola and Calvin,—and fashioned the spirit of a country as John Knox did Scotland, it is fitting to recognize that behind the great upward movements among men everywhere may be found the voice of some prophet, breathed upon from above, and breathing out the dynamic of divine power. The preacher has been the mouthpiece of God to men from the time of the thunderings of Sinai to the rumblings of discontent in the social order of the present day, when men are mere cogs in the wheel of industry, and the cry of the wasted manhood and the forsaken childhood and womanhood of Europe can rise but as an offense in the face of a long-suffering and patient God. It is not the statesman's business alone to heal these open sores of the modern world; it is primarily and most onerously the preacher's task. Let him be supported by a people who will encourage his gift, catch the glow of his vision, and provide the channel for his power.

Pure Religion

BY JOSEPHINE WOODWARD

There is and always has been but one message, "Know Thyself." The "Inward Light" is the message of the seers of all ages. We might say "Stop, look, listen and obey." It is the Eternal Christ within. "If any man will do the will of the Father he shall know of the doctrine." The surrendered heart is God-taught. We must tell the "man in the street" to look to God or the Father as Christ looked, above all doctrines and forms. The Holy Spirit will show him the things that are of Christ. But we must be sure of our surrender, whether it is total or not; we must ask ourselves in deepest earnestness if we are willing to live poor and despised, misunderstood, deprived even of the opportunity to work for our Master outwardly, if such be His holy will. We must be, as Fenelon says, "all faith." We must have a transcendent love of God, to go without spiritual joy, to ask no sign, to say humbly and with trust "Thy will be done." We must be able to say, "Forsake me forever, I will love thee, my king can do no wrong, I must love thee."

The poor are easier to reach than the rich. They are often humble. We can tell them just our own experience, it is enough.

Faith, surrender, prayer, obedience, then study—love will inevitably follow. If we have these things our sincerity also will be inevitably proved by our social service.

Many truly great men have sincerely praised pure Quakerism. If we have pure love and preach it in God's will many people will want to be where we are.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

Bringing Life and Immortality to Light

(Synopsis of a sermon preached by Luke Woodard on the occasion of the funeral of Anna E. Burson at her late home at Richmond, Indiana, Eleventh Month 14, 1914.)

It is well for us on occasions like the present to pause and show our sympathy with our bereaved friends, and heed the voice of God as He thus speaks by His providence, as well as by His revealed word, appropriate portions of which have been read at this time.

For our comfort I quote II Timothy 1: 10, where the apostle Paul says Christ "abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel."

Death, viewed apart from the Gospel, is an awful catastrophe. It is a total eclipse of life, and all that pertains to earth. From the beginning of our race it has been doing a wholesale business, and like a mighty conqueror, age after age, has been sweeping his multiplied millions off the stage of life. This earth is one vast charnel house. No sooner does a human being begin to breathe than he begins a journey to the grave. And this brief life is subject to many ills. It is true that "man born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." In the midst of his dire afflictions Job said: "Oh, that it would please God to hide me in the grave!" And yet, as if to check the thought, he adds, "If a man die, shall he live again?" This is the question of all hearts. A question which philosophy, science, nature has never satisfactorily answered. It is answered by Christ who has "brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." Not only is there the fact of future existence, but He has also revealed the further fact that for those who comply with the conditions made known by that Gospel there is in reserve an endless life of bliss.

While we come into the world under the necessity of dying—"it is appointed unto men once to die"—He who was from all eternity came into the world for the purpose of dying. "He was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death;" yet as the prince of life, He has abolished death. He abolished it by first meeting it. His death, though wicked men were the visible agents, was His own voluntary act. He says himself: "No man taketh my life from me. I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again; this commandment have I received of my Father." Death could not hold Him. He arose, and thus abolished death in His own person. Hear His as He proclaims from heaven in the ears of John on the Isle of Patmos: "Fear not, I am He that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

The effect of His death is co-extensive with that of the fall. It is universal. While moral or spiritual death was entailed upon the entire race as a consequence of the fall of our first parents, all have been redeemed by Christ who tasted death for every man, and hence, prior to years of accountability spiritual death has been abolished so that the infant is in a condition of acceptance, and dying in this state, though the mortal part returns to dust, the immortal spirit is received of Him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

After we have come to years of accountability and come under condemnation on account of our own sins, life spiritual is bestowed freely as the gift of God on the gracious terms of the Gospel—repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ; and by an experimental resurrection, spiritual death is abolished, and we are passed from death unto life.

Not only this, that death referred to in the text, "it is appointed unto men once to die," is to be abolished. Christ Himself said: "The hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth, they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation."

Thus Christ will abolish death universally, for there is to be a resurrection both of the just and of the unjust. In the case of the just, death is swallowed up in victory.

It is of unspeakable importance, then, that we embrace the terms of offered grace and mercy, that ours may be a resurrection unto life.

How grateful we should be that we are favored with the Gospel by which life and immortality are brought to light.

What a contrast between our lot and that of the heathen who, on funeral occasions, such as has brought us together, sorrow, as the apostle says, as those having no hope.

We certainly esteem it a privilege to weep with those who weep, as we do now, and mingle our tears with these bereaved sisters, and our tender sympathy goes out to the brother and sisters in California, who are not privileged to be present—to all these loved ones who feel most deeply the loss of the loving and devoted sister, but not without hope do we sorrow; indeed, our rejoicing abounds above our grief in the assurance that the departed one is safely housed in the mansions which are prepared for all His redeemed.

I have known our departed sister many years, and have often taken sweet counsel with her at the House of God, and fully endorse the beautiful obituary which has been read in our hearing, and regard it not as empty eulogy, but as a delineation of facts, as it spoke of her conversion in early life, her experience of entire sanctification, at a later period, her consistent walk, her devotion to duty in the home, in society and in the church.

Courage is heart age. Heart strength is in proportion to purity. "My strength is as the strength of ten because my heart is pure."

He is dull of vision who can see nothing in the river but his own reflection, and nothing on the landscape but his own shadow.

The Shawnee Mission

(From the Kansas City Star)

"The Quaker Mission to the Shawnee Indians in the territory of Kansas was established in what is now Johnson County, in 1834. A family was sent out by the Society to superintend it, a teacher procured and school organized, which was kept in successful operation many years. The mission was supported by the Society of Friends in Ohio and Indiana. A large frame house, with barn and outbuildings, all of solid walnut timber, and two hundred acres of land under cultivation constituted the mission property."—Andreas's History of Kansas.

The large frame house of solid walnut in which the school of the Quaker mission was taught, and in which the teachers lived, is yet standing, just as it was in 1834, with the exception that it shows some signs of wear, and it has had a new roof since then. To reach this eighty-year-old building one may go on the Strang electric line to Heite Greenhouse station. Get off there and walk west a few rods to where the road dips down to cross a brook, and there stands the old mission house, one of the first buildings erected in Kansas. John F. Myers, a truck farmer, and his family, live in it now.

The house is seventy-five feet long and has three stories, the first of stone up to ten feet, the other two stories of walnut. The weather boarding, beams, floors, doors and finish, even the laths are split. The nails are hand forged. The locks on the doors are of the kind used a century ago. Mrs. Myers knows the history of the house. She has lived in it fifteen years. Soon after she went there a very old lady, whose name she has forgotten, came to see the house. She said that when she was a young woman she was sent out from Ohio as a missionary to the Indians, and she lived and taught in the old house until she was married. "She was a charming old lady," says Mrs. Myers. "When she first came in through the gate and I went out to meet her she pointed to that great honey locust tree at the east end of the house—you see it is two feet thick—and she said: 'I planted that tree.' Then she told me who she was and I took her all through the house. She told me before she went in that she particularly wanted to see if three Indian tomahawk cuts were still in the walnut door that opens from the front room upon the stairway into the kitchen below. She went in and found them. I will show them to you."

Mrs. Myers led the way to the door, and there were the three gashes in the wood of the door, each about three inches long and so deep that the wood below had splintered off as if the blows had been struck with savage force.

"She told me," continued Mrs. Myers, "that one day when the men folks were in the fields out of sight of the house, and only the women and children were inside, a band of savages who had come drunk from Westport, were riding their ponies westward along the Santa Fe Trail, which passed the door just beyond that further row of honey locusts, and when they came here to the mission they rode in, giving their war whoop, and with tomahawks in hand, rushed in to massacre the women and children; but they locked this door and huddled together in a corner of the kitchen below. The Indians started to chop the door down with their tomahawks, but found the walnut too tough and, after striking those three blows, they gave it up and soon afterward rode away."

The missionaries who built this house put a well in a corner of the kitchen in the basement to provide against a siege if the Indians should break out at any time. The well has been filled up by Mr. Myers. The big fireplace in which the meals were cooked, the dining room, the bedrooms upstairs and the large school-room in one end of the building are just as they were seventy-nine years ago. Patches of the blackboard are yet upon the wall.

The house sits in a little grove of honey locusts, and there is a row of cedar trees along the front. Beyond the locusts, across the ruts that yet remain of the Santa Fe Trail, are a dozen or more apple trees remaining of the great orchard that once grew there. One of these trees has a trunk three feet in diameter.

Just beyond this is the graveyard in a grove of giant elms, with headstones leaning awry, or lying upon the ground. One of these, a native stone, has carved on it in rude letters this inscription:

Aseneth C. Kirby
dec. 11th Month, 1855.

Another stone bears the inscription:

Jesse Harvey of Harveysburgh.
Born 26th day of 11th Mo., 1801.
Died 12th day of 5th Mo., 1848.

He was probably a relative of Henry Harvey, a Quaker missionary, who, according to Andreas's history, was superintendent of the mission for two years beginning in the spring of 1840. When he resigned as superintendent the mission school had forty Indian children.

Another stone with a tangle of rose bushes growing beside it has this inscription:

H. M. Mendenhall,
Died 15th of 6th Mo., 1874.
Aged 21 years.

A child of Benjamin Chouteau, one of the famous Frenchmen who made fortunes trading with the Indians, lies there too, as this inscription shows:

William, son of Benj. Chouteau,
Died Feb. 7, 1868.
Aged 7 years.

History says that among the earliest white residents of the Shawnee Indian reservation were the Chouteau brothers, who built trading houses there in 1828.

Other stones are at the graves of Margaret, wife of David Painter; William, son of Isaac Baldwin; Walter Ernest, son of C. W. and E. R. Allen, and Levender Jessup, who died at the age of seventy-two years.

None of the Hadley family lies in the old graveyard. Jeremiah Hadley came to the mission as superintendent in 1855, with his three sons, Samuel, T. J. and John Milton, father of Herbert Hadley, former governor of Missouri. The mission house saw stirring times before and during the war. Hadley, a Quaker, was a fearless advocate of the free state idea, and this brought upon him the enmity of the Missourians, and in 1855 a party of border ruffians went to the mission, threatened to kill superintendent Hadley, and stole six horses and a carriage, and rode away. The same history relates that later a squad of Missourians came to the mission in search of John Lockhart, Quaker teacher under Hadley, who had been elected to the free state legislature of Kansas, and they would have killed him if they had found him. He was in the house, but "he saved himself by dexterously slipping from one room to another that had been searched." The mission was abandoned about the beginning of the war, and it and its three hundred and twenty acres of land reverted to the government and was later sold to different persons.

NOTE.—Since the foregoing article was written the family has moved out of the mission house, and it is now entirely deserted. On account of the defective roof the building is being badly damaged. The recent Kansas Yearly Meeting appointed a committee to see what means can be used to care for the little plot of ground which contains the graves.

Protecting Our Denominational Name

Last week we printed the two bills pending in both Houses of the National Congress, designed to protect our denominational name against use in articles of trade and commerce. We trust that the request that Friends should write their Senators in behalf of these measures, will not go unheeded.

We present herewith portions of a brief prepared by a member of Friends Legislative Board, Benjamin H. Doane, of New York City, in behalf of Senate bill 5698 and House bill 16098, proposing an amendment to the trade-mark law.

DIGEST OF THE BRIEF

The public considerations which, in the view of the Religious Society of Friends, should influence and control Congress to enact into law the above Bill, were submitted in a Memorandum to the Commissioner of Patents in opposition to an application for registration of a trade-mark in the word "QUAKER," In the Matter of Trade-Mark Petition, Serial 69883, Filed March 17, 1913, and Published September 23, 1913.

The Commissioner, after reading it, announced that though the Memorandum was very interesting, yet, in the absence of specific legislation, he deemed that he would not be warranted in refusing such registration.

If, therefore, words of the character sought to be protected by this proposed amendment, of which the names QUAKER, PAPIST, JESUIT, are examples,—words which are associated with the holiest and most ineffable aspirations of the human soul,—are to be saved from degradation, or the chance of it, by use for private gain as market signs to attract unthinking buyers, the duty of such public protection can be in a measure discharged by the passage of the Bill under consideration.

It would seem to be too notorious to require any statement of facts or argument to establish that the name QUAKER, through the reputation of the members of the religious sect who are so called, has for centuries been a synonym for scrupulous and even meticulous regard for unvarying truthfulness, fairness and integrity in trade, and as the highest guaranty for the genuineness and quality of merchandise; and that its unauthorized use in trade by persons not Quakers cannot be considered, as such users have been heard to claim, as a fanciful use of the term without reference to the religious society called Quakers. Such a claim is so baseless as to be grotesque. It is not a fancy name, it is the name of the sect mentioned, and the attempt to deny it is an abnegation of common sense and an outrage upon common decency.

The appeal to equity which may be anticipated from certain interests is equally fallacious. Long continued wrongful use cannot make wrong right. All that such users had in the beginning was their goods, which they have misrepresented as QUAKER goods. They have their goods still, with the added gain made from misrepresentation that they were QUAKER goods. The longer the wrong has been endured, the less cause of complaint the wrongdoers have. Even the full fruit of their fictitious reputation, built up upon the misuse of the word QUAKER, can be entirely saved to them by their purging themselves at this late date of the wrong and the substitution of an honest description of their goods, whether they be oats, or whiskey, or any other thing.

The word "Quaker" has been used since the year 1650 to describe the people of the religious sect known otherwise as the Religious Society of Friends. According to George Fox, their founder:

"Justice Bennet of Darby was the first that called us Quakers, because I bid them tremble at the Word of the Lord. And this was in the year 1650."

From that time to the present day, the Religious Society of Friends, through scorn and scoffing and whipping and imprisonment and maiming and violent death, have borne and accepted the common appellation of "Quaker," holding to the Light and doing their work in the Power that caused them to quake. The name "Religious Society of Friends" is but little used by the community at large as descriptive of the members of that sect; while, on the other hand, the use of the name "Quaker" for that purpose is so general as to be practically universal and almost exclusive.

Most religious denominations fortunately have adequate protection under Sub-division b of Sec. 5 of the Trade-Mark Law as it now stands, by virtue of the proviso—

"That no mark which consists merely in the name of a * * * corporation * * * shall be registered under the terms of this Act."

Doubtless Congress in so providing did not contemplate that anyone in trade would venture to register as a trade-mark a name by which any religious denomination is commonly known or called. But this casus omissus can and ought to be provided for by the proposed amendment, especially since the Commissioner of Patents has ruled that it does not come directly within the scope of Sub-division a, as immoral or scandalous, that is to say, "extremely offensive to the sense of duty or propriety" of even a Quaker to commit such an act,—or "inimical to the rights or common interests" of all Christians to have a Christian denominational name (because not a corporate name) degraded and dragged through the market as a bait to incite bargain-bros to become buyers.

That other denominations are commonly called by their corporate name is, of course, the reason why the name of no other religious sect is so disgraced or degraded. But the word "Papist" is no part of the corporate name of the Roman Catholic Church. The word "Jesuit" is no part of the corporate name of the religious society commonly so called. The former is (even as was the word Quaker in its origin) sometimes reproachfully used as a synonym for Roman Catholic. Yet the scandal of registering the names "Papist" or "Jesuit" as trade-marks, whereby any Roman Catholic citizen would be affronted in public, has been so far averted, not because it is illegal, but merely because, though legal, it doubtless would not be good business to do so. The word "Methodist" was originally used reproachfully to describe the members of the "Holy Club" at Oxford, who were the founders of the great Methodist denomination. Fortunately the word "Methodist" is protected as being part of a corporate name; otherwise, what an opportunity, under the present state of our laws, to the avaricious and unscrupulous to exploit a new cocktail under the name of "METHODIST MARTINIS," to be placed alongside the equally offensive trade sign "QUAKER WHISKEY." Methodist and Roman Catholics are more numerous than Quakers. Yet, while Friends rejoice that other denominations have not this grievance, they would remind the law-making power of the nation that the one ewe lamb of the Quaker is as precious to him as are to them the flocks of all the others; that all denominations should have the equal protection of the laws, and that where existing law does not accord it, it is the sacred function of the legislative branch of the government to provide it.

It may perhaps be argued that the use in trade of the name QUAKER should not offend us, as it is complimentary to the Society of Friends. The answer is, that taking from a person his good name and trading upon it for private profit merits a very different characterization. And the case is not improved when the name is not that of a person but of a religious body.

But under all subterfuges, appears the one and only reason that the name QUAKER is seized upon so avidly, and that is its value in trade to sell goods, created by successive generations of the people called Quakers.

The one effort of the Religious Society of Friends, generally known as Quakers, has been to dwell in the power of God and to obey His law, which is Love and which keeps down the spirit of strife. Yet, because they rebuked those who would make a profession and a trade of the power that caused Friends to tremble, they were persecuted most cruelly. In England thousands of them rotted to death in horrible prisons, and in nearly every American colony savage laws were enacted against them under which, in addition to fines, imprisonment and banishment, their ears were cut off, and the whipping of Quakers became so common as if it were but play, while saintly men and women forfeited their lives on the gallows for their faith. Of one of these, a young mother, hanged on Boston Common, a bystander remarked as she was turned off, "Her face did shine in the image of God" (Sewall's Hist.), and one of her executioners said when he reached home, "Mbther, we have this day killed one of the Lord's anointed" (Gummere's Hist.).

Surely it is not reserved for these days of religious liberty, now that it is physically safe for the timidiest member of the Society of Friends to be recognized as a "Quaker," for the sovereign power of the land to make a mock of them by denying their petition to prevent a trading right in the name "Quaker," consecrated as it is by suffering and persecution and innocent blood, to those who, though not members of the sect, still seek to reap a profit from the reputation which Quakers have gained through centuries of steadfast abiding in the power of the Word that causes them to tremble.

That would indeed be a connivance with immorality and scandal in which, your petitioners respectfully and confidently maintain the belief, the Congress of the United States will not join.

For the name "Quaker" from the very first obtained and continues to hold a reputation in trade and business which many tradesmen have covetously envied, but which it is monstrous for anyone without right and truth to assume. * * *

To this day, following the early practice, founded on the principle stated by George Fox that "he who wrongs his neighbor wrongs himself." In every assembly of Quakers in the United States, eight times a year solemn inquiry is made of every individual Friend if he is careful to examine frequently his business affairs, to see that his debts are paid, that he is not engaging in business beyond his ability to manage, and that he do not defraud the public revenue.

Friends hold to the principle that the earning of money is a means of honoring God, and conversely, that money improperly earned dishonors the one so acquiring it. It is illustrated by the refusal of a Quaker steel manufacturer to take a most profitable government contract for armor plate, rather than to violate the peace principles of the Society of Friends (Cartland's Southern Heroes).

These things being so and generally well known among well informed men, it is no wonder that in these times, when not only extreme rigidity of conscience, but ordinary laxity thereof, suffers no legal penalty, the name QUAKER should be seized upon as a trade name; for the Quakers' reputation for centuries in business makes the name the biggest guaranty that could possibly be put upon an article of merchandise.

It would degrade any Quaker and prove him unworthy of the name so to use it. But no one else can honestly and without deception so use it. And what one cannot honestly do in trade, it is immoral (i. e., "inimical to the rights or common interests of others") for the United States Government to sanction,—especially when the action consists of the unauthorized use in trade of the name commonly borne with a clear conscience for centuries by a Christian sect, in a country where matters of conscience are held sacred under the law.

The sovereign State of Indiana, a component part of the United States, having declared it criminal to use the distinguishing part of a name by which any religious denomination is known or called, as a trade-mark (Ind. Stat. Ch. 175, Laws 1911), it is, therefore, anomalous, unseemly and incongruous for the Federal Government to allow the registration as a valid trade-mark of a word, the use of which in one of the sovereignties composing the United States would be illegal and criminal.

The act made criminal in Indiana is not merely mala prohibita—it involves moral turpitude the world over. Therefore, the Commissioner of Patents should be authorized by specific Act of Congress (as embodied in the Bill before it) to refuse registration of any mark which consists of or comprises "the name of any church, religious denomination or society, or the name by which any church, religious denomination or society is commonly known or called."

The original registration of the name QUAKER as a trade-mark was accomplished without the knowledge of the Religious Society of Friends, and after it was observed, though it displeased them, they did not appreciate at once the evil proportions to which it would spread. They are seeking legislation in various States for protection by general laws of religious names from the degradation to which by lack of such legislation they are exposed. They have the expressed sympathy of many individuals of many other denominations; and the religious press, through the official organs of various denominations, have favorably commented upon their efforts.

It is respectfully submitted that the Bill under consideration should be reported favorably by the Committee on Patents and passed by the Congress of the United States.

BENJAMIN H. DOANE,

Member of the Committee on Legislation of the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends. Also member of like Committee of the Five Years Meeting of said Society.

Social Service Work of the Five Years Meeting

The Social Service Board of the Five Years Meeting was held in Richmond, Indiana, Ninth month 30th, 1914. The Board desires to appeal as earnestly as possible to young Friends, that in choosing their life work, they shall consider Social Service as a life calling, and that they shall prepare in schools of philanthropy or in seminaries where there are departments for Social Service training, so that they may be thoroughly equipped for this great calling. We further desire that all our colleges should cultivate as far as possible in the students, an interest in Social Service activities, and that opportunities be given in college courses for preparation for more extensive work later in schools of philanthropy and in seminaries.

The Board recommends that rural and village churches organize wherever possible community-centres, where community spirit and uplifting social influences may be cultivated and fostered. As far as possible there should be opportunity at these community-centers for the gathering of social groups, for interesting and instructive entertainment, for discussing neighborhood interests, for lecture courses, or for study-groups, as those most interested may desire.

Much interest in Social Service work has been aroused in New York Yearly Meeting by a Memorial from the New York Quakerism class. This Memorial is as follows:

MEMORIAL FROM NEW YORK QUAKERISM CLASS

To the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, from the New York Quakerism Class:

"We of the New York Quakerism Class feel that out of the work we have given to our Winter's program on 'Friends and Human Needs,' there has come an awakening to the responsibility of Friends in meeting those needs. It has not been the object of the Class to make exhaustive studies of the needs of the world about us, but rather to gain sufficient familiarity with the facts to enable us to determine our relations to them.

"To us has appeared a vision of Christ as He went about with gifts of health and strength, and we have desired that our Yearly Meeting should be so sensitive to His message that all of us as Friends should dispense the gifts of cleansing and strength which have been entrusted to us.

"Unrest and hostility between labor and capital, competition without love, clog the channels by which the Kingdom of God approaches. We Friends do not seem to have caught the full vision of service in the conquest of unnecessary disease and sin which is laid upon this century of ours, nor do we seem to be reaching out, as we might, to grasp the opportunity which is presented to reach human hearts through human needs.

"As we have examined conditions in the life of today, difficult questions have pressed upon us which we cannot refuse to answer. What is our duty, and the duty of all professed followers of Jesus Christ, if there are any children living in our neighborhood neglected in either body or soul? Do the old people in almshouses feel themselves forgotten of men and of God? Are the prisoners in our jails disheartened as well as disgraced? Is a foreigner in our land, or a stranger near our home homesick for a friendly greeting and a kindly welcoming hand? Is there any place of cheerful fellowship to compete with the saloon for the interest of the boy in our villages?

"These questions all are signboards over doors to service.

Perhaps at all of these doors, if we listen, we can hear the gentle knocking of Jesus Christ as He waits to enter our lives. We long that our Yearly Meeting may pour into the channels of Social Service, which is the giving of ourselves unreservedly for our fellows, the healing, cleansing stream of the Divine love which we experience.

"We, a group of young Friends, ask our Yearly Meeting that it organize for efficient Social Service by appointing a committee to co-operate with the Committee of the Five Years Meeting on this subject. We also ask something greater and more solemn, as it is more noble than merely appointing a committee. We ask our Yearly Meeting that it rouse itself, and we ask that from every member may come that influence of interest and love which shall make this service real.

ROYAL J. DAVIS, Chairman.

BERTHA H. T. UFFORD, Secretary.

As a result of this Memorial, New York Yearly Meeting organized for Social Service, and appointed a Social Service Board with a working Secretary. It is hoped that far-reaching activities will result from this beginning.

New England Yearly Meeting in 1913 appointed a Committee to suggest working plans for that Yearly Meeting. The Committee made the following report to New England Yearly Meeting this year:

"We have been seriously hampered in carrying forward our work of study and investigation this year by the difficulties in the way of meeting together and by the great limitations of our free time for doing the needed work.

"We have gathered as accurate information as we could get from every locality in New England relative to the organized and unorganized activities of our meetings. There are some localities where meetings are awake to the need of carrying Christianity into the life of the community, and where impressive results are attending the efforts of the church to practice its faith and doctrine. But on the whole we are compelled to report that our meetings are not yet fully aware of their practical mission and are not equipped to take their true share in the task of spiritualizing the area about them.

"Our first step has been to appoint a young Friend, in every locality where there are Friends, to act as organizer of local groups for the study of neighborhood problems and other present-day problems of Christian life, and to distribute literature. We have supplied each of the local organizers with two important booklets, issued by the Social Service Board of the Five Years Meeting: (1) 'What Every Church Should Know About Its Community,' and (2) 'Social Studies for Adult Classes and Study Groups,' which we trust will assist many groups to begin the study of conditions. This work, however, cannot be carried very far until we have a field secretary working under a Committee of Direction and giving all his time to the business of assisting, overseeing and directing the efficiency activities of our meetings.

"We believe that at the present moment this is the greatest practical need of the Yearly Meeting. Our Commission has felt a deep concern to form small active centres of Quakerism in the Connecticut Valley, i. e., in the wide fringe between New England and New York Yearly Meetings. We arranged for a Week-end Conference in Worcester to begin the movement and we have succeeded in starting a Quaker centre at Northampton, Massachusetts, and one at Mt. Holyoke. The earliest of these activities in the Valley has been the Annual Meeting of Friends held for several years in the home of Ellen Winslow, Springfield, Massachusetts. We hope in the near future to see similar groups formed at Williams College, at Hartford, and perhaps in other localities.

"We have taken steps to secure a complete list of the names and addresses of all young Friends in our Yearly Meeting in order that they can be supplied with helpful literature, and can receive personal letters. We feel that Week-end Schools and Conferences should be held from time to time, especially for promoting the interests of young Friends and for teaching practical present-day methods. These concerns should be under the care of the proposed Committee of Direction.

"We recommend: (1) That isolated Friends be encouraged to co-operate and affiliate with Christian churches of other denominations at work in their respective communities, while retaining their membership with us, and their interest in the general work of the Society of Friends.

"(2) That where there are a few Friends in a community but too few to carry on a successful separate meeting, they should be urged to maintain an organization among themselves, and remain attached to the Society of Friends in its larger interests, while they temporarily affiliate themselves with a local Christian church for its community fellowship and service.

"(3) That Friends in all localities make a point of drawing into their meetings and into their spiritual activities, isolated members of other Christian churches who may not be ready to transfer their actual membership, but who want a temporary church home.

"We believe that more care should be exercised to preserve meeting houses where meetings have died out or waned. In every case, according to the provisions of the discipline, all property belonging to a local meeting, that has lapsed, reverts to the superior meeting, and such property should always be used to carry forward work of expansion either in the old locality or in some other near by region.

"We recommend that there should be a complete list made of all the financial assets of the Yearly Meeting, including unused meeting houses, and all funds of every sort held by any meeting, with the conditions attached, and a statement of how the funds are now being used. A report of all funds held by subordinate meetings should be made every year to the Permanent Board and carefully audited.

"If the work we have in mind for the Yearly Meeting is seriously undertaken, it will call for larger contributions of money for home activities, though we believe the increase of life and the expansion that will result will make it far easier to raise money than is now the case. We earnestly recommend that all meetings use the Duplex Envelopes, and that we begin at once to gather money for home mission work and for neighborhood activities as part of our religious business.

"We recommend either that this Commission be continued for another year, or that, if the Yearly Meeting is ready to take the step, a Committee of Direction of five persons be now appointed to organize and carry forward the Social Service and expansion work of our meetings."

The report was heartily approved and called forth profound interest, and a Committee of six to be known as a Committee on Efficiency has been appointed to put the work and plans of this Commission into operation. This Committee on Efficiency has divided New England Yearly Meeting into three zones, or territories, with a Territorial Superintendent over the work in each of the three sections. The following minute will give pretty clear account of the working plan for the present year:

"Our plan for the beginning of the work would be to make as careful survey as possible of the assets and possibilities of the particular meetings which constitute the Yearly Meeting. We hope to have every meeting visited and studied either by the territorial superintendent or by someone selected and directed by him. The following are some of the more definite things we have in mind:

"(1) An appraisal of the meeting for worship; its character, its life, and its value to the members of the community. We desire to find out in each case whether the meeting for worship is really ministering to the spiritual life of the region where it is located; and we want to know how it is conducted in some detail.

"(2) The kind of community where it centers—that is, whether it is rural or urban, whether it is small and fully covered by religious activities, or whether there is a potential field for the expansion of the meeting. The more details that are given the better.

"(3) The efficiency of the Sunday school. Does it bring to the members of the school the real grasp of the parts of the Bible studied? Does it inform or transform the membership? What are its points of strength or weakness? Does it bring new members into the meeting?

"(4) An investigation of effort in the meeting to foster the group spirit. Are there study groups in the meeting or any fellowship organization?

"(5) What social service opportunities are there in the community? Is it doing anything in the direction of meeting the social needs of the neighborhood? Does the meeting join with other religious organizations to promote social betterment?

"(6) Getting acquainted with the young people of the meeting. Find out who has possibilities for further development and promise of leadership, and endeavor to find openings among Friends for Friends who desire to teach or find business openings.

"We further hope that the superintendent will not be content simply to find out the existing situations, but will do everything possible to promote life and activity. We hope to see study groups organized in every place where they can possibly flourish, and we desire to see social service activities begun wherever leaders can be found to direct them. We expect to have occasional conferences during the year in which the committee on efficiency and superintendents will meet to consider all questions arising."

The Chairman of the Social Service Board of the Five Years Meeting would very much appreciate receiving from any of the American Yearly Meetings, accounts of any undertakings in any of these directions in the different fields.

RUFUS M. JONES,

Chairman of Board on Social Service.

A Hundred Years of Peace

BY PROF. H. M. J. KLEIN, PH.D.

The Treaty of Ghent, which officially closed the War of 1812 between the United States and England, was signed on Christmas Eve in the year 1814. The American Commissioners met the British delegates in the stately refectory of the monastery of the Carthusian Brothers in the interesting old Belgian city. There, after an endless amount of discussion and negotiation, peace was declared—peace on its simplest terms.

For a century that peace has been kept. It has frequently been strained. There have been many misunderstandings between England and America since 1814, but always there were men of wisdom and foresight to prevent the disruption of peace. Since then, the British government has not tried deliberately to alienate the United States nor has the United States wished to maintain any but good relations with Great Britain. Just because British provinces furnished a common boundary line of three thousand miles to the north of the United States, there was every reason to suppose that matters of difference should arise. When the two countries seemed almost on the verge of another war over the northeastern boundary between the people of Maine and those of the adjoining British provinces, Daniel Webster and Lord Ashburton settled the whole question in a peaceful way.

When the northwest boundary beyond the Rockies became a matter of dispute, and when in the election of 1844 the campaign cry was, "Fifty-four forty or fight," again Webster by his Boston speech poured oil on the troubled waters, and the line to the coast was settled without war. So with the Trent affair, the Alabama claim, the Venezuela question, the Panama Canal treaties, the fishery disputes; all these things tend to lay down the doctrine, as Mr. Balfour suggests, that "the time is fast coming when between English-speaking peoples war is impossible."

Two years ago at two great gatherings in New York and London a movement was launched for the proper celebration of the Hundred Years of Peace between England and the United States. Since then American and British Committees have been at work and have announced a program containing a number of interesting features for the celebration of this international festival in 1914-1915.—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Knightstown, Indiana—We clip the following from the Knightstown (Indiana) Banner: "About two hundred persons attended the reception given at the Friends church last Friday night in honor of their new pastor, Willis Bond, and wife. The ministers of the various churches in the city were present and made timely and appropriate speeches of welcome. A quartet composed of Mabel Woodard, Mrs. Walter Jessup, Bessie Pray and Laura Baker sang, and Otto Walls and Irvin Risk enlivened the occasion with trap drum and piano music. Misses Olive Pyle and Margaret Steiner contributed a beautiful piano duet to the evening's program. The whole program was highly appreciated by those in attendance, and there were general expressions of good cheer throughout. Refreshments of cake, cocoa and coffee were served."

The meeting at Knightstown, Indiana, has secured the services of the Earlham College Gospel Team for a revival meeting during the holidays. Willis Bond, the pastor, writes that everything will be in readiness for a successful religious campaign.

Miami, Oklahoma—Thomas C. Hodgins held a two weeks' meeting in Miami, and quite a number were converted. Five have joined Friends and others will do so at our next Monthly Meeting. The evangelist preached the old-time gospel as it was preached by George Fox, and the church has been built up and strengthened. Too many of our ministers are always preaching what Friends do not believe instead of preaching what they do believe. I heard Dr. Godby say once that the Friends Church is purely an apostolic church, a purely spiritual church, and that if Friends had been faithful they would have taken the world for Christ.

Wichita, Kansas—The Men's Bible Class of University Friends Church in Wichita gave its first annual banquet on the evening of November 20th. Sixty-three men were present and all were delighted with the program. It is expected to make the banquet a permanent feature. H. D. Baker, Chairman of the Social Committee, had charge of the arrangements. W. S. Hadley served as toastmaster, while the invocation was given by President Edmund Stanley. There were musical numbers by Carolyn Gardiner and Beulah Hadley. There were readings by Helen Baker and Corliss Moore. A. F. Styles discussed "The Sunday School and the Man," J. A. Laughlin, "The Man and the Sunday School;" W. C. Kemp, "Some Things I Do Not Know;" O. C. Emery, "The Pew and the Pulpit," and J. Arthur Wollam, "The Pulpit and the Pew."

West Falmouth, Massachusetts—West Falmouth Friends Meeting and Bible School observed World's Temperance Sunday on November 7th, by presenting a program of readings, recitations and songs. Vincent D. Nicholson of Harvard Law School, Boston, had been invited to be present at the morning meeting for worship and preached an unusually lucid, forceful and logical sermon on the subject of national prohibition. While the auditors were prohibitionists, they felt the need of more knowledge of the subject, a need which was supplied in a very definite and delightful manner by the speaker. The occasion was not only entertaining, but it was edifying to the hearers.

Yadkin Valley Quarter, North Carolina—Some very successful evangelistic work has been done recently in Yadkin Valley Quarter by Ada E. Lee, of Greensboro, North Carolina, in two meetings which are under the care of Wade H. Adams as pastor. The meeting at Union Cross began on November 1st, and continued over two Sabbaths. The attendance was large both day and night, and there was great power and solemnity in the meeting from the first. The work here resulted in seventy-six conversions and renewals. The pastor reported that Ada Lee preached some wonderful sermons—wonderful because of "the demonstration of the Spirit," which carried conviction to the hearts of the unsaved. The converts were from ten years to the gray-headed father. At the close of the meetings a Christian Endeavor Society was organized, and also a church prayer meeting under the care of the pastoral committee.

At Harmony Grove there is a large number of high school students and there is great possibility for this meeting. The great revival of last year, resulting in the conversion of nearly one hundred souls, mostly young people, has placed an obligation somewhere for taking care of the results. During the meetings which just closed there were fifteen conversions and renewals, and work was done in the meeting which we believe will be of lasting benefit. A Christian Endeavor Society was put on foot which we think will take care of some of these young people. The total of ninety-one conversions as the result of these two weeks' work in the two meetings has placed a great responsibility upon the church. Lucy Vestal assisted in the meetings at Harmony Grove and did good work. We give all glory to God for the great spiritual blessings which have come to these two adjacent meetings. Ada Lee goes from us to fill her monthly pastoral engagement at Chattam. She expects to do evangelistic work at Winston-Salem in December, and will then return to Yadkin Valley Quarter in January for further work.

Portland, Oregon—The Quaker men of Portland, Oregon, recently gave a "Get Together" supper in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. Speeches were made by prominent Friends of the city. The music, furnished by the Quaker ladies' quartet and by Mr. and Mrs. Bush, accomplished musicians, added much to the interest of the occasion. In various parts of the city there are a number who have been connected with Friends, but who now are more or less out of touch with the activities of the Society. It is hoped that such as these will be interested in our movements and become allied with the work of Friends in this growing northwest city. To promote this object and to increase the unity among our present membership, the proposition to arrange for the repetition of meetings like this one met with much favor.

Portland Monthly Meeting, the first of the three Friends churches organized in the city of Portland, is raising a fund for a new church building. This was increased by subscriptions of over $600 at this "Get Together" supper.

Des Moines, Iowa—The Friends of Des Moines are taking an active part in the Billy Sunday campaign which is now on in that city. They are holding no services in their own church during this campaign except the Bible School.

Pacific College—The management of Pacific College at Newberg, Oregon, is making a determined effort to raise the balance of an endowment fund of $100,000, more than two-thirds of which has already been subscribed. Unless the balance is secured before the end of the year practically all the amount already subscribed will be lost. An important meeting of the management and friends of the institution was held at the college on November 27, with the object in view of getting squarely before the members of the Friends Church the exact situation in regard to the endowment campaign. The college Bulletin says, "Every available dollar will be needed to meet our total, and no friend of the college should fail to give unless he is willing that the college should die." We would suggest that Friends, throughout the country take notice of this situation. THE AMERICAN FRIEND believes that substantial help from outside of Oregon Yearly Meeting ought to be forthcoming.

NOTES

An effort is being made with good prospects of success to raise the debt on Central College, Nebraska.

Up to November 19th Friends in and about Philadelphia have raised a European relief fund of $10,749.23.

During a recent revival at Winthrop, North Carolina, conducted by Lucy Vestal, there were more than fifty conversions and renewals.

An all-day prayer service in behalf of prohibition was held at Friends Bungalow at Whittier, California, on election day, November 3.

Lindsey, California, is to have its first experience in entertaining a Quarterly Meeting. Berkeley Quarterly Meeting will be held at that place on December 4, 5 and 6.

Three hundred and ninety students are enrolled in Penn College for work during the present term. The increase is mainly in the college department. The winter term began November 30th.

Friends Educational Association will meet at Friends Select School, 140 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, on the evening of December 4. Supper will be served at 5:30, followed by an important program.

The morning services at Berkeley, California, have been well attended and the sermons especially helpful. A recent Sunday evening service was in charge of W. F. M. S., and upon another occasion the service was in charge of the Men's League.

The semi-annual conference of the Christian Endeavor Union of California Yearly Meeting was held at Bell, California, on November 27. Addresses were given by William P. Pinkham, Mrs. Absalom Rosenberger, Edwin Stanton, Wallace Gill and others.

Three active and three associate members were received at the last session of Denver Monthly Meeting, Colorado. As a result of the Billy Sunday campaign in Denver a gospel team has been organized, and Friends are taking up all lines of church work with renewed consecration and earnestness.

PERSONAL MENTION

Oscar Cox and Jasper Cain began a series of meetings at Plainfield, North Carolina, on November 15.

Edward T. Wistar and wife of Philadelphia, attended part of the sessions of Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

L. Maria Deane has been asked by the Monthly Meeting at Central City, Nebraska, to continue her pastoral work at that place.

Lorena R. Hoskins has returned to her home at Whittier, California, after a service of several months in evangelistic work in North Carolina.

William P. Haworth and wife have taken up pastoral work at Lawrence, Kansas. Their address is 1027 Pennsylvania Street, Lawrence, Kansas.

Lavinus K. Painter is serving the Friends Meeting at Woonsocket, Rhode Island, while he continues his studies at Hartford Theological Seminary.

Thomas Ingram, of Providence, Rhode Island, has moved with his family to Manchester, New Hampshire, where he will serve as pastor of the meeting.

Lewis McFarland, of High Point, North Carolina, has been invited to conduct a series of meetings at New Garden, beginning the second Sabbath in December.

Silas Lindley, Principal of Archdale School, North Carolina, attended the meeting at Springfield in that state, on November 1st. His presence was much appreciated.

Mahlon Perry, pastor of the meeting at East Whittier, California, conducts a class in Christian Doctrine two days each week at the Huntington Park Training School.

Murray S. Kenworthy, of Earlham College, and pastor of the West Richmond Friends Meeting, conducted the services at New Westville, Ohio, on Sabbath morning, November 22.

John Fry, of Boulder, Colorado, attended the services at Deer Trail, Colorado, on November 8th, in connection with his duties as Evangelistic Superintendent of the Quarterly Meeting.

George H. Moore, pastor of the Friends Church at Bloomingdale, Indiana, gave the sermon at the union Thanksgiving service held on the 26th, in the Christian Church at that place.

President Eli Perisho of Central College, Nebraska, is filling a regular appointment on Sabbath mornings at a school-house northeast of Central City. There is an increasing interest in the meetings.

Horace E. Coleman, missionary to Japan, who is at home on furlough this year, is taking special study work in New York City this winter. His address is 600 West 121st Street, New York City.

Gertrude Marriage Starkey and husband have opened Friends Gospel Mission in Oklahoma City and have organized a Bible School. They will appreciate contributions of reading matter suitable for such work.

Harry R. Keates, General Superintendent of Evangelistic Work in Iowa

Yearly Meeting and Chairman of the Evangelistic Board of the Five Years Meeting, is sick at his home, 1314 Lyon Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

W. Alpheus Reese of Nebraska Yearly Meeting attended Lynnvile Quarterly Meeting at Center, Iowa, on November 16, and brought a very acceptable message. He has been engaged in a series of meetings at Grinnell, Iowa.

Charles Lescault and wife are continuing their evangelistic labors in California Yearly Meeting. They closed a meeting at East Whittier on November 11th, following which they went to Long Beach before beginning their work at Bell.

Willis Beede, who is a student at Hartford Theological Seminary, finds time to give one evening a week to work at a down town mission for foreigners, while on Sabbath afternoons he teaches a class in a Sabbath School for factory girls.

Homer L. Cox, of Portland, Oregon, led one of the meetings for young men held in the Y. M. C. A. of that city during the week of prayer. He also gave daily Bible lessons at a recent eight-day district conference of the American Sunday School Union.

Mildred Jones, of Columbia City, Indiana, has been elected to the new office of Dean of Women at Penn College, Iowa. The social life has been much improved by her competent administration. She also has charge of the gymnasium work for girls.

J. Ord Fortner, Superintendent of Bible Schools and Education in Western Yearly Meeting, gave an inspiring address before the Quarterly Bible School Conference at Bloomingdale, Indiana, on the morning of November 22, taking as his theme, "The Remnants of the Bible School."

AIDING WAR SUFFERERS

As the war continues in Europe the demands for the relief of suffering continue to grow. English Friends are already at work along numerous lines not only to relieve the suffering of Englishmen, but that of the aliens and those on both sides of the battle lines as well. In response to the appeal made already in THE AMERICAN FRIEND we have received and forwarded $120 to an English Society for the care of innocent sufferers among the Germans and Austrians in their midst. We will be glad to continue to receive funds for this purpose, which should be marked "Alien Funds."

An appeal has already been made in these columns for funds to help relieve the distress of Belgians, who have been driven from their homes and otherwise impoverished. Up to November 28, $81.06 has been received from three meetings in Indiana and Wilmington Yearly Meetings and will be forwarded in a few days. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be glad to receive further contributions to this fund which should be marked "Belgian Relief Fund."

Now comes another appeal, which, in view of the work being done by a number of young English Friends on the battlefields of Europe and in view of the backing which they have among Friends in England, presents an opportunity for genuine relief work in which American Friends are asked to participate. This appeal is in behalf of a company of English young men, who, refusing to take up arms even in defence of their own country, have organized a Volunteer Ambulance and Red Cross Corps to render such aid as they can to wounded and dying among both allies and Germans on the battlefields in Belgium and France. We present below an urgent appeal in behalf of this fund. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be glad to receive contributions for this purpose which should be marked "Volunteer Relief Fund." The appeal is as follows:

"I should like to call the attention of readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to a fund that is being raised by Friends to aid in the work of relieving the war sufferers.

"Philip Baker a very able young English Friend, who has studied in this country, at Haverford a year, and afterwards at Cambridge University and in Germany, has organized a Volunteer Ambulance and Red Cross Corps, and about thirty thousand dollars are needed at once for this work. There are about eighty young Friends in this corps and half of them have been in Belgium for three weeks.

"J. Allen Baker, Philip Baker's father, writes, 'These young men are making great sacrifices in responding to the call of the thousands, who are daily falling on the field of battle. They refuse to take up arms even in self-defense, but risk their own lives in succoring those who fall, whether allies or enemies. A few of the volunteers are paying all their own expenses of equipment and maintenance, but as for most of them, they gladly give their time, but must have help for their expenses.'

"In the past Friends have been among the leaders in helping the poor, the helpless and the unfortunate. It is now our duty to follow in the footsteps of our fathers and to help these sufferers. It is no time for us to say that had our principles concerning war been adhered to, there would not be any suffering and destitution. The fact is that they are starving and that we are able to help them.

"I believe that there is no young Friend on either side of the Atlantic better fitted to lead a relief corps than Philip Baker. Friends ought not to forget that by sending some of their own number to help in this work, they may to some extent spread their own ideas regarding war and thus do something to promote friendship among nations and to obviate war in the future. Nor ought we to forget that during our Civil War, Friends in England contributed one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars to be distributed by our Friends for the relief of destitute colored people and others in distress. Surely we ought not to do less for a people in greater need.

"Money and checks may be sent to C. C. Morris, 1608 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Very sincerely thine,
"W. FLOYD G. WILLIAMS."

Funds for this purpose can be sent also direct to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana, and they will be forwarded through the proper channels.

Visitors to Washington, D. C., preferring lodgings in a Friend's home near Friends' Church (Orthodox), accommodated. Every convenience; excellent board near. Cars direct from Union Station. C. H. HALL, 1117 Lamont St., N. W.

OUR DENOMINATIONAL PURPOSE

Because of a feeling that the Society of Friends needs a definite denominational purpose, in order to secure the best results during the coming year, the following letter has been addressed by the management of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to a few leading Friends throughout the country. The letter is self-explanatory and we hope that not later than next week to begin the publication of a few messages in response to this communication. We are aware that scores of other Friends of equal standing and interest might have been selected, but naturally we have had to limit these requests on account of limited space in the paper. We have no doubt that other Friends will have a desire to participate in this discussion. We will be glad to use all other messages possible, but our space will be extremely limited. The letter is as follows:

RICHMOND, IND., NOV. 25, 1914.

My Dear Friend:

I would like to run a brief symposium of short articles in THE AMERICAN FRIEND on the general theme, "Where Shall the Emphasis of the Society of Friends in America be Laid During the Coming Year?"

This, of course, opens the way for a consideration of the state of the church and its pressing needs, as well as a discussion of the particular plans and lines of activities which ought to engage its attention.

I am impressed with the fact that we need to have a definite denominational purpose, not to call it a program, if we would enlist the active sympathy and co-operation of our membership.

May we not have a brief article from thee on this question, preferable one of from 200 to 300 words?

Very cordially thine,

Canadian Wheat to Feed the World

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and Other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government this year is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 13.

Topic—Gems From My Reading.
Proverbs 2: 1-12. (Brief extracts, with comments.)

Reading may be done for recreation; it should always be done for self improvement, for instruction, for inspiration, for information, that the heart may be applied to understanding.

Some one has said that the books one reads are indicative of the character of the reader.

It may be readily admitted that there is far too much careless reading, too much time wasted by the perusal of trashy literature, too much energy dissipated through unwholesome and idle reading.

The lesson may serve to emphasize the need of care in this direction. It is better to master a few really good books than to have a smattering of so many indifferent ones.

Let the members each bring a brief selection of a religious, helpful nature from some well known author of high standing.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 13.

Subject—The Great Commission.

Lesson—Matthew 28: 16-20; Luke 24: 36-49.

Golden Text—Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 20.

Time—During the forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension.

Place—In Galilee.

Following the resurrection, Jesus appears at divers times and upon divers occasions—at least ten specific occasions are mentioned—during the next forty days.

At first inclined to doubt, His disciples at last had now come to believe the truth of the resurrection. To such an extent did they believe, that they go into Galilee to meet the Master as He had appointed.

Jesus had first appeared to Mary Magdalene in the early morning, and a little later to the women returning from the sepulchre, then to Peter alone, and to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus. His fifth appearance was in the evening with ten of the apostles present, and His sixth a week later when the eleven were gathered.

Later He appeared to seven of the disciples while they were fishing in Galilee, and now for the eighth time He makes His appearance, this time in a mountain in Galilee with the eleven present. Possibly it was a well known haunt, recalling vividly the events of other days.

Jesus has a message for the eleven. He acknowledges that all authority has been given Him; by virtue of that authority He appoints the apostles as His personal representatives to go out and make disciples of all nations; and He will be with them to guide, to strengthen until the end of the world.

These are the basic principles of the Christian religion. Jesus is the author of the redemption plan through commission of the Father; His followers are the agents through whose activities the nations are to be won to the new Kingdom; Jesus in the person of the Holy Spirit will abide with His people forever.

The mission of the followers of our Lord is the central element in the lesson. Through them the world is to be won for Christ. For nineteen hundred years the militant church has had its marching orders. Each Christian must be a personal winner of others, and in the aggregate the church must make Christianity the dominant, controlling factor in the life of the world. Until that is accomplished the work of the church remains uncompleted.

A LABOR OF LOVE

Dr. Henrietta B. Thomas, of Baltimore, who with her mother, Anna B. Thomas, is spending the present year in England, is finding plenty to do in the line of relief work. We clip the following from a recent issue of the London Friend.

"Dr. Henrietta B. Thomas successfully accomplished her projected visit to Berlin and Vienna with the double object of conducting a group of thirty Germans and Austrians back to their own lands, and of bringing back some English girls for whom their friends felt uneasiness. Our friend found traveling quite easy though rather slower than usual. In both Berlin and Vienna passports from the American Embassy and permits were readily granted to the English girls, and except that they were carefully scrutinized at the German and English frontiers, passed them through without further trouble.

No Alum— No Dyspepsia

Look to the food. Eat heartily of hot breads, hot biscuit, hot cakes, made light and tasty with Royal Baking Powder, and snap your fingers at dyspepsia. It is the tasty, appetizing food that aids digestion.

There is a quality in Royal Baking Powder coming from the purity, wholesomeness and fitness of its ingredients, which promotes digestion. Food raised by it will not distress. This peculiarity of Royal has been noted by hygienists and physicians, and they are accordingly earnest in its praise, especially recommending it in the preparation of food for those of delicate digestion.

Born

Sanders—To Dr. Harold A. and Edith Ball Sanders at Brooklyn, N. Y., September 22, 1914, a son, Robert Ball.

Died

Allen—Lydia Allen, daughter of John and Margaret Allen, was born in Marion County, Indiana, June 11, 1850, and died at Earlham, Iowa, September 2, 1914. She moved with her parents to Madison County, Iowa, in 1854 and to Dallas County in 1863. After the death of her parents in 1901 she made her home at Earlham. She joined Friends in 1874. Her Christian character was of the highest type. She denied herself for the sake of others. She served as overseer for many years. Funeral services were conducted by E. Howard Brown. Interment at Bear Creek cemetery.

Green—Cyrus Green, son of Asa and Susanna Green, was born at Ogden, Ohio, October 12, 1836, and died at Plainfield, Indiana, November 16, 1914. In his young manhood he moved to Plainfield, where he married Almada Ellen Griest in 1866. He was a birth-right Friend and active in its various lines of work as long as health permitted. The widow, four children, nine grandchildren and a brother and sister survive him.

O Prince of Peace

A Hymn, by JENNIE E. HUSSEY
Tune, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," adapted

What means this vast commotion wide,
The tumult and the strife,
From ocean tide to ocean tide,
That crush the nations' life?
O Christ, whose voice majestic, clear,
Could bid earth's storm-winds cease,
Speak now, commanding respite here,
O mighty Prince of Peace.

Chorus:

O mighty, loving, gentle One,
Bid all the striving cease,
Until thy perfect will is done,
O glorious Prince of Peace.

O Christ, who wept at Lazarus' tomb,
Look down on earth today.
A million hearts are filled with gloom,
And sadly weep and pray.
O thou who loved the sisters lone,
And made their sorrows cease,
To thee a throng of sisters moan,
O loving Prince of Peace.

O thou who suffered wrong and spite,
And answered not again:
Though wrong shall triumph over right
Through schemes of plotting men,
The vict'ry won through Calvary's cross
Shall bring from death release.
Give gain for all this countless loss,
O gentle Prince of Peace.

Oh, haste, we pray, the golden day
When justice shall prevail,
When war and strife shall cease for aye;
Thy word shall never fail.
When for thy law the isles shall wait,
Sin's captives find release,
Thy love shall conquer greed and hate,
O glorious Prince of Peace.

The Trade Name of the Quakers—Whose Is It?

BY L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD

"But afterward when people came to have experience of Friends' poverty and faithfulness, and found that their yea was yea, and their nay, nay, that they kept to a word in their dealings and would not cozen and cheat, but that if a child were sent to their shop for anything he was as well used as his parent would have been, then the lives and conversation of Friends did preach and reached to the witness of God in the people. Their things altered so that all the inquiry was 'where is there a draper or shopkeeper or tailor or shoemaker or any other tradesman that is a Quaker, insomuch that Friends had more trade than many of their neighbors and if there was any trading they had a great part of it.'"

That a religious awakening should have had so immediate an effect on the well established trade practices of the day is surely a glowing tribute to the reality of the religious experience. It was a part of that extraordinary leap into the van of religious and social life which was accomplished by the early Friends.

In a recent paper on the Prestige of Quakerism,* attention was called to the progress which early Friends had made in all the paths of life which make for improvement and reform; how they had been the promoters of the one-price-to-all purchasers in trade, the advocates of the kindly treatment of insane persons, the people who took up prison reform and the daring advocates of the abolition of slavery and the abandonment of war as a means of settling disputes between nations. The speaker showed how this tremendous progress had given to the Friends, or the Quakers as they were almost universally known, the prestige which has been so generously accorded to them by other churches and by the world at large.

The fundamental Quaker doctrine of belief in the essential good qualities of all men, in that God's spirit dwells in all, is, of course, the root from which these so-called Quaker conceptions spring. Where progress has been made and prestige earned by bringing a religious motive into the general affairs of life, any lowering of the standard or departure from the high position thus taken comes with a peculiar shock, and the appropriation of the prestige of a name of a religious organization for purposes of trade advertising becomes a real offense.

Such a use of the word Quaker in trade is rapidly spreading. From the Quaker oats through nearly all varieties of canned vegetables, on through laces, skirts, ranges, automobile tires, and lowest and most outrageous, whiskey, we find the name which generations of upright God-fearing men have rendered honorable, beloved, and in a sense sacred, bandied about in the hard hands of trade.

To plead the good quality of the wares which masquerade under our name is no avoidance of the wrong. Few Friends will think much of Quaker whiskey, however pure in quality or exact in measurement. The name belongs to the Society of Friends and should not be wrested from them because they are few in number.

The United States has prohibited the use of its flag in advertising. Its trade-mark bureau is no longer open for registration of the names of fraternal societies as trade-marks. How long can we suppose such use of the name of one of the larger religious organizations would be tolerated? It is time for Quakers—and whether we like it or not, Friends are more generally known as Quakers than Friends—to protest and that vigorously.

Bills are now before Congress (see THE AMERICAN FRIEND, November 26, page 754), having been introduced at the last session, prohibiting the use in trade of the names of religious organizations or the name by which such organizations are generally known.

Let us cry out with one voice to our representatives demanding their attention to these bills.

The Victories of Faith

While the Church of Christ is in duty bound to look the problems of human life squarely in the face, it needs to remember in the stress of changing and apparently paradoxical circumstances that God has not abdicated His throne. Man, prone to evil and finite in judgment, may, whether in disobedience or in ignorance, continue to operate against the divine will of Jehovah, but in the final test he will be found to have been playing a losing game. God's victories are written upon the ages and His victories are sure. Man may delay the coming of the Lord, but He who sitteth in the circle of the heavens will ultimately have His way.

The divine purposes are unchangeable and in the midst of apparent defeat God is bringing the nations to a more certain knowledge of Himself. The obedient disciple can stake his all upon the final triumph of truth. Far above the smoke of battle, far removed from the pit of man's wickedness, we may behold the "white winged angels" who are the messengers of Jehovah going to and fro in the earth, hunting out the habitation of saintly lives through which to operate for the final victory of an abiding and triumphant faith.

Despite the awful handicaps of human selfishness and unnatural hate and world wickedness, the year that is about passing has been witnessing the victorious march of Christian truth.

In the field of evangelistic endeavor there has been some rare harvesting, with the result that some of the denominations at least have recorded their largest number of accessions by profession of faith. The work of Billy Sunday in our own land has been a record of religious triumph throughout the year, so has the campaign of Dr. Chapman, especially in Scotland and also in Australia. Others of lesser note but with the same positive message have been proclaiming a gospel that has gripped our people by the tens of thousands. For years to come the Church of Christ will continue to be indebted to the evangelism of this good year of 1914.

In the Orient and in other non-Christian lands the ideals and social standards have continued to crumble through the faithful and heroic work of our Christian missionaries. The spectacle of bloody Europe may bring a reaction in the foreign field, but having had a glimpse of the light of Christian truth, it is inconceivable that there will be any permanent turning back. The words of the old prophet are still ringing throughout the earth with prophetic exactness: "And nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." India and China and Japan and Africa are waking from the sleep of the centuries because the sun of righteousness has risen upon their vision, and every year marks an increasing rise in the scale of Christian civilization.

Even this bloody war is paving the way for a higher type of Christian discipleship by revealing in clearer light the world-wide demand for it. The church is now being given an unparalleled opportunity to match its standards with the standards of Jesus of Nazareth by holding up an ideal gospel as the curative for all of the world's necessities. New opportunities are sometimes God's greatest providences. In the countries most affected by the strife of arms it is reported that the masses of people are turning their attention to religion more than is their wont. Thus is God again turning the wrath of man into praise for Himself.

Again the awful carnage of the present war is bringing to the front new and more determined advocates of peace all over the world. When the white winged messenger of good-will shall again hover over the battlefields, we may confidently expect the development of a peace propaganda that will speedily reach the proportions of a holy crusade, that will make itself heard at the capitols of every nation around the world. Under the spur of the realism of war upon a scale that is threatening the civilizations that have been founded through centuries of sacrificial endeavor, the churches of every name are rallying to the cause of the Prince of Peace with a new fidelity that bodes ill for the militarists of every people. Thus does Jehovah move His followers to checkmate the machinations of those who give themselves over to riot and to carnage.

The operations of the Federal Council of Churches, with headquarters in New York and Washington City, in strengthening the cords of Christian fellowship and in centralizing the forces that make for human uplift and the spread of righteousness in the earth, are among the most hopeful signs that have characterized the work of our American churches this year. In the light of a clearer conception of the high mission of Christ's church, the hostile walls that mark denominational boundaries are being leveled, and for the first time almost, Protestant Christianity is enabled to voice the composite message of the church in the councils of the nations and in the forum of our business and social life. Who can dare say that the finger of God has not been pointing the way these past years to this solidarity of Christian activity, and this too for such a crisis as is now upon the world?

The march of our nation toward the goal of the annihilation of the liquor traffic during the present year has been encouraging. Ushering in the year upon the heels of that triumphant and already historic march of two thousand determined, representative men down Pennsylvania Avenue upon our national Capitol in behalf of national prohibition, the cause has gone steadily forward. The gains have been decidedly more numerous than the reverses. In addition to territory gained by local option, as for instance, nine new counties in Kentucky, three in Maryland, together with large new areas in Illinois, five states with an area of 420,173 square miles and a population of 4,879,745, census of 1910, have decided to join the ranks of the prohibition states. Prohibition has become a recognized national issue, and leading newspapers with wet proclivities are already forecasting this issue as a leading if not a dominant one in the elections of 1916. The marvelous achievements of prohibition in Russia within a few months is one of the notable events of the year, while no less in importance are the efforts being made to suppress the traffic in absinthe in France and to minimize the evils of rum on the part of the British government.

The cause of Christian education is making commendable progress, especially in our own land. More young men and women than ever before are planning to invest their lives in the interest of Christianizing the nations, and are crowding our Christian colleges and our religious training schools in preparation for this great endeavor.

It may be admitted that the church must continue to keep abreast of its opportunity if the march of progress is to be perpetuated. God purposes to work through instrumentality no less than by the direct operation of His Spirit upon the human heart. That the church often falls far below its privileges, and fails to keep pace with its own vision is only too apparent. But with all the imperfections of the church, the religion of the gentle, but all availing Christ is slowly but surely penetrating the dark recesses of the earth.

Hear again the voice of the old prophet: "Jehovah of hosts hath purposed, and who shall annul it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?"

Amid the bewilderment of changing civilization, in the face of the struggle of age-long forces that are striving for the mastery, when the wreckage of world systems seems about to tumble into chaotic oblivion, the eternal fact remains that God is keeping watch over His world, with the result, as Robert E. Speer has expressed it: "Christianity is moving out over the earth with ever-enlarging agencies, with ever-increasing success, and with open and undiscouraged purpose to win the world."

English Peace Statement

We are impressed with a feeling that Friends in America are missing a golden opportunity to advance the cause of peace. It is conceded by all who have read it that the statement issued some weeks ago by London Yearly Meeting for Sufferings is one of the strongest utterances on the position held by Friends that has yet been given. More than 400,000 copies have been circulated in England, and it was printed as an advertisement in all the leading English dailies.

We would suggest that Monthly Meetings as well as interested Friends order copies for distribution, not only among our members but among other people as well. It is an unusual opportunity to get our doctrines before the world at a time when everybody will read.

We have received a large quantity of these statements and can furnish them at the rate of two cents per copy. One hundred copies, $1.50. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

The Miracle of Rocky Run

Our readers will find in this issue the first chapter of another story by "Junius Junior," which we trust will prove as great an inspiration and blessing to many meetings as did "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle." This new production, as is easily indicated in this first chapter, concerns the status of the young people in the Rocky Run neighborhood, and the relation of the meeting thereto. It is hoped that it will prove a blessing to our young people, and it may be that some older Friends will find it not altogether uninteresting.

Sin is the only barrier that keeps humanity from God. But God has provided a means of escape from sin, through faith in Jesus Christ.

The thanksgiving spirit becomes a matter of selfishness unless we are ready to use the gifts God has bestowed upon us to His glory and the help of others.

"Safety first" should be applied to the religious life no less than to the world of industry.

Where Shall Friends Lay Emphasis the Coming Year?

A Symposium

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has solicited brief articles from certain well-known Friends in America, to be used in a symposium, in answer to the question, "Upon What Shall the Emphasis be Laid by the Society of Friends the Coming Year?" We trust that the series will prove profitable to the whole Church, as various viewpoints of our needs and the tasks to which we ought to apply ourselves are set forth. The series will continue through the next four or five weeks.

Friends and Civic Public Service

BY TIMOTHY NICHOLSON

I have long felt, and occasionally expressed the conviction that Friends in this country have fallen far short of their duty and privilege and sadly failed to exercise that influence for good in their respective communities, which as Christian citizens they should have done.

We have uttered and published emphatic protests against destructive evils and civic unrighteousness, and proclaimed our ideals of righteous principles, but we have not made the necessary personal sacrifice of active participation in municipal and national affairs to render these protests efficient. The comparatively few Friends who have made this sacrifice and dedicated themselves to this public service have commanded great respect and confidence and some of them became recognized leaders; notably Nereus Mendenhall and Dr. William Nicholson in the reconstruction Constitutional Convention of North Carolina after the civil war; William Baxter and S. Edgar Nicholson in Indiana legislature, in temperance legislation; A. F. N. Hambleton in Iowa legislature; Ex-Governor W. R. Stubbs and J. J. Cox of Kansas; J. Elwood Cox, once mayor of High Point, North Carolina, and a recent candidate for Governor in which he secured the largest vote for a Republican in that state for many years; Barnabas C. Hobbs, Nereus Mendenhall, Edmund Stanley and Hiram Hadley, Superintendents of Public Instruction in their respective states; J. J. Mills and Robert L. Kelly, members of Indiana State Board of Education; E. C. Perisho, State Geologist and now President of North Dakota State Agricultural College; Albert K. Smiley and Philip C. Garrett, U. S. Indian Commissioners; Philip C. Garrett and John C. Winston, each at different periods, 1881 and 1905, the chosen leader of a Committee of One Hundred citizens of Philadelphia to expose and remove the political and civic corruption of that city.

Doubtless there are some Friends, whose names I do not recall, who in their own states and communities have in various ways faithfully and efficiently engaged in public service. But in proportion to numbers, English Friends have far exceeded us in such service. Their education and training develops a type of character eminently fitted for public service, and they have largely participated therein. Until the repeal of the Test and Corporation Act, no Friend or other non-conformist could be a member of Parliament. Joseph Pease, the first Friend member of that body, was elected in 1833.

At times since then there have been as many as twelve Friends in Parliament, and many others have sought and accepted positions as Mayor—even Lord Mayor, members of council, Magistrates, etc. Birmingham for many years has had a Friend in Parliament, and seven Friends have been its Mayors. The office of Mayor in Darlington has been held by Friends ten times. Seven have been Magistrates, which in England is a very important office.

There are nearly twice as many Friends in Indiana as in England, and how very few are personally influencing municipal, county, state or national legislation!

Intelligent Emphasis

BY ELLISON R. PURDY

Emphasis should be put, during the coming year, upon evangelism, intelligent, diversified, adaptable evangelism. There are surely many more than 100,000 in the United States who ought to be of us. We have too long glorified small numbers; there must be more of us to fulfill our mission.

Emphasis should be put upon practical consecration. We must learn to give more freely of our money, and more untiringly and energetically of our efforts. We have suffered immensely because we thought to do our work more cheaply than our fellow Christians and with too little personal sacrifice.

Emphasis should be put upon the Christianity of Jesus Christ. There is much conventional "Christianity" that Jesus would scarcely recognize. The Christianity of Jesus will gather up in it every testimony of Friends worth while.

Emphasis must be put upon a living gospel ministry, a ministry strong intellectually, strong emotionally,—preaching "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." The preacher's preaching must mean more to him. The Church must pray more about it, make more of it. But too much dependence must not be put upon the preaching. It must be accompanied by vigorous personal work of great diversification. We must be "All at it, and always at it."

We must emphasize. Lack of proper emphasis makes reading a monotone. In many sections of Quakerdom there is too much monotone. Our work should be to us a great enterprise, a supreme task, our recreation.

Increased Membership

BY ROBERT L. KELLY

I should say that we should unite in a long pull and a strong pull for increased membership, and this because of the following considerations:

(1) We need a conscious task that will appeal to every member of the church. Every person has influence. Some can use their influence by one method and some by another. Some can preach, some can give goodly sums of money, some can offer wise counsel, but all can extend the invitation "come." We need to develop a spirit of comradeship. We need all to work for the same thing at the same time. I advocate this propaganda for our own sakes.

(2) There are people in every community who for one reason or another are without church connection. Often they are our neighbors or friends. In many instances we have never said anything to them about the matter of church membership. We may consider that they are not Christians and possibly they are not. But this is a poor reason why we should leave them alone year after year without invitation from us either to accept Christ or to join our fellowship. Many of them would feel at home with us if indeed they were made to feel at home. We have not given them the "glad hand." We have saluted our brethren only. I advocate this propaganda for the sake of those we can help.

(3) And then we have more work outlined than with our small membership we can do; at least than we are doing. I do not expect the Friends church to become a large church. I do not place emphasis on mere numbers. But we do need reinforcements that we may carry to successful issue the work now undertaken. This may be illustrated in most any department of our work. Take the educational department as an example. The principle has been accepted that each community should maintain its own educational work,—each quarterly meeting or yearly meeting or what not. And yet appeal after appeal is coming to the Board of Education for the privilege of entering the entire field for a financial campaign. It is evident that in educational work many communities are not self-sustaining. And our numbers are so small that a few cannot maintain all our enterprises east and west. We will keep on helping one another, of course; we are indeed our brothers' keepers. But why not form the habit of bringing into our fold those next to us, and thereby help them, and ourselves and the work we have in hand? Let us demonstrate the vitality of the Quaker method right at home. Let us develop a spirit of resourcefulness. Let us make the Quaker church a strong church, able to cope with existing problems and to accomplish the tasks that challenge us. God will do His part if we will do ours.

OUR WEEKLY SERMONS

Revival Essentials

BY ZENO H. DOANE

Acts 2: 1

These words were used of the disciples and followers of Christ who, after His ascension, had returned to Jerusalem as He had commanded them, to await obediently the fulfillment of His promise, whereby they were to have His abiding presence. This was an unusual company—fishermen, taxgatherers, sinful women; those who had through three years followed the Master as He had ministered to the needy of every kind in the land which was His home; Peter, the impetuous, and John, of the simple loving heart; Martha, sister of Lazarus, and beloved of Christ, pure and unsullied by sin, and Mary the scarlet woman of Magdalen. All these gathered in the upper room, and in their waiting together thus are to be found all the essential elements for a revival.

What are the essential elements for a Revival?

The first which I would name is obedience, first in preparation. The cry of John the Baptist was "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." The king when he journeyed sent a herald before him to proclaim his coming and to call his subjects to prepare a way for him to come over. Revival failure largely lies in the failure of the Church locally to make preparation for the work to be done. Our revival efforts are largely hit or miss affairs, that frequently miss because the way has not been prepared for them. This preparation is threefold. Individual, a preparation of heart, a heart searching that reveals the places of weakness and puts on the strength of the Almighty. There is also the Church preparation that is essential, a preparation that makes the Church collectively strong in the community. Then there is the community preparation that has sent men and women within the ranks of the Church into homes to talk to the unsaved of their need of Jesus Christ. A community interest that only lives during a revival is of such brief existence, that those whom it would seek to help keep themselves aloof from it because it seems so strange.

But there is not only the obedience of preparation, there is further the obedience of faith and love. When Samuel came to the camp of Saul after God had sent the king out to utterly destroy the enemy, and found that certain things had been taken alive to offer to God, the prophet cried out in anger, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." What are all the offerings we may bring to God worth, what do they avail for us, if back of them there is a spirit of disobedience? God had said wait, and they waited.

The second essential is accord. A unity attested, first, by their presence in that place. Gideon's army of three hundred was successful when every man was in his place,—not at home, wishing the battle might be a success,—but out in the darkness of that eastern night, with pitcher and lamp and trumpet, going quietly into the place which was his. If you want a revival, keep the ranks filled up. Then there was unity of purpose. Waiting for the fulfillment of a promise, differences were forgotten, dislikes were put aside and with a oneness of purpose they waited together.

The third element is prayer; real prayer, that takes hold on men and women that are away from God, and then lays hold on God for them and never gives up until they are won for His cause; importunate prayer—intercessory prayer—prayer, that Jacob-like, must have that for which it pleads; prayer that brings real weariness and makes men weak because of the strength which has gone out from them to bear another up to the heart of God.

The fourth essential is expectancy. Either Pentecost must be given to the waiting church or God must break His promise and dishonor their faith. Pentecost was the only possible result of the conditions which are recorded in the opening verses of the Book of Acts. Revival is the only possible outcome of the same things put into practice in the Church today. Do you want a revival? You may have it if you will pay the price.

When God is Concealed

BY ARTHUR JONES

Psalms 79: 10.—"Why should the nations say, Where is now their God?"

The seventy-ninth Psalm is the dirge of a soul in exile. The Hebrews felt they were the people over which Jehovah had special care. But in spite of all this the Assyrians came down upon them and made captives of them, and drove them away to a distant land. Those heathen nations, with their beastly hordes had gone into the holy city, overthrown its sacred institution, and polluted its sacred courts. Jehovah's own holy temple was being defiled. If there was a God who cared for Jerusalem and His holy house, why did he not strike dead those ungodly mobs who cared for none of these things, and thus remind the people that Jehovah must be reckoned with? "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem in heaps." In the minds of these prophets, the keenest punishment that came to these exiled Jews was not their own sad plight, but the fact that these heathen critics might wag their heads, and say to one another, "Aha, where is now their God?"

I do not know how the non-Christian world is looking on us at this time. I fancy they do not demand of us as high a code of humanities as we prescribe for ourselves. But I feel there are hosts of men in Christendom who are today asking themselves that question, "Where is now their God?" The church is an institution which meets some of the social demands of men and women, the service of the church may lend itself to the esthetic ideals of men, but when it comes to the fundamental passions of men, where is its authority? Religion is beautiful on peaceful Sabbath mornings, on Thanksgiving Day, at weddings, at the burial of the dead, but where does religion have a place in the great crises? The church may pass temperance resolutions, elect peace delegates and call conferences to discuss purity, but what can the church do when political influence is in the balance, when commercial interests are at stake, or when national honor is in jeopardy?"

I. Christians at War. Without doubt the foremost thought in the minds of the world at present is the war situation. It would be exceedingly difficult to say one word for it. When we read how Xenophon, and Cyrus, and Alexander, and Hannibal recklessly led their men into the jaws of death, we do not marvel particularly, for they had no high ideals of ethics or the valuation of human life before them. In the commentaries of Julius Caesar there is but one outstanding purpose—the glory of Caesar. Right and wrong were not matters that concerned him.

But one expects a different point of view in western Europe today. Christianity has had nineteen centuries in which to permeate the philosophy of the world. Western Europe has been under the influence of the Gospel of Christ for twelve hundred years. Rulers and people have said, and for the most part have said sincerely, "We will serve Jehovah." They acknowledge allegiance to the Christ.

When we have these highest types of Christian development flying at each other like fiends, we groan within ourselves and wonder if that is all there is in Christianity after all. "Where is their God?" Need we be surprised if a wave of agnosticism follows in the wake of this war?

II. Inebriate Christendom. If the war in Europe were all the fire that tests our faith, we would have a more simple task of finding the means of strengthening our confidence. We might take half a dozen prevailing evils in this country and ponder long how it is these things have not been changed, if the story of Christ is the cure for the ills of the world. The evil of strong drink has been held up as the most terrible sin of this country. Nothing can be said that exaggerates it in any degree. For nearly a hundred years temperance societies have been waging war on the drink traffic. A score and more of national organizations for the overthrow of the liquor traffic have done their utmost. And still the evil goes on! They tell us the end is not far away. But it is still with us!

III. Covetous Christendom. Dare I vex your patience with one other sphere in which we need to ask where God comes in? I would speak of the covetousness exemplified in our commercial life, and the ideals of money getting that are held before us. This underlies every other evil in this country. If we could take away from our people the visions of a bag of gold our other evils would disappear. We do obedience to the man who makes a fortune, regardless of how he made it or what he is doing with it. In ancient Greece the poet Homer invented the character of Achilles, who became at once the national hero, with the result that Greece became a country of imagery. Other poets arose and peopled the earth and sky with legendary throngs. Athens became such a center of literature that all her thirty thousand people would come together to hear Sophocles read a new play.

The ideal that has been held up before the American people has been the golden image. Men are not popularly judged according to their moral character and what they are rendering in service to their fellow men, but by their salaries or their commercial rating. Cities even are classified as stock markets, as manufacturing establishments, or as jobbing centers. A city's bank clearings is of more concern than its moral condition. And yet we are Christians.

I am half minded to end my words here. But I fear some might turn away and say that Christianity is a failure. Christianity has not failed, but its limbs have failed, when severed from the heart. Creeds and dogmas have failed.

Ceremonialism has failed. Baptismal waters and sacramental wine do not change human dispositions. Men rise from their prayers "for all sorts and conditions of men," to go out to exploit and destroy. Esotericism has failed. Beautiful music, beautiful services, and beautiful churches do not harness the passions of men and women. One of the ironies of the war has been the fact that beautiful cathedrals, with their heaven-pointing spires, have been in its wake. Men outwardly accept the messages of these silent monuments to the Prince of Peace, and then range their guns upon them.

But Jesus Christ has not failed. He has not had a chance. Christendom has busied itself forming creeds and tearing them to pieces. We have been tenacious for right theories of the person of Christ, but we have been careless of His personality in us. We have bravely defended the unity of His life with God, but we have had little care for the oneness of our life with Him. We have not taken Jesus and His words seriously. If this baptism of fire and blood brings Christian men and women to understand that Jesus really meant it when He said we should love our enemies, and do good to them that hate us, it will have wrought one good work. The world must see that the program of social and personal living as set forth in the Sermon on the Mount, is not the poetic utterance of a visionary which must be largely explained away before it can be accepted, but that it is the word of one who spoke with authority; that it is not merely an ideal, but it is the only practical program for men and women to live by. Righteousness, brotherhood, and love are the only real forces in the world.

Do I find in the story of the Christ that which keeps me from evil, and which leads me out to a service like unto His? Then Christianity is no failure. Do I find in the cross of Calvary—the just suffering for the unjust—that which inspires me to give myself, a sinful man, for my sinful brothers? Then the Christ did not die in vain. I may not explain why the Kingdom of Heaven comes so slowly; I may not interpret satisfactorily all the signs of the times, but if I yield to the constraining love of Christ in my own life, I know where God rules. I can trace the writing of the finger of God on the pages of the past; I can trust that He is still in His world.

The Miracle of Rocky Run

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

(Author of "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle")

CHAPTER I

"Well, you couldn't maintain anything like that here."

"And why not, pray?"

"Because folks here simply won't take any interest in such things, because there's nobody to take hold and push it, because—, because—, well, because there's no spirit in the community, because the old folks don't seem to want us to have societies of our own."

"My, my! What a funny set of folks you are down here! I'll just bet if I lived here, we'd make a try at it, if I could get anybody to stand by me. Why, up at our meeting, you couldn't keep the young folks from their Society every Sunday at 6:30, even if you called out the state militia."

"Well, down here, you couldn't get them together to consider anything about religion, even if the National Guard was all working at the job. I tell you we are a hopeless lot."

"Yes, Mollie, you don't understand us down here," broke in the third member of the party. "At church on Sunday morning, it's all I can do to keep awake, trying to listen to the same things I have heard every Sunday morning since I can remember. As for Sunday School, I don't see that we get any benefit out of it, reading those questions and answers off our lesson leaves. I declare I'm plum discouraged, and I've tried so hard to be interested in our church."

"Yes," broke in the first speaker of the party, "I think sometimes that nobody here is interested in religion, except two or three who are loud with their amens at the church on Sunday and there isn't one of them that I'd tie to on Monday. When we had a Christian Endeavor Society about six years ago, it dwindled and dwindled until it just died, and to tell the truth, a lot of the old folks didn't seem to care a bit when it was buried."

"Well, you are in a bad way here at Rocky Run," exclaimed Mollie. "I think you need a lot of moral dynamite thrown around this place. Maybe some of it would explode and at least raise a disturbance. Anything is better than to die of the dry rot."

The speakers were a select party of three girls, reclining in the shade of a back yard in the suburbs of a town that had managed to exist for the past sixty years in the Rocky Run community. Mollie Weldon was a visitor from a distant state and had been portraying with girlish enthusiasm the splendid religious life of the young Friends in her home community, and the many ways in which their interest in the church was being maintained.

Bessie Tomkins, who had led in the conversation above recorded, was entertaining her cousin, Mollie, and Nellie Sanders, a neighbor chum, had been invited over for the afternoon. For an hour, with girlish frankness they had opened their hearts to each other in language that would have been startling, and no less surprising to some of the older Friends in the community had they been present to hear. It was apparent that at least in the minds of Bessie and Nellie, girls who had not yet passed beyond their teens, the religious life of Friends meeting in Rocky Run was not of a commendable sort. As for any particular activity among the young people, it was an unthinkable proposition, although they admitted to Mollie that there was no lack of youthful material in the neighborhood.

On the same afternoon, three young men in their later teens, Joe Bentley, Frank Souders and Charlie Dolman, were lounging on the shaded bank of the creek from which the community took its name. While having no marked tendency to viciousness, the afternoon had been spent for the most part in loose, idle talk, so characteristic of young men to whom has come no particular inspiration in life, in whose minds there has been formed no well defined purpose beyond the ordinary routine of the common-place.

It was something that they were not over in the town where the Rock-ribs were playing the Sunset-Browns of a neighboring community in an exciting tussle of the true American sport known as baseball. But congeniality of companionship had driven them to the shaded woods on this pleasant summer afternoon, to cull over the neighborhood gossip in budding young manhood fashion, or to lie in listlessness, satisfied that the others were so near.

After a lull of unusual length, Joe broke out with, "Say, fellows, I don't believe I'll go to Sunday School any more."

Still more silence when Charlie said, "Why Joe?"

"Well, for one thing, there's no life there. I don't believe Mr. Ferrell ever looks at his lesson till he comes to the class, and as for reading the answers off the lesson leaf, I can do that out here in the woods, where I don't have to wear a starched collar."

"But," said Charlie, who was loyal to custom even if he did not possess more positive virtues, "we can't afford to cut the Sunday School."

"O well, I guess they wouldn't miss me," retorted Joe, "and for that matter I guess they wouldn't care so awful much if all of us stayed away. Then they wouldn't have to go to the trouble of getting up earlier on Sunday morning and they would be saved a lot of worry about keeping something going that so far as I can see, does not make a ripple in this neighborhood."

"Yes, there's a whole lot in that," said Frank. "I haven't learned a thing for a whole year at Sunday School that mother hadn't taught me years ago. I think Mr. Ferrell does his best, but that isn't much. I can't understand why they ever put him up to teach. But with all this, I don't see how we can cut Sunday School. If it wasn't for our three families and one or two more, there wouldn't be any meeting or any school or anything else much in this region. I guess for the sake of our family standing, we'll have to keep on going to Sunday School until—until we all get married and move away."

Frank's last remark brought a hearty laugh and Joe replied: "I reckon that's about so. But I'll tell you, boys, if it wasn't for Dad and Mother, I'll bet I'd show up missing when the bell rings next Sunday. I wonder why things have to be so dead around here anyway. Mollie Weldon was telling sister Het and me last evening about the good times the young folks have out in Iowa in their Sunday School and in their Christian Endeavor Society. I told her that we are heathens here as compared with that."

"Yes, Mollie was talking to me about that the other day," said Charlie. Afterwards I asked Pa why we couldn't have such a Society here, and he said that the young folks wouldn't keep up the one they did have. It's his opinion that if the young folks will attend meeting and Sunday School and keep out of mischief, it's about all they can manage to do."

Thus the talk went on as the three chums lay sprawling on the bank of Rocky Run. They were not philosophers but unconsciously they were looking a critical situation squarely in the face, but with no ability to offer any solution for it. They were only conscious of a lack that somehow failed to be supplied, and in boy fashion they were honest enough to lay bare their hearts, the sight of which might have caused some concern in the minds of six parents, had they too not been in a rut from which they seemed unable to extricate themselves.

On the same afternoon, eight elderly men and women, the heads of four Quaker households in the Rocky Run community sat on the north porch of Jabez Dolman's farm residence. Dinner had been completed long ago with its usual complement of fried chicken, beans, potatoes, gravy, tomatoes, lettuce, apple pie, coffee, milk and all the fixings that fill up a farmer's table on Sunday when company is present. The old folks had adjourned to the back porch where they passed around the usual neighborhood gossip, had discussed the crops and the growing town of Rocky Mount, when at last in response to a passing remark of Mrs. Tomkins, the conversation veered to the condition of the Friends meeting, which eight years before had been moved into the town from its historic location on the Huckleberry pike.

"I thought we had a good meeting this morning," responded Jabez. William's sermon had the good old gospel ring to it. I think we are much favored in having him in our midst. He certainly can quote scripture. I thought his appeal to our young people to follow in the paths of their fathers was very timely."

"Yes, Brother William is so simple in his preaching that everybody can understand him," replied Mrs. Souders. "It is marvelous how God can use just plain folks, even though they have not had the advantages of education."

"While we don't seem to grow much, I often feel that here at Rocky Run meeting we are just one happy family," said Tobias Hunt; "no friction, no disturbance, no new fangled doin's, no great amount of expense, no nerve-racking experiences, no great concern over our young folks going astray."

"Speaking of the young folks," said Mrs. Tomkins, "I do wish sometimes that they would become more interested in the meeting and in the First-day School. My class of girls has dwindled down to seven when I used to have eighteen enrolled. I notice too that only a few of the young men and women remain for the meeting, and altogether I am getting somewhat concerned over the matter."

"I feel the same way about it," said Joel Tomkins. "Our daughter don't seem to be interested in the meeting any more, and I don't know what is the matter."

"Well, our young folks will have to learn to be faithful and to follow the path of duty as we older folks have done," replied Jabez, a sentiment that was echoed by the assent of the two Hunts, the two Souders and by Mrs. Dolman.

"Of course that is all right, but when our children are wandering away, I wonder sometimes whether we don't need something more than simple preaching and the ordinary ways we have of trying to keep up the church in order to win them back."

Thus the conversation went on, revealing in terms more eloquent than spoken words that so far as the ruling elements in the meeting were concerned, the young people were not likely to find any speedy relief from conditions that to some of them were growing intolerable. It was the problem of a meeting in a rut, from which there seemed to be no likelihood of escape.

The Westtown Letter

The Westtown Old Scholars Association

The Philadelphia meeting of the Westtown Old Scholars Association which occurred on Eleventh Month 13th makes it an appropriate subject for the present letter. A brief account of the Association may be of interest to some of the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND for at least three different reasons. It is an example of an extremely successful association which other schools and some colleges would do well to copy, if their circumstances were sufficiently similar to ours to render it possible; it has been of great material advantage to the school; and the intellectual and spiritual influence which it has upon our little community has been most beneficial.

For a great many years after its founding Westtown graduated no pupils. It had no regular course of study. Pupils came for one, two, three or four years, or longer, some few taking all the subjects which were regularly taught, and every now and then one ambitious person pushing considerably ahead of anything that was customary, when able and willing teachers could co-operate to render this possible. But about 1860 a regular course of study was marked out and a few students began to graduate.

In 1886 the comparatively small group of actual graduates formed what was known as the Alumni Association, numbering less than one hundred members at that time. There were, however, perhaps four thousand people who had been at the school who had not graduated. These represented the vast body of Westonians, but the forming of an association to include them all seemed too large an undertaking. When, however, the time of the centennial of the school drew around, which occurred in 1899, the Westtown Old Scholars Association was formed, including as possible members all persons who were or had been officially connected with the school.

The first meeting was held in 1897, with an active membership of about 1200 which was later raised to 1800. From the beginning it was animated with the desire to help the school. It was never meant to be a merely social organization. A minimum fee of one dollar was collected from all the active members, some, however, paying very much more. From each sum, whatever it might be, fifty cents was put aside for the expense of the association, and the rest was made into a fund to be expended wholly for the benefit of the school, and was expended by five committees, whose names indicated their scope.

The annual contributions—placed at the disposal of these committees, approximate $1500 a year. $500 of this has gone to the Committee on Scholarships, and the remaining $1000 has been distributed by the others. In the fifteen years since this was started there has, therefore, been spent the total sum of $15,000 for what may be called the improvement of the school.

But the Old Scholars Association was no sooner started than it faced, in 1899, the centennial celebration of the founding of the school. The question of a suitable memorial for the occasion was in every one's mind, and it was finally decided to attempt to raise a fund of $100,000 to be called the Centennial Memorial Fund, which should be held by the school, one-half of the income of it to be at the disposal, unreservedly, of the Westtown Committee, and the other half to be spent by appropriations from the Old Scholars Association itself in ways which would be approved by the Westtown Committee. $65,000 of this fund was raised by Sixth Month, 1899, and about five years later it was brought up by another effort to a figure slightly above the original $100,000.

The pace thus set at the outset of the Association's career has been practically maintained ever since. In 1903 it erected our Swimming Pool at a cost of $6000; in 1907 it graded off the girls' Hockey Field, raising $1,000 for that purpose; in 1910 it raised a $50,000 Teachers Fund; in 1911 it built the new Lake at an expense of $8,000, and in 1912, in co-operation with the Westtown Committee, it raised $15,000 to start a scientific Orchard and Forest Department on the north end of our farm. Of course other money has been collected for the school during this time, but since the organization of the Association, it has raised four-fifths of all the money that has been contributed.

The general interest in the school which its work arouses is of immense advantage in various other directions. The sense of a large body of loyal supporters gives us all strength and courage for our work, and the mere fact that 1,200 persons make an annual contribution to the school, although most of the sums given are not above one dollar, helps to strengthen a widespread interest. A great meeting is held annually, one year at the school, the next in Philadelphia, and there respond to the calls for these gatherings about a thousand people.

Every pupil who comes to Westtown, by the very act of entering, joins this great Association. He or she becomes a member of a great body of people scattered all over the country. Any considerable group of Friends east of the Mississippi will contain some who belong, and the same will be true in many places all the way out to the Pacific coast. They are most of them still members with Friends. Nearly all of them are Christian men and women, loving God and man, and trying to do their duty in the world as in His sight. They are in the main a thriving and substantial people, whose friendship in every sense is worth cultivating. People do not come to Westtown and get their education only to leave and be forgotten. They are life members of our community, birthright members of the Old Scholars Association, from which there is no disownment.

The Winter Term of Westtown School opens First month fourth, 1915. Young people who were unable to begin School in the Autumn, or who have had their work seriously interrupted by illness, may find that they will fit into Westtown at that time more easily than elsewhere. Any inquiries on the subject will be cheerfully answered.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING

The last Yearly Meeting of 1914 has now been held and it is possible to have a complete view of the field. Baltimore did not contribute anything of very great moment to the history of the Society, but the tone of the gathering was good and one cannot always tell at the time when an important movement begins. Some Baltimore Friends have faith to believe that something worth while is going to follow the sessions of this Yearly Meeting.

Owing to several local causes the attendance of members was smaller than usual and the number of visiting ministers was also less than common. Charlotte E. Vickers of Western Yearly Meeting, and George B. Evans and Ida Thorne Parker of New York, were the only ones who stayed through the Yearly Meeting. Rufus M. Jones, Tom Elsa Jones, Secretary of the Board of Young People's Activities, Horace E. Coleman and Robert L. Simpkin were present for a day or two. The tone of the meetings on Ministry and Oversight was distinctly evangelistic and gave indication that this should be the character of the work for the coming year.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee departed somewhat from the usual form of report and outlined in a general way its idea of the most hopeful method of working in the different individual meetings. By giving a brief analysis of the characteristics and surroundings of each it opened the way for suggestions as to ways of working in each, emphasizing the point that only when we are dedicated and surrendered to the leadership of Jesus Christ can any plans be successful.

The Foreign Mission report showed an increasing interest in some places, and contributions about the same as in the previous year. The Board repeated its appeal for the every-member canvass with the use of the duplex envelope and urged that all members, as far as possible, should become subscribers to the Missionary Advocate.

Many things came forward in connection with the report of the Peace Committee, as was natural when all minds are full of thoughts of the European war. Anna B. Thomas and Henrietta M. Thomas, two of the active members of Baltimore Yearly Meeting being busy with the English Friends' work for alien women and girls, much interest was expressed in their work, when a cablegram was received from them with greetings and a call to prayer for peace. A special epistle was drafted and sent off at once expressing sympathy and fellowship with English and Irish Friends in their trying circumstances, and the special epistle from London relating to the celebration of the one hundred years of peace between this country and Great Britain was read. Also a letter was sent to President Wilson expressing appreciation of his efforts in behalf of peace in Mexico and neutrality toward European belligerents.

The total abstinence and suppression of the liquor traffic committee found much to be thankful for, a Maryland county in which one meeting is located, and the whole state of Virginia in which are seven meetings, having recently voted out the sale of liquor, and the report of the November elections being quite fresh.

The other branches of work showed about the usual degree of interest without having any special features, the statistics showing a net loss of sixteen, of whom fourteen had moved to other Yearly Meetings.

FOR YOUNG FRIENDS

BY THOMAS ELSA JONES

Many Christian Endeavor Societies or other organizations of young people fail to grow because they have no definite aim. It is not enough to merely keep the organization going, it must go somewhere. Every group of young Friends should be doing some vital work for their church and community. As soon as ascetic self-sufficiency is transformed into altruistic self-devotion, not only the young people's organization grows but the whole church takes on new life. Young people's visions are of inestimable value in church life, but visions are of no worth unless some of them are put into practice. The following is an example of a vision that has been tried, with very gratifying results, in a certain country meeting in New England. I am sure many societies would do well to adopt an aim similar to this.

To make our Meeting the best meeting of its size in the best community of its size in the county.

To make our Meeting a place where the real spirit of brotherhood prevails, and to spread that spirit in the community.

To make our Meeting furnish a wholesome, happy, social center for our community.

To promote in every possible way the spirit of business co-operation and mutual helpfulness among farmers.

To encourage in every possible way and especially by example, energetic up-to-date, know-your-business farming.

To make our community a community where people read good things and think high thoughts, and where as fine a type of American citizen is produced as any place on earth.

To make our meeting a place where any one in any sort of need can find the Heavenly Friend.

To enter vitally into the spirit of the meeting whenever it convenes, seeking to make the Spirit of Christ predominate in all things.

W. F. M. S. AT WESTFIELD, INDIANA

A most enjoyable occasion was that of a meeting of the Womens' Foreign Missionary Society of Westfield, Indiana, held at the home of the pastor, E. Howard Brown, on Saturday evening, November 25th. The families of all the members' having been invited, were present to the number of seventy or more. They brought well filled baskets and a little after six o'clock all sat down to a bountiful supper.

After supper the exercises were opened by a reading of the scripture lesson by the pastor, followed by prayer by a number present. The lesson of the evening was taken from the book now being studied by the Society, "The Child in the Midst." Appropriate songs were interspersed through the exercises. A beautiful duet was rendered by the pastor and his wife, who is also a minister. The roll call was responded to by each member giving the name of some boy mentioned in Biblical history. Dollie Stalker and Myra Bond each presented separate parts of the lesson in a very interesting manner. Clara Blair gave the home lesson.

The object of the meeting, while social in a sense, was more for the purpose of stimulating an interest in the work of foreign missions.

NOTICE

The Young Women's Auxiliary of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia, announces that Professor Samuel Higginbottom of Allahabad, India, will address a meeting to be held at Friends meeting house, Twelfth Street, below Market, Twelfth month 12, 1914, at 7:45 o'clock.

LYDIA A. PERISHO

The daily papers in Indiana have announced the death of Lydia A. Perisho, of Carmel, Indiana. She was a prominent Friend and the mother of President Elwood C. Perisho of South Dakota. We will have an obituary notice next week.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Some excellent news matter has been crowded out this week and will have to go over until the next issue.

Pasadena, California—The Pastors' Association of California Yearly Meeting was entertained November 17, by Dr. Sylvester Newlin in the Pasadena Y. M. C. A. Fourteen pastors attended and participated in the meeting. The Association finds its bi-monthly meetings very helpful and inspiring.

Carthage, Indiana—The Friends Missionary Society held an evening guest meeting at the home of Allen W. Newsom, November 18. J. Edgar Williams gave an address on "The American Indian." Miss Helen Gause sang "An Indian Love Song." A ladies' octette gave one musical number. The meeting was one of unusual interest. A Bible contest was enjoyed during the social hour, the questions used having been given at the Winona Bible contest. The refreshments served were suggestive of Indian life.

At the Sabbath morning service on November 22, the Friends congregation at Carthage gave a special offering for the Belgian relief fund amounting to a little over $94.00. The pastor's message, "Feeding the Hungry World" or "Little Belgium," was a strong appeal. At the evening meeting Truman C. Kenworthy, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work of the Yearly Meeting, was present and gave a message full of truth which was well received.

Cincinnati, Ohio—Eastern Quarterly Meeting, held at Cincinnati, November 28 and 29, was favored with the services of Luke Woodard of Fountain City, Indiana. George C. Levering, pastor at Selma, Ohio, was present on Saturday. The sermons of Luke Woodard were especially strong and helpful. Local Friends are grateful that he felt called to attend.

Richmond, Indiana—Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was held at East Main Street on December 5th. Walter W. Brown, of Paoli, Indiana, Field Agent of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, was present with a minute and brought an inspiring message.

Selma, Ohio—Green Plain Meeting has been building a parsonage and the work is prospering under the pastoral care of George C. Levering.

Wabash, Indiana—This city has been favored with a gracious revival during the months of October and November. Ten churches of the city united in a Union Tabernacle service, with the Bob Jones party. The result was very gratifying. The interest of the churches was greatly revived, and a number added to the membership. The Friends Church with their pastor took an active part. On Sunday morning, November 15, Truman C. Kenworthy, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present, and the pastor received into the church some thirty members. Since that time others have been received, which brings the number up to forty with more to follow. The Society here is just getting ready for progressive work for the Master. The Sunday School is gradually becoming stronger and the morning hour for worship brings out a well filled house. Other departments of the church are planning for better work. The Christian Endeavor has taken on new life.

Winchester, Indiana—Winchester Quarterly Meeting was held on November 20 and 21, with a good representation of its membership present. It was gratifying to have so many visiting ministers, Charles E. Tebbetts, Truman C. Kenworthy, Ancil E. Ratliff, William J. Sayers, George W. Bird and Virgil Brock. Within the last few weeks the meeting house has been re-decorated and re-carpeted, and new lights have been installed. The building now presents a very attractive appearance. At the reopening on the first Sabbath in November, Edward M. Woodard of Western Yearly Meeting, was with us and gave the sermon both morning and evening. Within the last two months between sixty and seventy new members have been received.

Kansas City, Missouri—On the evening of December 8, the Men's Bible Class gave a supper at the church to the men of the community. On the evening of the 10th, the Sabbath School was announced to give an entertainment entitled "Old Ballads Dramatized." On the second and fourth Monday evenings of December the study of "The Church a Community Force" is to be continued. On Sabbath evenings during December the pastor will give a series of addresses on "Character Building."

Tonganoxie, Kansas—Samuel A. Jackson having terminated his pastoral work in Richland Monthly Meeting, Iowa, is now located as pastor of the meeting at Tonganoxie. This Monthly Meeting was established in 1868, and for many years was one of the largest meetings in Kansas Yearly Meeting, but many have moved to other places for cheap land, and for other reasons. There are, however, a few of the original members here and land is cheaper than in many newer localities. The attendance of late has been increasing. New members are coming in and the meetings are times of refreshing.

Plainfield, North Carolina—A very successful series of meetings has just closed at Plainfield, conducted by G. M. Cain, an evangelist from Mt. Airy. Oscar Cox, from Cane Creek, and others were present and rendered valuable help in the meeting. The messages of the evangelist were plain and practical and produced deep conviction. While no figures were kept quite a number prayed through to victory. Numbers cannot indicate the good that has been done. The church was greatly strengthened and the spiritual uplift of the membership is very gratifying. Thirteen gave their names for membership. The prayers of the church follow Brother Cain as he goes to other fields.

Southern Quarter, North Carolina—Southern Quarterly Meeting was held at Center in Guilford County on November 27-29, and was well attended. The spiritual life was very manifest. J. Robert Parker and Rufus P. King were present and preached both at the meeting of Ministry and Oversight and at the Quarterly Meeting to the edification of the congregation. On Saturday lunch was served at the noon hour in the meeting house, followed by the business meeting. There were good reports from the ten Monthly Meetings and a very interesting and valuable letter was read from the Pains, missionaries in Cuba. The Quarterly Meeting is raising money to build these missionaries a home in that country. Rufus P. King gave a spirited account of an intensely interesting religious visit which he made during the past year in Maryland, Pennsylvania, New England, Canada, Ohio and Indiana, and returned his minute for this service. He expects to ask for a similar minute early next year. On Sabbath morning Franklin S. Blair conducted the Bible School which was all consolidated into one class. J. Robert Parker brought the message at the morning meeting. During the afternoon Bertha Cox, missionary of this place, who is at home after six years' work in India, told of the mission work in that country. She expects to return to that field next year. A collection was taken for her work.

South Salem, Oregon—Salem Quarterly Meeting was held at South Salem, November 20-22, and was a season of blessing. Visiting Friends were B. F. Hinshaw, Effie R. Tamplin and George Carr of Portland, and Lindley M. Carey of Newberg. We had also the very acceptable company and services of Frances Leiter from Springfield, Oregon, formerly missionary to Alaska. The document of the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting on "The Hundred Years of Peace" was read and the clerks were directed to have it printed in the daily papers. The meeting expressed its opposition to the proposed sham battle between the fleets of the United States and Japan at the San Diego Exposition. A report of the Missionary Board of the Five Years Meeting was given by Effie R. Tamplin. A letter was read from Australia General Meeting in answer to one directed to it some months ago.

Kokomo, Indiana—The Union Street Meeting at Kokomo is enjoying a season of religious prosperity. The attendance is much better than it has been for years, and the interest in all lines of Christian service is growing. Charles Axton, who is in his fourth year of pastoral service here, is preaching strong gospel sermons. During the past year the Bible School under the leadership of its superintendent, Floyd Stout, has surpassed the fondest expectations of its most ardent supporters. It has provided separate class rooms for all of its classes. Among the pupils is one whose attendance and whose interest in all lines of Christian service are a benediction and inspiration to everyone, Asenath Nixon, who is nearly ninety-four years old, but who in Christian service is as young as anyone in the school.

Westfield, Indiana—E. Howard Brown and wife, who have been at Westfield as pastors since our late Yearly Meeting, have already won a large place in the hearts of our people by their attention to the needs of the meeting and the excellent service they are rendering in the ministry. They began a series of meetings at Westfield on the evening of November 25th. The attendance has thus far been large and the interest good.

West Grove, Indiana—West Grove Quarterly Meeting was held at West Grove, November 27-29. The presence of the Lord was manifest in each session. No visiting ministers were present at the meeting on Ministry and Oversight, but the local ministers rendered valuable service. Amos Carson, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, brought a message of love, using the text, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Frank Stafford, pastor at Dana, Indiana, was with us at the Quarterly Meeting session and remained over Sabbath. Services were held each evening. His messages were plain and forceful, and were spoken under the unction of the Holy Spirit.

West Union, Indiana—On Thanksgiving day the members and attenders of West Union held a special service at the usual meeting hour, after which they went to the social room where a bounteous Thanksgiving feast was spread. Fifty persons remained for the dinner and social time which followed. The oldest person present was Mary Ann Hadley, who has passed the age of eighty-two years. For more than thirty years she served the Missionary Auxiliary as its treasurer and for years has been an elder in the meeting.

Charles E. Tebbetts visited West Union on November 15th, in the interest of foreign missions. He spoke to a well filled house at the morning service and was much appreciated by all who heard him. A conference on missions was held at the parsonage in Monrovia at two o'clock at which thirty-seven were present, thus showing the interest of missions in this community.

PERSONAL MENTION

Charles and Eunice Hunt have taken up pastoral work in the meeting at Rose Hill, Kansas.

Bertha Day of Rockford, Ohio, has accepted the pastorate of the meeting at Ogden, Ohio.

Albert L. Copeland will soon begin his eighth year as minister in the meeting at Cincinnati.

Daniel Pickett and wife have moved from Rose Hill, Kansas, to Stark Monthly Meeting to serve as pastors the coming year.

Charles Stalker and O. B. Ong commenced meetings in the tabernacle at Whittier, California, on November 29. They are advertised to hold until December 20.

Grace Pickett of Rose Hill, Kansas, was recorded a minister at the Monthly Meeting in November, and has gone to labor as pastor at Merwin, Edgemont Monthly Meeting, Kansas.

J. Edgar Williams, pastor of the Friends Church at Carthage, delivered the union Thanksgiving sermon held in the Fletcher M. E. Church at that place. His theme was "The Thankful Heart."

Homer L. Cox, pastor of the Friends Church at Portland, Oregon, gave the address of the day at the union Thanksgiving service held by the churches of Sunnyside, a thriving residence district of Portland.

L. J. Thomas of Imperial, California, a Friend, is President of the Y. M. C. A. work in that county, while E. H. Gifford, also a Friend, of Lindsay, California, is President of the Y. M. C. A. work in Tulare County.

FRIENDS RESCUE HOME

The Home at 73 North Harris Street, Columbus, Ohio, is too small to accommodate the girls who apply for entrance. This has been one of the busiest years since we opened the Home nine years ago, and there has not been sufficient room for the comfort of the inmates.

Some of the girls who apply for help seem more anxious to conceal the name of the father of the child than to have comforts for themselves. When they have found Christ, a new life begins, with hope, and every effort is made then to find the father of the child. However, this is not always possible because the man in some way buys the silence of the girls.

Since the first of the year sixty-three girls have received help through the Home and over twenty babies have been born. The girls who come to the Home are not all of the lower classes. Some of them are from good homes, stenographers, nurses and college graduates; but the majority are girls from smaller towns, factory girls and clerks, ages from fifteen to twenty-three. We have had some sent to us from the Juvenile Court.

We usually have about ten to twelve girls in the Home at a time, and many are waiting to come in as soon as we can give them room. We have had several girls from the slums but we are too crowded to take many of these girls.

It is not easy to raise money for the Home because many people say it is encouraging immorality, but even if that were true, we are still obligated to take care of girls in so much trouble and to care for the innocent babies.

The Home is kept up by free will offerings. God has answered prayer all these years. Evangeline Reams, Field Secretary, addresses the different churches and societies, which assist in this good work with cash, canned goods, clothing, provisions, etc., as well as individual donations.

Thanksgiving is our public day for our supplies for winter. The friends are very kind and donate liberally at this time. A public service is held in the afternoon at the Home.

The salvation of the girl is the best part of the whole story, and we are glad to say that many have accepted the better way. We want to commence in the early Spring with our new building, which will cost several hundred dollars, and with your support and prayer we hope to be able to be in our new Home this time next year.

EVANGELINE REAMS.

THE NEW REVOLUTION IN MEXICO

A few weeks ago, there was every prospect of an early return to our mission and school work in the interior of Mexico, and that report was joyfully circulated. Now, all such plans are again indefinitely postponed. A new revolution is in progress. No one seems to understand just what the effect of it will be on the political conditions in Mexico. A few extracts from recent letters from our workers in Mexico will follow, which will make the situation as clear as anybody can understand affairs in Mexico today.

Mr. Tice writes: "Will just drop a line to you this morning to let you know something of conditions here. I suppose 'uncertainty' would tell about all there is to say. You probably know as well as we about the general conditions. I heard yesterday that Villa has taken San Luis Potosi and is marching on to Tampico. That means that the war will extend to our part of the country in all probability, though they may just surrender without a struggle. I don't know what to think of this new revolution, but it almost looks as if Villa had sold out to the reactionaries, that is, to the clerical party, Huertistas, Porferistas, etc. Some people think affairs are in a better way to be settled now than ever, but others think it will require two or three years more of war before it is finally settled.

"The railroad communications with Matehuala are interrupted again, so, of course there is no use talking of anyone going there at present.

"I was expecting to get our mules, wagon, and other things across soon, preparatory to going to Victoria, but they were going to charge such exorbitant duties that I concluded it would be better, especially as we have to wait, to send a petition to the Secretaria de Hacienda for a special permit to pass them and other things that we need, and wait for a reply. It will cost us $270.00 for the mules, and other things proportionately. If we can't get a permit, it may pay us better to sell the mules and buy others in the interior, if we can find any.

"I think we had better not undertake to go to Victoria with the idea of remaining, until we see what turn this new outbreak is going to take. I want to go down again next week, if possible, to look after some work that I started going and start some cleaning and repairing, if the situation isn't too alarming by that time. I can at least do some visiting within easy reach of Victoria, if it doesn't seem advisable to open the work permanently. I really feel that affairs are in such a condition that we can make no plans with any degree of assurance that they will be carried out, for even before you get this news, we may find it wholly impracticable to carry out any of the suggestions I have made here.

"While at Victoria, I set one of our men to plowing with a yoke of oxen, so as to have the ground in as good condition as possible by the time we arrive, in order to put in a spring crop at least, if not a winter crop. I shall be cautious about this, but we are having to buy feed for the cows now, so the fresh green crop is badly needed, and seems the wisest way of meeting the scarcity of food."

Another letter, from Mrs. Emma Phillips Martinez, says:

"It does not seem prudent to go to Mexico yet. Trains are not running south of Monterey. People from here who have been risking trips into Mexico are rushing home, for fear of being cut off from the United States. It seems that Villa is attempting to take Tampico. The very latest news today is that Villa has taken prisoner Gutierrez, the provisional president appointed by the Aguascalientes convention to take Carranza's place. There is actually no ground for confidence in a speedy settling of things in Mexico. It is painful to see the situation. Laredo is over-run with people who have no hope of going home soon, if ever. Only a few daring ones go now and then."

The missionaries are glad of the return of the United States soldiers from Vera Cruz, for they could not feel safe in Mexico as long as it was occupied by United States troops. But even that hope does not relieve the seriousness of conditions in Mexico, and our work will not be opened until brighter days dawn in Mexico.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

AMONG THE LEPERS

Since reports of work among the lepers seldom come to our notice, it is interesting to know that great service is being accomplished along this line in Allahabad, India, where for a number of years Professor Samuel Higginbottom has been building up an asylum for these unfortunates. Professor Higginbottom undertook this work in addition to his real duties as instructor in agriculture, but the utter desolation of the lepers appealed to the tender feelings of this man of keen sympathy and spirituality so that they became his chief interest. The field of agriculture is peculiarly fitted to meet the interests of these people for it affords them a suitable and agreeable occupation through which they can render some service to the community. The magnetic personality and earnest purpose of their leader are well calculated not only to draw these timorous people under his influence, but also to make him a remarkably inspiring speaker.

Married

Fortune-Haworth—At the home of the bride's parents, Zimri and Sybil Haworth, near Vermilion Grove, Illinois, October 15, 1914, S. Jackson Fortune of Old Fort, North Carolina, and Mary Haworth, Carl Miller officiating.

Jay-Brown—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Brown, Richmond, Indiana, Allen Jay, Jr., eldest son of Edwin S. Jay and wife, and Ethel Christy Brown, Elbert Russell officiating.

Lamb-Hamel—At South Eighth Street Friends Church, Richmond, Indiana, November 18, 1914, Newton Lamb of Philadelphia, and Elizabeth Hamel of Hanover, Germany.

Died

Moon—Ann Elizabeth Moon, widow of the late Hiram C. Moon, died at the home of her niece in Richmond, Indiana, November 24, 1914, in the 74th year of her age. She was a birthright Friend, who in her younger days was very active in church and temperance work.

AT CLINTON CORNERS, NEW YORK

Herbert L. Huffman, a graduate of Earlham College, has been serving the meeting for the past two years at Clinton Corners, New York. We are privileged to quote the following from a recent letter which was addressed to a prominent Friend in Baltimore:

"We found here, as I think I wrote you, a good live meeting. We found also a great deal of interest in the work of the Social Service type, but practically no such work being done. For a long time the young men had been clamoring for a club, but there was no place for them to meet. We studied the situation for some time and finally decided that the need was so great that something must be done. We have a very large house here where we live, owned by the Monthly Meeting, and we finally proposed to some of our leading Friends that we vacate the front rooms on the second floor and the attic and let the boys have them as club room and gymnasium. A half-hearted assent was given and we proceeded to organize the young men's club.

"I think there were eight boys at the outset, but within a year we had nineteen enrolled, all above the age of fifteen. We met on Friday nights, spent the first hour in the "gym" and the remainder of the evening in the club room below. Sometimes a debate was arranged, sometimes games or simply a social hour. The boys soon decided they wanted something to read and when we wrote to the State Library we found we could secure books free of charge if we kept our reading room open to the public three hours per week. Soon after we opened the club room as a public reading room.

"About this time it was apparent that the work was going to meet a real need. It was made a definite part of the Monthly Meeting work by the appointing of a Social Service Committee to have oversight over the work and to seek new fields of service. The success of the reading room interested a number of people and books were secured from various sources so that we now have several hundred volumes of our own, some very good.

"The younger boys soon demanded recognition and a troop of Boy Scouts was organized that has been a real success. Our camp this summer was one of the most enjoyable and profitable times we have had, but the regular work has been excellent.

"A young college woman, who is a member of our meeting, was prevailed upon to start some work for girls, and after a time she started a "Camp Fire" which is doing excellent work and about which she has become very enthusiastic.

"In addition to the work of these organizations an effort has been made to arrange for entertainments for young and old at the meeting house about once a month and parties for the young people at our home or some other at frequent intervals.

"In reviewing the work of the past two years a few evenings ago, Mrs. Huffman and I agreed that we had just about accomplished one of the aims we had in mind when we began work here, that of making the church the social as well as the religious center of the community. About forty young people (practically all in this community and some from as far as six miles away) have no social life except what some of our organizations arrange and have oversight of.

"One result of the social work has been the development of plans for the enlarging of the meeting house so that it can be properly carried on. A $4,000 addition is planned and more than one-third of the money has been raised already and without solicitation.

"The question that used to come up so often in Baltimore, 'Does Social Service work pay,' came to me very often the first year we were here, but I am sure we are already beginning to reap a harvest. Our young people are becoming a real force in the meeting. When we first came we could not get more than eight or ten out to the Young People's Meeting. Of late we have had as high as sixty at a regular meeting and over a hundred when something special was announced. Our attendance at the regular meeting for worship ranges now from eighty to one hundred and fifty. During the winter months it will be less, however, as several of our people are summer residents."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 20.

Subject—The Ascension.

Lesson—Luke 24: 50-53; Acts 1: 1-11.

Golden Text—He was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.—Acts 1: 9.

Time—May 18, A. D. 30.

Place—From Mt. Olivet, near Bethany.

The lesson of the Ascension completes the whole earthly life of Jesus which has been presented in the lessons this year.

For forty days he had showed himself "by many infallible proofs" to have been the resurrected Jesus.

Time and again he had appeared to his disciples, had talked with them, had allowed them to see the prints of the nails and the place where the spear had been thrust, had given them orders for the completion of his task in carrying the gospel from Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria "and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Now the disciples could expect no more of these occasional visitations in bodily form. He leads them out to the Mount of Olives, "and a cloud received him out of their sight."

An angel had foretold his coming. The angels sang in the skies at his birth. At the Jordan and at the Transfiguration there had been the manifestation of supernatural agencies in attesting the Sonship of Jesus. At the tomb an angel or a young man clothed in white announced the resurrection, and now at the Ascension two men in white announce the glad tidings that Jesus is coming again.

Henceforth Jesus was to have a new relationship to the world. By his presence in men's hearts he was to bring new inspiration. He was to send the Holy Spirit who should come upon his followers bringing inspiration and power. Henceforth his followers must take up the work and throughout the world must bear testimony to the power of the risen Christ.

Beginning with Pentecost a new era was ushered in. The disciples were to be witnesses of the value of the new dispensation. In all the ages Christian men were to be witnesses of the power of Jesus Christ to save to the uttermost.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 20.

Topic—An Unselfish Life.—Phil. 2: 1-11 (Christmas Meeting).

"Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." It is the keynote of the Christmas tide. No one can be selfish who has the spirit of Christ as the ruling element of his life.

Paul was willing to become all things to all men in the proper sense that by all means he might win some to the Savior.

It is sacrificial service and living that count. It is the unselfishness of service that breaks men's hearts.

The habit of selfishness wrecks the happiness of many a life. It is a habit that can only be broken in any satisfactory sense by the operations of God's holy spirit.

We idealize unselfishness but quite often fail to practice it. The good Samaritan has the admiration of all men, but all men do not play the role of the good Samaritan.

At the Christmas tide, especially in view of the suffering in the world, we can forego the usual practices and yield unselfishly of our means for the comfort of others.

If we would strive to do what Christ would have us do, shall we not in deed as well as in word give forth of our abundance, remembering the words "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Canadian Wheat to Feed the World

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and

Other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war.

The Government this year is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

We're Growing Old

The tallest lilies droop at eventide,
The sweetest roses fall from off the stem;
The rarest things on earth cannot abide,
And we are passing, too, away, like them;
We're growing old!

We have our dreams, those rosy dreams of youth!
They faded and 'twas well. This after-prime Hath brought us fuller hopes; and yet, forsooth,
We drop a tear now in this later time,
To think we're old!

We smile at those poor fancies of the past—
A saddened smile, also akin to pain;
Those high desires, those purposes so vast.
Ah, our poor heart! They cannot come again!
We're growing old!

Old? Well, the heavens are old; the earth is, too;
Old wine is best, maturest fruit most sweet!
Much have we lost, more gained, although 'tis true
We tread life's way with most uncertain feet,
We're growing old!

We move along and scatter as we pass
Soft graces, tender hopes on every hand;
At last, with gray-streaked hair and hollow face,
We step across the boundary of the land
Where none is old!

Protecting the Quaker Name

Public hearings were had last week before the proper committees of Congress in behalf of the bills now pending in Congress, designed to protect the names of denominational bodies or the names by which they are commonly called, from use in articles of trade and commerce. Appearing for the Board on Legislation of the Five Years Meeting, to which the Five Years Meeting directed this subject for action, were S. E. Nicholson, chairman, Benjamin H. Doane and L. Hollingsworth Wood of New York City. Appearing for the opposition were three attorneys of the "Quaker Oats" Company.

Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, who introduced the bills in the House, was also present and rendered valuable service. Much sympathy was expressed by a number of legislators. It is asked that Friends in all the Yearly Meetings write letters to their Congressmen and Senators, urging support of the measures. The bills are S. 5262 and S. 5698; and H. R. 15401 and H. R. 16098.

Chairmen of committees and sub-committees having the bills in charge are Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, Senator Ollie James, Hon. C. C. Carlin and Hon. Wm. Oldfield.

No Interruption in Tokyo Convention Plans

From both sides of the Atlantic have come inquiries as to whether or not the Great War had interfered with plans for the holding of the next World's Sunday School Convention in Tokyo, Japan, October 18-26, 1916. The World's Sunday School Association announces that so far there has been no hitch, and that plans for a great Sunday-school gathering are being pushed both in America and in Japan. Should the European nations continue in the present unhappy conflict until 1916 (which may God forbid), of course the convention cannot be truly representative of all Christendom, but the Orient can still be reached, and there are strong reasons for pushing with even increased energy the claims of Christ and religious education upon the Far East.

The Oregon Election

Every county in the state has cast a majority vote against the saloon. If a better record than this has ever been made in any state that has hitherto voted on this issue, we do not recall it. Territorially speaking, it is unanimous; and someone might as well move to make it actually so by a rising vote.

We pride ourselves on our characteristic of ready submission to the will of the majority. That is patriotism, good citizenship; and it counts and is made manifest if we are on the losing side just as it does when we happen to be with the majority.

The point is that the will of the majority is the law; and none of us likes to be told that in thought or in fact we are not law-abiding citizens. What is there then, for every good citizen to do, except his best toward making this law honestly effective, just as the people desire that it should be?

That is the course that will give this vote all the effect of unanimity; it is the course that will make a better state of Oregon, bring to the commonwealth the benefits of a more universal sobriety and quickened industry; that will put thousands of Oregon homes on a higher plane of living, and that will bring to the future conduct of state affairs a more ideal citizenship.

The people of Oregon have faith in all these results. In every section of the state they have expressed their faith by their votes. The justification of that faith must follow. Will you help, or will you hinder? Can you hinder without impeaching the quality of your citizenship?—Portland Evening Telegram.

Things That Abide

BY ROSA E. LEE

Often from very trivial incidents flash one of life's great lessons. Recently I boarded a train standing under the car shed of a city station. It was early, the morning was cold and only two passengers had taken that car, so I began to walk slowly up and down the aisle.

In the midst of this a train standing on the track beside mine began to move. I felt a queer sensation. Something seemed to be wrong. I could not tell whether my train was moving or not. I turned my eyes toward the window on the opposite side. There stood one of the substantial posts on which the shed rested. I knew it was stationary and as soon as I gazed at it I realized that my train was also standing still.

Almost instantly came the thought that when in the world of the Spirit we find ourselves in a situation that we cannot understand, when things around us seem to be moving the wrong way, we have but to turn our eyes toward the things that we know are steadfast, the things that abide,—faith, hope, love,—then we have our bearings and realize that all is well.

It was said that after the earthquake in San Francisco men were seen walking down the desolate streets holding each other by the hand. To some all that seemed left to them was human sympathy. Yet how good it was to realize that "love was not shaken and faith was not burned."

The President's Message

Perhaps no message of a president in recent years has been read with more general interest, both at home and abroad, than the message of President Wilson delivered to both Houses of Congress on December 8th. For the most part he struck a high note on the general question of war and peace. Friends will give unanimous endorsement to the pronouncement that America is not to be turned into a mighty military camp for the training of soldiers.

As a statement of national policy and national purpose the message will take high rank. Whether so intended or not, it is a rebuke to that pestiferous element of jingoism in our national life that is continually underestimating the patriotism of our citizen body and is no less overestimating the likelihood of international difficulties between the United States and some phantom foe beyond the seas.

We feel that the President lowered his own ideals somewhat in advocating the cultivation of practice in the use of firearms by all citizens as a sort of incidental preparation for possible war, and again when he seems to give assent to the need of a large navy as a means of positive defence. It is such doctrine that breeds militarism in a larger and more positive sense, and in fact it may be said to be militarism in embryo. Most people, however, even among the ordinary pacifists will probably look upon these paragraphs in the President's message as a practical attempt to allay a possible feeling of excitement, that perhaps is in danger of breaking out with the reconvening of Congress, that might easily lead the government to excesses in the line of preparations for a war which ought never to come.

We reproduce herewith some of the more striking paragraphs in the President's message for the information of our readers who may not have taken the time to cull through the entire message in the daily press.

"It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained to arms? Of course, we are not ready to do that; and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested that we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in times of peace.

"Allow me to speak with great plainness and directness upon this great matter and to avow my convictions with deep earnestness. I have tried to know what America is, what her people think, what they are, what they most cherish and hold dear. I hope that some of their finer passions are in my own heart—some of the great conceptions and desires which gave birth to this government and which have made the voice of this people a voice of peace and hope and liberty among the peoples of the world, and that, speaking my own thoughts, I shall, at least in part, speak theirs also, however faintly and inadequately, upon this vital matter.

"We are at peace with all the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is reason to fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened. Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. We are, indeed, a true friend to all the nations of the world, because we threaten none, covet the possessions of none, desire the overthrow of none. Our friendship can be accepted and is accepted without reservation, because it is offered in a spirit and for a purpose which no one need ever question or suspect. Therein lies our greatness. We are the champions of peace and of accord. And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation—the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self-possession, our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

"From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have, a large standing army. If asked, Are you ready to defend yourselves? we reply, Most assuredly, to the utmost; and yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. There is another sort of energy in us. It will know how to declare itself and make itself effective should occasion arise. And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate, indeed.

"Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do. We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve navy, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms, the rudiments of drill and maneuver, and the maintenance and sanitation of camps. * * *

"More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity. More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession, that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes cannot touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. This is assuredly the opportunity for which a people and a government like ours were raised up, the opportunity not only to speak but actually to embody and exemplify the counsels of peace and amity and the lasting concord which is based on justice and fair and generous dealing. * * *

"But I turn away from the subject. It is not new. There is no new need to discuss it. We shall not alter our attitude toward it because some among us are nervous and excited. We shall easily and sensibly agree upon a policy of defense. The question has not changed its aspects because the times are not normal. Our policy will not be for an occasion. It will be conceived as a permanent and settled thing, which we will pursue at all seasons, without haste and after a fashion perfectly consistent with the peace of the world, the abiding friendship of states, and the unhampered freedom of all with whom we deal. Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility resting upon us. We shall learn and profit by the lesson of every experience and every new circumstance; and what is needed will be adequately done."

A Great Opportunity for Friends

Not the least difficulty against which our Friends in England must contend daily is the popular cry,—which seems to have impressed even some Friends in certain quarters,—that the present war is a righteous war. Englishmen are being constantly reminded of the great wrong which has been done in the case of Belgium, and the obligations which are upon England to restore that little country to her former independence.

Many other wars have had that doubtful element about them, which has enabled Friends quite easily to maintain their testimonies. But now, as one Friend has put it, they are down to the foundations; they are face to face with the real problem that is confronting them as members of the Society of Friends.

Most people, and especially most Christians, are willing to concede the justice of Friends' position in opposition to war, as a theory of conduct, but its practical applicability in times of stress like the present is regarded by many, and even by some Friends, as being open to question.

A writer in the London Friend quotes Canon Hersley Henson as saying that, "The Quaker, if he would be as logical as he is conscientious, must shake off the dust of his feet against every civilized government and withdraw somewhere beyond the confines of civil order altogether." This is upon the theory that while Friends protest against war they get the protection of the army and of the navy and really pay taxes for their support. And yet the Canon is moved to remark that the Quaker stand against war has been "priceless against the easy acquiescence of the nation in a lower level of practice than the Christian conscience had, at its best, really sanctioned."

At a time like the present, when the tenets of the Society of Friends are meeting possibly their severest tests, shall our English Friends be left to maintain our denominational testimonies alone? That many of them, by far the greater number in fact, are standing firm in the face of misunderstanding and even ridicule, is not to be questioned. Hear the words of Joseph S. Rowntree: "Let us keep right down on our foundations, ever holding fast the knowledge that Jesus has put before us a better way. He is praying for us, that our faith fail not. May our prayers be in the spirit of him who said, 'Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief.'"

No nation has yet permitted the position of the Society of Friends to be put to the real test. The nations thus far have preferred to rely upon their armies and their navies. It has yet to be proved that war ends war, or that war settles any question. It has yet to be proved that a nation's preparedness for war is a sure safeguard against attack. Perhaps the other nation's weapons will prove to be the stronger. In the end the world will have to find that the only guarantee against attack, and in fact the surest protection against a real attack, is the protection of an infinite faith in God, while the strongest weapon that can be wielded, against which the weapons of men cannot avail, is the "sword of the spirit."

Is not the time opportune for American Friends to come to the front with a masterly proclamation, that will sustain our Friends on the other side of the water in their historic position, whether in England or France or Germany or Constantinople? Quakerism has never before had such an opportunity as it now faces to impress its faith upon the world. While maintaining strict neutrality among belligerents, the time is ripe for a pronouncement of our tenets in a way that will attract the attention of all men to higher ground. Shall we be longer tardy in meeting the issue?

Man's profession of religion amounts to little, if his actions do not accord with his spoken word.

Where Shall Friends Lay Emphasis the Coming Year?

A Symposium

BY ISAAC SHARPLESS

The Society of Friends is likely to grow as a denomination, first, as it has something distinctive to give to the world, and, second, as that is something the world is in a condition to appreciate and adopt. Both conditions are necessary. If its object is to present the general principles of Christianity just as other denominations do, it may perform a beneficent work, but will hardly be likely to draw many members to itself. If it adopts and preaches some peculiarity, which had life in it a century ago, but which is now a dead issue, it will be equally unsuccessful. If it can not find a distinctive feature worth while and which men need and want, its usefulness as a separate body has ceased.

When we find this issue we shall know where "emphasis should be laid." It seems to me that it must lie somewhere in the field of practice which necessarily results from what has always been our living belief in the direct spontaneous communication of God's will to man. If this is so, a form of worship which leaves the way open for and encourages such communication is our great contribution to Christianity. There are many signs that serious people in our country are more drawn to this than for some decades in the past, and that if it were to be intelligibly and feelingly presented there are some prepared souls who would accept it as they did in the 17th century and be drawn to us, in spirit and perhaps in membership.

Such a message will flower out, not only in a form of worship, but in certain moral advocacies as of peace, simple living, and honest dealing. It will thus find immediately also a social mission which in certain respects it will be well adapted to perform.

Haverford, Pennsylvania.

BY JOSEPH JOHN MILLS

This coming year the emphasis of the church should be laid upon evangelism. Many lines of work are now calling for the united efforts of American Friends with an insistency that must not be denied, but they should all be regarded as subordinate in importance to the work of promoting the regeneration of individuals by the power of God. All social and moral reforms must derive their primary efficiency from this one source. No possible change of conditions in the world can warrant a shift of emphasis from this fundamental mission of the Church. It is incumbent upon us, as a denomination, to address ourselves with greatly increased earnestness and intelligence to the problem of enlarging, energizing and directing our various departments of soul saving work. We need a great increase in the number and equipment of our pastors. Less emphasis should be placed upon spasmodic revivalism and more upon maintaining a constantly vigorous evangelistic life in all our meetings, Bible Schools, Colleges, Academies, and Young People's organizations.

This implies the necessity of broadening and deepening our denominational conception of what evangelistic work properly includes. We must socialize our evangelism, and so justify our claim to be the Society of Friends. St. Paul believed in utilizing every point of his social contact with men as a medium through which to win them to Christ. "To all men I have come to be all things, in the hope that in every one of these ways I may save some." American Friends should unitedly enter upon a campaign of training whole congregations, as well as preachers and pastors, for definite Christian service. Our denominational goal should be the enlistment of the rank and file of the members of every meeting in a well-defined program of religious activity.

Pasadena, California.

BY ENOS HARVEY

Where shall the emphasis of our church be laid during the coming year? I am of the opinion that if we placed the emphasis on a large increase in membership, we would more nearly draw out our present resources than by any other means. Recent years have been especially devoted to organization. The Boards of the Five Years Meeting have been created, and the Yearly and Quarterly Meetings have fallen into line. The "Machine" seems to be well perfected. It yet remains to be seen whether it can be used in the enlargement of our membership.

The increase in the amount of money required is considerable. Our loyal membership will not willingly bear this increased financial requirement long unless adequate results follow. Much might be said in favor of this added machinery, but whatever may be said in its favor, it cannot be said that it has added numerical strength to our church. Is it not time now to put our church organization to the supreme test as to whether it is suited to the work of gathering in the lost and adding to the church such as are being saved?

If this is to be accomplished we shall need greater devotion to the work on the part of our present membership; a larger number and more powerful evangelists, those in whom God is revealing His Son, that they might preach Him. This work will also require a greater number of better trained and better supported pastors. If we succeed in securing large growth the church must magnify the office of the preacher, and the preacher must magnify the one foundation and the one head of the church—Jesus Christ.

Noblesville, Indiana.

BY JOHN R. CARY

A fair statement, in brief, of the mission of the church would be that it is to follow up the work of Jesus Christ in His plan for restoring man to right relations with God. As we commonly divide things off, this involves the preaching of the gospel to the world and developing the religious life and powers of those who accept it, so that they in turn may carry on the propaganda. The proper balance must be preserved or we shall see some churches securing a nominal acceptance of Jesus Christ and allowing those who accept Him to slip away again, while others miss the evangelistic note and drill their forces as fruitlessly as McClellan did during the early years of the civil war.

How can we have a general plan when we have such diverse conditions? I cannot see, unless we agree to make a prayerful study of our meetings and each decide where it is weak. If the evangelistic side has been strong, build up the pastoral side; and if accessions have been few begin to preach the gospel of the Kingdom with more fire. I am not sure that self-examination is good for the individual, always, but I am quite sure that it is good for the church, sometimes, and this may be one of the times.

Baltimore, Maryland.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

Personality as the Vantage Ground of Christ's Kingdom

BY VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

Matthew 13: 31-34; 5: 13-17,

Nineteen centuries ago one Jesus of Nazareth made a few unpretentious statements concerning a Kingdom in which He was interested, and concerning the essential characteristics of its adherents. "Salt," "light," "mustard seed" and "leaven" were the homely emblems by which He translated His thought to His hearers. Yet history has freighted those simple statements with meaning tremendous in their significance. The Kingdom has grown until it numbers millions and embraces every race and class of men. These adherents have indeed been the salt of the earth and the light of the world, in that through them the stream of Christ's thought has been enriching all the centuries. The ideals that He taught have been the guiding star that civilization has followed falteringly, yet steadily, the life that He lived has been the standard for individual conduct,—an example growing strangely brighter and more compelling with the progress of time. In increasing number men are realizing that this Kingdom is the one supreme, eternal force of the universe, progressing with irresistible sweep until it shall embrace the affairs and command the allegiance of all men. They are realizing that the attitude of each individual to this eternal force is the all-important fact of existence.

Strange indeed were the beginnings of the Kingdom. We find in Jesus no leader of armies, no political idol, no founder of creed or of church. In His infinite genius He saw that no lasting kingdom could have as its basis any outward authority, that real allegiance must be inward, proceeding from the heart, and that this allegiance to a new order could only result as men's hearts were made new. He further realized that any change of heart and life is possible only through contact with another life. Thus He conceived the gigantic idea of winning the whole world by the sheer force of His personality, expressed through His life of loving service and teaching.

Small wonder that He compared His Kingdom to leaven and to mustard seed since it was first represented by a few lowly men who did not themselves fully understand the nature of their Master's mission. It was only by daily association with them that Jesus was able to infuse His personality into theirs, and by this transformation of their very being there was introduced into the world a new force, that of the living Spirit of Christ. With these first disciples as a nucleus this force has spread through the lives of countless millions of other disciples, each being transformed by the same personal fellowship with a living Christ, not here in the body as then, but here just as really in the spirit.

Naturally, one who had experienced this newness of life would bear witness of it in his conduct. He should be different from his fellows and should influence them because of this difference. Thus Christ said of His disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth;" "Ye are the light of the world." The analogy is clear. Salt and light constantly exert a beneficent influence by reason of a peculiarity that distinguishes them from all else. Salt keeps the body in health, saves the sea from becoming a noisome pool, prevents the spread of putrefaction and preserves that which is sound and pure. Thus the Christian, by his very nature influences for good all that he touches. He preserves all that is good and checks the spread of all that is evil, enabling the good to overcome the evil. This service is not so much by conscious endeavor, as by that powerful influence in the realm of the unconscious where ideals intermingle and personalities fuse. Professing Christians who are not accomplishing these ends show that they have lost their "savor" and are become as worthless rubbish in Christ's Kingdom.

Light illustrates the other power of a Christian life—the ability to assist in the creation of new life. Just as the sunlight enables the leaves to assimilate food from the air and to create new living cells, so the Christian will nourish the development of Christian life among other men. Just as all light radiates cheer and comfort so the Christian life will naturally show forth love and kindness and service. Herein is really embodied the whole gospel, if we can but see it. As the spirit of Christ is begotten in a man he becomes filled with a new principle that will shine forth naturally and unconsciously at all times and under all circumstances. If such is not the case it means that the light has been covered up by a bushel of worldliness and selfishness and indifference. A candle under a bushel is not only of no use, but finally dies out because of a lack of the oxygen necessary to produce the light; so the Christian must keep in free contact with the pure air of God's truth as the vitalizing element in his life.

Christianity is not a system of ethical principles or of religious dogmas. Neither is it a propaganda to promote the acceptance of such principles and dogmas. In its simplest terms it is the life of God as revealed through Christ, expressed through the lives of men. Thus the power of Christianity really consists in personality,—launched by the personality of Christ and carried forward by the personality of Christian men. Principles of conduct and doctrines of theology have no power to grip men until they are translated into life and their value is tested and proved in the laboratory of actual experience. Our faith in some ideal, weakened by some special stress, is reborn and strengthened as we see that ideal proved in the life of a friend. Christian ministry by tongue and pen is not to be minimized, but rather should it be emphasized that the greatest ministry is the unconscious influence of a Christian life. Not only are Christians the "world's bible," but each has a measure of responsibility for sustaining the faith of his fellow Christians.

Looking at Christianity in this light we see that Christ is not only its essence, but more exactly its content. He formed no creed, nor did He make adherence to His teaching the test of discipleship. Rather was He continually calling attention to Himself: "Follow me"; "I am the way"; "I am the vine"; "He that believeth on me." He asked His disciples what they thought of Himself, and on Peter's answer He said He would found His church.

Why is Christ the content of the Gospel? What can the fact of the historic person, Jesus, mean to men today? The first meaning is that He reveals what God is. Men struggle with a weak faith because of a lack of understanding of the nature of God. Faith finds no secure footing upon that which is wholly beyond the range of human apprehension. In Jesus, the man of Galilee, we find God incarnated,—revealed in terms we can understand. In that life in Palestine the eternal is projected upon the plane of time, the forces of the infinite are focused in a finite life, and our faith rests secure upon this comprehensible revelation of the nature of God.

The second meaning is that He reveals what man ought to be. Christ as an example is the most familiar phase of His mission. That perfect life tends to convict the conscience of man with a sense of shortcoming, and to challenge him to strive to attain the goal of perfection thus represented.

The third meaning is more difficult to understand. It is the fact that Christ helps men today to attain unto the example, through the channel of a present fellowship with His own living personality. You ask how can I find living fellowship with one who is not here in the flesh? I answer that I do not know how, any more than I know how the living principle operates in the grain of corn. The "how" is not the essential factor. You ask me to reveal this experience of fellowship to you? I answer that, just as I cannot reveal color to a blind man, because of the obstacle of his defect, so I cannot reveal Christ to one with whom there is the obstacle of an unyielding will. In each case all that one man can do for another is to assist in removing the obstacle. When the will has finally been surrendered to the eternal purposes of God, then will be experienced that transforming fellowship with a living Savior that raises human life to its highest power. Only as Christ be thus "lifted up" through our own personalities, will all men be drawn to Him. Only as we thus become the leaven that really tends to transform and to bless mankind, will Christ's Kingdom come upon earth.

Visit of English Young Friends to America

BY ROBERT DAVIS *

1.—In the Middle West.

Only eight short weeks on American soil! Very short, yet full of a wonderful charm,—the charm that belongs to every adventure, when each day brought some fresh surprise, some strange experience, some new token of friendship, some wholly unexpected expression of generous and unequalled hospitality. It was a time of ceaseless activity, of kaleidoscopic change, as we moved across the great Continent, penetrating as far west as the state of Iowa, and touching a variety of places en route. We had the opportunity of seeing different types of meetings,—not only meetings of the four main branches of Friends (Orthodox "Pastoral," Philadelphia, Hicksite and Wilburite), but meetings of most of these branches under varying conditions. Our journey took us not only to large and important centers like Richmond, Indianapolis, Fairmount and Des Moines, but to some of the more remote places, such as Blue River (Indiana), Prairie Grove and New Providence (Iowa). We also had the privilege of attending Conferences at Haverford, Winona and Hampton Falls (Whittier Guest House), and enjoyed brief visits to the holiday settlements at Pocono Lake and Buckhill Falls. It will be seen that we were able to touch just the bare fringe of American Quakerism; to feel a sense of the vastness of area which it covers, and to realize in some small measure the nature and complexity of its immediate problems. Here it is possible to speak only in the most tentative way, and the exigencies of space and time make it necessary to confine what is said to our visit amongst the Friends in the Middle West, who belong to the Five Years Meeting.

We were brought into close contact with what is known as the Pastoral System in a few meetings belonging to Indiana, Western and Iowa Yearly Meetings. There is no need to disguise the fact that, at any rate on the surface, the quality of Quakerism represented by this System differs widely from what we know in England. The religious climate feels unfamiliar at first. The conditions of life are unlike our own, and the problems which arise in consequence are correspondingly different. It would be interesting to know how far outward conditions and historical causes have proved to be the real determining factors in the production of this new type of Quakerism which is found in Western America. There can be no doubt that external circumstances have played an important part in past developments, but I am inclined to the opinion that there are psychological factors at the root of the problem. It should be clearly understood, however, that the conditions of life amongst the Pastoral Friends in America which we saw, are not those that gave rise to the adoption of that system. What we saw were the problems that have been created by that system.

I would like now to point out, briefly and symthetically, what appeared to me some elements of strength and weakness in this method of work.

* An article in Friends Fellowship Papers.

It does make for church efficiency; it makes possible constructive, educational and missionary work of an extensive character; it promotes active campaigns against existing social evils (temperance work holds a prominent place); it unites the forces of the church,—particularly the younger members,—on the side of righteousness. (The Christian Endeavor movement has a large place in the economy of their church life.) It secures active visitation amongst the members. In these and in other ways the pastor fulfils, within a much more limited area, the function of Extension Secretary in England. When, however, this system is applied to worship leading to more or less stereotyped forms of service each week, it seems to me to fall short of the true Quaker ideal. Except for their avoidance of the outward sacraments, it is difficult on the surface to see wherein Friends of the Pastoral Meetings stand out as distinctive from members of other non-episcopal bodies. In speaking of this matter, one is not unmindful of the ghastly failure of many of our own meetings to rise to any high level of spiritual experience, and of the danger of emphasizing a particular method of worship as though it were an end in itself. But it seems to me that it is essential to the genius of Quakerism that our worship should provide for corporate communion with God on the basis of a living silence to which each worshipper may contribute a measure of spiritual life through an active exercise of soul. Given these conditions, an atmosphere is created in which spiritual energies are released, and things happen which are not possible under other conditions.

The silence is not formal and devoid of meaning, but quick and active, "disturbed with the joy of elevated thoughts"—a certain spiritual level is reached, and out of the silence there breaks forth naturally and spontaneously a ministry which speaks to the condition of the meeting. Such utterance is not so much the expression of the thoughts of one individual as the focusing in words of the mind and thought of the whole body of worshipers. The group consciousness which has been gradually gathering volume in the hush of the silence suddenly finds vocal expression. Worship after this manner has become an inherent part of our Quaker witness. We have had the courage to adopt it with all its attendant risks, and, in spite of much shortcoming, our faith has been abundantly justified. It is something which we dare not let go; it is something which men and women of other churches, both in England and in America, are seeking to know; it is a vital part of our Quaker message today. In this method of approach to God there are implicit undiscovered possibilities of spiritual life and vision and fellowship, and it is only because one feels that some of our Friends in America are missing one cardinal element of corporate Quaker experience that one ventures to suggest that in the conduct of their meetings there is something to be desired.

On the part of many whom we were privileged to meet there was an avowed search for a fuller understanding of the place and value of silence both in life and worship. This subject gripped the attention of the Winona Conference in a remarkable way, and there is undoubtedly on the part of some a growing desire to come more closely into line with what we believe to be the true Quaker practice in this matter.

Wherever we went, we felt and enjoyed much unity and fellowship with our Friends. We shared not only their religious life, but their home life and their social pleasures. No pains were spared to make our visit a happy one, and we have in our hearts a sense of deep gratitude for the wealth of love and friendship they have given to us. After all we have received we can never be the same again.

Who shall record the things we have learned?—the qualities we have seen and admired in our Friends—their freedom from restraint—their power of adaptation to new conditions—their self-sacrificing work for the church—their splendid educational work in the schools and colleges—their warm-hearted affection; above all, their zeal and devotion to the work of the Kingdom of God? The extension of that Kingdom claims their first allegiance—and ours. Let us remember that there is no conflict between loyalty to Quakerism and devotion to the Kingdom of God. On the contrary, do we not need to realize that loyalty to our Quaker ideals is an essential part of our loyalty to the Kingdom of God?

The Miracle of Rocky Run

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

(Author of "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle")

CHAPTER II

The summer had ended and autumn was upon the fields and the woods with its hues of gold and russet and brown. Rocky Run was in its favorite dress. The corn husker was abroad in the fields, the apples and the pumpkins had been stored away for the winter, the children had thronged the woods in search of the bounteous nuts, the stores were being stocked in a way that betokened the approach of the holiday tide. Thanksgiving was at the door upon the heels of a bounteous ingathering. Nature had done her best for the inhabitants of the valley.

It was a November Sunday morning with a bracing element in the air. The janitor of Rocky Run Meeting had a roaring fire in the furnace, and a warmth of atmosphere within supplemented the welcome of an invigorating air without. It was a good time for a community population to be abroad, bent upon the Master's business. Nine o'clock had come and gone, and only four straggling children graced the Sabbath School room with their presence. It was 9:25 o'clock when the belated Superintendent tapped the bell for silence and announced a hymn which was sung with variations by a portion of the school. During the opening exercises, scholars and teachers (there were only six classes) continued to arrive, until at 9:40, when the classes convened, a total of thirty-one scholars, officers and teachers were in their places.

It was noted that in Mrs. Tomkins' class four girls of the late teen age had taken their seats, while Mr. Ferrell was content to read questions to three of the young men. Joe Bentley was not there. For six weeks his absence had been marked, and during the past two Sabbaths he had not appeared at the meeting for worship. When Charlie inquired of Frank about him, he learned that Joe was usually at home reading or strolling as his fancy dictated. His home training had sufficed to hold him from the path of open sin.

For twenty minutes, so far as could be observed, six classes listened to commonplace expressions about the lesson, and before the clock had struck ten, two of the teachers had taken their seats. On the stroke of ten, the Superintendent's bell was the signal for re-assembling. The Secretary's report showed a total attendance of thirty-seven, and a collection of sixty-nine cents was announced. Two hymns were sung in uncertain fashion, and the Superintendent read four questions from a lesson leaf, and waited while some of the boys and girls found the answers. There was more singing, the Lord's prayer was repeated, and the children were turned out seventeen minutes before the meeting hour.

At 10:35 o'clock, Jabez Dolman, leading elder, William Flanders, minister, Elizabeth Souders, elder, and Martha Letty, minister (retired), took their places on the platform while Brother Flanders commanded quiet by announcing the opening hymn of the meeting service.

To the accompaniment of the organ the congregation sang the entire hymn, followed by the announcement of another hymn "to occupy the time while Friends are gathering," as the minister suggested. Then followed the reading of the 107th Psalm and an extended prayer by William Flanders, in which thanks were uttered for the degree of prosperity that was upon the meeting and the neighborhood, and the Lord was besought to continue His favor and His loving kindness upon the people.

During an occasion of waiting, it was noticed that forty-two persons had gathered at the place of worship, a fact which, despite the presence of 174 names on the Monthly Meeting record book of Rocky Run Meeting, seemed to arouse no spirit of uneasiness.

One of the women overseers arose and repeated a text of Scripture, while Mrs. Tomkins expressed the hope that all would seek to know the will of the Lord in their daily activities. The sermon by Mr. Flanders had as its general theme the loving kindness of the Lord, and, possibly because of the near approach of Thanksgiving, was one of unusual earnestness for Rocky Run Meeting. It dealt largely in abstractions, however, and tended to quietness of spirit on the part of all who were at peace with God.

There was a passing reference to the non-attendance of so many professing Christians, and a suggestion of warning to the young who refused to place themselves in the way of blessing. Friends were urged to do their part in keeping up the meeting by being present at all the services of the church. To the discerning mind the discourse lacked constructive force, and the speaker seldom wandered beyond the generalities of expression. It was noticed that four of the men in the body of the house, overcome by the work of the preceding week, confessed their confidence in the discourse to the extent that they were willing to leave it all to the preacher, while they recuperated by nodding away a part of the hour in blissful repose.

Following another hymn, after which were the announcements and offering, which amounted to $1.19, the company dispersed to their homes, as it was accustomed to do year in and year out, rain or shine, winter or summer. Thus did the members follow the weary round of going to meeting, sitting for an hour and ten minutes and then going home again. With such clock-like precision did the affairs of Rocky Run Meeting proceed, apparently with great satisfaction to the ruling few.

But Charlie and Frank had a different story to tell.

Hardly had they escaped from the house when Frank said: "Charlie, I can begin to see the finish of this meeting, if somebody don't wake up."

"Why, what's up now?"

"Nothin's up, but this whole neighborhood is down in the dumps. See what a fine day this is, and here not a fourth of our members are out. I can count forty-four boys and girls in our meeting between the ages of ten and twenty, and only nine of us were at church today."

"I believe the young folks are doing about as well as the old ones," said Charlie.

"But that isn't saying much for any of us. There are at least twenty other young folks around here who ought to be Quakers, and I believe they would be if we had any life about us. John Lupton told me yesterday that he'd been talking to Joe, and he had made up his mind not to come to Sunday School any more after Christmas."

"Oh, I guess he will, but what can we do?" asked Charlie, with sudden concern.

"Do? We can't do anything. It's up to the meeting to get a hump on it, and make folks think that it really cares something about them. I was at Monthly Meeting last spring and it certainly was a dull place. No more of that for me."

So the weeks went by, some of the young members feeling a lack, while others were blissfully singing their way contentedly to glory. But things had to get worse before they could get better, and the future will reveal how it all came about.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

If hope should die within our breast
Nor bear us upward on its wings,
What dismal gloom—unwelcome guest—
Would strike dismay on our heart strings!
Hope bids us wait; it soothes our fears
When shadows darkly cross our way;
Beyond is brighter, tho' blinding tears
Hide from our view the cheering way!

The Quaker Message Again

BY HARRIET O. COX

Is the Quaker message as much needed by the world now as in former years? If so, why?

If this question were asked of any other body of people than that assembled here, the answers might be many and varied according to their ideas on church federation. But as loyal members of the Society of Friends our answer should be, "Certainly the Quaker message is as much needed now as formerly." As it is our firm conviction that our church has a mission to fulfill, let us consider what problems it has already solved in the betterment of the world. By so doing we may gain help for the solution of our modern problems.

At the time of the founding of Quakerism the prevailing religion was one of forms and rights dealing with an historical Christ rather than with a living Christ. The first leaders believed that the all-important thing was not the form, but an inward repentance and cleansing by the blood of Christ. So they went about their country warning men to repent and to open the doors of their hearts to the living Christ. The essential truth that Quakerism teaches us is to bring our human lives under the transforming power of the Spiritual life.

The spirit of religious intolerance was predominant at that time and the Quakers together with other religious bodies did a great deal to bring about the religious toleration that is enjoyed today in our nation and in other parts of the world.

Another essential feature of early Quakerism was the belief that all men are brothers. This was exemplified very clearly in their treatment of the Indians, both in early colonial days and in more recent years. The Quakers were also very strong in their belief that the black race should not be held as slaves in this country. By their efforts they have helped to bring about a more friendly attitude between the races.

The Quakers in their early history were also known among their acquaintances and friends as people of sterling business integrity and one of the remarks which were frequently made was, "His word is as good as his bond." Every philanthropic movement of early years was heartily supported by the Quakers in word and deed.

By these few facts we see what a tremendous influence Quakerism has had in the making and moulding of a great nation like ours. Now the question arises what should Quakerism stand for today and in what way can it exert an influence over the lives of our citizens and others.

Was there, I wonder, ever a time when men needed more than they do today a personal, intimate, knowledge of God? There is a great deal of uncertainty and unbelief in this age, and a tendency not to recognize or adopt things that cannot be felt, weighed and measured. Was there ever a time when the world so narrowly watched a Christian as at the present day? One nominal Christian who is living an inconsistent life will do more harm to a religious cause in a community than a great many sermons can repair. So many today are substituting the outward profession for the inward experience and thus hindering the cause of truth. Many of the churches are striving to get along with a minimum of spiritual energy, seeing how little spiritual life they can manage with, while they ought to be striving to use the maximum of both in the work of God's Kingdom. What the world needs is a body of persons who stand for the principle that God deals directly with the soul of man and for the belief of direct personal intercourse with God. Why should not our church be that body? Here, surely, is a chance to preach that "Everlasting Gospel" proclaimed by our founder, George Fox.

This is a world of hurry and bustle and with our modern inventions, we probably crowd more into a single day than our forefathers put into a week. Amidst all this hurry and confusion, where may we find time for meditation? A living silence or time for communion with God has always been an essential part of the meeting for worship. What our church needs most of all is how to make silence a living silence. Every individual in order to do this, must learn how to wait upon God.

The newspapers every day are setting before us the horrors of an awful war that is engaged in by one-half of the world. Here is surely an opportunity for the Quakers to stand by their peace principles. In the face of circumstances today, the efforts that have been put forth in the cause of peace may seem futile. How incongruous is the thought of the Palace of Peace standing near the awful scenes of carnage and bloodshed! But may it not stand for us as an ideal that may be attained by agitation and education. Even in our own country some people might say that a Quaker's deeds did not accord with his belief in this matter. But so long as present conditions exist some of our money must needs go to support the army and the navy.

If an early Quaker was noted for his business integrity, is there any logical reason why he cannot be so today? Of course the methods of business have changed and there are some things a man must do to get ahead at all. But what is needed today is a thorough mixture of business and religion. Of what use is a Sunday religion in bringing others to a personal knowledge of the Savior? One of our greatest problems is how are we going to meet and treat the other races which come to our shores. Shall we not still cling to the belief of our ancestors that all men are brothers? We must strive to stand for the ideal of spiritual kinship in our relationship with the other races.

There are many other philanthropic enterprises that need the backing of our church. Let us always strive to lend our aid in any possible way that will further the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Our religion is an ideal religion and in order to realize these ideals we must keep them ever before us and strive with God's help to attain them. We may not be called upon to give the same things as the founders of Quakerism gave, but we are called upon to give our best, without stint and without counting the cost.

FOR THE CHILDREN

When Waldo Wasn't Invited

BY GERTRUDE WALTON

"I'm sure 'bout the party, now. Mr. Orland asked Jesse Davis if he was going to the party. He was in the back of the store and didn't see me when I came in. Jesse didn't answer when he saw me. It must be for Clifford's birthday, today, same as mine. Didn't you see Clifford's mamma come out, just now, and help Mabel Bast and Willfred Stanley carry an ice-cream freezer on the porch? Clifford was up town. He doesn't like me since the day Mr. Benson asked us to run a race and I beat him. He acts awful, at me, since the day I told you about finding the letter. S'pose Clifford told his mamma not to 'nvite me." Mamma Beeson detected a quiver in Waldo's voice, as he gave her the package of sugar he had brought from Orland's store. When she called him, soon afterwards, his eyes had the appearance of tear-water coloring.

"You can start to grandmother's, now. She wishes to have your birthday dinner early, so she can drive you home this afternoon and stay with us tonight. You and grandmother can have a jolly party together. I'll tell you what we'll do, soon, my son. We'll give a party and invite every one that will be at Clifford's this afternoon. We'll surprise them. Return good for evil, won't we?" Mamma Beeson smacked a kiss on Waldo's forehead, as he started down the road to his grandmother's, who lived alone, half a mile from town. He usually ran, in anticipation of the splendid times he always had there, but today there was a "cryie," hurt feeling in his throat. On his birthday, too!

"Every boy will be 'nvited but me. Didn't s'pose Clifford hated me so," and Waldo brushed something from the corner of his eye.

Didn't he hear Clifford's mamma say to Mamma Beeson, a week before, that Clifford wanted a party? Didn't he see the postmaster give small envelopes to Wilfred, Jesse and Mabel, the morning Mrs. Slocum sent him for her mail? He waited, thinking the postmaster would give one to him. On his way home, Waldo found a small envelope, addressed to Roy Price. He saw the envelope drop from Roy's pocket, as he drew out his handkerchief, as Waldo walked behind Roy, Clifford and Willfred. Waldo ran, on tip-toe, overtook them and presented the letter to Roy, who snatched it rudely, saying, "What are you doing here? Trying to hear what we say?" Clifford looked cross, Wilfred said nothing, but the three turned at the first corner as though they wished to get away from him.

Waldo sobbed out the story to Mamma Beeson, when she found him, later, with his face buried in the grass. "Don't see what I've done to make 'em all treat me so. I wasn't trying to hear what they said. I just wanted to s'prise them with the letter. I did hear Clifford say, 'Early Springs.' S'pect Clifford's papa will take the party there in his new automobile." Mamma Beeson consoled him by saying, "Perhaps you imagine their unkindness. You may find that they did not intend to be rude."

After grandmother's jolly dinner, she told Waldo to open the buggy shed for her. What do you suppose he found? There was the realliest, truliest pony, hitched to a cart, ready for Waldo to drive, with grandmother, home! Papa, Mamma, Grandmother's gift to him!

On the delightful drive home, Waldo forgot about the party. He hastened into the house to tell Mamma Beeson about Blossom, the pony's name, and what do you think?

On opening the front door, he jumped back and muttered, "A Party!" Sure enough, a room full of boys and girls, a surprise party, indeed! Then, they all hastened across the street, to Clifford's house. Clifford was to be surprised with this same party, too! Clifford soon came, from a birthday dinner at his Aunt Sally's, six blocks away, where he was going when Waldo saw him up town. How surprised Clifford was! "I thought Waldo was to have a party and didn't 'nvite me. I was telling Roy and Willfred, when you found the letter 'bout the ride papa promised to take me to Early Springs, 'cause I cried 'bout it." "Yes, we didn't want you or Waldo to guess, that day, about the party," Roy interrupted, as Clifford confessed his feelings to Waldo who understood everything now.

"We had a time keeping the 'sprise" from both of them," Jesse agreed, as they sat at the long table Mamma Beeson had spread, after an hour of games at Clifford's. There were two cakes, exactly alike, with eight candles on each, with Waldo's and Clifford's names in red candy. Mamma Beeson baked the cakes, Clifford's mamma made the ice-cream. Afterwards, Waldo took every one at the party on a ride with Blossom!

Praying in the Name of Jesus

BY LAURA A. WINSTON

The proclamation of President Wilson, that October 4th should be observed as a day of prayer for the "peace of the world" was of course noticed by the press throughout our nation. In some of these notices, prayers written for the occasion were quoted by the newspapers and magazines. There was something peculiarly striking about the majority of these prayers that there was no mention of the holy, hallowed, efficacious Name, the Prince of Peace.

What is prayer? What is effectual prayer? What are the conditions with which every suppliant must comply before prayer, according to God's Word, can become efficacious?

We understand from the Scriptures that all earnest, honest prayer is heard, and that all earnest, honest prayer is answered, but not always in the way and at the time we ask and expect. The Infinite Mind could not so comply with the infinite mind—Ilimitable with the limitable.

Our Lord in that wondrous conversation He had with His disciples in the Upper Room that night before He paid the penalty for our sins on the cross, said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name I will do it." In Christ's Name. We pray to the Father in Christ's name, and the Father's love is in the gift, although Christ's hand bestows it. "The Trinity bestows; the Father granting, the Son procuring, the Spirit dispensing." "If ye shall ask in My Name I will do it," not "I will give," but "do it." Here is not simply dispensing of gifts, but the operation of continual help. It is the "conscious weight of His name that gives its energy to faith." It is, as some one has said, that when that name is not predominant in our minds we naturally dwell upon our own unworthiness which brings distrust—the fatal sickness of prayer. Distrust blocks up the way to God.

The Westtown Letter

Selections from an address to the Westtown Old Scholars Association, Eleventh Month 13, 1914.

At every public meeting which this Association has held there has probably been an address by someone connected with the School, which might have borne the title of "The Present Situation," and yet I think it was not until the summer of 1907 that any one made an attempt to present the present situation as it really appeared to us on the inside. In the address delivered that summer in the great tent on the Westtown lawn, Anna Moore Cadbury, who was then "Teacher Anna" and had not accrued all the name which she now bears, spoke to this body right out of the heart of the School.

It was the beginning of the series of heart to heart talks in which one and another of us have laid before this Association the conditions at the School as we saw them from year to year, touching upon our successes and our difficulties, and suggesting to you ways in which we thought you could make the former more pronounced and help to remedy the latter.

Anna Moore Cadbury dwelt especially on the perennial need for intellectual and spiritual uplift, and voiced the sentiment which was widely spreading among thoughtful people at the School and elsewhere that the time had come to give most earnest attention to these matters. From that time on there have been presented to you at the successive meetings not merely academic theories but actual living conditions, and it is wonderful how you have risen to meet the situation which at each time pressed upon us. If a great thought grew up in your minds toward Westtown, all that we at the School had to do was to put it into practical shape and it was realized.

The other evening a group of girls were seated on the floor of my sewing room before the open fire. As I passed by the open door they called to me: "Oh, look here, Master Thomas," they said, "See this stool; we have it bewitched. It just moves all around the floor." And sure enough, there was a small stool sliding around the floor in irregular curves while two girls were kneeling one on each side of it and lightly resting their hands upon it. "We aren't pushing it a bit," they said. "We only think hard about it and off it goes." "What makes it?" But I only smiled at them and remarked, "It is queer, isn't it?" If they could not see that their own statement explained it, they could hardly understand a labored analysis.

Now what your daughters were doing with that footstool, you have been doing with Westtown these many years. You have laid your hands lightly on one problem and another, and have thought hard and earnestly, and, may I add, prayerfully, and things have moved easily and smoothly and quite marvelously on to accomplishment.

A very simple statement will show how your efforts have enabled us to strengthen the faculty.

For the year ending with 1907, when these heart to heart talks began, the salary list for the Principal and Faculty was a little less than $17,000. For the present year it is a little more than $25,000. And the end is not yet. In 1907 not a cent of the Old Scholars' money, or the funds raised by them, went in that direction. This year we have a $2300 income from the W. O. S. A. Teachers' Fund, while $1000 was appropriated from the Committee's half of the Centennial Memorial Fund, and $1800 was granted by the Board of Managers from their half of the same for salaries and other faculty betterment.

As I have been turning my subject over and over in my mind preparing for this address I have not found my chief concern in "The Present Situation" to rest mainly on buildings, or equipments, or physical improvements, or even on the salaries of the Teachers, important as they may be.

The situation made me very thoughtful. "How," I asked myself, "are we using this great plant so generously provided? Is it doing for this splendid group of children who are sent to us all that it can? Are we, the teachers who are conducting the School, depending too much on equipment and outfit, or even on intellectual attainments and efficient management? Are we resting too much on our income, our endowment, our gifts, so that we are in danger of deserving the rebuke of Peter, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou has thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money."

As these questions have come to me I have tried to answer them on behalf of the Faculty, and I think I can say, that never before have I known a more earnest, more diligent, and more serious body of people working at Westtown.

As I think of the concern which has rested most frequently on my mind during the weeks of the present school year, I feel it has not been for buildings, or equipment, or lessons, or even conduct, although these have not been neglected, but it has been the deeper subject of character. I have longed that we might do more than train these our children into good behavior, but that we might touch the secret springs of their lives. I have craved for myself, and for those who are working with me, something of that saving love which counts not percentages, but which goes out toward the one which has strayed as well as toward the ninety and nine which have been safely gathered into the fold. We cannot ask you to contribute to us this saving grace out of any abundance which you may possess, but you may lay your hands gently on this burden of ours, and think earnestly and prayerfully, and I believe we will know the strength to come to us. You will, some of you, bring your messages of love and help and good cheer. You will turn the feet of those toward us who will give us other lessons of life, and we shall all be bound yet closer together in our care for this rich heritage of the Lord which He has thus far so abundantly blessed.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Pasadena, California—The Sunday School bungalow at Pasadena is used during the week by one of the young Friends who conducts a kindergarten for the neighborhood children.

A very interesting three-day Institute was recently held at Pasadena under the management of the Missionary Education Movement. The registration reached nearly one hundred, of whom ten were Friends. These ten have formed a sort of Continuation Committee for their church and hope to organize some Mission Study Classes during the winter.

San Diego, California—On November 29th, President Thomas Newlin, of Whittier College, addressed the conference of the Southern California Older Boys' Y. M. C. A. at San Diego, on "The Challenge of Young Manhood." There were nearly four hundred delegates. President Newlin presided at the Saturday noon banquet preached in the Friends Church on Sabbath morning, and addressed the parents and teachers Sabbath afternoon. Forty-one of the high school boys gave their hearts to Christ during the Conference, and twenty-five promised to join the church upon their return home.

Toronto, Canada—The visiting committee of the Monthly Meeting has been especially active the past month. They have started out to make a thorough visitation of all members and attenders of the meeting. The report at our last Monthly Meeting showed that thirty-eight families had been visited, and the campaign is to continue until all are visited.—Canadian Friend.

Carthage, Indiana—The men's banquet held at the Friends Church, November 13th, was attended by about seventy-five men and was an enjoyable occasion. The pastor, J. Edgar Williams, presided and acted as toastmaster. The Sunday School orchestra furnished the music. After a brief address by Mr. Williams, the Norris Quartette sang "The Wayside Cross." In response to a personal request a number of letters of greeting from various parts of the country were received. One of the most impressive of these letters was from John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia. Ancil E. Ratliff, of Fairmount, Efficiency Secretary for Indiana Yearly Meeting, gave an address of a very practical nature. A bountiful three course dinner was furnished and served by the ladies of the church.

Following a series of banquets for the men of Carthage Friends Church, the third and last of which was held on Friday, November 13, the ladies thought the present an opportune time to give themselves a banquet, which all entered into with a hearty good will. In response to the invitations given out, about one hundred ladies were in attendance at the church at the noon hour on Wednesday, December 2, where a real banquet was served and enjoyed by all present. After the banquet toasts were responded to in a very happy manner by a number of the ladies present, Mrs. J. E. Williams acting as toastmistress. Childhood reminiscences were given in a very humorous style and were much appreciated, as were also other toasts, Lizzie P. Hill closing the very enjoyable program with an original poem. The audience joined in singing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Richmond, Indiana—Inasmuch as Professor E. P. Trueblood and wife are planning to go to Florida for the winter, their friends and neighbors on College Avenue, to the number of about forty, met at their home for a surprise party on the evening of December 7th. The surprise was complete, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Selma, Ohio—Selma Friends have just completed a neat modern parsonage building. George C. Levering and his family, who have been living in Xenia the past year and dividing the time between the two meetings, are now comfortably established at Selma, and pronounce the new parsonage the best yet. It is a seven-room house with furnace, bath, water system and lights. On December 4th in celebration of its completion a pleasant evening was spent at the parsonage by a goodly number of the members. Taffy, pulled by the young people, punch, wafers and apples, together with music and the singing of some good old gospel hymns, contributed to the enjoyment of the evening, and all repaired to their respective homes feeling that the evening had been both pleasant and profitable. The meeting house roof has also been recently repaired and a new lighting system is being installed. Substantial improvement is also noticeable in the attendance and interest at all the meetings.

The lecture course at Selma this year is arranged locally by the teachers of the community, Professor C. E. Lovell and Miss Helen Jobe, in co-operation with the pastor, George C. Levering. The first number was an entertainment by the choir of the Trinity Church of Xenia, which rendered a Thanksgiving cantata. The second number will be given on December 21.

Professor Elbert Russell of Earlham College, and George C. Levering with the stereopticon will give two of the six numbers of the course.

Gate, Oklahoma—Gate Quarterly Meeting was held at Laurence Friends Academy on November 26-28, and was favored by the messages brought by Thomas Williams, of Emporia, Alvin and Laura Coppock, of Cherokee, and John Newkirk, of New Hope, besides our own ministers, most of whom were in attendance.

We appreciate the coming of Jennie Stanley Lewis to our meeting. She is Superintendent of the Home Mission department, which is to co-operate with the Foreign Mission and Evangelistic Committees in the every-member canvass, an effort in the interest of church growth.

The academy is prospering under the management of Miss Mabel Salman. The Christian spirit is manifested in governing the school. Timely talks by Laura and Alvin Coppock were enjoyed by the students on Monday morning.

Lawrence, Kansas—The local Friends Church at Lawrence, Kansas, purchased a down town church some seven years ago, and have been worshiping in that building on Kentucky Street since, until on the 29th of November, when they moved back into the Yearly Meeting house on Delaware Street, which will be their future church home. A Sunday-school rally and reception for their new pastors, W. P. and A. C. Haworth, was had at the church on Friday evening, the 27th. A number of citizens residing in that part of the city were present at the gathering, with a general attendance of the membership of the meeting. A nice social time was had with a short appropriate program by the children and young people followed with refreshments.

A feeling of satisfaction pervaded the gathering, and many were the remarks of joy at getting back to the old church home, all of which augurs well for the future interests of the church.

Paonia, Colorado—On the evening of the 27th of November, a reception was held for our new pastor, P. D. Guyer, and his family. The membership was well represented and everyone had a delightful time.

Watseka, Illinois—Friends at Watseka began a series of meetings on November 29th. Clyde Watson of Mooresville, Indiana, is assisting in the meetings as singer, while Arthur Hammond, the pastor, is doing the preaching. Good interest is being manifested, but the weather has been unfavorable for a large attendance.

PERSONAL MENTION

Sarah H. Hoge, a prominent member of Baltimore Yearly Meeting and President of the Virginia W. C. T. U., has been re-elected Assistant Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

Mary Wood, for a number of years connected with the Friends' Mission at Nanking and Luho, China, has reached Pasadena, and is resting at the home of her brother, Henry Wood.

Professor Henry C. Fellow, who is County Superintendent of Schools in Beaver County, Oklahoma, is having a book of his poems published entitled "Rhymes of Yesteryear." It will be ready for holiday distribution.

Charles E. Tebbetts, Harry R. Keates, Sarah H. Hoge and S. E. Nicholson were the Friends attending the annual meeting of the Executive Committee and Commissions of the Federal Council of Churches, in session at Richmond, Virginia, last week.

J. W. Huddleston and wife, of the Second Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, have located in Pasadena, California, for the winter. The former is a member of the famous Clarion Quartette of prohibition singers, and before the election was engaged in a strenuous campaign in the state of Washington.

Mercer Brown of Spiceland, Indiana, was seriously injured December 7th, when his wagon loaded with coal broke through a rotten culvert near Dunreith. Three ribs were broken and one lung injured, but notwithstanding the severity of the hurt and his advanced age (seventy-nine years), he appears in a fair way to recover.

Harry R. Keates, of Des Moines, Iowa, spent Sabbath, December 6th, with his old charge at South Eighth Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, and preached a strong sermon. He was on his way to Richmond, Virginia, to attend the sessions of the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches, and to New York to consult with the Home Mission Council.

A. F. N. Hambleton has been elected President of the Federated Men's Leagues of the Evangelical churches of Pasadena, California. He is also President of the directors of the Japanese Federated Mission, an institution which has grown out of the merging more than a year ago of two missions carried on in the city, one by Friends and the other by Congregationalists. Two other denominations have joined the Federation. There is an encouraging increase in the members of the night school and the Japanese Union Church, and in the residents in the dormitory. A missionary returned from Japan is employed as special worker among women and children.

FROM ANNA B. THOMAS

A letter to the editor from Anna B. Thomas, who is in England this year with her daughter, Dr. Henrietta Thomas, says: "Henrietta and I feel very far away and our whole time seems taken up with the war or rather with the relief work. Henrietta has just come back last night (November 23) from a fourth visit to Germany, which she made to Munich and Berlin, and brought back several English girls who were stranded there. I am sorry to say that she found the feeling against England increasingly bitter, and I fear there is at present not much hope of peace propositions originating either in Germany or England."

It is well known that Anna and Henrietta Thomas are giving their whole time practically to the work of the society that has been organized to care for unfortunate aliens, Germans and Austrians, who are stranded in England, and also to bringing back English women and girls from Germany and Austria. THE AMERICAN FRIEND recently forwarded a draft for $120.00, for this work, sent in by Friends in this country. We have on hands $5.00 more contributed by a Friend of Indiana Yearly Meeting, which we will send soon, together with any other amounts that may be received.

LATEST FROM NATHAN FRAME

A letter from Esther Frame at Washington City, under date of December 9, says that Nathan is sinking slowly. He suffers greatly and is unable to take solid food. The physician feels that the end is not far off. He is ready to go when the Lord shall call him. Esther is nervously prostrated, but is wonderfully sustained by power Divine. These Friends ask the prayers of all that they may continue to be sustained in these trying days. We are sure that our readers will remember this request and act upon it daily.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND takes the liberty of suggesting that any contributions of money to help in this time of need can be sent to Dr. David W. Dennis of Richmond, Indiana, who heads a Committee of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting to receive funds for this purpose.

DAY OF PRAYER

The Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions in the United States has fixed Friday, January 8, 1915, as a day of united prayer for woman's foreign missionary work, and suggests the following program to be used in union meetings in every town and city of the land. The program has been prepared by Charlotte E. Vickers of our own denomination, president of the Women's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends, and also President of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions.

Topics for Prayer

General subjects for the day—

For nations at war.

That the love of Jesus may overcome the strife.

That the social forces may be recognized and made effective in Christian missions.

"Christ for every life and all of life"
10 a.m.—Ephesians i. 15-21, Romans xii. 1-8.

Prayer for peace.

Prayer for the church at home; a deeper realization of responsibility and opportunity; every member redeemed to have a part in giving the gospel of peace through Jesus Christ to all the world.

11 a.m.—Isaiah lix. 8-11-16, John v. 1-9. Praise for the great company of women who publish good tidings.

Prayer for the millions of Christian women who are not interested in missions.

Prayer for the young women that they may become a mighty force in this great work.

Prayer for the "child in the midst" both at home and abroad.

Box luncheon.—Luke iv. 13.

2 p.m.—Isaiah lviii. 6-12, Luke vii. 19-23.

Processional of young women.

Hymn: "Coming, coming, yes, they are."

Prayer for evangelistic work in the mission fields.

Prayer for the Educational, Medical and Industrial work, that through these social forces Christ may be manifest and souls won to Him that efficient Christian workers may be trained.

An offering, with special music, is suggested.

3 p.m.—Consecration hour.

Ephesians iii. 13-21, I. Chronicles xxix. 1-9.

A personal giving of oneself to the Lord Jesus Christ, and His service of love.

Prayer for a great quickening of true faith in the hearts of the workers on the field.

Close with consecration hymn—

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee."

Benediction.

Motto—Every woman in the church an active member of the Society.

Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest.—Isaiah lxii. 6, 7.

GOLDEN WEDDING

Josiah W. Winslow and Anna J. Frazer were married according to the custom of Friends at Cedar Creek Friends meeting near Salem, Iowa, October 13, 1864. They celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on the 13th of October, 1914, at their home at Huntington Park, California. Their children and grandchildren were all present except their son, Julius M. Winslow, and family, of Elizabeth, New Jersey.

During the day about two hundred of their friends and relatives were present from Whittier, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Long Beach, Santa Ana, Orange, Alamitos, El Modena and Huntington Park to congratulate them. Among these were the officers, teachers and students of the training school, who came in a body, led by President William P. Pinkham and wife. A short program was rendered by the school and others, a portion of scripture was read and prayer was offered by William Pinkham. There was a short talk by R. Esther Smith about Anna J. Winslow's faithful work as a minister.

Edward C. Cook read the marriage certificate of fifty years ago, which had been signed by forty-four witnesses, of whom only about one-fifth are now living. Refreshments were served by their three granddaughters. Many beautiful and useful presents were received by them, together with a nice little sum of money. About sixty letters and postals were received from persons who were not able to be present. Their address is now 125 North Templeton Street, Huntington Park, Los Angeles County, California.

FARM LANDS

Those interested in Farm lands in Canada, near Friends' Church, should correspond with E. HOWARD, Adanac, Sask., Canada.

Visitors to Washington, D. C., preferring lodgings in a Friend's home near Friends' Church (Orthodox), accommodated. Every convenience; excellent board near. Cars direct from Union Station. C. H. HALL, 1117 Lamont St., N. W.

CEDAR CREEK, IOWA

Sunday, November 22, 1914, will be a day long remembered in the history of the Cedar Creek Friends Church on account of the dedication of the new church building to the service of God. There was the largest attendance at the Sunday School in the history of the church, 285 being present.

The large auditorium on the first floor, when the folding doors are opened, is 40 x 50 feet, and this space was packed full, as the seats were placed close together and all available space was filled with seats.

The service opened with an inspiring song service led by Elgie L. McCargar, evangelist, of Oskaloosa. The large audience, standing with heads bowed, was led in an impressive prayer by Viola Smith, pastor of Salem Friends Church.

The dedicatory sermon was preached by Harry R. Keates of Des Moines, Superintendent of Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends.

After impressively reading the account of the dedication of the temple, recorded in the seventh chapter of II Chronicles, an impressive spirit-filled sermon was preached from Isaiah, 6th chapter, 1 to 8 verses. The sermon was highly commended by every one present.

With the members of the Friends Church standing before the Lord, they were solemnly admonished to a closer walk with God, a deeper consecration to His service. Then the many members present from our sister churches were also asked to stand with us and they too were urged to be faithful to the Lord. Then with the entire audience reverently standing in hushed attention, Mr. Keates presented the building to the Lord for His service.

Elgie L. McCargar began a series of meetings at this time, preaching a splendid sermon at 7:30 p. m. Sunday on "What Kind of a House Are You Building for the Lord?" A large audience was present, necessitating the opening of the folding doors that we might have additional room.—Iowa Paper.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 27

Subject—Jesus, the World's Savior and King. (Review Lesson—Reading Lesson only. II Cor. 5: 14-21.)

Golden Text—Far be it from me to glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Gal. 6: 14.

Except upon the occasion of the temperance lesson, the entire quarter has been devoted to the last days of the life of Jesus, and concerns His death, resurrection and ascension. These form the culmination of this wonderful life, without which His mission as the Savior of the world would have been incomplete. The cross is the midway event of human history. Let the teacher assign to each pupil the recital of some central truth from one of the lessons of the quarter which are as follows:

- I. Christ Anointed for Burial.—Mark 14: 1-11.
- II. The Last Supper.—Mark 14: 12-25.
- III. In the Garden of Gethsemane.—Mark 14: 32-42.
- IV. Jesus and Judas.—Matthew 26: 14-25; 47-50; 27: 3-10.
- V. Arrest and Trial of Jesus.—Matt. 26: 57-68.
- VI. Sowing and Reaping.—Gal. 6: 1-10.
- VII. Jesus and Peter.—Mark 14: 27-31, 53, 54, 66-72.
- VIII. Jesus and Pilate.—Luke 23: 13-25.
- IX. Christ Crucified.—Mark 15: 22-39.
- X. Christ Risen from the Dead.—Mark 16: 1-8; Matt. 28: 11-15.
- XI. The Great Commission.—Matt. 28: 16-20; Luke 24: 36-49.
- XII. The Ascension.—Luke 24: 50-53; Acts 1: 1-11.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 27

Topic—This Year and All Years for Christ. Psalms 90: 1-17. (New Year's Meeting.)

It is the time of new resolutions. It ought to be the time of new doing.

The year 1915 will be devoted to the services of Christ not so much by virtue of resolutions formed on a given day, as because of a determination renewed every day to live this day for Christ.

His hands will be established whose heart purposes daily to do the will of Jehovah.

The Christian life is an every day affair, with the emphasis upon the every.

The young man who marries does not expect one day to be a husband and the next to be unfaithful; no more ought any professing Christian to be satisfied with an up and down inconsistent religious life.

All days belong to the Lord, and they are ours only to be used in His service.

If with this new year (may it become a year of peace and blessing to the world) Christian Endeavorers can learn the great lesson of constancy in life and service, to be and to do what God would have them to be and to do, a mighty step upward will have been taken in the Christian church.

May this not be the lesson of this New Year's day?

Married

McCown-Longshore—At the home of the bride's parents at Watseka, Illinois, on November 26, 1914, Ernest McCown of Champaign, Illinois, to Helen Longshore, Arthur Hammond officiating.

McCracken-Hinshaw—At the home of the bride's parents, November 26, 1914, Nelson McCracken and Velma Hinshaw, L. Clarkson Hinshaw of Wichita, Kansas, officiating. These young friends are members of Rose Hill Monthly Meeting.

Plankael-Longshore—At the home of the bride's parents at Watseka, Illinois, November 26, 1914, Fay Plankael to Edna Longshore, both of Watseka, Arthur Hammond officiating.

Died

Perisho—Lydia Anna Perisho, daughter of Benjamin and Mary Chappell, was born January 14, 1837, in the limits of Walnut Ridge Quarterly Meeting, Hancock County, Indiana, and died at her home in Carmel, Indiana, November 25, 1914, aged 77 years 10 months and 11 days. She was married to Joshua M. Perisho in 1854. She was converted in childhood and was a regular attendant at all meetings for worship and discipline, taking an active part therein. She was appointed an elder at the age of 27, and held that office continuously for fifty years. She filled various positions of responsibility in the church, several times as traveling companions to visiting ministers, and at the time of her death was the head of the Carmel Meeting. She was characterized for her hospitality and had great delight in entertaining traveling friends. Like a shock of corn fully ripe, she has been gathered home. Four children survive her, among whom is President Elwood C. Perisho of the South Dakota College. Many persons, not only among her relatives but among others, feel a deep sense of personal loss at her death.

The Bells of Christmas

BY DENIS A. McCARTHY

They come to me at Christmas—
The dreams of other years,
Their tender touch unsealing
The fount of joy and tears;
And grief with joy commingled
Within my bosom swells
When calling, calling, calling,
I hear the Christmas bells!

The merry bells of Christmas,
The cheery bells of Christmas,
How magical their voices,
The happy Christmas bells!

They come to me at Christmas—
Old ghosts from out the past,
The gracious, God-sent friendships
Whose bonds still hold me fast.
They fill with forms and faces
My spirit's silent cells—
The dreams that come at Christmas
Responsive to the bells.

The merry bells of Christmas,
The cheery bells of Christmas,
They bring me back old friendships,
The happy Christmas bells!

He comes to me at Christmas—
The Man Who died for men—
A tiny, tender Baby,
He comes to me again.
And as I kneel before Him,
The faith within me wells,
That stirred when'er in childhood
I heard the Christmas bells.

O joyful bells of Christmas!
O happy bells of Christmas!
My faith in God you strengthen,
O blessed Christmas bells!

—The Congregationalist.

Room for the Christ-Child

The blasts of winter are fierce and cold,
The snow lies deep over hill and wold,
But a star shines bright through the deepening gloom—
Room for the Christ-child, room!

Where a man's distrust and his greed for gain
Have frozen the floods of tender rain,
Till never a flower of hope can bloom—
Room for the Christ-child, room!

In homes that deepest griefs have borne,
Mid silent forms of those that mourn,
In the shadows that gather around the tomb—
Room for the Christ-child, room!

Where nations are warring, life for life,
And a cry rings out from the fearful strife,
As a dying people sinks to its doom—
Room for the Christ-child, room!

Room for the shepherds of Bethlehem,
Room for the angels who sang to them,
Room for the Light, in the wintry gloom—
Room for the Christ-child, room!

—The Congregationalist.

The American Friend

Judged by additions to the subscription list, THE AMERICAN FRIEND has had a fairly prosperous year. We close the year with a net gain of more than 700 as compared with the record a year ago. A number of these were secured at a special price for a short term, with little profit to the Board this year, but there is hope that most of these will remain as permanent subscribers at the regular rates.

Judged by the testimonies of commendation which are reaching the office continually, the paper has had a fairly satisfactory year. Conscious as the management has been that the periodical has fallen far short of our ideals, we have been unable to understand why so little of real criticism should have reached the editor's desk. But the many words of commendation are to the management like the shadow of a rock in a weary land, and furnish the strongest possible incentive to make the paper far better still during the coming year.

While the paper has gained steadily during the past two years both in circulation and apparently in favor with Friends generally, there are many problems still unsolved.

Taking into account the fact that THE AMERICAN FRIEND is now the creature of the Five Years Meeting, the ease with which the great majority of Friends' families continue to ignore their responsibility to this periodical of the church is surprising. Possibly we shall be under the necessity of raising and pressing the issue of denominational loyalty before the problem of adequate patronage is fully solved.

Until the patronage is sufficient to put THE AMERICAN FRIEND upon a paying basis, Friends must continually be reminded that failure to subscribe for the paper as well as an order to discontinue it means that other people must pay more than their share in meeting the deficiency. The situation is not hopeless by any means, as is evidenced by the continued growth in circulation, but vigorous pressure will have to be continued until Friends generally are better educated in the line of their responsibility toward this product of the church.

It is clear to the management that the responsibility for this education must continue to lie with pastors—where there are pastors—and with a few leading Friends elsewhere. An increasing number have interested themselves the past year in a splendid way, and the results are apparent in the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

It is evident, however, that this work cannot be turned over to others, generally speaking. In other denominations it is a part of the duties of the pastor to look after the subscription end of the denominational paper. No one else is so constantly visiting the entire membership, and no one else, therefore, has such opportunity to impress the value of the paper upon negligent families. Where there is no pastor, this service naturally will fall upon some prominent member of the pastoral committee.

We are planning to make THE AMERICAN FRIEND still better during 1915, and we trust more serviceable to the church. To the extent that this periodical can be built up as a thoroughly representative agency of the Society of Friends, will every local meeting, and every Yearly Meeting and the denomination as a whole feel the uplift of its influence, and be stronger and more efficient because of its messages.

Economy

BY SUSIE M. BEST

There's room for you, there's room for me,
Else why should either of us be?
Your task is there and mine is here,
And each is needed in his sphere.
Your work I know I could not do,
In mine you'd fail; so it is true
There's room for you, there's room for me,
And this is why we each must be.

The Meaning of the Christmas Season

It is a far cry from the spirit of that first Christmas choral that was sounded forth to the world above the uplands about Bethlehem of Judea, to the materialistic and self-indulgent spirit that characterizes the ordinary Christmas observances of the present century. At a time when all Christendom ought to be breathing more deeply of the atmosphere in which that first anthem was sung by the heavenly chorus, it may be questioned without any tendency toward pessimism whether or not the real Christ spirit is yet the dominant note of the Christmas tide.

The incongruity of the bloody strife now waging on the European continent and this season of proverbial good cheer that is now upon the world will be readily apparent to the most skeptical and unbelieving. There can be no agreement between Bethlehem and the armaments of the marching millions. It is a discordant note that has been struck against the sounding board of this anniversary of the babe lying in swaddling clothes in that Judean manger.

The gospel of the Son of God reaches both Godward and manward. It is the connecting link between two worlds. On that far-away night when the open fields became the concert hall of the celestial choir, the white-robed songsters proclaimed

"Glory to God in the highest,

And on earth peace among men of good will."

In this modern year of 1914, when the avenging spirit of hate is abroad in the earth, militarism is robbing earth of its promised blessing by proclaiming allegiance to Jehovah in the highest and war to the inhabitants of earth.

The world has yet to learn that neither nations nor the organisms of human society in any relationship are exempt from the operations of the statutes of Jehovah. Business, politics, government are amenable to the moral law, no less than the individual units of human society, and Christmas will not have served its highest purpose until men everywhere have been taught this fundamental lesson. The world must get away from its worship of might and pay tribute at the shrine of righteousness; it must cease condoning the errors of the social order, while condemning the same transgressions in the individual; it must be made to see that praise to God is incompatible with injustice and oppression and the spirit of hate on earth.

God purposed to do big things for the world when because of His transcendent love He sent His only Son in the flesh that He might redeem humanity from its sins. The coming of Jesus was God's best expression of the solicitude which He had for His noblest creation. How little have we understood His mission, if after nineteen hundred years, our best expression of the meaning of His birth is found in the lavish display of materialistic beneficence! How far short of His ideals have we fallen, if the soul of our boasted Christian civilization can be content with armed camps and hostile fleets and selfish greed and unjust oppression!

The religion which Jesus came to establish is the religion of salvation now and salvation eternally. It furnishes both a rule of conduct for the individual and a code of morals for the nations; it is a criterion for the government of business and is the fundamental authority for the doctrine that "there is but one morality between man and man" in every relationship of the social body.

The season of Christmas is the season of hope as well as of good cheer. Since the Son of Man walked the earth in bodily form the type of the strong, sincere, obedient man has never been wholly obscured. In the power of His truth men and women have rotted in prison, have been fed to the flames, have been hung on the gibbet, have faced cold and heat and hunger and scorn and suffering of every kind that they might maintain the honor of the Cross and the majesty of His kingly name.

The day has come when the church must start a crusade against the abominable distortions of the religion of Christ, whether in individual or civic life, whether in national or international relationships. Henceforth the hope of brotherhood must become a living hope, for when the heaven-born Prince of Peace came to Bethlehem, He was destined to reign until all enemies of righteousness should be put under his feet.

The Christmas season, therefore, is not an occasion of feasting and self-gratification. Rather it marks an epoch in the world task of building the everlasting kingdom of God among men.

Where Shall Friends Lay Emphasis the Coming Year?

A Symposium

BY JOHN PENNINGTON

Our greatest achievements as a church have been recorded when the fundamental doctrines of the gospel have been made prominent. The dis-unity and cleavage in the church have been along the lines of false doctrines, promulgated by those in high authority, and condoned by those who held men's persons in admonition.

Stephen Grillet says, "Calmly looking back on the characteristics of early Quakerism as it regards the comprehensiveness of its Christian principles, the completeness of its standards of Christian practice, and the spirit of its Christian discipline, and viewing them in connection with the universal church of professing Christendom, it appears to be a simple historical fact, that wherever, in any direction, there has been real progress—any onward movement—it has been towards the position occupied by the early Friends—George Fox and his associates."

He clearly states this "position" as follows: "They had no new Gospel to proclaim. In common with other orthodox professors of the Christian name, they most fully recognized the Divine inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures, and thoroughly believed in all that is revealed therein concerning the unity of the God-head,—The Father, Son and Holy Ghost,—one God over all, blessed forever. They unhesitatingly held the utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall, the pre-existence and incarnation of the Son of God; the proper eternal Deity and the real manhood of the Lord Jesus Christ; the need and efficacy of His propitiatory sacrifice as an atonement or expiation for the sins of mankind; His mediatorial intercession and reign; the forgiveness and reconciliation of the repenting sinner, and the preservation, guidance, and sanctification of the believer in Jesus; the immortality of the soul; the resurrection and the final judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ; the eternal blessedness of the righteous and the eternal punishment of the wicked."

Place the emphasis on these foundation truths and our advance is assured; neglect them and the day of our decline is at hand.

BY GEORGE C. LEVERING

As I have studied conditions in the Friends Church and outside of it, I have been struck with the splendid powers which are stored up in the lives and characters of our people. Our boys make the finest athletes, the best lawyers, doctors, merchants, to be found anywhere. The Christian Associations and other organizations lay us under heavy toll for many splendidly effective workers. Several of the best pastors in my acquaintance, now making good in large churches of other denominations, are proud of their Quaker ancestry. The simple, sincere, upright and downright principles of Friends have told powerfully in the development of men and women of power and poise, and have made us all proud to be Quakers.

And now, O that this power might be effectively harnessed to the accomplishment of the great tasks which are before us and all about us!

And how is this to be done? By organization, co-operation, conservation, vision. And what are the ends to be sought? Spiritual service to the community and a clear, strong spiritual message to the world beyond.

We need more and closer organization which means more voluntary subordination and obedience to the vision of our leaders. We are too much afraid of organization, of system, of plan in our work. Sometimes we fear that our creaturely planning may crowd out the liberty of the spirit's leading. We need to realize that God has given us our faculties to be used and that once we have His clear command, He expects us to work out some of the details ourselves.

We need more active co-operation with one another and with other good people about us. The efficiency of any organization depends entirely upon the active co-operation of its members. If 1915 can witness the active co-operation of all Friends in some one great task, oh what a glorious year it will be!

One task before us is really to touch the lives of all the men, women and children of our communities with the finger of God. For this let us organize and plan and co-operate with any and all who will help. And let us not forget, first, last and all the time, to depend absolutely upon the wisdom and power of God.

BY ELIZA ARMSTRONG COX

A definite denominational purpose is indispensable to effective service. First, we must be settled into a quiet, unshaken faith in God, in His Son, in the Holy Spirit, in the Bible. We have put in time enough perhaps in learning about God, about Christ, about the Bible. We should "receive Him." We should study the Bible to learn God's will for the world, for the church and—for myself. The by-products of Christianity are good, but they are not Christianity and fail in the supreme test. The church must be a light, not a reflector; must have salt within itself.

It should be thoroughly aroused to make Christ known to the world for a witness. The preaching should strike deep and be in truth the message of God. Sin is rebellion against God. There is a terrible penalty for it. We are not commissioned to tone down this great fact. Fellowship with God here may mean sacrifice and suffering; it also means eating of the tree of life and living forever.

Second, our schools should lead their pupils to understand that this is their opportunity to prepare for efficient service in the kingdom of God. A soldier must have a devoted heart, a level head and a strong body. Then, aggressiveness; aggressiveness! Push out! Let our generals plan large things and then lead out in a masterly manner!

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

Some Christmas Thoughts

BY GEORGE D. WEEKS

Matthew 2: 11: "And opening their treasures they offered unto Him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh."

Again we have come to the time of year that is not only full of gladness and joy but ought to be, in a real sense, a time which provokes serious thinking and creates deep and lasting convictions.

The text announces the beginning of the custom of giving gifts at Christmas time. From that memorable day to the present, a portion of the world has observed, more or less faithfully, the Christmas season by giving presents to friends and loved ones. While it is a beautiful and valuable practice, yet because of its continued repetition it has become so conventionalized that the day has almost entirely lost its meaning to thousands of individuals. Even professed Christians pass hurriedly through this glad season with altogether too little thought about the real things that are contained in the day and the teachings to be drawn from it.

The one essential to a proper observance of Christmas is a heartfelt experience of the indwelling Christ. Right here a very positive and clear distinction should be made between the much talked of inner light and the indwelling Christ. The inner light is that gift to every man, which, if properly and carefully followed, will lead him to open his heart's door and invite the Christ, who is on the outside, to come in and take up His permanent abode. Christ is not the inner light until He becomes such by virtue of the invitation extended by the individual. The inner light leads to the Christ who then becomes a great Light, illuminating the whole being and the inner light is then as much overshadowed as the arch light is dimmed by the noonday sun.

When this experience is realized the real meaning of Christmas joy is experienced and this joy is no greater, nor more exuberant at this time of year than during the stress and heat of the long summer days. Our gifts will be prompted, not by mere human love, but by a love that is as enduring as God and as rich as the wealth of heaven. No one can properly observe Christmas until he has received into his heart, as an abiding guest, the greatest Gift of God.

While it seems pessimistic to say it, yet it is true, that much so-called Christianity these days is conventional without the life. This is abundantly proven by the terrible events in Europe today. Much is being said about the colossal failure of Christianity, yet it is agreed by all right minded people that real Christianity is not on trial. The churches of Europe have had much beautiful form, splendid cathedrals, fine equipment and great preachers, but the real indwelling power has been lacking. As the wise men of old, they poured out their gifts of gold until it became a matter of form.

The gift that the God of heaven is longing for is the surrendered life, the life that pours itself out in blessed service for lost, suffering humanity.

A four-story apartment was burning. Suddenly at one of the upper windows a woman appeared, the way of escape was cut off except through the window. The firemen pushed up a ladder but it was five feet too short. Just in the moment of despair a burly policeman stepped forward and said, "Put the ladder on my shoulder," thus he made possible the escape of the woman from certain death. So God is asking His people today to carry the ladder of salvation to men and women who are about to perish in flames of sin and despair. When the church really possesses the indwelling Christ, then it may very profitably say to the bleeding world, as Peter and John said to the beggar, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee."

THE CHRISTMAS TIDE

Ring! Ring! ye bells the story,
In tones exultant ring,
Till Christ the King of Glory
O'er all the world is king.
Till kindreds far shall own him
Their Lord in all their ways,
And in their hearts en throne him
Who rules through endless days.—Selected.

Unto You is Born a Savior

In this word, "Savior," lies the sweetest secret of our Christmas joy. Nothing short of a message that "He shall save his people from their sins" would be good news to human hearts. But the assurance that there is pardon for sin, and that God graciously gives this pardon through his Son Jesus Christ is sufficient to make the heart thrill with joy.

All our cradle songs are sweeter
For the song the angels raised,
When the mountain caught the echo,
And the dreaming valleys praised.
Christ is born! Exultant nations,
Send the tidings wide and far,
Christ is born! The world is throbbing
To the pulse-beat of his star. —Ex.

The Message of Christmas

Don't let Santa Claus the myth have the place belonging to the real Christ.

The thing that is greatest in the world is Christianity; but at its heart there is a babe, a cradle and a mother's love.

If you have a pleasant thought in your soul, speak it out. Show the world that you are near of kin to Bethlehem and its angels.

The missionaries of the cross are the shepherds who have heard the angelic song, have looked into the Redeemer's cradle, and have gone to "make known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child."

Do not think that the safety of the world lies in battleships. It is a mistake. It lies in the shelter of the Christmas tree. Uproot from the earth that miracle of childish joy and wonderment and all the blessed things it stands for, and all the navies of the nations will not save it from chaos and decay.

The wheels of industry will be stilled today. A thousand mills will be as silent as the star above the Bethlehem manger. The workmen will be by their own firesides rejoicing in the fellowship of domestic love. Industry halts before the manger, and listens to carols from celestial lips. Labor lays down its tools, takes up the song, and forgets the hum and crash of mighty machinery. Wealth bends with a gift for the needy and a word of cheer for the lowly. It is not science that brings humanity together today. It is not the floating arsenals of the sea, it is not conferences at The Hague, nor the "parliament of man." A "little child" has led them.—United Presbyterian.

The Historical Roots of Quakerism

BY ELBERT RUSSELL

III. THE ANABAPTISTS

The Anabaptists were the radical wing of the Reformation movement in Switzerland. Luther and Zwingli, the leaders of the German and Swiss Reformation, were content to reform the historical church by the Bible. Luther maintained vigorously that everything in the Catholic Church which was not directly opposed to Scripture might be kept. This was a conservative attitude and in consequence much was retained in the Lutheran and Swiss churches for which no warrant could be found in the New Testament. The Anabaptists wished to go further than the Reformers and to reconstruct the church wholly by the New Testament. Some of the earlier Anabaptists were ready to go as far as the mystics, and put personal revelation and experience above the letter of Scripture as the ultimate authority.

Hans Denck, who was one of the greatest of the group of scholars who started the Anabaptist movement, says: "The Holy Scriptures I esteem above human treasures, but not so highly as the Word of God, which is living, powerful, and eternal, and pure from the elements of this world, since it is God Himself, Spirit and not letter, written without pen and paper, so that it can never be blotted out. Therefore, blessedness is not bound up in Scripture, however useful and good it may always be in that direction. It is not possible for Scripture to make better a bad heart; but a good heart is bettered by all things." (Studies in Mystical Religion, R. M. Jones, p. 386.) On the other hand, some of the later developments of the movement, such as the Mennonites and German Baptists, took the New Testament very literally and tried to follow it as if it were a code of rules. All the Anabaptist leaders differed from Luther and his fellow reformers over the relation of church and state. They insisted on a church free from political authority.

The Anabaptist movement spread throughout Northern Europe and was everywhere repressed by violent persecution. Catholic and Protestant joined in the effort to exterminate them. The radical character of Anabaptism, its wide extent, and the persecutions which drove it into hiding and practically exterminated it in many countries, prevented the growth of a single type of organization and belief. But all these sects had certain general conceptions in common.

They insisted, first of all, that religion must be a genuine personal experience, the result of one's own faith and free choice. In this regard they seized upon the matter of baptism as fundamental and typical. For infant baptism—the only baptism administered in Catholic countries—they could find no warrant in the Bible. It had for them no religious value, because the recipient was unconscious. It was a rite performed upon one without his knowledge or choice, and so savored of a magic performance. The first Anabaptists, all of whom had been baptized in infancy under the Catholic Church, refused to recognize it as having any value and were rebaptized on confession of faith. This gave them their nickname Anabaptists, or Re-baptizers. The second generation were, of course, baptized but once. Consequently the name Baptist was gradually substituted for the older name, which had lost its significance.

Just as they insisted that baptism could have no efficacy except as the sign of a personal religious experience, so they rejected the prevalent idea that priestly authority or church rites could accomplish any spiritual change or that they possessed any value apart from the spiritual and moral attitude of the individual. Some insisted that the distinction between clergy and laity was only a distinction of gifts.

The Anabaptists were noted for the purity and simplicity of their lives, and for their brotherly spirit and interest in social reform. With some of the millenarian branches the passion for social changes was very strong and led in a few cases, as among the Anabaptists at Muster, to very great excesses. As a natural consequence of the attempt to reproduce the pattern of New Testament Christianity somewhat literally, they were all opposed to fasts, oaths, tithes, and military service, and capital punishment.

One of the most important later developments of the Anabaptist movement was the revival of the Anabaptists under Menno Simons in Holland, after the sect had been almost destroyed by persecution. In 1533 Simons "resolved to organize the scattered forces of the great movement into a solid society, on the fundamental spiritual truths revealed in Scripture. He opposed all oaths, all war, and every form of capital punishment. He utterly refused to have anything to do with a salaried ministry; he insisted on personal faith, a birth from above, and a new life in Christ as necessary conditions of membership in a Christian Church, and he made a complete separation of church and state." (Studies in Mystical Religion.)

His followers were called Mennonites. On both of his visits to Holland George Fox came in contact with Mennonites, but this was too late in his life for them to have any part in shaping his ideas and practices. But for a century before Fox began preaching, Mennonites had been seeking an asylum in England from the persecuting powers of the continent. They must have exercised a considerable influence, along with other Baptist sects, upon the people from whom the first Friends came. The similarity between Simons' views and those of Friends cannot be accidental or wholly due to the similarity between the Mennonites and the English Baptists.

The most direct and powerful Anabaptist influence upon the Society of Friends, however, came through the contact of George Fox with the English Baptists. Persecution very early drove Anabaptists from Holland and Germany into England. At first it is hard to distinguish them in the contemporary records from the remnants of the Lollards, but after 1534, they were pretty well known as a separate sect. In England they kept the general characteristics of their continental brethren. They have the honor of being the first advocates of an independent church and of entire religious toleration in England. In 1614 Leonard Busher, who seems to have been a member of a Baptist congregation in London, published a Plea for Liberty of Conscience.

"Persecution is a work well-pleasing to all false prophets and bishops," he says, "but it is contrary to the mind of Christ, who came not to judge and destroy men's lives, but to save them. And, though some men and women believe not at the first hour, yet may they at the eleventh hour, if they be not persecuted to death before. And no king or bishop can or is able to command faith. That is the gift of God, who worketh in us both the will and the deed of His own good pleasure. Set him not a day, therefore, in which, if His creature hear not, and believe not, you will imprison and burn him. . . . As kings and bishops cannot command the wind, so they cannot command faith; and, as the wind bloweth where it listeth, so is every man that is born of the Spirit. You may force men to church against their consciences, but they will believe as they did before they came there." (Mason, Life of Milton.)

The English Baptists allowed laymen and women to preach. Their "she-preachers" were a wonder and a byword throughout England. Like the earlier Anabaptists, they largely disused the terms and broke away from the content of the historic Catholic and Protestant theology. The following quotations from the writings of John Smyth, one of their later and stronger leaders, will show points of possible influence upon early Friends.

"First—We hold that the New Testament, properly so-called, is spiritual, proceeding originally from the heart, and that reading out of a book (though a lawful ecclesiastical action) is no part of spiritual worship. Second—We hold that, seeing prophesying is a part of spiritual worship, therefore in the time of prophesying it is unlawful to have the book as a help before the eye. Third—We hold that, seeing singing a psalm is a part of spiritual worship, it is unlawful to have the book before the eye in time of singing a psalm." (The Difference of the Church of the Separation.)

"God created man with freedom of will, which was a natural power or faculty of the soul. Adam, after his fall, did not lose any natural faculty, but still retained freedom of will. Original sin is, therefore, an idle term. Infants are conceived and born in innocence without sin, and so dying are undoubtedly saved, and this is to be understood of all infants under heaven. All actual sinners bear the image of Adam in his innocence, fall, and restitution to grace. As no man begetteth his child to the gallows, nor no potter maketh a pot to break it, so God doth not predestinate any man to destruction. The sacrifice of Christ's body doth not reconcile God unto us, who did never hate us nor was our enemy, but reconcileth us unto God. The efficacy of Christ's death is derived only to them who do mortify their sins, being grafted with Him in the similitude of His death; and every regenerate person hath in himself the three witnesses of the Father, and the Word, and the Holy Spirit. Repentance and faith are wrought in the hearts of men by the preaching of the Word; but the new creature which if begotten of God needeth not the outward Scriptures, creatures, or ordinances of the Church; yet he can do nothing against the law and the Scriptures, but rather all his doings shall serve to the confirming and establishing of the law." (Long Confession.)

As the quotation just given shows, the earlier Baptists were nearly all General Baptists, that is, they believed in a general election of all men to salvation. Gradually, however, the Calvinistic theology got hold in Baptist communities, and congregations of Calvinistic or Particular Baptists were established. They believed that only particular individuals were elected to be saved.

It seems to have been the General Baptists who exercised a distinctive influence upon the early Friends. George Fox had an uncle, Pickering, who was a General Baptist. In the formative period of Fox's career, just as he was beginning his public life, he sought out the Baptists a good deal. "The Baptists were tender in those days," he was accustomed to say. Especially strong upon the young man was the influence of a community of "shattered Baptists" at Nottingham, to whom he resorted a good deal.

Through these associations Fox and the other young seekers who afterward joined him must have received powerful impressions as to the teaching of the New Testament and how "primitive Christianity" should be revived in England, when he, like the Baptists, would undertake to restore "the primitive way." The Baptist assertion of the universal father-love of God and His desire that all shall be saved; their demand that religion be a genuine first-hand experience of the soul; their denial of the efficacy of priestcraft and ecclesiastical rites to work religious changes in men; their aversion to war, oaths, tithes, and fasts; their indifference to speculative theology, their social religion, and passion for freedom and democracy in the church;—these things seemed to George Fox well-suited to be the expression of his own religious experiences and sense of spiritual truth.

The Miracle of Rocky Run

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

(Author of "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle")

CHAPTER III

"This is a day of great opportunity for the young people of our denomination. At a time when the spirit of missions has taken possession of the Christian church, the call is coming to our youth to sacrifice themselves upon the altar of consecrated service. We would urge our subordinate meetings to cultivate the spirit of co-operation and provide open doors whereby youthful energy may exert itself in behalf of the cause of our Christ."

So read the Assistant Clerk of Rock River Quarterly Meeting, in its December session at Rocky Run. The document was a minute of advice sent down by the preceding Yearly Meeting, and contained the above brief paragraph hidden away apparently among the solid material which represented the concern of the higher body. The reading continued for some minutes and covered a variety of topics well suited to the needs of a people with a growing vision of opportunity.

At the conclusion, Friends—the few that were present—sat apparently in thoughtful mood for some minutes. One might have imagined that the members were seeking to make application of the document to their own necessities. It was Jabez Dolman who broke the silence by rising to remark that the communication seemed to contain a great deal of sound and timely admonition which the various meetings would do well to heed. It seemed that there was nothing in what had been read that called for specific action, and he suggested that as the days were short, it was well to proceed with the business.

The clerks directed the attention of the little company to the reports of the four Monthly Meetings. There was a tone of self-satisfaction in all of them, although in three of them, including that of Rocky Run, there was a confession that the attendance upon the occasions of the various meetings for worship was not what it should be, while the report from Olive Heights expressed the wish that there might be more signs of activity in the work of the church upon the part of the young people.

"I am always interested in the reading of these reports," said William Flanders, when the Clerk had taken his seat. "I feel that taking everything into consideration, we are in a fairly prosperous condition as a people. Of course, we all wish that more was being done, but the faithful few who are keeping up the work in our various meetings will receive their reward. I want Friends to continue in the good old way by maintaining their testimonies and by keeping up their meetings for worship as a light in their various communities."

"I always feel such an uplift when I consider how Friends are faithfully keeping up the work year by year. These reports have brought to me a fresh sense of the goodly heritage that has been left to us by our forefathers," said Sallie Owens, a bright little woman from Sandy Ridge.

"The reports are very satisfactory to me," quoted Tobias Hunt, a sentiment which was his usual contribution to every report that was read, quarter after quarter, year in and year out.

"They are to me," said Elizabeth Souders.

"And to me also," quoth Solomon Ball.

"I am satisfied," was Martha Letty's contribution.

"So am I," responded Jabez Dolman.

"I am," came from several without rising, and the meeting turned its attention to other matters.

A great opportunity was passed by, as others had been upon previous occasions, but apparently there was no one to note the growing tendency of the Quarterly Meeting to become an old folks' affair, or if the fact was noted, it seemed to call for no particular comment, so accustomed had they grown to the existing situation.

It was noted, however, by an interested observer that out of the forty-seven present there were only two persons who were apparently under thirty years of age. One of these was a babe in arms and the other a young man, Joshua Manning by name, who had graduated from college the previous year, and was now teaching in a neighboring state. He had arrived home the previous evening for his vacation.

The interested observer also noted the fact that apparently no young person had any place of responsibility in the affairs of the Quarterly Meeting, and he could not help wondering what would be the status of Rock River Quarter when the present generation had passed away. He found himself time and again turning his glance to Joshua Manning, who as the business proceeded seemed to be laboring under deep emotion. At different times he appeared to be on the point of rising to unburden his mind, but there were no encouraging pauses that seemed to invite comment from a youth just past the turn of his teens.

The meeting appeared to be ready for the concluding minute, when Joshua, mastering his feelings, arose and with apparent embarrassment said that he was deeply concerned over the absence of the young people and the fact, as he viewed it, that there was a constantly growing gulf between them and the meeting, especially in the Rocky Run neighborhood. He did not know what could be done, but he was certain that the meeting could not afford to lose its grip upon the young men and women and its boys and girls.

His remarks were brief and a painful silence followed for some minutes. It was Sallie Tomkins who finally ventured to express her satisfaction that "our young Friend has felt free to relieve his mind upon this question."

William Flanders said that he felt the meeting was ready to do whatever it could to interest the young folks, but did not see what could be done unless they would come to the meetings.

"I hope our young Friend will be encouraged to carry his burden to the young people, for I am sure they will find that the meeting has a welcome for every one of them." This was Jabez Dolman's contribution to the subject.

"I would be willing that some of our young Friends be appointed on committees, if only they can be induced to come to the meetings," remarked Henry Whittaker.

"We might name one or two on some of our committees, and see how it will work," suggested Elizabeth Souders.

Everyone had something friendly to express, but nothing of a constructive nature took form, and the meeting concluded with the faintest suggestion of an uneasy feeling that all could not shake off during the weeks that followed.

As for Joshua Manning, he left the house sad at heart, seeing a need but knowing not how to meet it. But the leaven was set to work in the neighborhood, and more than one fond father and mother during the succeeding days found themselves praying for their sons and daughters with a new feeling of interest.

But the leaven of neglect was also at work among the youth and the gulf was constantly growing wider between them and the meeting which professed to call itself imbued with the Spirit of Christ. The future was uncertain, but the record has to be written just as it was made.

Lectures and Addresses

Of late years the lectures and addresses which are delivered to the school have become a very important feature of our life. Twenty years ago and for thirty or more years earlier, the teacher of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy gave scientific lectures to the school every week through the winter time. They covered such subjects as Heat, Light, Electricity, Oxygen, etc. These lectures were then common in schools, colleges and popular courses in towns and cities. Gradually, however, they went out of favor and topics of history and literature, with magic lantern exhibitions began to take their place, our older teachers all taking their turns on the platform. Then the scientific lectures were entirely dropped, being relegated to the class room, and our friends outside the school were often invited to speak to us.

A little money was next appropriated for the course, and nearly all the lectures were delivered by outside speakers. Finally the Alumni Association made a liberal annual donation for this use, and now nearly all our lectures are by specialists in their topics. Some men of national reputation have been before us, as Edward Steiner and Jacob A. Riis. Eminent college professors, and travelers, and literary people, social workers and persons prominent in temperance and peace movements bring us their thought and experiences and messages. Questions of vital current interest are treated by people who have had first-hand information about them, and travelers describe their journeys in foreign lands by speech and picture.

Persons who were at Westtown in the Seventies will remember that there used to be a First-day Morning Collection, before meeting, at which it was the custom to read from standard Friends' writings. In course of time these reading collections were shifted to the evening. Different teachers were asked to bring in selections, or to make remarks of their own if they preferred, and they generally chose the latter course. Then persons from the outside were invited to speak.

At present the usual custom is for some man, mostly an invited friend, occasionally a teacher, to speak to the boys from seven to seven-thirty, and a woman, also mostly from outside, to talk to the girls from seven-thirty to eight. Once a month, perhaps, the whole school assembles in the library for a joint collection. Now and then a woman addresses the boys or a man the girls.

These First-day evening talks have become very important factors in our moral and religious life. The topics range from Manners or the Flying Squadron to regular sermons on Prayer and Worship. The ministry in our morning meetings is usually what is known as "prophetic," short, earnest and to the point. These First-day evening addresses give an opportunity for the prepared discourse on topics which have been resting on the teachers' minds, with something of a "concern," and have been turned over and rounded out in the process of meditation on them. Interesting aspects of Quaker history are sometimes treated. In a joint collection of this kind two years ago I set forth the actions and spirit of the last Five Years Meeting, reading to the children the beautiful message of Christian love which that Meeting sent to them by my hand.

A great variety of people speak on these occasions. Already this year we have had one missionary from China and two from Japan. Social workers, and Y. M. C. A. people come to us, Friends and others. We call in distinguished traveling Friends. Our old boys and girls, two or three years out of school, come back from their colleges and speak to the children from the wider outlook but with the old life still fresh in their minds. Those a little older, whose mature powers are employed in social uplift, and in whom the idea is strong that only by a deep religious conviction can any permanent result be obtained, make their earnest appeals to our young people. And our older Friends, out of their full lives of Christian service, bring their affectionate messages.

We have around us a great many deeply interested friends who not only come to see us themselves but bring out to us visitors of note who are staying with them, or whom they have met in their religious work. Although we are out in the country, four miles from our nearest town of West Chester, and twenty-four miles from Philadelphia, we are quite within the effective sphere of the currents of social and religious life of the Quaker community that centers in Philadelphia, and the direct influence of it is one of the strongest of our uplifting forces.

May I again remind the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that the school reassembles after the vacation on First Month 4th. We have a few entries for that date of children who either were prevented from attending their local schools in the fall, or who desire to make a change. Though our school is of fair size we still have some spare room, and would be glad to add others to our list.

On Fourth Month 7th our Spring Term begins after the two weeks vacation to cover the time of our Yearly Meeting. Persons intending to send their children to Westtown in the fall sometimes start them in the spring before. The Spring Term is a delightful time at Westtown. The long warm days encourage outdoor living, our lawns and fields and woods are very beautiful, and many interesting events occur in the closing weeks of the year. Pupils who begin at that time learn the ways of the place and come next autumn to their full year's work as old scholars who do not have to be broken in.

WITH OUR YOUTH

JUST AN OLD-FASHIONED GREETING

BY WILLIAM L. STIDGER

Just a common "How'd' do."
That's to say
This Christmas Day
We are thinking, friend, of you.
Just a common hand clasp, too,
'Cross the way
This Christmas Day
We are reaching out to you.
Just a heart-throb pulsing true;
Beating back
The homeward track
'Till it finds its way to you.
Just a little hungering too;
Heart's so full
That memories pull
Us back to other days and you.
So this common "How'd' do;"
It will say
This Christmas Day
That we're thinking, friend, of you.

HIS BIRTH-NIGHT—A CHRISTMAS SKETCH

BY L. ALDEN MARSH

The cool, still night covered the land with its mystic veil. The Nazarene hills loomed up in clear-cut outline against the velvet star-jeweled sky. The village sounds had long since died away, and out on the shadowed hills the shepherds had rolled themselves in their blankets, and only the watchman was left to feel the night's magnificence.

Ever on such a night as this old Azra became thoughtful, and gazed with awe into the living heavens. He sank upon his knees while his lips moved in prayer to the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, his shepherd fathers. He sprang to his feet and grasped his stick as he heard footsteps approaching.

"What, boy, it is thou? Why leave thy bed for the lonely hills?"

"I can not sleep on a night like this, Azra; my heart is restless."

The old man looked fondly at the youth.

"Verily, lad, thou art like unto David of old. Thou, too, art ruddy and of a fair countenance. Surley he was not comelier than thou. Dost love the hills and the sheep, lad?"

"Yea, Azra. But, tell me, sire, was it not on this night that thou saw'st the star? Tell me the tale but once again."

"This very night, boy, some twelve years ago. But now I was dreaming of it. Eleven times since then in remembrance of that night I have kept the watch alone. I was with a kinsman at Bethlehem, for there was a decree that every man should be enrolled at his own city. So I helped him watch the flocks at night. And while we watched, there shone a mighty light in heaven, and we saw a great star, brighter than the brightest of the night; and though I went not, my kinsmen followed the star and found a child in a manger, Him who should be King of Israel."

The old man's voice shook with excitement at the recollection, and the boy watched his face with eager interest.

"Dost thou believe the story, lad?"

"Yea, Azra, every word."

"Then, listen, boy, for I trust thee strangely; I will tell thee what I never told to man before. On that same night there were angels—angels, lad, with a glory which I can not tell, singing in the heavens, and mine own eyes saw and mine own ears heard them. This was the burden of their song: 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.' And we fell on our faces sore afraid. . . . More I can not tell thee."

The glowing eyes of the boy searched the old man's face and then wandered to the far-off heavens as if they sought there a divine interpretation of the strange story. Long the two stood motionless, the one absorbed in recollection, the other wrapt in the picture which his sympathetic soul furnished to him. Then in the silence of the majestic night, the two paced on, side by side and spoke not for many moments.

A cry of a jackal sounded out of the dreamy stillness; the sheep huddled together in timid sympathy; a meteor dropped swiftly in the eastern sky, and from the sleeping village penetrated the cock's shrill tone.

"Methinks some beast approacheth. I must away. Boy, thy mother, Mary, would fret much if she found thee absent. Fearest thou not the night?"

"I fear not beasts or the night, Azra. Farewell."

The boy vanished into the darkness, but hours later, as the light dawned over the Galilean hills, Azra beheld the youth descending and moving swiftly towards the village of Nazareth, to the home of Joseph the carpenter.

FRIENDS CONFERENCE

It has been the custom for some time for the Ministers' Association of Wilmington Yearly Meeting of Friends, to hold once or twice a year, a one-day conference with morning and afternoon sessions, for the consideration of various problems, and the talent employed at these conferences has been almost entirely local. At the meeting last June, it was determined to somewhat broaden the scope of the conference, to hold it for at least two days, and to press the invitation to those outside of the ministry.

The gathering in Wilmington Friends Church December 4 and 5, was according to the new plan. The meeting was presided over by Homer Biddlecum, of Xenia, President of the Ministers' Association.

The three addresses delivered by Willard O. Trueblood, pastor of the First Friends Church, of Indianapolis, were greatly appreciated, as he treated the problems of Christian life and church work in a most inspiring and helpful way. In his first address on "A Keeper of Vineyards," he emphasized the importance to the Christian worker of maintaining his own Christian experience strong and pure, and presenting to the world the kind of life that will preach Christ. In his other two addresses on "Workers Together" and "Christianity in Action," he set forth in an eloquent and vigorous way the importance of earnest, enthusiastic co-operation in the great work of evangelism.

S. Edgar Nicholson, editor of the AMERICAN FRIEND, spoke Friday morning on "Our Church Periodical." Mr. Nicholson has been for sixteen years Secretary of the National Anti-Saloon League. During the new management of the paper, there has been a notable increase in circulation, but it is said to be yet far too small. The effective and interesting way in which Mr. Nicholson set forth the opportunities and problems of the paper, together with his splendid address, Friday afternoon, on "Evangelism," did much to bring the paper nearer to Wilmington Friends.

Charles Tebbetts, ex-President of Whittier College, General Secretary of American Friends Foreign Mission Board, is a man with a large stock of information as to the work of the Christian church at home and abroad, and a burning interest in its progress. In his first address he presented from last year's statistics some facts not altogether comfortable, but salutary, and was glad to be informed of large improvements, especially in the matter of giving. His second address was a very forcible call to men to meet the demand which the age is putting upon them, and to seize the opportunities which are so wonderfully manifest.

Paul L. Vogt, Professor of Sociology in Miami University, who has been engaged in some of the rural surveys in this State, gave three addresses on the "Church of the Open Country." These addresses brought forth a short but vigorous discussion at the closing session, which revealed some differences of opinion. The lectures were greatly appreciated, and many of the suggestions will doubtless prove valuable, especially as they inspire the study at first hand, of country needs, opportunities and resources.

Young people from the College added much to the pleasure of the occasion by the quartets, duets and solos which they presented. Merrill Coffin, who is assisting in some revival meetings at New Burlington, sang a solo at one of the sessions.

Resolutions of appreciation were passed, also one urging the passage of a bill in Congress to prevent the commercial use of the name "Quaker." Signs of "Quaker Whisky" are an affront not only to Quakers, but to the common sense of fitness and decency.

In spite of stormy weather on both days, the attendance was good, and the conference was pronounced a success. Dinner was served in the basement of the church on both days. Saturday about 125 ate together and enjoyed a very pleasant social hour.—Wilmington Journal-Republican.

THE THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE FRIENDS INSTITUTE, PHILADELPHIA

Early in the year we sent an attractive illustrated booklet to about eight hundred and fifty people, outlining the beginning and the growth of our organization. The reason for this action was primarily to secure a larger membership. Although we already have an enrollment of about nine hundred, yet during the past year it has been necessary to solicit nearly $600.00 from interested friends. This is not a business way to manage our finances.

When we consider that since our last report 11,509 people have used the rooms, more than 1,800 people have attended committees, and fifteen committees meet here regularly every month, we need no further proof of the necessity of the Institute to the members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. We realize that it is a time when many good causes are soliciting financial aid, and that we must eliminate all unnecessary expense, but a generous response to this appeal is imperative if the Institute is to fulfill its true purpose.

The rooms have been used frequently during the past winter for sociables for the young Friends around Philadelphia. The Young Women's Auxiliary of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends had the use of the whole second floor of the building for one day early in the Twelfth month and much appreciated the opportunity this offered to interest a greater number of people in their work.

We are very sorry to report the resignation of Emma Cadbury. We greatly appreciate her services on the Board during the thirty years of her membership.

On behalf of the Board of Managers,
ETHEL M. WHITSON.
REBECCA CARTER.

CORRESPONDENCE

One week ago today I was called to conduct the funeral of Rosanna Ferguson Pickering at Friendship, Kansas, forty-five miles from where I live. She was born in Clinton County, Ohio, September 27, 1834, and died November 20, 1914, aged 80 years 1 month and 23 days. She was married to William Ferguson in 1854, to whom were born five children, all of whom lived to mature years. Four of them remain to mourn her loss. They are all active workers in the Friends Church, among whom is Mary Sibbitt, who is well known among Friends in all the western Yearly Meetings as a power in the temperance and white slave reform work.

Mother Pickering, as she was generally known, was married to John Pickering at Friendship, Kansas, in the fall of 1884, he being a minister in our church.

She united with the Methodist church in early childhood, but after her first marriage joined Friends, and was for over forty years an active minister, traveling with her last husband and since his death. She was well known and loved. Counting the two families, the children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren number near two hundred.

Yesterday I assisted our pastor, Alden Knight, in the funeral service of Olive Hodson, daughter of David and Mary Harvey. She was born in Morgan County, Indiana, June 20, 1841, and died November 24, 1914, aged 73 years 5 months and 4 days. She was married to Jesse Hodson, October 25, 1860, who with six children are still left to mourn her loss. She surely was a mother beloved not only in her home and in the town in which she lived, but in the church, serving it with a willing mind. She was for a number of years an elder. We shall surely feel her loss.

FRIENDS' WORK AMONG THE NEGROES

Albert S. Rogers sends us the following extract from letter of Carolena M. Wood, Chairman of the Five Years Meeting Friends Board, on the condition and welfare of Negroes:

"Our Executive Committee met at Richmond, September 30th, and talked over the conditions of our work for the negroes. We had interesting reports from the schools at Christianburg, High Point, Southland College and the Home for Friendless Colored Children at Indianapolis. Letters were also received from various members of our Board. It was decided to try and arrange for a party of Friends to visit our different schools next spring.

"We learn that Southland College greatly needs further equipment for the carpentry work, and the Chairman was directed to try to raise $200 for manual training equipment. Southland College also greatly needs a new sewerage plant. Fifty per cent. of the expenses of the school are paid by the students, which is a good showing.

"I shall always be glad to hear from you with suggestions for our work."

Any Friends who may be interested in helping this work, kindly send contributions to Carolena M. Wood, Mt. Kisco, New York.—Canadian Friend.

A QUAKER TALE

The St. Louis "Globe-Democrat" relates Bishop Candler, of Atlanta, apropos of worldly persons, said the other day:

"There was a worldly parson of this type in Philadelphia—a great fox hunter—whom a Spruce Street Quaker took in hand.

"'Friend,' said the Quaker, 'I understand thee's clever at fox catching.'

"'I have few equals and no superiors at that sport,' the parson complacently replied.

"'Nevertheless, friend,' said the Quaker, 'if I were a fox I would hide where thee would never find me.'

"'Where would you hide?' asked the parson, with a frown.

"'Friend,' said the Quaker, 'I would hide in thy study.'"

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Berkeley, California—In keeping with the efforts of Friends of the East Bay cities to maintain an open door of hospitality to all visiting Friends during Exposition year, the meeting at Berkeley has undertaken extensive improvements to the church building which will add much to its efficiency and appearance. It is hoped to have the work completed by the beginning of the new year. During the fall a departure has been inaugurated in the Sunday evening service of the Berkeley meeting by placing a part of them under the various organizations of the church. This has contributed materially to the interest of the membership in the evening service, and has given an avenue of usefulness to the organizations. The food sale held in connection with the last meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society at the home of Olive Naylor, proved so profitable that it was decided to hold another at the next meeting. All Friends visiting in California in 1915, are cordially invited to the Berkeley Friends meeting, Fulton Street and Channing Way.

Lindsay, California—By special request Berkeley Quarterly Meeting was held at Lindsay, California, December 4-6. Delegates were present from Berkeley, Oskaloosa, Citrus Heights near Sacramento, Denair, Pasadena, Whittier and some other points. All visiting Friends had to travel from 150 to 250 miles. The visiting ministers were much favored in the preaching of the Word. Dr. W. V. Coffin spoke on Social Service, and Bruce Douglas, Secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union of the Yearly Meeting, had a meeting with the young people which may result in the organization of a C. E. Society. Lunch was served on Saturday to 110 people as a dedicatory service for the new basement which has just been completed and furnished for social and Bible School work. John T. Hadley, Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting offered the dedicatory prayer. This was the first Quarterly Meeting of Friends ever held in Tulare County, and was a great blessing indeed. We trust that some day there may be a Quarterly Meeting for the San Joaquin Valley.

Charlottesville, Indiana—The meeting at Charlottesville is doing excellent work under the leadership of its new pastor, O. Perry Bantz. A Christian Endeavor was recently organized and is starting out with bright prospects for successful work. On the evening of December 1st, the congregation surprised the pastor and his family by going to their home, taking a generous donation, and spending a very pleasant social evening. The Bible School has nearly doubled. December 6th was observed as Rally Day and proved quite a success. The School has decided to take up a contest between the men and the women to continue for the next three months, the losers to entertain the winners.

Clear Spring, Indiana—Duck Creek Monthly Meeting in Spiceland Quarter was held at Clear Spring on November 26. During the last year the meeting house has been put in good condition, as has also the cemetery lying just west of the meeting house. It was thought appropriate to have a reunion of all the meetings and those that helped in this work. The exercises were in charge of Esther Cook and consisted of song, Bible reading and prayer. The business session of the Monthly Meeting followed during which the President's Thanksgiving Proclamation was read and the congregation sang "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." A history of the meeting from the time it was set up eighty-two years ago, was prepared and read by Arabelle S. Bell. A poem for the day entitled "The Church on the Hill," prepared by Moses Hodson, of Greensboro, was read by Mrs. Mere Ratcliff. Truman C. Kenworthy, Evangelistic Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, was present and preached a good thanksgiving sermon.

Portland, Indiana—Portland Quarterly Meeting was held on December 12. The visiting Friends were Ancil Ratliff, Walter W. Brown and Nathan Fosnight. There was a good attendance and deep interest was shown. Walter Brown, Field Agent of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, gave a talk at the missionary session and brought the message at the devotional hour. During the business session Ancil Ratliff gave a strong address on the Bible School work and every-member canvas. A feature of the Quarterly Meeting was that about two-thirds of those in attendance were under fifty years of age. Walter Brown attended the meeting at Poling, Indiana, on the Sabbath.

Spiceland, Indiana—Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held December 11-13. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight was a season of earnest waiting before the Lord. On Saturday morning Truman C. Kenworthy, Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, brought the message. His appeal was that the people believe in God and trust Him. In the afternoon a workers' conference was conducted by the Yearly Meeting Superintendent. The ministry and congregational responsibility were considered, the discussion of which aroused considerable interest. Professor W. O. Mendenhall of Earlham College, followed with the presentation of a plan to increase the working force of our local meetings by organizing bands of from four to six young people for prayer, study and service. It was proposed that such bands visit other meetings. The plan met with hearty endorsement. Truman C. Kenworthy preached on Sabbath morning, and his sermon was listened to by an attentive audience. Mead Kelsey, pastor of the local meeting, preached an inspiring sermon in the evening.

At the morning service of Spiceland meeting on December 6, Thomas Clark, of Richmond, spoke a few words on the sacredness of God's name and the wickedness of taking it in vain. Mead Kelsey, the pastor, then spoke on the evils of the tobacco habit and explained the new anti-tobacco movement in Spiceland. Quite a number of men and young men joined the ranks of the anti-tobacco users, bringing the total well up toward a hundred, most of whom are boys and young men. About thirty persons were present at the Christian Endeavor meeting in the evening and both this and the evening service were seasons of helpfulness.

Traverse City, Michigan—The members of the Sabbath School Committee and the teachers and officers of the Friends Sabbath School at Traverse City held a conference on the evening of December 8th, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hanson. A pleasant prelude to the evening's program was a pot-luck supper which was served by young ladies of the school. A list of the teachers and officers for the coming year was read by the Chairman, John Tremaine, following which a talk was given by the Superintendent, Ida G. Jeffries, in which she presented some excellent thoughts as the fundamentals of the coming year's work. Other speakers of the evening were the pastor, Austice M. Harvey; County Bible School Worker, C. H. Estes, and State Field Worker, E. K. Mohr, of New Buffalo. Merle Baldwin favored the gathering with a few vocal solos which were much appreciated.

West Milton, Ohio—West Branch Quarterly Meeting was held here November 14 and 15. No visiting ministers were present, but there was a good attendance of the membership on both days. On Sabbath Robert Douglas preached a strong sermon followed by an earnest talk by Enos Pemberton.

The women of West Milton and Ludlow Falls have united their forces in the organization of a W. F. M. S. They now have a membership of twenty-two and are taking much interest in the study of this year's book. West Milton has organized a Christian Endeavor Society with more than twenty active members. The work is starting nicely and the young people are taking much interest in it. The Sabbath School is doing good work and the attendance is increasing. A committee is arranging for a Christmas program. As a result of some special meetings held by the pastor, John L. Kittrell, there have been several splendid additions to the church. There is a steady growth in the meeting and the members are reaching out along every line of Christian activity.

Bear Creek, Iowa—The Women's Missionary Society of Bear Creek held a social evening meeting at the home of the pastor, William S. Kitch, on December 11. There was a good program. Mary Curts gave a short concise sketch of the lesson from "The Child in the Midst." Grace M. Elliott read some items of news from the workers in Jamaica. Some new members were received. The attendance was good, although the roads were rough. Everyone present represented a missionary in some of the mission fields under the care of Friends. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess and all felt that a profitable evening was spent.

Indianola, Iowa—Elgie L. McCargar held a three weeks' meeting here with very good results. Since that time cottage prayer meetings are held every Monday evening. Souls are finding Christ in these meetings as well as in our Sunday evening services. On Thursday evening, December 3, our pastor, Charles T. Moore, had his class lead the prayer meeting. It was well attended and everyone felt God's blessing upon the meeting. Thanksgiving Union services were held in the Friends church. At the invitation of the pastors of Indianola, our pastor addressed the meeting, the subject being "Things for which We Should be More Thankful." The church was well filled. The building fund, for finishing Sunday School rooms in our basement, is growing rapidly.

Hesper Academy, Kansas—Hesper Academy near Eudora, Kansas, began its second term of work on November 30th. All the friends of the academy are greatly pleased with the reopening this fall after a lapse of two years, and will make a determined effort to put the school on a secure basis. Hadley H. Kelsey, of Haverford, and Estella G. Culver of Earlham, are in charge of the school and are doing efficient work. The present enrollment is not as large as might be desired, but the prospects are good for an increased number next year. The Literary Society, reorganized this year, has been very popular and this together with a lecture course is serving as a splendid advertisement for the institution.

Mt. Ayr, Kansas—Mt. Ayr Quarterly Meeting was held at Chalk Mound, November 20-21. The visiting ministers were L. Clarkson Hinshaw, Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, and J. N. Walker, of Stella, Oklahoma. The meeting for Ministry and Oversight on Friday morning was followed in the afternoon by a doctrinal conference. Francis Stites read a paper on the Atonement, while a paper on Redemption by Bertha Stites was read by Rachel Gregory. On Saturday morning the business of the Quarterly Meeting was transacted in unity. On Saturday evening a short Christian Endeavor program was rendered. We were favored by an address at each session from L. Clarkson Hinshaw. His sermons were very much appreciated. J. Newton Walker preached on Sabbath night which was the beginning of a revival meeting which resulted in eleven conversions, twenty renewals and thirteen professing sanctification. Ten gave their names for membership in the meeting. The church was much encouraged to go forward. The preaching of Mr. Walker was scriptural, practical and to the point. The Methodists joined with us heartily. An offering of $115.00 was given the evangelist. A revival meeting began at Mt. Ayr on December 10, with J. N. Walker as the evangelist. Pray for us.

Ringwood, Oklahoma—Stella Quarterly Meeting was held at Ringwood, December 4-6. The meeting for Ministry and Oversight was unusually well attended. There were no visiting ministers, but Roy Hare, a Christian Worker, with credentials from Gilead Monthly Meeting, Ohio, was present and gave some interesting talks. Clyde Likes, who has recently taken charge of the meetings at Friends Valley and Coldwater, was present and was made to feel at home with us. The Doctrinal Conference on Friday afternoon was a time of interest, Robert C. Smith delivering a very able address on the subject, "Who is Authority on Soundness of Friends Doctrines?" The meeting on Saturday was largely attended and the Word was preached with power. The business session was one of interest. Alvin and Laura Coppock were given a Minute to visit the meetings in the limits of Kansas and California Yearly Meetings. One of the most encouraging things that has occurred in Stella Quarterly Meeting was that during the sessions of the Quarterly Meeting, four of our young people testified to a definite call to the ministry. Two of them were young women, both of whom are married, each having one child, but they testified that all was on the altar. It was a most affecting scene when these young people gave this testimony, yet it was a happy time. The Lord is wonderfully leading our young people. The Sabbath sessions were well attended. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Cherokee, Oklahoma, in March. During the meeting the claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented and resulted in several additions to the subscription list.

Spring Grove, Kansas—A series of meetings began at Spring Grove on October 29th, conducted by Viva Hoffman and the pastor, Jacob Cary, with Grace Pickett as singer and helper. Soon after the opening of the meeting Miss Hoffman was taken ill with appendicitis and the pastor together with Miss Pickett conducted the meetings for two weeks, the latter preaching part of the time. She is one of the most consecrated young workers in Kansas Yearly Meeting. Her work with the mothers, children and young people proved very effective. Several expressed a desire to live a better life, while the church was built up and greatly strengthened. Miss Hoffman was cared for by the pastor's wife for ten days when she was removed to Prairie Center where she is slowly improving.

High Point, North Carolina—Deep River Quarterly Meeting was held at High Point, December 5th, and was an interesting session. Charles R. Axton with credentials from Kokomo, Indiana, preached from the text, "Why Stand Ye here All the Day Idle." James A. Parr, a minister from Illinois, had acceptable service. Luncheon was served in the basement. The reports from the Monthly Meetings showed a healthy spirit. The Bible School work is being prosecuted vigorously. The circular letter from English Friends concerning the observation of the peace centennial, was read and commented upon favorably. There were strong expressions of sympathy with English Friends in the present crisis. F. S. Blair, Chairman of the Yearly Meeting Committee on Peace, made an appeal for peace work in all the subordinate meetings. Following the reading of the Queries, prominent remarks were made by one of the visiting ministers against attending questionable entertainments and places of diversion. Two or three Friends spoke against the use of tobacco. A peace committee was appointed for the Quarterly Meeting and the Monthly Meetings were instructed to appoint local committees and also committees to push the canvas against the use of alcohol and narcotics. Charles Axton and James Parr are making a brief visit to various meetings in North Carolina. At Springfield near High Point in two evening services, twenty made profession of religion.

Upriver, North Carolina—Eastern Quarterly Meeting was held at Upriver, November 27-29. Lewis McFarland, of High Point, Chairman of the Evangelistic Committee of the Yearly Meeting, was present and preached a very impressive dedicatory sermon. On Sabbath afternoon he rendered valuable service in raising $800 of the $1,300 indebtedness on the new meeting house, recently completed at a cost of $3,500. The all-day Sabbath services were attended by nearly 1,500 people. A series of meetings followed, conducted by Lewis McFarland, resulting in fifty or more conversions and renewals and ten accessions to the church. The ministry was strong and forceful and met with a good response. For some time the Bible School and the meeting had been growing until the old building was outgrown. The Bible School sometimes has an attendance of two hundred, and the young people's meeting on Sabbath evening is well attended.

Damascus, Ohio—A three weeks' series of meetings has just closed at Damascus. William Kirby, the evangelist, of Columbus, Ohio, preached some powerful gospel sermons, resulting in the salvation of souls and the strengthening of the meeting.

Amo, Indiana—Danville Quarterly Meeting was held at Amo, December 1. Enos Harvey, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present and his services were very helpful. His discourse on Sabbath morning on the subject of prayer was full of spiritual power. Austin Osborn, the pastor, is nicely settled in the parsonage and is getting hold of the hearts of the people. We are looking for a prosperous year. Chester Reagan, Superintendent of the C. E. Department of the Yearly Meeting, was present on Seventh-day evening of Quarterly Meeting and brought a strong message to the members of the Society.

Chicago, Illinois—Herman Newman, who has charge of the pastoral work of Chicago meeting, is sending out a news letter, especially for the benefit of absent members. In the November letter he gives a good account of the Quarterly Meeting held at Laporte, Indiana, during which time Enos Harvey, the Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present. Wilfred S. Reynolds has been selected Superintendent of the Bible School at Chicago. A primary department has been organized and the international graded lessons introduced. A Junior Society has also been formed. The meeting is continuing the study of Quakerism twice a month in connection with the mid-week meeting. The study this fall was on the little book of Edward Grubb of England, entitled "Separations." During the summer the life of Tolstoi was read.

New London, Indiana—New London Quarterly Meeting was held November 3-5. No visiting ministers were present, but our own pastors rendered efficient service. Asa Woodard of Russia-ville spoke on Saturday morning on "The Precious Blood of Jesus," and on Sabbath Jesse Philips of New London preached on "Have this Mind in You Which Was Also in Christ Jesus." A good missionary program was rendered on Sabbath afternoon. The Sabbath evening message was especially for the young people. Mr. Phillips asked all who would promise by God's grace and help to be ready for the call of the Lord to come forward and take him by the hand. About forty responded, and, standing together in front of the pulpit they sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." The Christian Endeavor Society has taken on new life and the Sabbath services are well attended.

Sheridan, Indiana—During the two years in which the pastoral work at Sheridan has been in charge of I. G. and Ida Lee there has been a marked increase in the interest and attendance at the meetings for worship. At present a gracious revival is in progress with Robert Pelt as evangelist. We feel that the church has taken on new life. It is perhaps in the best condition it has been for years.

AID PACIFIC COLLEGE

Pacific College at Newberg, Oregon, is in a desperate struggle to complete an increase of $100,000.00, in her Endowment Fund by December 31, 1914. More than $75,000.00 of this has already been pledged by members of Oregon Yearly Meeting, but the statement is made that all the Yearly Meeting can do will not be sufficient.

Surely Friends of America will not allow the amount already pledged to be lost through failure to make up the whole amount. The work of the College and of Oregon Yearly Meeting is too valuable to permit of any such disaster. There is no more determined, aggressive, devoted body of Friends in the world than those in Oregon. Subscriptions can be made in cash or in the form of an Endowment note drawing interest at five per cent. from the date the Endowment reaches the hundred thousand dollar mark.

What Friends do must be done quickly. Send pledges or checks to Treasurer of Pacific College, Newberg, Oregon.

SLOW VALLEY MEETING

Many Monthly Meetings could do no better thing to bring inspiration to their membership at the beginning of the New Year, than to secure for distribution a consignment of the booklets, "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle," published by THE AMERICAN FRIEND. They can easily be sold out at ten cents per copy. We have a number of copies on hands that ought to be in the homes of Friends both east and west. Single copy, 15 cents; ten copies, $1.00.

BOARD MEETING

The annual meeting of Friends Publication Board will be held in Richmond, Indiana, on December 30th. Important matters pertaining to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for 1915 will be up for consideration.

PERSONAL MENTION

Owen Henley, of Carthage, Indiana, is spending the winter with his son at Berkeley, California.

Dr. Seth Mills and wife of Valley Mills, Indiana, have gone to California for the winter months.

David T. Newsom and wife of Azalia, Indiana, are spending the winter with relatives and Friends in California.

J. Harvey Borton, of Philadelphia, attended the Sabbath morning service at Berkeley, California, on November 29.

Asa H. and Elma Hollaway, of Flushing, Ohio, are spending a part of the winter with their daughter at Berkeley, California.

Professor E. P. Trueblood and wife of Earlham College, have gone to Bral-dentown, Florida, for the remainder of the winter.

D. H. Lewis, pastor of the meeting at New Castle, Indiana, has accepted a pressing call to the pastorate of the Friends meeting at Poughkeepsie, New York. He will take charge the first of February.

F. J. Long, pastor of the meeting at Pennville, Indiana, is conducting a series of meetings at that place with good success. Chester Reddick of Spencer-ville, Ohio, is helping as leader of the song service.

Grace M. Elliott has been visiting the meetings in Ackworth and Bear Creek Quarterly Meetings, Iowa, during the last three weeks in the interest of the Women's Foreign Missionary Union of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Professor Harlow Lindley of Earlham College, will appear on the program of the American Historical Association in Chicago, December 28-30. His subject will be "The Principles of the Classification of Historical Archives."

John Henry Douglas of Whittier, California, who was eighty-two years old on November 27th, is almost an invalid and gets out to meeting very little. The faith which has been so characteristic of his entire life continues bright, and under a recent date he writes: "My interest in the cause of truth and in the church grows with my years."

THE RELIEF FUNDS

Contributions continue to arrive at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND for the various relief funds, which have been mentioned from time to time. The bulk of these are for the "Belgian Relief Fund." A fuller statement will be made next week. Meanwhile the way is open for still further contributions.

PROTECTING THE QUAKER NAME

We are glad to note that a number of Friends are rallying to the appeal that has been made in behalf of the bills in Congress designed to protect the names of religious bodies or the names by which they are commonly called, against use in articles of trade. Some local meetings have adopted resolutions in support of the measures, as has also the Workers' Conference of Wilmington Yearly Meeting.

It is the purpose, following the recent hearings at Washington, to press for favorable action in behalf of these measures.

Every Friends meetings would do well to adopt resolutions in their behalf and forward a statement of the action to the two Senators and the member of the House from the local district. Finally let Friends generally write letters to their Congressman and Senators urging favorable action. Let's put a stop to such electric signs as "Quaker Whiskey, as Honest as Its Name," and other efforts to trade upon a denominational appellation for purposes of private gain.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

January 3

Subject—God's Patience with Israel.

Lesson—Judges 2: 1-19.

Golden Text—I will heal their backsliding. I will love them freely.—Hosea 14: 4.

Time—Period of the Judges.

Place—Palestine.

Following the death of Joshua, with which the lessons of 1913 closed, Israel was ruled by the Judges through an indeterminate series of years. The book is a compilation of the works of various writers, and the compiler is unknown.

The dominating influence of Joshua kept Israel from wandering afar from God, but as in many other instances, when leadership departed, the devotion and loyalty of the people was dissipated. Our knowledge of this epoch is based upon the Book of Judges, to which the Book of Ruth forms a supplement.

Joshua left no successor, and each tribe was left to look after its own protection. With no organized government, "every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Robinson describes this as "the period of Israel's transition from the nomadic to the agricultural state; an age of lawless might and unrestrained license."

The period is a strange medley in which idolatry and subjugation alternate, as expressed by Vatke. Falling into the worship of "Baalim," especially of Baal and Ashtarothe (the male and female gods of the Canaanites), the tribes not only became corrupted in morals and religion, but in consequence lost their power to prevail over their heathen neighbors. Smith points out the fact that because of their unfaithfulness God could not fulfill His promise to drive the other nations out of Palestine. On the contrary, Israel through disobedience became the prey of others.

Verses 16 to 19 of the lesson reveal God's patience and His care even over a rebellious and careless people, and furnishes a photographic picture of this uncertain and wavering period in the earlier years of the tribes in Palestine.

Israel now lacked a leadership with the confirming experience of Moses and Joshua. In consequence discipline was lax and the people easily drifted into the sin of idolatry, coincident with a reign of moral looseness which now dominated the nation. Worship now lost the great moral element which characterized the worship of Jehovah. Israel forgot that she was to be a separate people.

Amid it all, however, there were frequent turnings to the Lord. Prophets and Judges kept alive the memory of the covenants of Jehovah, and thus is justified the long suffering patience and care of God over His chosen people.

FARM LANDS

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

January 3

Topic—Who is on the Lord's side?
Matthew 10: 32-39. (Consecration Meeting.)

Conditions in the warring nations, in the world of graft, in the wickedness of society, in the oppression of trade, in the arena of politics emphasize the startling forcefulness of the topic.

As a New Year's lesson it suggests an invoice of every life, a searching of every heart to see if there be any wicked way.

The topic suggests that there is work to be done, "and loads to lift," problems to be solved, battles against sin to be waged. God must have loyal adherents to His cause. There can be no stragglers in the Lord's army.

A fitting New Year's prayer is that God may help us during this year, and during all years, to be what He would have us to be, to do what He would have us to do.

The answer to the topic rests with our own decision, is determined by our willingness to go all the way with the Lord, to toil, to suffer, to sacrifice, to be obedient, to endure, to enjoy, to praise, to bless, to reap the rewards for patient, painstaking service.

Gideon's three hundred were more potent under the leadership of Jehovah to deliver Israel from the Midianites than were the thousands that had been assembled, had they gone forth in their own strength.

God must have the chief place in our affections no less than in our obedience. We are on the Lord's side if we love Him supremely, and are ready to follow Him in every experience of life.

We cannot be neutral. We can neither serve God and Satan, nor can we fail to serve either God or Satan.

Died

Adams—Mahala Adams, daughter of Nathan and Mary Ann Williams, was born at Fountain City, Indiana, May 10, 1848, and died at Farmland, Indiana, October 30, 1914, aged sixty-six years five months and twenty days. She was converted when quite young and joined the Friends Church. She was a woman of high ideas, and manifested a Christ-like spirit wherever she went. She is survived by six sons, four daughters, four grandchildren, four brothers and one sister. Funeral services were conducted at the Farmland Friends Church by the pastor, Charles Swander, assisted by Henry Pickett of Lynn.

WAITING FOR YOU

Yes, waiting for every farmer or farmer's son—an industrious American who is anxious to establish for himself a happy home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is higher but her farm land just as cheap and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

160 Acre Homesteads are Actually Free to Settlers and Other Land at From $15 to $20 per Acre

The people of European countries as well as the American continent must be fed—thus an even greater demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Any farmer who can buy land at $15.00 to $30.00 per acre—get a dollar for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre is bound to make money—that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is an unusual demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service in the war. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

A Prayer for the Closing Year

For all the words which my unbridled tongue has spoken,
For all the promises which recklessly I've broken,
For little acts of kindness which I have failed to do,
For over-busyness, which made me to my vows untrue,
O Lord, forgive, I pray.

For the long list of little wrongs I've cherished,
The memory of which should long ago have perished,
And for the lack of grace which I had now by asking,
With never fear of thy rich store of love o'ertasking,
O Lord, forgive, I pray.

For mental breadth and knowledge which I have failed to gain,
And for the spirit's growth which I have failed to gain;
For inspirations quenched by worldliness of care;
For faith obscured by caviling and lack of earnest prayer,
O Lord, forgive, I pray.

The flying hours pass. The blush of morn will soon appear,
And myriad voices welcome shout: "The glad New Year!"
O thou, long-suffering God of love, grant we may live
A higher, truer life for thee; the past forgive;
The future bless, I pray.

Christ for the New Year

This New Year's morn, lo, Jesus meeteth thee
First at the open door, and greeteth thee
With His own blessed "Peace be unto thee!"

Fear not to tread the future's unknown ways!
Gird up thy loins! Lift up thy heart with praise!
For lo, I will be with thee all the days!"

It is enough His cheering word to hear;
Whatever may betide, thou need'st not fear
With Him to tread the pathway of the year.

All paths are safe where He doth lead the way,
All places Bethels are where He doth stay;
All darkness dies where He is light of day.—Selected

Dormitory Burned

We have received word that at two o'clock on the morning of December 23, the dormitory of Haviland Academy, Kansas, caught fire and burned down. All persons escaped, but some lost all their clothing. Most of the property down stairs was saved. There is some insurance.

The American Friend, 1915

AMERICAN FRIEND readers may expect to find a number of improvements in the paper during 1915, and what is more important still, a constant purpose to make these improvements permanent. Necessarily the management has had to feel its way. There are varied interests to serve, and many problems remain unsolved.

If, however, THE AMERICAN FRIEND can be made contributory to the solidarity and strengthening of the life and work of Friends in America, it will have met the highest expectations of the management. To this end will we continue to labor.

There is great need that the church continue to apply itself to the task of making THE AMERICAN FRIEND self-sustaining. If we can have an average of five new subscribers from every local Friends meeting during the month of January, this problem will be solved, provided our present patrons will continue their support.

This realization would not be impossible if all pastors, and some interested Friends in other meetings not having direct pastoral care, would give this matter personal attention, and press upon negligent families the question of urgent responsibility toward this department of the church. What will Friends do about it?

Loyalty to the Church Paper

This is the season of the year when a certain number of subscribers are prone to ask for a discontinuance of their subscriptions. Eight or ten such requests have already reached the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, although these are more than counterbalanced thus far by new subscriptions.

We are wondering whether or not in the pastoral meetings these Friends are announcing to the finance committee the withdrawal of their support from the pastoral fund for 1915; or in other meetings, whether Friends are announcing that they cannot contribute this coming year to the work of the Foreign Missionary Board, or to the local Bible School, or to their share of Yearly Meeting stock. The withdrawal of patronage from THE AMERICAN FRIEND is on a par with the withdrawal of support from the various activities and financial needs of the church.

We are well aware that there are some cases where financial reverses absolutely compel a curtailment of expenses in every line of church work, but it is quite apparent that in some instances requests for the discontinuance of the church paper is not on this basis.

Evidently some Friends prefer for reasons best known to themselves to take other periodicals, and sometimes periodicals of other denominations, and the question of patronizing THE AMERICAN FRIEND is judged solely by their attitude toward periodicals in general. The time has come when the issue of loyalty to the church periodical needs to be pressed as a vital part of the procedure in every local meeting.

Few people indeed would be willing to admit that the church could afford to get along without its own paper. But there are many apparently who feel no responsibility in helping to solve the question of its continuance.

The situation is by no means hopeless. As was set forth in last week's issue, the subscription list of THE AMERICAN FRIEND has continued to grow from the time it was taken over by the Five Years Meeting. But until it has grown to the point where its receipts equal the necessary expenditures, Friends must remember that every request for a discontinuance and every failure to subscribe necessitates the finding of some other people who may be induced to pay more than their share in order to keep the paper afloat.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND needs most of all just now both a larger patronage and a constant, stable, sustained patronage that will enable it to be the strong factor in the building up of the church in this country that was intended by the action of the Five Years Meeting. Loyalty to the church and loyalty to its periodical demands that much at least.

Vol. II. No. 53

The Old Year is Passing

The old year is passing away. Its record is ineffacable, and must stand the test of time just as it has been written. Whatever there is of weal or woe to the race will abide to bless or curse mankind. Error may be condoned, sin may be forgiven, wrong may be atoned, regenerated life may survive the wreck of the penalties of the broken law—and herein lie the causes which make hope forever triumphant—yet it is the inexorable law of life that whatsoever humanity sows that shall it also reap.

No generation lives to itself. Posterity must pay for the delinquencies of the past. Terrible as are the consequences of the great European war to the belligerent nations, yet their children and their children's children even to the third generation must continue to reap the harvests of a barren and broken civilization. To the extent that graft and political corruption are permitted to soil national honor will the pillars of state and the temples of Justice be threatened with premature decay as the legacy of successive generations.

Dishonesty in business will breed insincerity and trickery in every department of the social body. The impurities of society must inevitably undermine and weaken the whole fabric of our domestic life. The defeat of prohibition by the national Congress will only serve to prolong the reign of oppression and death wrought by the liquor traffic of our land.

But the rewards of righteous living are not less certain than are the penalties of disobedience to the divine decrees. By so much as the spirit of a strong and intense evangelism has gripped our national life during the year now passing away, by so much will the coming year and all years feel the uplift of this regenerated life. Prohibition victories in five states and many counties and municipalities will, in part, atone for the wrong action of our national law makers. The closer unity of American Protestantism will strengthen the cause of human brotherhood and give impetus to the task of world evangelization which is the supreme mission of the Christian church.

The passing year should emphasize the lessons of human obligations. As with peoples and with generations, so it is with individuals. No man liveth to himself. Every life touches some other life, whether for weal or for woe. In face of the stern fact that a record when once made must stand, although tempered it may be by later acts of penitence and obedience, we should enter upon the new year, through faith and through obedience to the decrees of the righteous Jehovah, with a determined purpose to make the record white; this for our own sakes, for the sake of the generation that now is and the generations that are to come.

The record of history as it is written year after year must needs become the record of a Christianized civilization, if Christian discipleship is not to fail in the accomplishment of its highest purpose. If during the coming year the impress of Christian truth can be stamped more indelibly upon the world's life and achievements, it will mark a new era in the mighty task of world regeneration.

National Prohibition

That at the first trial, the effort to secure national prohibition should win an actual majority of eight in the Federal House of Representatives—although lacking the necessary two-thirds—is a marvelous testimony to the evolution in public sentiment that is going on in this country upon this question. It has been only a little more than a year that there has been any concerted, determined movement in behalf of national prohibition.

Both friends and enemies of the cause recognize this first effort, which culminated in the House on December 22, as only the beginning of a mighty movement to overthrow the rum traffic, that threatens right speedily to become the dominant issue in our American life. With the impetus of this first vote, the cause ought to go forward by leaps and by bounds during the coming year.

The anti-liquor forces need to learn the lesson of more efficient organization without further delay. The liquor traffic is now contending for its life. It will yield no inch of territory without a struggle. In every state the forces that are against the bar room must line up in invincible array. The end is not yet, and the future will be a contest of skill in organization quite as much as a contest of principles. The greatest question now before the American people is the destruction of the un-American liquor traffic.

Where Shall Friends Lay Emphasis the Coming Year?

A Symposium

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN

The greatest problem before the Friends Church today is the problem of leadership. Every local meeting, every yearly meeting, every educational institution, and the educational board must put the emphasis upon the solution of this much discussed and often vexing question. The leadership I refer to is a spiritual leadership, and one so equipped for service that by training and growing experience it will grasp the significance of modern tendencies in thought and life, and be able to find the soul in a social body which appears so much like mere materialism. This leadership must be liberated for service in such a way by financial generosity on the part of the church that it will no longer be obliged to earn its bread with one hand (and perhaps the right one), while the other devotes itself with such skill as it possesses to the more important service of the Lord.

The verdict of history and contemporary life is against a policy which slides along indefinitely without fearlessly grappling with this important thing. The denominations which today are dominant in America, Europe, and the world, are those which for generations have deliberately trained up a body of workers who have devoted their whole careers to the increase of their denominational efficiency, and the consequent building up of the Kingdom in the field where they are working.

We plead for no clergy, or church hierarchy, or authority placed in an isolated group. Our polity needs no changing, for the leadership we need is one fitted to co-ordinate and harmonize the patchwork style in which today we are working all the way from Maine to California. There are possible dangers in a course like this, but they are as rough places in a plainly marked road as compared with the quagmires of aimless floundering and struggling in which we shall find ourselves (if we are not already there), provided we do not definitely plan for a consecrated, spiritual and trained leadership.

Portland, Maine.

BY LUKE WOODARD

In answering this question I would suggest the following as applicable without limit:

It should be on the prayer of faith and the ministry of the Word, the heaven ordained instrumentality for saving the lost and edifying the church, endeavoring by all proper agencies, by press and pulpit, by our training schools, our teachers and Bible schools, to make emphatic endorsement of an undiminished Bible, in no way to lessen confidence in its inspiration and ultimate authority in all matters of faith and practice.

To keep in proper balance the triune nature of Christianity as a matter, first, of history and doctrine; second, of experience; third, of practice. To insist especially on three links in the chain of doctrine, viz.: Calvary, Pentecost, and "The Judgment of the Great Day."—Judges 6.

Under the first, Calvary, should be presented the universality and exceeding sinfulness of sin, and the efficacious remedy, Christ and His atoning sacrifice, His resurrection and intercession, made efficacious to every one that believeth by means of the influence of the Holy Spirit effecting regeneration or the new birth, without which none can enter the Kingdom of God.

Under the head of Pentecost, believers should be urged earnestly to seek and obtain the baptism with the Holy Ghost for complete heart cleansing and endowment of power for successful service in whatever field of labor.

Under the head of the Judgment of the Great Day, the truth should be emphasized that the reaping will be according to the sowing, and that except men repent they will eternally perish; and while exalting the love of God, His righteousness and undeviating justice should not be lost sight of or obscured. Care should be taken in presenting these solemn themes, to put alongside of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which illustrates the great truth that the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which is lost, another parable, that of the wheat and the tares, showing how the same Son of Man sows in the world-field the good seed which results in a harvest of the children of the Kingdom; with its counterpart the truth of which is universally illustrated, viz.: that there is another sower as personal as the other, who under cover of darkness, while men sleep, sows seed of an opposite kind, which produces a harvest of the children of the wicked one.

Abhorrent as these are to the Son of Man, He does not permit His servants to attempt their extermination by violence, reserving to Himself the right to execute judgment, which He will do at the harvest, which is the end of the world, when the Son of Man shall send forth His angels who shall gather out of His Kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; "there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth, then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of my Father."

Other parables like that of the sower, and that of the "net cast into the sea," as well as the command to preach the Gospel to every creature, should be emphasized to enforce the obligation resting on the church to be diligent in the use of time, talents and means, in the fulfillment of its mission at home and abroad.

Fountain City, Indiana.

BY THEO. FOXWORTHY

The more I contemplate the condition of our church the stronger is my conviction that we must get together more closely in our methods of work.

I cannot but feel that we should emphasize the necessity of a uniform financial system for our entire church, flexible enough in its working to meet local conditions. The money required each year for church extension, foreign missions, education, etc., as well as the regular Yearly Meeting assessment, should be apportioned to the local meetings by a committee appointed by the Yearly Meeting. To my knowledge there are comparatively few local meetings that do not pay their Yearly Meeting apportionment. If the demand for money to maintain the different lines of church activity could come to the local churches in the authoritative manner as does this yearly assessment, I believe that the funds necessary to carry on our work would be more easily raised and be borne by a much larger per cent. of the membership than at present.

Our Yearly Meetings should be more closely united in evangelistic effort. Knowledge of evangelists, their slates, etc., should be furnished each month to every Yearly Meeting superintendent, and funds for evangelistic work should be used where the need is greatest regardless of Yearly Meeting boundaries.

The Church Extension feature of our work should be especially emphasized this year. If we would grow in numbers and in strength, we must more nearly occupy the fields which are open to us, and also enlarge our small meetings. This cannot always be done by each Yearly Meeting itself, hence a united effort should be made by our entire organization to enter new fields in which the opening for Friends is the most favorable.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

Iron for Gold

BY ROBERT E. PRETLOW

II. Chron. 12: 9, 10. Isaiah 60: 17.

The two texts, taken from widely different periods of Hebrew history and a news item in the current papers all emphasize the substitutions that take place in human lives according to the shifting of the center of life's allegiance. Rehoboam had substituted his own will for the law of God. He had substituted selfishness for righteousness and care for his own pomp, glory and ease for care for the welfare of his people. Outward and visible substitutions follow these internal ones. Abandoning righteousness as the guide of life, he loses its defense as a protector of his interests. Scorning his obligations to the people whom he ruled, he forfeited all right to their loyalty and obedience. It was an easy thing for Shishak to overcome him, rob temple and palace of their treasures, and leave him so impoverished that to keep up even a show of opulence, it was necessary to substitute brass for the splendid shields of gold which Solomon had made.

Isaiah sings of a time when people's hearts shall be turned to God. Then also substitutions follow. As we approach God the substitutions are from things of lesser value to those of greater worth. As we seek our own way they are from the precious to the cheap.

The recent newspaper item told of the actions of an agent of one of the warring nations of Europe who was in New York urging the natives of that land, men and women alike, to exchange their golden wedding rings for rings of iron, that the gold might be used in furthering that nation's war-like operations. Iron for gold! It was a fitting substitution. The sacredest of human ties are the ties of the family. Its bond is love.

Over against it is war that is the enemy of the home. Not only does it break up the home by the slaughter of fathers and husbands and sons; not only does it destroy the hope of homes in leaving multitudes of unwed women mourning the husbands and children who might have been; but it defiles the home, and all the relations of society by the destruction of moral restraints, and the debasement of moral standards. Iron for gold; the precious metal of the home given up for the base metal of ideals of military glory, and the hope of bloody conquest.

A recently published conversation of President Garfield described his experience in visiting a battlefield where he had won a victory. Men lay all about as if sleeping. Suddenly the realization came that they were dead. He was a veteran, a victor. The fear of battle had left him. But there had also gone, never to return, the holy sense of the sacredness and value of human life. What he had gained was infinitely poorer than what he had lost. In the same interview he traced the moral effect on the soldiers. Sent out to forage they took what they needed, and the sense of the sacredness of property departed. Acting after the return of peace according to the ethics of war, multitudes found the doors of prisons open for them. It is no accidental matter that every war is followed by a phenomenal increase of crime against persons and against property. That path leads away from God; and the golden ideals of the heavenly kingdom are replaced by iron and lead.

Not alone in ancient Israel or in modern warfare do these substitutions take place. It is the common law. In commercial affairs a man of high ideals sees questionable practices current. The slogan of "business is business" gradually replaces the high principles that made him respect himself because he respected the rights of all others. The golden band of service degenerates into the iron ring of profits.

Even in religion itself do these substitutions come. We have a personal experience. It means much to us. We exalt it. We take ours as a measure and look down on all who do not accord. After a while others awake to the fact, even if we do not, that instead of the golden consciousness of present divine life, we have only the rusty iron ring of the memory of a past experience. Perhaps in our own experience as in our service or in our acceptance with others we see some others outstripping us, and we turn our thoughts to our standing instead of our duty. The spirit loses its light and buoyancy and becomes cold, dark and bitter. We have bartered the shining badge of service for the poisonous iron of jealousy.

In our own eyes our service may have seemed signally successful. (And how often we can see successes for ourselves where others see only failure, and virtues for ourselves where other eyes behold grievous fault!) But to us our success seems great. In our admiration of it and of ourselves who won it we lose sight of the only source of strength, exalt ourselves above our fellows, think ourselves free from fault and liability to error, and arrogate to ourselves something of the infallibility of the infinite. We have exchanged the precious token of our freedom for the iron mask of slavery to that relentless tyrant, an overweening egotism.

And this trading goes steadily on. There is no closing of this stock exchange. Happily the exchange need not be better for worse, else were our case hopeless. God still offers to all who will face toward Him and sincerely seek to do His will, the gold and silver of the eternal kingdom for the brass and iron of our low ideals and our petty ambitions.

The Miracle of Rocky Run

BY JUNIUS JUNIOR

(Author of "A Monthly Meeting Chronicle")

CHAPTER IV

"I am asked to announce that the Pastoral Committee will meet in the other room at the rise of the meeting. As the subject to be considered is of considerable importance all the members of the Committee are urged to be present."

It was William Flanders making an announcement at the close of the morning meeting about the middle of January. The service had been up to the usual standard, and the interested observer who was present again this morning noticed the customary absence of most of the young people, and the scarcity of food for them had they been present.

Following a verse of song the congregation of thirty-one persons stood while the benediction was pronounced, and within five minutes the Pastoral Committee had convened around the Superintendent's table in the Sunday School room. Seven members were present.

"It has been felt by some that perhaps we ought to have a series of meetings at Rocky Run this winter," explained Joel Tomkins, chairman. "We had no revival last winter and it seems to some of us that if some visiting brother would come this way and hold a few meetings it would freshen us all up a bit."

"I guess we all need a little reviving," Joel went on, "and perhaps it will be the means of increasing attendance at meeting. My wife and I were talking about it last night, and she suggested that it might have a good effect upon the young folks. It is now for the Committee to say what we ought to do in the matter."

"Has the chairman anyone in mind who might be secured for this purpose or is it the plan that our own ministers and workers shall have charge?" asked Jabez Dolman.

"For my own part I would just as soon trust our own workers to speak to our needs as someone else who knows little about us. However, I am in submission to whatever the Committee may decide," concluded Jabez as he took his seat.

"That is for the Committee to decide," replied Joel, but for my part I believe a revival will have a better effect if a stranger is secured to do the preaching."

"Yes, by all means let us get some one outside the meeting to take charge, provided we decide that it is best to undertake the meetings," was William Flanders' comment on the subject.

The others gave their assent to the undertaking, when Joel said: "It has been suggested by one or two that we try to get Eliezer Hammond of Tobiasville. Some of you will remember that he was present at Quarterly Meeting about eight years ago and his message was generally well liked. Personally I would prefer a younger man, but as his name has been mentioned I felt I ought to suggest it here."

"He's the very man for us," spoke up Martha Letty. "I have never heard him, but I know about him, and he is a solid man to whom we can safely entrust such an important undertaking."

Two of the Committee preferred a younger man, but were in submission. Lucy Wentling wanted to know if it wouldn't be well to select some one to come and lead in the singing. She thought maybe it would help to get the young people interested.

"I don't believe in having to offer special inducements to get people to come to meeting," broke in Tobias Hunt. "The Lord won't bless any outward devices that are used to take the place of true spirituality of worship. When I was young, we children were brought up to go to meeting, not for the purpose of being entertained, but because it was our duty to go. Even if we wanted to stay away, we generally found it more convenient to go than to take the consequences of not going."

Tobias had reached the sunset of life, and was not particularly noted for his sympathy with the spirit of the age in which he still continued to live.

The Committee felt the same way about the proposed singer, however, and it was finally decided that the series of meetings should be entrusted to the care of Eliezer Hammond, provided he could be induced to come that way. The chairman was directed to send him a letter on the morrow, extending an invitation on behalf of the whole Committee to come to Rocky Run as soon as he could make the arrangements.

Some one asked if some sort of preparation for his coming should not be made, but in the absence of any specific knowledge on the subject, it was agreed that when a favorable answer was secured, William Flanders should make due announcement of the evangelist's coming, and invite all to present themselves at the various sessions of the series, leaving it to Eliezer to devise his own plans when he should arrive on the field.

It was now the middle of February. For ten days, twice a day, the evangelist had been preaching straight gospel truth to his auditors. It was apparent to all that the meetings had not been a pronounced success. Outside of the leading membership of the meeting, the services had hardly caused a ripple in the community. Neighborhood life, both in the town and in the country, went on about as usual.

A few of the young people had attended somewhat scatteringly, and, generally speaking, had failed to come again. While having respect for the message and the messenger there was little in it that appealed to them, and somehow it failed to strike the fire of inspiration. The night before three young men on the back seat, members of Friends' families they were, had been somewhat boisterous, and it was whispered about the community the next day that two of them had gone direct to the meeting from one of the town bar rooms.

Somehow Eliezer was failing to grip the community, and yet he was beginning to have the consciousness that it was not altogether his fault. By inquiry he had learned to his disappointment that there had been no special preparation for his coming, no prayer meetings held, no committees to help, no personal workers to stand by his side, nobody to do anything except the preacher.

After an anxious half day spent in prayer, he had come to this Thursday night service determined if possible to force the issue. The hymns were carefully selected. The prayer had an unusual warmth about it. The sermon was an appeal to the church no less than to the unsaved, and with vigorous words the people were besought to get right with God, to seek to know the Divine will and to be obedient to the command of the Lord.

Eliezer Hammond was doing his best to probe what seemed to him was an unaccountable mystery in Rocky Run, and he had come to have a suspicion that the self-satisfied condition of some of the leading members had something to do with it. His sermon on this Thursday evening, therefore, was almost the effort of his life, and with unusual fervor he merged his sermon into an appeal to all to allow God to have the right of way in their lives.

But with sad heart he witnessed no response to his appeal, and with sudden determination he closed the meeting abruptly and asked the members of the Pastoral Committee to remain for a brief conference.

When he was alone with the Committee, Eliezer told them frankly that he felt there was something the matter with the meetings, and he had been wondering if the fault was wholly with him. He wondered whether the membership was doing all that it could, both in their attitude toward the revival and in the relationship of the meeting to the community and especially to the young people. As he continued, he grew more timid, however, and finally sat down conscious of a feeling that after all he had failed to make the Committee see the shortcomings of the meeting.

As for the Committee they were ready to do all they could, but nobody had any constructive vision, nobody had a suspicion that the salvation of Rocky Run community depended upon a revival in Rocky Run Meeting that would have to begin with the ruling members.

Joel Tomkins finally did manage to suggest that he was coming more and more to feel that the meeting itself would have to show a greater interest in the community and especially in the young people, if it received the blessing of the Lord in any real sense. He could not help but wonder what the meeting would do with the young people even if they should be won in the revival. Apparently there was no plan to take care of them in any vital sense, and perhaps the reason that there were no converts was because God saw they would not be taken care of if they should come in.

It was a bold speech, and there were those who thought Joel was talking heresy. Nobody else had a vision in that direction and the company scattered with a vague feeling of unrest.

On the following Sabbath evening Eliezer Hammond terminated the series and returned to his home and the following account was written for the church paper:

"While many were disappointed that there were no visible results of the meeting, it is believed that the membership has been refreshed and strengthened."

The problem of what was the matter at Rocky Run was not yet formulated in many minds, but the certainty that there was a problem was beginning to force itself upon some of the older Friends as well as the younger.

A Case of Applied Christianity

BY EARLE J. HAROLD

One of the fruits of the men and religion forward movement was an awakening of the church-membership of the entire country on the question of Social Service. The church already had pretty clearly defined notions about home missions and foreign missions, but had very little idea of what has come to be known as Social Service. But times have changed and there is no other one subject in current church literature that receives as much attention as Social Service and this is an index of the importance attached to it by leading church workers of all Christian countries.

Our religion is a community as well as an individual affair: "No man liveth unto himself." The Gospel of Jesus Christ is fitted primarily for people living in human society and not living apart as hermits, and the laws of the Kingdom presuppose the intricacies and perplexities of human relationships. Social Service has for its object the reconstruction of society based on the teachings of Christ and the Gospels, translating the laws of the Kingdom into the laws of commonwealths and municipalities.

Christian Social Service is applied Christianity. More specifically, as evangelism seeks to get men into the right relationship with God, their Father, Social Service seeks to encourage these men to have the right relationship to all other members of human society; seeking social justice, the elimination of those evils of our social and industrial systems which prey upon the weaker members of the race and to give every family its opportunity to maintain itself according to the highest Christian standards.

If the followers of Jesus do not intercede between a certain class of greedy employers and the impotent child employees, pray tell who shall? Whose business is it to see that children coming into the world by parents of a low order are removed and given childhood's opportunity for development? Whose business is it to see that the instinct for play, recreation, and amusement, is not prostituted for the monetary gain of certain men through the conduct of improper and even indecent attractions in the way of moving-picture shows and theaters of all kinds? Has the church no active interest in the many causes of poverty, part of which pertain to physical fitness, health, sanitation, intemperance of every sort, and low mental and moral vitality? It is too much like the old legend in which the people were busy taking care of the victims, while the dangerous dragon which had maimed them was allowed to go free.

The city of Greensboro, N. C., undertook to realize for itself the high ambition of being a model community in which to live and bring up children. In June, 1912, the Inter-Church Association was organized as an agency working for this goal. Although the objects and methods have not changed, the name was recently changed to the Social Welfare League of Greensboro, which indicates more accurately the work being done. The objects of the League may be stated as follows:

First. To unite the forces of righteousness in the community for the promotion of the social welfare.

Second. To create and maintain a Christian conscience in every department of community life.

Third. To labor for improved conditions of living.

Fourth. To perform the office and supply the needs of an associated charities.

The work divides itself naturally into the following departments:

1. Associated Charities.
2. Child Welfare.
3. Family Rehabilitation.
4. Law and Order.
5. Legislation.
6. The Social Evil.
7. Public Amusement and Recreation.
8. Public Health.

Some of the definite results accomplished are as follows: A new standard in the matter of public amusement has been established in Greensboro and while this standard must be raised still higher, yet it is unquestionably true that a better sentiment in this matter exists in Greensboro than in any other city in North Carolina, and that greater care is exercised in the selection of pictures and plays for Greensboro than is exercised elsewhere. The Guilford County Public Morals Law has been enacted in line with the most approved and most advanced legislation on the subject in the entire country, a similar law for the District of Columbia having been enacted by Congress about a year after it was enacted for Guilford County, and some of the foremost thinkers of the state having advocated that it should be adopted for the entire state of North Carolina. The notorious "bull pen" district has been cleaned up and exists no more. A new standard of entertainment has been established in the Central Carolina Fair, where a very objectionable midway had been in operation. The enforcement of law and order under the Guilford County Public Morals Act has produced a community condition so far as the two most frequent and conspicuous violations of law and order are concerned, which, while not ideal or perfect by any means, has rendered Greensboro by far the most desirable community to live in of any city of North Carolina. Much constructive charity work has been accomplished, resulting in the rehabilitation of entire families, with the result that these families are now honestly and successfully striving to accomplish the ideals that have been set for them of self-respecting self-support and Christian citizenship, and resulting further in the removal of many children from vicious and ruinous surroundings to the wholesome atmosphere of Christian homes and institutions.

At the present time the League is carrying on a publicity campaign, using paid advertising space in the two daily papers, in which it is advocating the establishment of an adequate public health department with a full time expert health officer in charge, which shall do genuine preventive and constructive work, have supervision of the health of the school children, etc. It is also championing clean amusements as represented in the playhouses, moving picture shows, and the outdoor amusements of the summer time, including public playgrounds. This space will be used for the publication of local conditions which arise that need publicity, in order to secure their eradication. It will also be used for advocating the various constructive lines of work in community welfare work.

The League employs a General Secretary, a woman as a social welfare worker on part time, and an office secretary. It is supported entirely by a sustaining membership paying from $6.00 to $200.00 per year, payable quarterly. The League is also the Associated Charities of the city, and has been able to reduce very largely the begging from house to house, and to eliminate the beggars from the business section. As the Chamber of Commerce considers anything its work which will develop the business interests of the city, so the Social Welfare League has for its task anything and everything that may be done for the social and moral welfare of the community, and the work has established itself as a fixed factor in the life of Greensboro.

"Growth in the Spirit of Unity Among Women."

BY CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS

To grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, is growth in the Spirit of Unity.

Women are united today as never before in aim, purpose and spirit, and because of this unity far greater opportunity for effective service is ours. The heart in which this Spirit of Unity dwells will grow and increase—it cannot help itself any more than the rose can help unfolding its leaves in the sunshine, and increasing in beauty and fragrance. Way back in 1861 in the heart of that sainted woman, Mrs. Doreus of New York, this Spirit of Unity was manifested and the Union Missionary Society was founded. This brought together women of different denominations in a common interest.

This society antedates all American club life. This Spirit of Unity continued to exist, though it did not grow and increase, until in 1900 it was beautifully manifested in the progressive women who organized the "Central Committee on United Study," bringing to all our missionary women our study book. We can never measure the blessing that has come to us from this United Study. "Information means inspiration."

Through this same Spirit of Unity, the Council of Women for Home Mission was formed. How the Home Study books have opened our eyes, and made us cognizant of facts we never dreamed of, and has given us a new zeal to bring about different conditions. "Enthusiasm is always the child of knowledge, never of ignorance."

In 1910-1911 the Woman's Jubilee swept the country from ocean to ocean. It brought about co-operation to an extent up to that time unknown among us in religious work. Thousands of women gathered together in loving, enthusiastic work for the Master, the fruit of which eternity alone can reveal. In February, 1912, in Philadelphia, the Triennial Conference of Woman's Foreign Mission Boards of the United States and Canada was held. It was then decided that some plan must be devised whereby the enthusiasm of the Jubilee should be conserved and this Spirit of Unity among women maintained. This Spirit of Unity has gone on, resulting in the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of the United States. This was consummated October 24, 1913, and was a blessed step in Unity of Spirit and purpose, for the Federation now represents twenty National Boards standing for a great multitude of women, who are banded together to further this great purpose to evangelize the world. Through this Federation we have a representative in Mrs. Henry W. Peabody on the Edinboro Continuation Committee. We are a part of the Committee of "Twenty-eight" who have prepared a United Missionary Program for the local church, 1914-1915.

The Social Force of Christian Missions—Christ for Every Life and All of Life—I want to emphasize most strongly at this time. Had it not been for our Woman's Foreign Missionary Union, we would not be one of the spokes in the wheel of this vast movement. Is it not splendid to be a part of such a wonderful and glorious work?

For some few years back the Council of Women for Home Missions has had an Annual Day of Prayer, with a program prepared by the Council. Until the consummation of the Federation, an Annual Day of Prayer for Foreign Missions could not be arranged, but now the coalition is accomplished, a program has been prepared and January 8, 1915, has been set apart as the Annual Day of Prayer for Foreign Missions.

Through the effort of one dear little woman last year, nine hundred gathered together, in Pittsburgh, to observe the Day of Prayer. Just see what zeal and enthusiasm can accomplish. Is it not blessed to think we are part of this great company of women, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, united together in Unity of Spirit? May these petitions arise as a sweet smelling savor to our Heavenly Father and hasten the day when the knowledge of Jesus Christ shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea.

The New International Uniform Lesson Committee

BY RICHARD HAWORTH *

At the International Sunday School Convention held in Chicago last June, the American section of the World's Sunday School Uniform Lesson Committee was reorganized as follows:

"(a) Eight members to be selected by the International Sunday School Association.

"(b) Eight members to be selected by the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations.

"(c) One member to be selected by each denomination represented in the Sunday School Council, now having, or that in the future may have, a lesson committee."

The Convention selected at that time, Prof. Ira M. Price, Prof. John R. Sampey, Prof. F. C. Eislén, Principal E. I. Rexford, Justice J. J. Maclaren, Dean Hall Laurie Calhoun, Dr. H. M. Hamill, and Dr. Amos R. Wells.

The Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations reported B. S. Winchester, H. H. Meyer, J. M. Duncan, E. M. Fergusson, Mrs. J. W. Barnes, W. E. Chalmers, A. L. Phillips, and J. J. Van Ness.

About twenty denominations have reported their representatives. The Friends, through the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, have selected Wilbur K. Thomas, Ph., 12 Hazelwood St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass., as their representative.

At the same convention a Memorial was presented asking for a system of grading for the Uniform Lessons, "on a basis of not more than four grades," the same to be arranged by a Commission of experts. The proposition was not granted, but the new Lesson Committee was instructed "to appoint a committee from its own members to consider the best interests and methods of the Uniform Lesson, and report back to the Lesson Committee." Later the Convention voted to refer the Memorial on grading the Uniform Lessons "to the new Lesson Committee for its earnest consideration and such disposition as it deems best."

Friends generally will be pleased to have a simpler form of grading than the new one now in use in many places, where if the entire system is used each school will have seventeen classes below the Adult classes.

The new Committee is now at work on the above suggestions and will, no doubt in the near future, present some definite plan of simple grading for the Uniform Lessons.

Miners More Efficient

The West Virginia prohibition law, says the Coal Trade Journal, has much to do with the marked increase in the output of coal in the various mining regions of the state. The miners are more efficient because free access to liquor is denied them. The week-end drinking bout is a thing of the past.

From "Memoirs of Li Hung Chang"

AN EXTRACT FROM HIS DIARY *

By permission of the publishers, Houghton Mifflin Company.

July 28—I cannot think that all people are bad, even the worst of the Christians, for today I had an experience—just an hour ago—that makes me think that outside of office and business, outside of riches and honours, there are small happenings which touch a man's heart, and make him feel that humanity is not all iron and gain and falsehood.

For today this yamen, which for twenty-four years had been mine, was the destination of a great mission, such as never before came within the compound. I nearly wept to receive them.

Two native Christians came all the way from that miserable town in Japan to bring me here medicines for my head, and to see if I was getting better! I wonder if this is because Christianity teaches such things? It must be, for the Japanese are a race that assume to be strong in matters of physical pain, and they are a people that hate the outsider—the Chinese most of all. Therefore it must be some new ideas that this man and boy got into their heads to make them do such a thing.

With my own eyes I saw them coming up the steps of the yamen, and at first I told Len to send them away—as if I was the proprietor of the place; but I soon saw that they were Japanese, and I wondered what they might want of me, or if it was I they desired to see. Len let them in, but for a long time we could not learn just what was desired, for the man spoke his own tongue, or a dialect of it, and I could gather but a few words.

Ling-ho, one of my interpreters, being sent for, I was amazed to learn that the strange man was one of a number of native converts who had called to see me in my sick-room when I was recovering from the effects of the madman's bullet in my skull; and as I looked at him I saw that he was telling the truth, for I recognized him. His name, he said, was Sato, and the boy that accompanied him was his thirteen-year-old son.

Sato said that all the native Christians in the little mission at Ketuki, near Moji—the mission that had at first sent the delegation to my sick-room with flowers—had talked about me every day since I was there, and had prayed to the Christian God for my recovery.

He said that they, his mission friends, did not believe in war or killing, and that they had understood that I had come to put a stop to the war.

"Were we not right, Your Excellency?" he asked.

"Yes, Mr. Sato," I said, "you were right. I went to try and stop the war. There hasn't been any since, has there?"

He answered no, and said I was a great and good man.

Then he explained that all his friends were very anxious to know how I was getting along. Sometimes, he said, they would hear that I was entirely well, and again it would be reported that I was dead; so they couldn't stand the uncertainty any longer, and collected money between them and sent Sato with a message of good will and some herb medicines.

I took the medicines and had my two visitors served with the nicest kind of boiled chicken, some chicken tongue on crackers, rice, cakes, and tea. I wanted them to stay with me for a few days, telling them that I would treat them well; but Mr. Sato said he was already almost sick unto death to get back home, and that he had once or twice nearly turned back, especially as his son was so lonely. Besides, he said, he had been driven almost to distraction, not knowing whether he should find me here (Tientsin), at Peking, or in the south.

When they were ready to go, I gave them a big bundle of presents of all kinds for their friends back at Ketuki, two hundred taels for the mission, and as much more to reimburse them for the outlay of the journey. This last he did not want to accept, saying that as he had funds sufficient to take him home, he was fearful that the friends who had sent him might not like it. But I prevailed upon him to take the money.

I think this Christianity makes poor and lowly people bold and unafraid, for before Mr. Sato and his boy left, he wanted to know if they might pray for me. I said they could, expecting that he meant when they got back home again; but he said something to the little son, and they knelt right there at the door and said a prayer.

I could not keep my heart from thumping in my bosom, as I watched that poor man and his frightened little boy praying to God—the God that will deal with me and with them and all mankind—that I might be well of my injuries.

I was sorry to see them go.

In this old yamen, which for twenty odd years was mine, strange scenes have been enacted, great councils held, and midnight conferences affecting the whole world have taken place. I have received royalties and dukes, ambassadors, ministers, murderers, robbers and beggars. Men have been sentenced to death from here, others have been made glad with leases of lands, railroad contracts, or the gift of public office. But during each and every occurrence, whatever its nature, I have been complete master of my house and myself—until an hour ago. Then it was that for the first time did I believe the favor was being conferred upon me.

(Li was not "master" of the yamen at this writing, simply making it his headquarters during his stay at Tientsin.)

Poor Mr. Sato, all the way from Japan to offer a Christian prayer for the "heathen" old Viceroy! I did not know that any one outside of my own family cared enough about me for such a thing.

I do not love the Japanese, but perhaps Christianity would help them!

The Westtown Letter

The Year's Progress

This is the closing Westtown Letter of the series of twelve which have appeared at somewhat irregular intervals through the year now ending.

In a rather familiar way I have endeavored to give some idea of Westtown School as it now is, showing, also, as much as possible of its spirit and movement. These last intangible attributes are difficult to set forth, and yet they are really the things which make a school worth while. If the spirit is strong and earnest, the children will recognize it and consciously or unconsciously let their spirits be attuned to it. If the School has an obvious movement, so that growth and progress are apparent term by term, the advance of the children will fall in line and keep step with it. It is far more stimulating than high but unvarying excellence. The children are just becoming aware that they have a spirit, and that their education is an unfolding and advance, and they feel a close sympathy with a live and developing school. Change in itself is not good. It unsettles and disturbs, and breaks up the school traditions. Natural growth is what is wanted: twelve acres of ice for skating instead of three, six evening newspapers added to the one morning sheet, four sitting rooms in place of one, greater liberty to those of high scholarship. These unsettle nothing but they make school life vastly more interesting and stimulating.

It is to improvements of this kind that our chief effort has been directed for the past year or two. We have endeavored to lessen all kinds of friction, and to gain in efficiency, intellectual, moral and spiritual. We hope we have succeeded in the last, we are sure that we have in the other two.

We have a five years high school course, and the majority of our pupils enter only three years down, and many two years before graduation. It seemed, therefore, necessary to put nearly all the college subjects in the last three years, making the work in these classes very full and heavy, especially as compared with the two years before them. We have recently decided to ignore the fact that our pupils enter late, and to spread our studies more uniformly along our whole course, thus naturally raising the standard of scholarship in our lower classes, and lessen the pressure in the upper part of the school.

We have to teach all the standard preparatory subjects, and there is a strong temptation to confine ourselves largely to these topics, in spite of the fact that half of our people do not go to college and that a few of them, to whom we feel that we owe an education, can scarcely stand up to Physics and Virgil and Advanced Algebra. We have, therefore, this year revived the old studies of Zoology, Geology and Agriculture, and have extended our Domestic Science course.

But by far our most earnest constructive thought has been given for the past year upon the care of our boys. In this we have not neglected our girls, but their problems were in the recent past much more efficiently solved than were our boys'. This was so because all our women teachers lived in the school building and we could select the most suitable as house mistress and give her ample assistance. But our older men teachers were nearly all married and lived outside and the caretakers of the boys were mainly younger men, who were subject to frequent changes.

In a former letter I have explained how we found the right house master in George L. Jones, and built for himself and wife most comfortable quarters, just without the walls of the house, but opening right on to the main corridor. From this point of vantage he has had a better chance to study the situation at first hand than any men of equal ability and experience has had for fifty years.

The result has amply realized our hopes. The efficient corps of house men, assisted by the younger men outside who have been in the work before, has obtained the best control over the boys that I can remember in my long knowledge of the School. The result is not obtained by any rule and punishment method. Personal influence, companionable presence, the lessening of friction, pleasureable occupation, and a greater sense of responsibility have done it. Of the thirty study-room periods in the week, ten are effectively presided over by the boys. For five evenings of the week the hour study collection is similarly held. The study collection on Second-day morning, perhaps the most difficult in the week, has quite recently been assumed by the pupils. It is a splendid experience for those who are chosen from time to time to preside, and a most valuable lesson in self-constraint to the rest.

We are just starting another plan to be carried out separately on each side of the house which will further advance this idea. Those pupils of the three upper classes who come up to a certain standard in lessons and conduct, and who have won a certain number of points by holding school offices, or by taking prominent parts in certain events, automatically find themselves members of a small group to whom will be given unusual liberties and responsibilities. As old members of this group they will be invited back to the School to a dinner once a year, when they will meet the younger members now in the School, to whom they will pass on down the sense of duty and the power to possess liberty without abusing it.

By such means as these we are trying to give our children a wholesome stimulating life which will rouse their better natures and help them in the struggle to overgrow the harmful tendencies which most of them possess in some degree, and which are always found in large groups of young people. We, their caretakers, are often bowed in spirit under the heavy responsibility of our work, even while we face it with courage and hope.

With kindly greetings to those who read this letter as the old year fades away and the new year opens to us with its gracious promises, I close this series of letters.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

TO THE OLD AND THE NEW YEAR

BY LAURA F. ARMITAGE

O year that is going, take with you
Some evil that dwells in my heart;
Let selfishness, doubt,
With the old year go out—
With joy I would see them depart.

O year that is coming, bring with you
Some virtue of which I have need;
More patience to bear,
And more kindness to share,
And more love that is true love indeed.

O year that is going, take with you
Impatience and wilfulness—pride;
The sharp word that slips
From these too hasty lips,
I would cast, with the old year aside.

O year that is coming, bring with you
More charity unto the weak,—
A deep, growing peace,
That never shall cease,—
Of these things, I surely have need.

NATHAN FRAME

A telegram from Esther G. Frame to Timothy Nicholson, of Richmond, announces the death of Nathan Frame at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Wooton, in Washington City on Saturday night, December 26th. Burial at Jamestown, Ohio, their old home, was announced for Tuesday afternoon, December 29th. Nathan Frame has been a great sufferer from cancer for many months, and has been shut in for nearly two years. We hope to have a more extended account of his life a little later. Few Friends if any are more widely known than Nathan and Esther Frame.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Economy, Indiana—On December 20th the regular Sabbath School and meeting services at Economy were given over to the celebration of the Christmastide. There were simple decorations appropriate to the season. The children to the number of about forty accredited themselves in a pleasing manner as they gave their recitations and sang their songs. Under the supervision of Lula Macy, Superintendent of the Cradle Roll, gifts were given to the members of the class, the majority of the children enrolled being present. Truman C. Kenworthy, Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, was a welcome visitor. He spoke appreciatively of the efforts of the committees in charge of the exercises and gave a discourse suitable to the occasion. At the conclusion of the program the traditional boxes of candy were given to all members of the school.

Fairmount, Indiana—The Bible School at Fairmount is increasing in numbers. On December 20, there was an attendance of 428. Nathan Davidson's class of "Hustlers," boys between the ages of eleven and fourteen, numbered thirty-four. In the evening an interesting Christmas cantata was given which was enjoyed by a large attendance.

The morning service of December 20, was observed as peace day. Fred Carter preached a most excellent sermon on the subject, giving much scriptural prophesy in regard to present day conditions.

Marion, Indiana—On December 13th, Paul H. Brown, of Richmond, President of the Indiana Yearly Meeting C. E. Union, was present at the evening services at the Second Friends Church in Marion, having been invited by the local C. E. Society. The pastor kindly gave over the regular evening service to the Endeavorers, who arranged for special music by a mixed quartet and the choir. In spite of the bad weather the attendance was good and a profitable meeting was reported.

Peshastin, Washington—The work of the Community Church at Peshastin, Washington, is progressing in a very satisfactory manner. The attendance at the Sunday meetings is good and the feeling of unity and fellowship is growing. The women of the church recently proposed a "work bee" for the new meeting house, offering to furnish dinner for all the men who would come to help put on the siding and lathe. On December 15, the "bee" was held. Twenty-five men made the air ring with their hammers and fifteen women prepared an excellent dinner. In the afternoon the men offered to come the next day for similar work if the women would again furnish dinner. The women responded by providing a chicken-pie dinner and about the same number of men worked the second day. A general feeling of enthusiasm and good fellowship prevailed. At the prayer meeting that evening those present though tired in body, were greatly refreshed by the presence of the Spirit among them, and great thankfulness was expressed for the unity that had been shown in the day's work.

West Richmond, Indiana—On Sabbath morning, December 20th, George W. Nasmuth, of Boston, representing the Peace Foundation, spoke in a most interesting and profitable way at the West Richmond meeting. During the afternoon a number of interested Friends and others called to see him at the home of President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College. In the evening he held a conference in the interest of the peace movement in the colleges, and addressed the students of the College at chapel on the following morning. Mr. Nasmuth has recently spent three years in German Universities, and was there at the outbreak of the war. Coming to England, he was so impressed with the peace activities of Friends that he has become a member.

Calvary, Kansas—Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held at Calvary, November 28 and 29. The sessions were unusually well attended. L. Clarkson Hinshaw, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present, and his gospel messages at both morning sessions were timely, edifying and inspiring. The session of the C. E. Union was enjoyed by all. The Treasurer of the Quarterly Meeting was directed to forward $10.00 to help in supplying the needs of Nathan and Esther Frame. The series of meetings which had begun at Calvary by the pastors, Amy B. and Cyrus H. Hawkins, were prematurely closed on account of the bad weather, yet a good work was done in revising and strengthening the membership and others. The Bible lessons at the day meetings were much appreciated.

Union Springs, New York—At the last Sabbath of the fall term of school at Oakwood Seminary, the Friends Bible School at Union Springs observed the White Gift Christmas. The emphasis is placed upon giving to our King the white gifts of self, service and substance. There were a number of definite consecrations of self and service to the Master. The gifts of substance were quite varied. From the home department and adult class a box was sent to some mountaineers of North Carolina. The older boys remembered the Belgian sufferers, while the younger ones are supporting a native reader in India this year. The older girls with the help of the general Bible School fund remembered the members of a mission Bible School and gave an offering of money for the education of Catherine De Vol, the little daughter of our missionary in China. The younger girls sent a box of necessary articles to a poor family in the country, some of the clothing having been made by them. The cradle roll and primary department gave soap and wash cloths to the Auburn City Hospital. The whole atmosphere of the occasion was to honor Christ by thinking of others. An evangelistic meeting was held the following night at which about a dozen students decided for Christ.

Newberg, Oregon—Newberg meeting feels keenly the loss of Julius Hodson and family, who have returned to their former home in New Garden, Indiana. A reception was given them in the church on Tuesday evening before their departure. Charles O. Whiteley spoke of the value of these Friends to the church from the pastor's standpoint. Aaron Bray spoke of J. C. Hodson's work as clerk of the Yearly Meeting. Frank Baird told of his association with him on the city council. Levi T. Pennington gave a brief account of the progress of the Sabbath School under the superintendency of Mr. Hodson, while E. H. Woodward expressed his appreciation of him as a member of the Pacific College Board. Louisa P. Round spoke on behalf of the W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. Hodson was a loyal and faithful member. Many others expressed their appreciation.

On December 3, 4 and 5, the Woman's Auxiliary to Pacific College held an industrial fair. There were exhibits of goods by practically all the prominent merchants and manufacturers of the city, together with most of the leading firms of Portland, also exhibits by the people of Springbrook, Rex, Chehalem Center, Champoege, Fernwood and Newberg. Besides an excellent literary and musical program each afternoon and evening, domestic science lectures and demonstrations were given twice each day. On Saturday afternoon a lecture was given by the Deputy Food and Dairy Commissioner. The ladies cleared more than $700.00 after all expenses were paid.

As the campaign for $100,000 endowment for Pacific College is drawing to a close, the students of the college and academy, on their own motion and managing the matter themselves, conducted a contest among the classes for the raising of subscriptions for this fund. Some of the gifts were secured from friends outside, but most of the amount raised was given by the students themselves. The senior class of the college won the college contest, with an average of $100.00 per member of the class. The fourth year class of the academy also won, with an average of $80.00 per member. The total raised by the students was over $3,500.00.

Westfield, Indiana—Revival services have been held at Westfield, commencing November 26, and closing on December 13. Most of the sessions were well attended and a good interest was manifested throughout. The services were conducted under the leadership of the pastor, E. Howard Brown, assisted by his wife and good company of gospel singers. The ministry was strong and fervent and produced a deep inspiration. There were a number of conversions and renewals.

Westfield Quarterly Meeting was held on December 5 and 6. Luke Woodard, of Fountain City, Indiana, was present and preached highly edifying sermons at both sessions of the Quarterly Meeting. The Biblical Seminary at Westfield is holding a two weeks' institute. Mr. Schultz, a Mennonite minister, is giving a series of lectures.

New Burlington, Ohio—The meeting and community at large have been greatly blessed by the services of Edgar Woolam, Field Secretary of the Cleveland Bible Institute, as preaching evangelist, and Merrill Coffin, of the same Institute, who rendered special service in song. The meetings continued three weeks and there was a large attendance. The ministry was of a high character, resulting in thirty-five conversions, while twenty others claimed definite blessing. Ten applications for membership have been received, all of whom will prove to be worthy members. These young Friends show wonderful gifts of evangelism and their steady, growing Christian purpose is a benediction to many lives.

PERSONAL MENTION

Daisy Douglas Barr, who has been working with the Lyon evangelistic party at Elkhart, Indiana, is at her home at Fairmount for the holidays.

Fannie Elliott, formerly pastor at West Elkton, Ohio, is now serving the meeting at pastor at Rockford, Ohio. The work in the meeting is opening up encouragingly.

Professor W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham College, is holding a series of meetings during the winter vacation at Georgetown, Illinois, where Roy Wolam is rendering pastoral service.

President Thomas Newlin, of Whittier College, spent December 13th, at Berkeley, California, where he spoke at the re-dedication of Friends meeting house which has just been remodeled. In the evening he spoke on the "Challenge of Youth."

Leora Bogue, who has been working with the evangelistic party of George Y. Stevens, is at her home at Fairmount, Indiana, for a few days' rest. Her work has consisted of solo singing, religious work with girls and women of factories, women's clubs, and organizing girls and women into Bible classes. Her next field of work will be at Auburn, Indiana.

SAFE AT RAMALLAH

A note written in French by Edward Kelsey to his brother, Mead, at Spice-land, Indiana, announces that the Americans at the Ramallah mission are all safe.

SOUTHLAND COLLEGE

The appeal below has the endorsement of the Southland College Board. Any amounts contributed from one dollar up will be appreciated.

To the Friends of Southland College:

Perhaps already the demands upon you for relief to those in distress have been very urgent, and you have given generously; but on behalf of the boys and girls who attend school at Southland, we make this appeal.

No one in the United States has been hurt so much as the colored man of the South by the conflict in Europe.

The manner in which he has had to dispose of his year's crop (cotton) has left him without money, food or clothes. He cannot find employment, as hundreds of old employees have been turned out of positions on the railroads, in the mills and factories. Even the more well to do are without money.

Every day letters come from those who have had children in school at Southland for several years, saying they cannot send.

Only yesterday a man came and took his two girls away, who had been here two months; little twelve and thirteen-year-old, motherless children; splendid workers, so willing and so anxious.

They left crying bitterly; left, not to go home, for they have no home, but to go into the cotton fields to pick cotton in the frost and the wet, and to live in a hut with many others of the roughest kind.

Twenty-five dollars a year provides a scholarship for just such as these.

The most that we can do will diminish but little the interminable tale of suffering; but for our own soul's sake, we should give, and give freely and promptly.

H. C. WOLFORD,

Pres. of Southland College,
Southland, Ark.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

We reproduce below a few statements from our readers about THE AMERICAN FRIEND, culled from a vast number. The first two are somewhat critical and are reproduced in full, but without the authors' names. These expressions come from Friends both East and West.

Muscatine, Ia., Dec. 11, 1914.

I have read with unusual interest your editorials in the issue of the third inst. And I want to challenge one of your statments or inferences:

"The world is looking for a conception of Christian truth that harmonizes with the exact teachings of Christ Himself, and with these the teachings of the Society of Friends are in complete accord."

I have looked carefully through the doctrine as laid down in the Iowa discipline and nothing therein, taken either in whole or in part, appears to me to be in "complete accord" with:

"Today thou shalt be with me in paradise."

"Sell that thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven."

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God and keep His commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy strength and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. * * * this do and thou shalt live."

Is not each of these directions a full and complete rule of action for the one addressed? Why have Friends added to these simple and clear directions for seeking an entrance to the better country? Again, has not the "religious invoice" of which you speak, shown conclusively that both the teachings and the practices of Friends are far short of the teachings of Christ and in many respects depart radically therefrom?

Very truly,

Redlands, Cal., Nov. 30, 1914.

As a rule I enjoy reading THE AMERICAN FRIEND very much. The testimony given in the article on "War and Peace" in the number of last week, November 19th, was good to read, in this day of little faith. But in the editorial of this number on "Saving Every Life and All of Life," there is very little with which I can agree, and without going into the subject in this letter I want to recommend a careful reading of the enclosed pamphlet on "The Folly of Federation Between the Church and the World."

Wichita, Kan., Dec. 12.

It would hardly be right or true to tell you that you have struck the supreme point of excellence in your AMERICAN FRIEND of the 3d inst., but I certainly can freely say that that number should be designated "Excelsior," and I am delighted to see the almost uniform improvement of the paper from the time it began under the new series. What constantly astonishes me is how the editor can do so much work and do it so well.

Truly your friend,

"We find THE AMERICAN FRIEND under the new management very satisfactory indeed. It is read at our home each week with much interest."

"As the paper comes to us from week to week we greatly enjoy the news from the different parts of the field. It gives us new zeal in the Master's cause to learn of the blessings He is bestowing on others."

"Let me extend another word of encouragement respecting the character of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. The Master is certainly giving the right sort of vision for our church to thee and is enabling thee to express it in an admirable way. I am delighted with the way the new ideas of our modern responsibility to the world in social service and the advanced methods of work are presented as inseparably connected with and based upon the solid rock of spirituality. I want thee to be greatly encouraged and given a large support from the church at large."

"I have felt drawn to write thee a letter of commendation for THE AMERICAN FRIEND more than once ere this."

"I enjoy THE AMERICAN FRIEND more than ever before."

"I am well pleased with the paper."

Less Than a Cent

You may know a woman who has a reputation for making delicious cake, biscuits, etc.,—who seems to hit it right every time.

You may also know a woman, who, no matter how painstaking, can't seem to get the knack of successful baking.

Both use the same butter, same eggs, same flour and sugar. What is the difference?

Very likely it's all in the baking powder. Undoubtedly the woman with the knack uses Royal Baking Powder, and the unsuccessful woman uses an alum baking powder thinking it cheaper.

Yet the difference in the cost of a whole large cake is less than a cent.

It is economy to use

MESSAGE FROM OUR SOLICITOR

Walter W. Brown, of Paoli, Indiana, has just completed an eleven weeks' tour of various meetings in Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings, in the interest of a larger patronage of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We give below a message from him to AMERICAN FRIEND readers written upon the conclusion of his successful tour. THE AMERICAN FRIEND is grateful for the sympathetic reception given him in the various communities visited.

To Our Friends

"He knoweth the way that I take."—Job 23: 10.

The Lord has directed my path as I have committed my way to Him.

The kindness of my home meeting at Paoli in liberating me to this service; the self-sacrifice of companion and daughter; the royal hospitality of many Friends with the hearty welcome and prayers and good wishes of hosts of others have made possible the pleasant and successful journey of one thousand three hundred and ninety-five miles by train, electric cars, automobiles, buggies and on foot. I have met personally about fifteen hundred Friends and participated in fifty-three different services, and have sent in to the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND 353 new names together with several renewals.

Wishing you all "A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year," I am yours in the service of Christ and the Church.

WALTER W. BROWN.

FRIENDS GOSPEL MISSION

This mission which has been established at 116 South Harvey Street, Oklahoma City, is under the care of H. J. and Gertrude Marriage Sharkey. A report of the work for the month of November was read at Shawnee Quarterly Meeting on December 13. The mission is well located and is doing most excellent work. Services are held every night and all day on the Sabbath. Much help has been received from the Men's Gospel Team. Local pastors and many of the Christian business men of the city have become interested in the mission.

During the month nineteen services were held in the hall with an average attendance of about twenty-three. Ten services have been held in the jail and there have been eleven personal visits in homes. More than a hundred persons have been interviewed about their religious conditions. Fourteen persons have knelt at the altar, and there have been five conversions, with many others helped spiritually. The income for the month was $164.87 and disbursements $117.05.

JOEL T. WRIGHT

Joel T. Wright, son of John Q. and Nancy Ann Wright, was born on a farm near Hardin's Creek or Bridges, Ohio, Eleventh month 20th, 1841, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Evan Good, near New Vienna, Ohio, Twelfth month 8th, 1914. As he stood by the grave of his young sister, he felt the call to the ministry, and entered into active service at the age of thirty; and for over forty years made faithful use of his gifts in preaching and pastoral work.

On Fifth month 25th, 1865, he was married to Anna M. Barrett, and three daughters and one son were born to this union. The son died in infancy. The daughters, Mrs. T. L. Scott, of Indianapolis, Mrs. Evan Good, of New Vienna, Ohio, and Miss Elizabeth Wright, of Wilmington, Ohio, survive him. He moved to Leesburg, Ohio, in 1890, and resided there until after the death of his wife, 1907. In the fall of 1908 he and his daughter Elizabeth, made their home in Wilmington, where he served as pastor of the Beech Grove Meeting, near town, until failing health compelled him to give up his work.

He took a deep interest in the Meeting at Wilmington, regularly attending the Bible School and all the Meetings for worship. The last meeting which he was permitted to attend was on "Go To Church Sunday" February 1, 1914, and he expressed his great pleasure at being able to attend such a service.

His health rapidly declining, he went to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Good, near New Vienna, where, though he missed the opportunity to attend meeting, he spent many happy hours, enduring his affliction with much patience and gentleness, and looking forward with great hopefulness to the time of his departure. He made arrangements for his funeral, expressing the wish that Alice Cary's poem, "Putting Off the Armor" might be read and the way opened for freedom of service. The funeral was held at the Friends Meeting House at Leesburg. Ellison R. Purdy preached from Deut. 34: 10, and several other Friends took part in the service. Appropriate hymns were sung by some of the Leesburg Friends.

Joel T. Wright was a lover of children, and felt keenly the loss of his granddaughter, Lois Scott, of Indianapolis, whose death preceded his by a few months. He filled faithfully the place allotted him as a minister of Jesus Christ. His pastoral work was greatly appreciated, his messages were simple, clear and practical, and he was specially gifted in public prayer.

Notice

We have on hands several marriage and obituary notices, which will appear as rapidly as we can get to them.

Born

Stevens—At Berkeley, California, November 10, 1914, to Mr. and Mrs. Eber Claude Stevens, a daughter, Alida Helen.

Wysong—At Traverse City, Michigan, October 16, 1914, to Charles L. and Nita Wysong, a son, Richard L.

Died

Cox—Joseph J. Cox, youngest son of Richard A. and Margaret Cox (deceased), was born near Seymour, Indiana, October, 1853, and died at his home in Lawrence, Kansas, August 5, 1914. His end was peaceful, following an extended sickness. He was joined in marriage to Belle T. Trueblood in 1872. He was a life-long member of the Friends Church and filled important positions in both church and state, having formerly been a member of the Legislature. He will be greatly missed in each of these circles.

Davis—Albert H. Davis, son of John R. and Millicent Newsom Davis (deceased), was born in Azalia, Indiana, February 15, 1857, and died November 5, 1914, at his home near the same town. He was a birthright member of the Friends Church and active in its various lines of work, as long as health permitted. He married Alice Parker in 1890. The widow and five children survive him. Funeral services were conducted by Joseph R. and Eliza A. Cox. Burial was at the Sandcreek cemetery.

Marshall—Levi Marshall, son of Jesse and Mary Marshall, was born in Henry County, Indiana, June 22, 1834, and died at Union, Iowa, November 9, 1914, aged 80 years 4 months and 18 days. He was married to Irena Pearson in 1859. He was a life-long Friend and was recorded a minister in 1888. He was in pastoral work for several years, rendering service at Stanford, Eagle City, Concord, Pleasant Plain and Ackworth in the state of Iowa. He was a noted temperance worker and advocate of peace. Eternity alone will be able to reveal his influence upon the world. He is survived by the widow, who is almost helpless from rheumatism, and by eleven children. Funeral services were conducted at Bangor by Alfred J. Hanson, pastor at LeGrand.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

January 10.

Subject—Deborah and Barak Deliver Israel.

Lesson—Judges 4: 4-23; 5: 1-22.

Golden Text—The righteous cried and Jehovah heard, and delivered them out of all their troubles.

It is now one hundred and eight years after the entrance of Israel in Palestine. The reign of the Judges, following the death of Joshua has begun. Ehud, of the tribe of Benjamin, is dead, and Deborah of Ephraim, a prophetess, is judging Israel.

The scene of the lesson is in northern Palestine. Jabin, king of Caanan, who reigned in Hazor in the tribe of Naphtali in the extreme north, had been oppressing Israel for twenty years. Sisera, who lived in Harosheth in western Zebulun, was captain of Jabin's host.

In the first chapter of Judges, the statement is made that the northern tribes, including Naphtali, Asher and Zebulun had failed to drive out the Caananites, and had forsaken the Lord. Jabin's forces are spreading over the north, and all of Israel begins to fear him.

Deborah induces Barak, a great general of Naphtali, to take ten thousand men out of Naphtali and Zebulun with whom according to her directions, he moves down to Mt. Tabor to meet Sisera at the river Kishon, after Deborah has agreed to meet him and go with him, under the promise that Jehovah is to grant deliverance from Sisera.

The lesson is an account of these movements, the gathering of the armies, the discomfiture of Sisera and his chariots and the destruction of his host, the flight of Sisera, and his finding refuge with Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, a tribe which has separated itself from Israel.

The account follows of the destruction of Sisera by Jael, the finding of his dead body by Barak and the triumphant song of Deborah and Barak in chapter five.

As stated, Deborah was a prophetess, whose heart was open to receive the word of the Lord. Her life and work are oases in the desert of idolatry that was now pervading so much of Israel. She reminds one at once of Miriam, and by her presence in the campaign one is reminded of the leadership of Joan of Arc.

Deborah was a woman of strong personality and great patriotism. These combined with her prophetic power naturally made her a leader in Israel, one whom even the great Barak was ready to obey.

Whenever Israel repented and was willing to obey God, the people prevailed over their enemies. Robinson says that "this was the crowning victory of the period," following which the land had rest for forty years. (Judges 5: 31.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

January 10.

Topic—Our Denominational Boards, and our Relation to Them.—II Cor. 8: 8-15.

The lesson text is a practical demonstration of the obligation that is upon all disciples to support properly and equitably the activities of the church. This is emphasized by verses tenth to fifteenth.

Our Five Year Meeting Boards are Foreign Mission, Evangelistic, Bible School, Education, Social Service, Young Peoples, Peace and Arbitration, Legislative and Temperance, Publication and Welfare of the Negro. The more important of these have their counterpart in the Yearly and Subordinate Meetings. Some have the department of Home Missions.

Every Board should have the sympathetic co-operation and support of all the membership. Some members will have special interest in certain Boards, and others in other Boards, but no one should be neglected.

The record of the denomination is largely the record of its Boards, and young people should learn something of the work being done by each department.

Assign a member to find out something about the work of the Foreign Mission Board for recital at the prayer meeting, one to find out about the Evangelistic Board and so on, until all are included in the investigation.
